ACKNOWLEDGMENTS It is with great pleasure that the Museum of Art presents this exhibition of recent works by Elizabeth Jayne Peak, assistant professor in the Department of Art at Bowdoin College. I am indebted to Alan Shestack, director of the Yale University Art Gallery, for a catalogue introduction which provides a succinct and sensitive overview of her art. To Mr. and Mrs. Lewis A. Buck, who provided a studio for the printing of many of Elizabeth Peak's works; to David Kunicki '80, who assisted with the printing of the etching which appears in the special edition of the catalogue; to Abelardo Morell, Jr. '71 for publication photography; to the College Editor's Office; and to all of the lenders I offer my sincerest thanks. The exhibition, organized by Curator John W. Coffey in collaboration with the artist, has, as always, been realized by members of an enthusiastic and talented staff, to whom I express my gratitude. KATHARINE J. WATSON, DIRECTOR

INTRODUCTION Elizabeth Peak is a young artist who teaches at Bowdoin College. She is a gifted printmaker whose precise and controlled technique and compelling vision combine in handsome, if somewhat melancholy, etchings of the modern landscape or of strangely empty room interiors. There is a sad, mysterious quality in Liz Peak's etchings. No human activity interrupts these vacant, even desolate spaces, and one senses—despite the presence of a parked car or an illuminated desk lamp—that these are abandoned and totally silent places. What is striking is that an evocative, "romantic" mood prevails despite the strict, formal organization of each print and the artist's meticulous, painstaking manner. Peak seeks out the abstract geometry in what she obviously perceives as an orderly world and gives emphasis to those linear or rectangular urban landscape elements—chimneys, telephone poles and wires, highway signs, or window casements—which serve as vehicles for structuring and balancing her image and orchestrating the page. Sometimes one of these elements, such as the back of a billboard, boldly takes center stage and becomes the dominant actor in the scene, as in Culver City, California. In this case, as is usual in Peak's work, the artist tempers the emphatic geometrical form by carefully describing the texture of the weathered wood on the large rectangle, reminding us that the image was inspired by a specific place or view no matter how much it might also have become—intentionally or not—a symbolic commentary about the contemporary world.

Liz Peak's prints are beautifully crafted. In many, etching, drypoint, stippling, and burnished aquatint are combined to achieve subtle tonal gradations, sometimes, as in the Dish Drainer of 1975, creating areas or "patches" of form which heighten the abstract, two-dimensional effect or which soften the strict geometry of the compositions. One is sometimes reminded of Edward Hopper's prints in terms of their profoundly lonely mood, their graphic style, and their "mundane" subjects. Liz Peak certainly follows in the tradition of printmakers of the American scene, but she is more interested than most of her American predecessors in the taut structure of her images, concerned with tension and balance between black and white, up and down, left and right, and the play between the individual physical marks of her stylus and the underlying geometry of the subject. She might be inspired by a dusty gas station in California or a grain elevator in Ohio, but in reacting to a specific American landscape and giving it form in graphic terms, she creates images which transcend specific times and places and become generalized visual statements. In all her work, she seems to be striving to reconcile the specific everyday subject with its broader symbolic meanings. ALAN SHESTACK
