Enteman means business

by HOLLY HENKE

In a refreshingly brief and direct Convocation address delivered last week, Bowdoin’s new president, Willard F. Enteman, challenged the college community to join him in an effort to make Bowdoin “the best.”

Calling Bowdoin “a fine college which has the potential to become in a more stable and permanent way a college of real distinction,” Enteman recommended a reduction in the student enrollment, increase in the number of faculty members, and a thorough investigation into investment and budget policies.

The college’s present enrollment is approximately 1,400 students, he said. Enteman proposed the hiring of more faculty to aid in achieving a student-to-faculty ratio of 10 to 1 within the next decade. This would mean a current faculty of 133, a goal Enteman believes Bowdoin is not achieving.

In a time when most colleges and universities are reorienting and reducing the size of their faculties, the president said, “I think it is important for Bowdoin to stand up and give first recognition to the highest priority of its educational effort as a liberal arts institution: the teaching faculty.

Figure 1 shows we seek comes from a direct and close working relationship between students and faculty,” Enteman said.

Aware of the financial and other difficulties facing Bowdoin, Enteman said that while the college is in the forefront of this development, Enteman stressed the need to maintain independence.

“Colleges will close; colleges will merge; colleges will be reorganized in an effort to maintain survival. Through it all,” Enteman said, “Bowdoin, and hopefully other colleges, will be.”

Technical and staffing difficulties have forced WBOR to delay the start of broadcasting until spring.

WBOR shuts off for fall

by WALTER HUNT

For many years, the FM dial has been graced by a Bowdoin-student-operated radio station: WBOR FM, a ten-watt station based in the upper part of the Moulton Union.

Yet, this fall WBOR will not resume general broadcasting, as it has done every fall for the past several years. Aside from sports broadcast - football and hockey - the airwaves at 91.1 FM will be silent.

WBOR will not be on the air until the beginning of the second semester. What brought this about? Who brought it about?

“There are a number of reasons,” said station manager Bill Berk ’79.

“Beginning with the three top men at the station, myself, Mike Sharon, and Mike Tardiff, are the only experienced staff members; many of our best people were seniors last year and have graduated.”

There are further problems. The FCC has issued a new ruling to encourage public broadcasting, and has undertaken efforts to clear airwaves. This involves providing a clear-cut choice to stations broadcasting on ten-watt: increase wattage and quality, or give up exclusive rights to 91.1 FM. The latter, said Berk, would lead to the station being moved up and down the dial, costing money for each successive move.

While this new regulation does not take effect until 1980, the staff elected to suspend operations this semester when faced with several other convincing arguments:

The record library is in disarray. According to Berk, the cataloging system needs reworking, and the staff has called upon Sam Enteman to look to for the exercise of leadership and for bearing the highest standards and highest educational values.

“I have become increasingly alarmed at the increasing role which government is playing in educational affairs of colleges and universities... and in an even more disturbing way,” the president warned, “government frequently uses the most distant and irrelevant points of leverage to cause institutional changes far beyond the mandate of specific programs.”

Dr. Enteman challenged the college to examine current entanglements with government agencies and administrations and advised that if it be truly a liberal arts institution it should not see a government agency as the primary source of funding.

In addition to asking for a review of the budget policies of the college, President Enteman called for a reexamination of the college’s investments.

In view of the “repressive and regressive policies” of the government of the United States, Enteman said he would form a committee of students, faculty, administrators, and governing board members to look into “the possibility that in investment policies of some of our institutions might be supporting, whether directly or indirectly, the genetics of that government.”

The college is now looking at more local issues.

In his Convocation address, President Willard F. Enteman challenged Bowdoin to be “the best.”

Rush riches fall to big frats; Union draws crowd as well

by DAVE STONE

It has been said that the rich get richer and the poor get smaller. For the fraternities however, Drop Night 1978 meant that the rich got richer and the poor grew a little.

The big houses on campus had what can only be described as a phenomenal rush, as scores of freshmen and previously independent upperclassmen succumbed to the rush gods.

The Colby Union, which is not independent and is a Phi Delta Chi fraternity, also held a rush with 50 pledges, while Deke pulled in 49. Other big houses which enjoyed a successful rush were Beta with 44 new members, Chi Psi with 41 and Zeta with 33.

Without exception, the smaller houses on campus did not fare as well on drop night. Twenty-one pledged at Delta Sigma. At AU 7 and AU 15 at Psi U and, nine at Kappa Sigma. Overall, 298 students opted for fraternity membership. Approximately 60% of the freshman class pledged, either same as last year, but considerably lower than the 71% of two years ago.

The biggest drop of all, however, occurred at the Moulton Union where approximately 60 students were turned away due to overcrowding. They were accommodated at the Senior Center dining room. Later that night, several hundred gathered on the terrace of the Moulton Union for a firefly-sponsored party, featuring flashing lights and disco music.

Enteman addresses tenure at packed faculty meeting

by MICHAEL TARDIFF

The tenuous subject of faculty tenure was finally broached publicly by Bowdoin’s new president, Willard F. Enteman, as he spoke at a regular Faculty meeting for the first time since assuming office.

The Faculty also endorsed a set of “requirements and procedures” applicable to student-designated majors at last Monday’s monthly meeting.

In remarks near the end of the unusually well-attended meeting, the President urged the Faculty Affairs Committee to begin soon “a serious discussion of the tenure system presently in effect at the College. He announced that a memo outlining his opinions on the matter would soon be circulated to the faculty, suggesting that perhaps in this way, more rapid progress toward a solution of the issue might be made.

“I think that we might move ahead more rapidly if you react to what I suggest than if I wait for you to do something,” said Enteman. He further explained that he had refrained from formally referring to tenure until the first faculty meeting, because he regarded the issue as “a very specially faculty-oriented topic.”

Student-designated majors

Earlier in the meeting, the faculty had voted to adopt a set of guidelines first proposed by the Committee on Curriculum and Educational Policy (CEP) last May governing the acceptance of proposals for student-designated majors. Characterized by CEP member Prof. William Barker as “simply a clarification of existing legislation,” the proposal met with considerable opposition from some who felt that it would unduly increase faculty workloads and the burden of approval on the Committee of Record rather than the individual major departments. "Departments are in a better position than the Committee of Record to judge the value of student proposals,” said Prof. William Poli. When the final vote came, it was

(Continued on Page 5)

INSIDE

Where to go, what to do and how to do it — an Orient special on what Bowdoin has to offer outside the classroom...

A look at President Enteman’s first words and what they mean...

The Senior Center: a tower of interns...

The low-down on this year’s freshman...
Brad Terry and Friends performed in the Maine Festival and will also play at President Esten's inaugural ball.

Seniors selected by Mason will man Admissions desks by ROBERT DeSIMONE

It is a seldom-shared secret that jittery sub-freshmen generally depict kindly admissions officers as solemn, Sage-like charmers not in need of parental care. An un-spontaneous generalization at best, there is little evidence at Bowdoin to support this supposition.

Quite to the contrary, in fact, Bowdoin is one of the few institutions of its kind which can boast a fresh and uniquely innovative admissions philosophy. Director of Admissions Bill Mason continued the tradition this week when he announced the selection of twelve senior interviewers.

The stellar crew, which includes such notables as Bill Berk, Nick Bright, David Brown, Randy Dick, Jay Espy, John Holt, Greg Kerr, Susan D'onnell, Steve Rose, Michael Burder, Lucie Sickward, and Paula Wardynski, overcame formidable odds before being chosen to represent Bowdoin in what is perhaps one of the most important public relations positions.

71 applicants

According to Associate Director of Admissions Martha Bailey, the selection process was a difficult one. With over 71 qualified applicants to choose from, the task was many-fold. Among the most important qualifications the Admissions Committee sought, she explained, was the candidate's ability to communicate with people. Equally important, she added, were the person's aptitude for "creating a favorable impression" on the interviewer and his/her talent for "reassuring nervous people."

As part of the selection process, each of the seniors was interviewed by a member of the Admissions Committee, who were then charged with the task of a final evaluation. In the past, the Dean's Office was primarily responsible for whittling down the impressive list of candidates. This year, however, Bill Mason's staff took over the entire process.

Bowdoin, like Wellesley and Wesleyan, has the distinction of being one of the few colleges in the country to utilize undergraduates in its admissions process. Conducting nearly half of the 3000 interviews granted by Bowdoin last year, the seniors, indeed, played a vital and indispensable role in the elaborate admissions process.

Training program

Preparing for this role, is not a simple task. The newly-chosen interviewers must go through a ten-day training program, which entails reading sample admission files and sitting in on live interviews. According to Bailey, the senior interviewers will spend about ten hours a week fulfilling their commitment.

The interview itself is one of the foremost criterion by which the admission staff gauges its applicants. "We try to get a feeling for how curious and self-motivated a person is," Bailey intimated. "We are primarily interested in what skills or talents someone can bring to Bowdoin."

Bill Berk, one of the dozen interviewers, explained that he feels his experience in Chamberlain Hall was "treasured" during the "packed" orientation of his acceptance. "It was the one thing I was really hoping for this year," he claimed.

College welcomes multi-talented freshman by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

"All generalizations are dangerous," wrote Alexander Dumas, "even this one."

Can one quickly profile a class of 394 people from 59 parts of the globe, each with a different philosophy of life? Avoiding generalization seems most advisable. Several Bowdoin people, however, recently hazard a guess at an answer to the following question: Could you express in one word your impression of this year's freshman class, what would that word be?

Diverse

Tears of joy might well be in the eyes of dedicated Admissions workers who read the results. If they have worked for diversity in the class of 1982, they have succeeded. According to those randomly polled, the freshmen are quiet, wild, scared, confident, rocky, different, athletic, temperamental, alcoholic, friendly, clean-cut, loose, preppy, mature and fun. The class of 1982 obviously eludes generalizations.

There is, however, an escape clause during the past two weeks. "I've caught up in the past two weeks what part of the freshmen are interested in close-friends oriented activities," explains Mason. "It's been a target for us."

Surprised!

The Admissions Officers neither plan for nor expect their own college to be an ideal case or a rowdy class. According to Mason, "All we know are the statistics we've seen during the admissions process. We see only one facet of a student's personality which we don't know how they'll act now that they've been extricated from their homes. I can't tell you what's going to be the same person that we interviewed that you'll turn into a brand new person, a role model...

The Admissions Office mails acceptances to the most qualified and best-performing applicants. What the students make of their qualifications once they arrive at Bowdoin depends upon them. The promise, however, is there. Of this year's freshmen, seven out of every ten finished high school in the top tenth of their class. This class boasts 42 active high school journalists, 30 active participants in theatre and at least a dozen serious dancers.

The class includes a champion figure skater, a lobsterman, a student of ballet at Carnegie Hall, an AAU Nationals swimming competitor, a triathlete, an accomplished harmonica player/folk singer, the Massachusetts State Hockey scoring champion, the national champion in Oral Interpretation, the Vermont State Women's tennis champion, a real estate agent and a student fluent in seven languages.

No quota

Bowdoin's Admissions Office may indeed pride itself for gathering 394 very different people. The members of the staff concern themselves, however, with more than a search for diversity. The Class of 1982 represents not only a marked variation but also a milestone for the college. "Since 1976," explains Mr. Mason, "we've had a target figure for women. The Class of 1982 was the first admitted without a quota. Women constitute 45% of this year's freshman class."

The Early Decision procedure is also worth noting. Over thirty percent of the freshman class were accepted through Early Decision last year. "It relieves a lot of pressure on them," explains Mason. "There is no pre-determined percentage of Early Decision acceptance. I wouldn't worry if we took sixty, seventy or eighty more. We are happy with our Early Decision. They come here freshman year completely sold on Bowdoin. I like the program very much.

The Morris Dansens enthrall spectators on the quad with "Fiddler's Reach." The dancers were only a few of the over 300 Maine artists to participate in the three-day event last July.
Upperclassmen join frats; light drop at small houses

(Continued from Page 1) major releasing these figures, that a significant number of upperclassmen have joined fraternities this year. He attributes this to recent trends toward coed fraternities on the part of freshmen. "They want to wait around for a semester, to figure out what they're going to do," he can hear.

Galeota admitted that the large houses had "huge drops," and the smaller houses didn't have "light drops," but downplayed the significance of the influence, noting that the houses on campus undergo periodic fluctuations in their membership. He opposes the reinstatement of the quota system, which allowed each fraternity only 10% of the freshman class, citing the fact that it didn't work in the past, and that it unfairly restricts the free choice of the freshmen.

The president of Delta Sigma, Howie, also changed viewpoints. "Upperclassmen houses fell prey to the "independent" aura. The independent dormitory, in which the students may have more publicity if received, changed the mind of many freshmen." He also said that the large drops some of the big houses may be a mixed blessing. "It is self-destructive for a fraternity to lose many people," said Pastore.

On the sixty percent drop, Dean of Students Wendy Fairley noted that, "A good number of freshmen felt left out of the decision to join a fraternity. Personally, I've never been totally comfortable with that rush immediately when they arrive. They don't get a chance to get a complete scene of campus life." She did admit that rush does give the neophytes the opportunity to meet people, so the good deal of strain off the Central Dining Service.

Fairley was not concerned with the developing imbalance in the fraternity system. "It strikes me that the houses that are much more traditional fraternities are doing well, while those who might choose less traditional houses are becoming independents." She remains an important role at Bowdoin. The way the college is now structured, "they are not absolutely essential. Other colleges do not have such a strong fraternity system," said Fairley.

---

News analysis

when he proposed that the College return to its past nine and a half hour requirements and grading on a more conventional five-point scale, Howell was rewarded and perceived more dutiful than determined. Convocation simply did not seem the place for raising a ruckus. There was the form and mood that overlooked more than the substance.

This is not to say that Professor Howell is that type of man to turn the Convocation address into Legislative debate. In fact, Professor Howell resided with dignity and a sense of tradition and propriety. He spoke of the things that were appropriate for Bowdoin at that juncture of time and circumstance.

Professor Howell's remarks last week, however, Bowdoin may have already been in the years past now and begin striding toward the promise that lies ahead.

What Esteman presented to the college was a small liberal arts faculty members was the preliminary outline for what he termed a "cooperative" system. Professor Howell, the president, is the face it should face it. It was plain throughout his address that he really believed, perhaps more strongly than any other member of the faculty, that the president had already done the job. This was a college which has an attitude which is so well engrossed in so many controversies and controls and regulations, it is a new and daring concept — that Bowdoin can find itself serving as a leader in private education in the United States, if only it can assemble the financial resources and persist in a concerted effort to build on the existing firm foundations of reputation, faculty and commitment. Esteman touched upon virtually every substantive issue on the collective mind of the Bowdoin College community during his remarks. And his suggestions for action or on the development of action that were straightforward, rational and — perhaps more importantly for a college that places as much importance on tradition as does Bowdoin — open to modification and tailoring to fit the peculiar sovereignty of this institution and its adherents. "My purpose," said Esteman, "is not to close off discussion and consideration but to begin discussion which would lead to arguments of these challenges or some others which I've not raised here.

The new president's speech was of Bowdoin's various difficulties in sentences of a pastoral appreciation of the College's past, and a plan for its future development. He was quick to take up the issue of whether to continue hiring and retaining the finest faculty. "I don't think the College face squarely and forthrightly the question of Reforming the faculty. Bowdoin may have already been in the years past now and begin striding toward the promise that lies ahead."

Hokanson's resignation was not a surprise to many in Bowdoin's administrative staff, according to several sources. However, the president was willing to comment further. His suggestions for dealing with the fostering problem of limited library space were most well thought-out on the subject to date. Instead of pouring on yet another temporary or otherwise ill-conceived library, Hokanson has been advocating far more a move to the existing floor space in Hawthorne-Longfellow Library. Esteman has proposed that the College should place the problem in the hands of an expert and that whatever financial aid might be retained would be charged with recommending library usage and the limits of the professional staff of the College, but these events have not occurred and the context of an overall plan for the physical facilities of the campus.

Esteman's role in the future vision is further emphasized by his request that the College not take the first steps in any detailed preparations. This is a college which has of late found itself working on a budget very close to and even may past the beginning of the fiscal year to which it applies, this is an action that is nothing less than exciting.

In no place is Esteman's fatalism more apparent than in his expressed goal of leading Bowdoin to the realization of a ten-year plan, perhaps fewer than ten years for some departments. "I believe with the freshman class by twenty students each year, the College could find itself in a decade of over 1,250 students that President Hokanson might not exceed back in 1974."

Behind and alongside Esteman's subtle and often consolatory plaques, the College's ailments lie a new attitude, that one is impossible to ignore. Esteman does not examine his policies or the policies of his predecessors. (The President is a man for whom the words "direct" and "forthright" take on renewed meaning. "No one is able to hide behind a desk," he said.) "Let us turn directly to the task of providing the best education for our students."

(Continued on Page 5)

---

New President speaks directly

by ERIK STEELE

To those who know him well he is "Hokie." To the rest of us he was the recently appointed dean of the Administration and Finance, Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. He resigned Aug. 1, 1976 after 17 years as a member of Bowdoin's administrative staff. President Esteman accepted Hokanson's resignation as a surprise to many in Bowdoin's administrative staff, according to several sources. However, the president was willing to comment further. His suggestions for dealing with the fostering problem of limited library space were most well thought-out on the subject to date. Instead of pouring on yet another temporary or otherwise ill-conceived library, Hokanson has been advocating far more a move to the existing floor space in Hawthorne-Longfellow Library. Esteman has proposed that the College should place the problem in the hands of an expert and that whatever financial aid might be retained would be charged with recommending library usage and the limits of the professional staff of the College, but these events have not occurred and the context of an overall plan for the physical facilities of the campus.

Esteman's role in the future vision is further emphasized by his request that the College not take the first steps in any detailed preparations. This is a college which has of late found itself working on a budget very close to and even may past the beginning of the fiscal year to which it applies, this is an action that is nothing less than exciting.

In no place is Esteman's fatalism more apparent than in his expressed goal of leading Bowdoin to the realization of a ten-year plan, perhaps fewer than ten years for some departments. "I believe with the freshman class by twenty students each year, the College could find itself in a decade of over 1,250 students that President Hokanson might not exceed back in 1974."

Behind and alongside Esteman's subtle and often consolatory plaques, the College's ailments lie a new attitude, that one is impossible to ignore. Esteman does not examine his policies or the policies of his predecessors. (The President is a man for whom the words "direct" and "forthright" take on renewed meaning. "No one is able to hide behind a desk," he said.) "Let us turn directly to the task of providing the best education for our students."

---
THE ORIENT
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1978

Less is more

We accept wholeheartedly President Enteman's challenge to make Bowdoin "the best.

For too long we have compared ourselves to other colleges, justifying enrollment growth with the current trend. We praise our new leader for taking the initiative to set our own standards, the highest possible educational standards.

A smaller student body is essential if the College is to provide the best quality classroom instruction and a learning environment in which faculty and students can form close relationships.

The student to faculty ratio of 10 to 1 is not only possible, but essential to Bowdoin's future.

Two years ago, we were asked to turn back the clocks and reinstate distribution requirements and a five-point grading system. We objected vigorously to the proposals on the grounds that they ran contrary to the Bowdoin ideals of innovation and experimentation. This time, however, we applaud the new President's willingness to turn back the hands of time. Only by reducing enrollment can the college continue to give its students a first-rate education.

Our goals

You won't notice a major difference between past Orient and this, our first issue. The print is the same, the typeface is the same and the layout is basically the same.

But there are some subtle differences which should become apparent as the semester wears on. These discreet changes reflect the objectives of this semester's editorial board. We will continue to be competent and informative, but also aspire to be more interesting, stimulating and provocative.

What are these changes?

First of all, the writing is going to be different. While we plan to remain faithful to the rules of grammar and good journalism, we also feel that it is equally important not only to allow, but to encourage individual styles to develop within these boundaries.

Second, we are going to get better photographs to go with our improved writing. Headshots are out, action is in.

More important than how we cover events are the events we choose to cover. While we will continue to cover only those events which affect Bowdoin, there are some happenings which occur outside Brunswick that affect its inhabitants. We believe that the role of a college newspaper is to cover all events which have an impact on the campus itself.

We could not even consider making these subtle changes had we not been left with a firmly-established, exceptionally competent newspaper. For this luxury, we can only thank the past editors.

We have prided ourselves on being the oldest continuously-published college weekly in the United States; it is to be expected, then, that we should strive to be the best.

No secrets

He stood with his arms folded as the robed Faculty filed into their seats. He tried to sing the College Hymn, and failed (but then, so does everybody). He read a speech that was organized and free of rhetoric in tones which conveyed ideas undistorted by sentiment. His arms were folded across his chest as the Faculty filed out, too.

When he walked into the diamond hardwood-floored faculty meeting room, the first thing he did was push aside the three high-backed, padded chairs customarily used by the President and Deans and put in their place three of the modest wooden armchairs that fill the rest of the room.

No longer are freshmen announced individually as they enter to sign the matriculation book — "This is Harley B. Peterson, President." — nor does every one of them get to formally shake his hand; five of ten of them mill about Henry Wadsworth's desk and sign their names in turn while the President shows them how much better students' handwriting was a hundred and fifty years ago.

"I think of myself as a person who has opinions ... and I will share them with you," says the President. "I can't believe we're going to operate very well if we keep secrets."

Bill Enteman is a man with ideas and the spirit and devotion to make them work. He has studied Bowdoin; he has a concern for its past; and he has a vision for its future.

No alternative

To the Editor:

The prospects of a nuclear war, like that the United States has in store, are so grim that it is impossible to remain neutral with respect to our energy and "defense" strategies. Nuclear power and nuclear weapons, in all their ramifications, will drain talent and resources away from appropriate energy technologies and real human beings will have to bear adverse effects upon the economy of our own country, will constantly pose hazards to the human populations, will increase exponentially the already unacceptable risk of war, and are simply unnecessary.

We believe that a rational energy strategy would not include nuclear power, but would stress conservation and renewable sources of energy (coal as a transitional source). And we do not believe there is any real, permanent threat to our freedom which leaves us with no alternative to our nuclear war-fighting posture. We believe that nuclear power and nuclear weapons exist primarily to create fear, interests, deep and autodestructive fears, rapacious appetites for power, and a sense of superiority in this country, a cultural obsession with technology and its ever increasing sophistication.

Nuclear power has thrust upon us many difficult problems, the two most formidable (and perhaps immovable) being radioactive waste and weapons proliferation. Concerning proliferation, nations will be able to manufacture atomic bombs by the mid-1980s, and if the trend continues, nations will have that capacity by the mid-1990s. And this will result simply from the spread of peaceful nuclear programs. Such broad spread poses nuclear technology, according to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, will make nuclear war inevitable. But were the United States to completely scrap nuclear power, and in so doing demonstrate that the richest country in the world could operate without it, that might help forestall the spread of nuclear technology. At least, it is our best hope at this late hour.

The nuclear arms race has reached a ridiculously dangerous stage. Both the US and the USSR are eagerly seeking first strike capabilities, with the US ahead, developing. Once one country can strike another and at the same time prevent it from retaliating, decision in nuclear war and nuclear war has become a "rational" extension of policy. The only situation in which nuclear war is justifiable is that where both countries possess first strike capabilities.

Both practically and morally, we have no alternative to abandoning nuclear arms and pursuing universal nuclear disarmament with all deliberate speed. As President Enteman has said, we have inherited definite responsibilities. Let's meet Sunday evening, September 17, at 7:30 in the Lancaster Lounge of the Moulton Union to discuss how we of this community can help change the energy and defense policies of the United States.

Sincerely,
Tod Duggan '80
Rose Duggan '80

Turned off

To the Editor:

WBOR could never boast about being the country's oldest continuing campus radio operation, but its record as a vital outgrowth of campus energy is extended. (Continued on Page 6)

Edith Lansing Koot Sills, 89, wife of former Bowdoin President Kenneth M. Sills, died after a long illness on Sunday, August 27 in Portland. Mrs. Sills was born on December 3, 1888 in Hancock, MD, and in 1911 graduated from Wellesley College, she married Mr. Sills shortly after the start of his 34 year presidency.

Active as a leader in educational civic organizations, Mrs. Sills received a 1952 honorary degree from Bowdoin in which she was cited as "the inspiring influence on many women" and the bowdoin family with whom she had come in contact.

Funeral services were held Wednesday, August 30 at St. Luke's Cathedral in Portland, the services concluded at New Grove Cemetery in Brunswick.
New Pres takes issue of tenure before the faculty close enough for some faculty members to question Enteman’s ruling that the motion had passed. All 12 faculty members opposed the amendment announced, Enteman smiled and said, “Not quite a consensus, but a decision is coming quickly on to the next matter.

(Continued from Page 1)

In informal meetings

In his comments in the latter portion of the meeting, Enteman also proposed that a series of informal “meetings of the faculty” be held for discussion and discovery and explore the various issues facing it without the pressure and formality of a regular faculty meeting. “My job is to keep you to the task...to conduct business and get business done...in an orderly and fairly rapid way,” he said.

In normal faculty meetings are in general not the forum in which the faculty has the opportunity to engage in a serious discussion. Enteman then set aside September 22nd as the date on which he called a meeting to discuss some of those informal meetings, with what should be done with the Senate and the faculty in the topic. The gathering was to be held at 4 p.m. in the DAGC Room, then moved into the Pothojm Hall, said the President, “in order to get out of the aura of this.

The Senior Class will kick off the new school year with a campus-wide dance at 9:00 p.m. on Saturday, October 8. "Second Wind" will play fun and rock. Refreshments will be served. Admission is $2.

Attention bike riders! The Bath-Brunswick Bicyclists organize good weekly rides for Sunday morning riders. Those interested should call either Geoff Morris or Steve Pothojm in the evening or see librarian Aaron Weisman in the library.

Alarms to prevent Center inferno

by NANCY ROBERTS

Oh, the disadvantages of a room with a view! Senior Center residents who have had visions of their penthouse suites being transformed into a lowering inferno in the event of a fire may relax somewhat in the knowledge that a new fire protection system has been installed in this scenic skycraper. The new system entails the use of the early warning verification system. Smoke detectors are network coupled with a loud and persistently alarm.

According to Dave Barbour, Manager of Plant Engineering Department, the unique fire protection system is the only one of its kind in the state and is well-suited for high-rise buildings such as this building. The system represents an important improvement over the previous one, which was installed in 1965 and included no early warning device. Barbour himself monitors the fire alarm system.

Smoke detectors are strategically placed on the stairwells of each floor and will trigger audible warning if smoke is detected. In the past the danger would have been known only if someone noticed a flash of fire and signaled it.

A panel in the lobby of the Senior Center will light up at the location of the triggered smoke detector as well as at the other department, the Plant Engineering Department. A loud and persistent alarm is also simultaneously notified by computer print-out. The intercom system, which speakers throughout the building may be used by fire officials to direct panic-stricken students to the quickest and safest exits.

In general, a majority of fires are electrical in origin, the electric elevators will be shut off in the event of a fire," said Barbour. Barbour points out that the response time has been cut down to two to four minutes from a process which could have taken more than thirty minutes under the old system.

The students who make their abodes in the heavenly heights of the upper floors of the Center may have a small problem, however. The Brunswick Fire Department’s 110-foot ladder only reaches to the tenth or eleventh floor. Although an egress to the roof and rescue by helicopter may sound far-fetched, it is being considered as an escape tactic if students should become trapped on the upper floors with a fire below them.

According to Barbour, the Physical Plant is in the process of updating all living quarters to this level of early warning fire protection system. At present eight of ten fraternities and all dorms except Winslow, Appleton and Maine are included in the computer system. The computer system has allowed us to consolidate the whole campus; up until now, every building was a separate entity," said Barbour.

The modernization of fire alarm systems on campus has been a long procedure and has cost approximately $25,000. "I consider this new system a good one which far exceeds that of other college campuses and which combines the best features of all," said Barbour.

Barbour stated that the tragic Providence College dormitory fire of last December did not precipitate the revamping of existing fire protection systems, but "served to prove that these things happen," he emphasized that student regulations prohibiting appliances in rooms serve a purpose and should not be ignored.

Pres wants reduced enrollment, urges action on South Africa

(Continued from Page 3)

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

A plan to slam shut the doors of the Senior Center at night was scratched in the face of an angry prompt gathering of top administrators. Security budget cuts made last month have forced officials to force the only campus building to remain open 24 hours a day to close.

Although a regular College security guard presently is not scheduled for the next few nights, college management officials should continue to be available to students 24 hours a day.

Dr. Weissman, the president of the College, and the dean of the College Paul Nyhus says the building will remain to open all night, as it has in the past.

The College is taking the center desk from midnight to 8:30 a.m. until a solution which will not interfere with the needs of students can be found. Nyhus said. The removal of the guard stanches was designed to save money in the College’s security budget.

Must remain available

Nyhus said the Senior Center is the only campus building which remains open all night, and said college officials have ordered that it should continue to be available to students 24 hours a day.

However, he called that the hours which students are required to work during the night at the Center "alas, too lengthy," and said the College should not create a situation where student work is cut. Although he declined to discuss alternatives to the problem, he described the situation as "very temporary." Whatever the final solution is, it will not jeopardize the availability of the Senior Center to the students, said Nyhus.

The meetings were inititated last spring when the students of the policy committee of the Student Senate and the College Board, Lynn Harrigan ‘79 and Janice Silverstein ‘78, proposed that a number of security duties could be handled by a smaller staff. Two security officers have been released from their duties, producing a total savings of about $13,000.

Students taking over

In addition, students have taken over a number of duties previously handled by the security personnel. The student bus shuttle and parking violations on campus.

Chairman of the Student Senate believes the security guard at the Center should not have been sacrificed to save money. "We are having a student at the desk late at night is a "question of academic survival," he said.

She said she plans to endorse any attempt to reestablish the security guard into the late schedule.

Slight difference

Nyhus said there is "no great gap" in the difference of money paid to a student versus a security officer.

Career chief Lawrence Joy said two men are scheduled for the late night shift at present, one for a firewatch and the other to patrol the campus in a car. It would be impossible for either of the two to man the desk.

In addition to their other duties, he said.

The Bowdoin Dance Group is holding classes Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The scheduling of the classes is to be held in the Melbourne Gymnasium. For further information, call ext. 694 or 729.

OLD BOOKS

Used books bought and sold

123 Maine Street

Brunswick, Maine 04011

Hours: 9-5 Mon.-Thurs.

On Vacation April 1-April 16
A student guide for what to do before the student activities season ends

by JAMES CAVISTON

Newcomers to the college will soon begin to question: how much of education here at Bowdoin does what constitutes an education at Bowdoin. The bottom line is academics but the parameters are a difficult one to accommodate as diverse interests as the individual has or is willing to work. Also, the creative few students will enjoy the luxury of not only asking what is right for him or herself, but also maintaining such a lofty goal in the same process. A student who created originally envisioned it.

Perhaps for this reason extracurricular activities here may offer students a chance to experience, to shape a lifestyle at a time of relatively few constraints. The suggestions offered here concern both work and leisure. Academic, team and ethnic activities have been excluded to insure an offering acceptable by many.

Fundamental to restless industry is the leisure of the cursed. The three organizations which sponsor educational, entertainment, to the students are the Student Union Committee (SUC), the Bowdoin Film Association (BFA) and the Senior Class. If we do not show a student’s wishes following the first week of classes, all three groups have planned events for the weekend.

Freebies

Starting with the freebies, BFS will sponsor "Take the Money and Run" at The Gift Store, "Klute" next Saturday night. The reel starts at 9 p.m. at Kresge Auditorium where Bowdoin ID's are carte blanche.

Taxi Driver is coming to Bowdoin on November 18.

This semester’s selection of films will delight cinematic buffs who were thus far neglected. The film, a moviegoer who always took his seat much reduced but happily uncorrupted for. After college, BFS shows "Day for Night" by Francois Truffaut (27 October), "Taxi Driver" starring Robert De Niro, "Klute" next Saturday night. The reel starts at 9 p.m. at Kresge Auditorium where Bowdoin ID’s are carte blanche.

SUC will feature more outside acts.

Film can be offered and considered the present budget inadequate. For those who cannot control the impulse to boogie-woogie, the traditional sponsor of the campus-wide dances, the Senior Class, has planned a bash for this Senior Night at St. David’s Senior Center. At nine sharp, the funk-rock hand “Second Wind” promises to work freshmen, sophomore and upperclassmen alike into a Dynasty hit fit before the night ends. Admission is two dollars, which is to say, a precedent in the skyrocketing price of entertainment here at the College. President Steve Rose and Vice President Greg Kerr admit that the admission is steep but hope to use the money to offer more diverse events than previous senior classes have.

Faculty roast

Some of these plans include a Dixie-land jazz band for parent’s weekend and perhaps a faculty roast in the spring. Students with enough nerve to suggest faculty members with enough guts to stand for the formally-dressed, loosely-sung symposium are requested to speak with either Rose or Kerr.

At its heart, the Senior Class Organization serves the senior class. Rose says, “We want to bring the class together before graduation, that is before people start saying ‘Hey, you’re alright, why didn’t we meet four years ago.’”

The big guns of campus entertainment is the Student Union Committee, headed for the second year by Jay Butler ’79. Concerts, coffee houses and outdoor acts are brought to the college through arts through the semester. On September 30th, the committee hopes to present “Illumions of Fantasy,” a Washington, D.C. based band, to gain a national reputation through its television appearances, the group will work a workshop the day before the show.

The party is slated for the weekend of October sixth. Rumor has it Jerry Jeff Walker is performing in this part of Texas, to Brunswick, Maine, just to see exactly how quickly spit tobacco will freeze before hitting the ground.

For those uninterested and in many ways the most pleasing event which SUC sponsors is the coffee house. On September 28th, folk singer Thomas Dyrburg will be appearing, marking the first time a professional group has been asked to play in the informal coffee house setting. Butler comments about the coffee house, “Last year we had some problems getting performers. This year, people like Leland, Solomon, Priscilla Squires and Ben Parker.”

SUC is shooting for a dance, a lecture and perhaps a special performance at the end of the term. Students can expect to pay more for entertainment on campus this year. He promises, “The student government should stand up and revolt those which serve only handfuls of students while draining off roll. We have been asked to appeal to a broader group.”

Waxing philosophically about the state of the arts, Butler states, “It’s important for the student to get out and do things for his or herself. Get out and throw a frisbee, take a field trip, see more of Maine. Not everyone can take part in the formal entertainment part of the Bowdoin education as academics. SUC was run by students. Those interested in deciding what acts to bring in and putting the shows together. BFS will still do this. SUC can meet Tuesday night at 5:45 in the Lancaster Center. Concerning money, there is not enough. It’s an awful lot of work but you can never get enough in this line of activity.

While the BFS, SUC and the Senior Class offer much to the college, in the course of the year, other groups such as the Afro-Am, the Boston American, the Music Department feature performances throughout the year, most of which will be listed in the weekly calendar.

The activities listed above are the icing on the cake, or the tip of the iceberg. Of course, the reader may want to know whether you regard extra-curricular activities of the working student as dangerous. Two years ago, a student member-oriented of the Student Government (BCSG) and the Bowdoin Opinion Polling & Survey (BOPS) asked representatives of the student body for the addresses of the faculty, administrators and alumni groups (Board of Overseers and Trustees) in matters that concern students. As stated earlier, the college puts a premium on student participation. BCSG takes responsibility for keeping students on these above mentioned and various other policies committees.

These specific functions are being reviewed and the student members have been asked to name the groups which they represent. Thus far, the task is to represent the students of the college, a member’s time. Current topics, to be a student pub or self-scheduled exams, are discussed and shaped into a presentation for the administration to consider.

Of the 15 students elected to the BCSG, one might expect to interview administrators, lobby faculty, probe students, run elections and referendums and help out with Town Meetings. The time required is at the very least five hours per week.

For these students, what he believes to be the most valuable aspect of the work, “I learned a lot about Bowdoin, its internal workings, politics; I learned how to get things done, how to work with people, different people and their different points of view.”

More than paperwork

The student government also making a claim to represent student opinion in the Bowdoin College Student Government, presently headed by Peter Richardson ’79. According to Richard Donson, the major task of this activity’s members is to work with the faculty, administrators and alumni groups (Board of Overseers and Trustees) in matters that concern students. As stated earlier, the college puts a premium on student participation. BCSG takes responsibility for keeping students on these above mentioned and various other policies committees.

"What do we want?" “Action! "Where do we want it? "Now!” Student in a Town Meeting. Recent meetings have not been as well attended as put for before the assembly; instead the meetings will solely present the proposal rather than debate it.
Students interested in volunteer services should contact this year's president Jayne Deane '80, or go to Sills and pick up information from Ann Piersen.

Babe
Project Babe offers a different challenge. Students leave the college for a week to live in Owl's Head, Maine, where they work with mentally handicapped children or adults, under the direction of Bancroft Boarding School, providing extracurricular activities. Pollak, head of the program, speaks of its benefits, "Here is a chance to escape a self-engrossed environment and to work for someone else. You learn about your own patience by dealing with a situation that is quite out of the normal. But you have to offer yourself as a normal person to kids who have been excluded from people like yourself. You're a friend who you have to keep their respect. It's a guarantee that you will return to Bowdoin remem-bering kids and having a new perspective on yourself, your role at Bowdoin and in the world."

Interviews for volunteers will be held in the main lounge on the week of September 25th. Students have preference to which week they would like to attend.

According to Skipper Steve, "No person should spend four years on the Bowdoin campus without sailing. The Bowdoin experience goes beyond the walls of the college, taking you closer to our proximity to the ocean, we want to give students the op-portunity to be there."

Pollak talks more generally about students and extra-curricular activities, "You should get out, do anything you want which is social in nature, whether it is sailing, or playing in a band, or working in a nursing home, but something not overly individualistic."

Probably the most heavily patronized, scrutinized and over-extended activities fall into the general category of "creative activities." Whether entertaining romantic ideas about hunching over a typewriter during the wee hours or coming back on stage for the third curtain call, the artistic scene has plenty to do here. At present there are three publications, two theatres for the performing arts and one radio station, temporarily off the air.

The Masque and Gown is the theatrical organization which puts on major productions in the big stage at Pickard Theater and lets students write, act, direct and do technical work for plays in the experimental theatre in the basement.

Big Brothers

The most popular of all volunteer service programs is the Big Brother-Big Sister Program. For those who fantasize about escape from Bowdoin and believe in self-reliance, but can only spend a few hours a week on it, the Big Brother-Big Sister Program is a sure bet. For a two-dollars entrance fee, a student has access to all Big Brothers programs to a considerable extent.

"Today is Friday" by Ernest Hemingway, "Hello Out There" by William S. Burroughs, or "Forest Hills" by Neil Simon, will be shown Monday and Tuesday at 7:00 p.m. for the general public. There will be a special performance of "Frida" on Saturday, June 25th, at 7:00 p.m. after which the students are invited to meet the cast, the director, and other people involved.

Alison Conway '79 states, "If you're interested in theater at all, you should be involved with the Masque and Gown, it's a wonderful experience. You have a chance to write, act, direct or do technical work. There's no experience, we'll train you."

Students considering working with Masque and Gown should remember that one production takes about four weeks, requiring three to four hours a day depending on the part. A major role may require as much as five hours a day. Fly flutters of a scene in the theater, tends to cast fresh men. That is to say, in the first fall productions he gives newcomers the benefit of the doubt.

After theater at Bowdoin, literary life takes a sedentary form. Publications at large (at least count include the The persona of a journalist is one that seeks the best bet for freshmen who seek extracurricular work.

The Quill, the Sun and the Orient. Contributions to the literary magazines are an important aspect of a student's exposure to the rest of the college, and that is something he or she should think over seriously before doing. The Quill comes out twice a year. It is currently run by Barbara Walker, she is in the one to contact concerning deadlines or type of material suitable for submission.

The sun is still rising at Bowdoin. The Sun has no strict thematic boundaries. Articles upon any subject, including photography and poetry, will be included subject to that work's meeting the standards of the editorial board. There will be four issues this year, with an emphasis upon design, layout and visual impact.

No hierarchy

According to spokesman Rupert Wood '79, "This is an open access paper which has no editorial organization apart from an editorial board who take responsibility for organizing each issue. And keeping the paper going."

"It will be different from the Orient in format and in that it is not a newspaper but uses commentary, covering a broad spectrum of affairs such as environmental issues, Maine sports, the arts, Bowdoin politics, faculty shenanigans."

Students who are interested should contact Rupert Wood through the Senior Center mailbox or by calling 729-3696.

The Orient is the oldest continuously-published college weekly in the United States. Editor Neil Stroman '80 says, "Everyone at this school has talent, but not everyone has the time or the willingness. Those qualities are our basic requirements. We can teach you anything about the trade so long as you are willing to discipline yourself and put in the hours."

DJs' on the air at WBOB
LETTERS

(Continued from Page 4)

The station faces a critical transitional period. It must sell itself to the campus and the boards of administration to obtain money to meet the F.F.C. request for public interest stations to reach for wider spheres of influence. It must prove that the station will not fall into administrative lapses like those which forced the shutdown this year.

The station, like most extra-curricular activities, seems to be most effective when it doesn't take itself too seriously, when it was "coming to itself most year. It's possible that when the station works, since the sports activities will be broadcast, the transmitter and technical equipment cannot be in great disrepair. There is no engineer with a first class license, but I am not aware of a major search to locate one. The studio is a mess, as the stacks are disassembled. It is doubtful that the stacks are the major obstacle. Blame is continuously placed on last year's management. Perhaps that is where it belongs, but I am not satisfied that the situation has been explained satisfactorily.

I hope Bowdoin can maintain a small radio station at 10 or 100 watts. I observe the emphasis on small. If WBOR next semester attempts to facilitate the power upgrade by adopting a professional style, it may be better that it stays off the air.

Afro-Am renamed; honors first Black grad

(BNS)

The Afro-American Center, a 154-year-old building once used to harbor slaves escaping on the "Underground Railroad," has been renamed the John Brown Russworm Afro-American Center in honor of the College's first black graduate.

The action was taken by Bowdoin's two Governing Boards upon the recommendation of their Committee on Honors. Russworm, one of the first two black persons in America to obtain a baccalaureate degree, was one of the most illustrious alumni of Maine's oldest institution of higher learning. He graduated in 1826 and the following year helped found "Freedom's Journal," the first black newspaper in the United States.

He was awarded an A.M. degree by Bowdoin in 1829 and moved later that year to Africa. By 1858 he had so distinguished himself as publisher of the "Liberian Herald" that he was named the first black governor of the Maryland Colony in Liberia, a Various historical accounts have described the building as a station on the "Underground Railroad" for forwarding fugitive slaves from the South to safety in Canada. Abolitionist sentiment ran high in the Brunswick area because of the presence of Harriet Beecher Stowe, whose husband was a member of the Bowdoin faculty, and he held until his death in 1818.

The John Brown Russworm Afro-American Center. BNS Photo.
Student art work unveils hidden talent, fresh ideas

by BREON LAURENT

The current student art show or exhibition in the basement of the Visual Arts Center, with representative works from Bowdoin photography, drawing and painting courses taught last spring, has all the attributes of a very pristine quality. The show is impressive in its refreshing cleanliness and clarity.

The exhibition is even more remarkable in that most of the work has been done by students who have had little, if any, exposure to the fine arts.

The photographs, taken together, represent the most outstanding artwork in the show. Most of the works show an unassuming sophistication. Also evident is a technical competence surpassing that of the past few years. Professor John McKee attributes this, in part, to the rearrangement of the darkroom allowing optimal use of space and equipment.

Particularly strong are the photographs of Holli Raffin and Roger Buttignol, both done in the course of independent studies with McKee. Raffin's photos are the product of a refined eye. Most noteworthy are her photographs of two twisting trees and of a figure bending over against a tent. Her work often requires close inspection; it is at first difficult to see in which the two trees lie. Her other shots are equally intriguing. Buttignol, on the other hand, has tackled a variety of thoughtful and striking subjects. His picture of a statue and buildings reflected in the polished granite base, and of two figures standing in the sand are examples of this. He has also done a commendable job with a seascape reminiscent of some of Paul Caponigro's seascapes, a mood both subtle and touching.

Pete Toreo has three very good works, a photograph in the show. He uses a good sense of space and texture in a shot looking up through two windows.

He also shows a keen perception in his cityscape/photograph of a construction equipment.

Peter Aresty has a clear understanding of composition. His shot of some people waiting for a subway uses the horizontal division very well. The handling of space in his shot taken in the woods is reminiscent of some of Jean Mac's painting. The plastic texture of a tree bordering the right edge of the photograph and a dark piece of bark floating in the center of the print are in balance and complement each other.

Sandy Wimack contributes two noteworthy photographs to the exhibit. There is an odd quality about Wimack's shot of some men at a fire station. The white-saucer-shaped hat of one man is very flat, and is thus, forced out of the plane of the photograph, taking on its own shape. Another shot of a girl in a dress, is taken of a narrow strip of hazy light coming from between trees.

Pierre McCreas has a couple of very well composed photographs in the show. Especially nice is his shot of the facade of a building at night.

Deb Davis and Drew King each offer photographs that display a similar sensitivity to the effects of light: the interplay of direct light, reflected light and shadow.

John Frumer's very delicate shot of a wire fence receding in the snow shows a very keen sense of composition. He uses open, flat space effectively.

Michael Shockett's shot of a group of people at a sandpile and Drive Pits took a photograph looking down on a figure and a group of dogs, both show a close attention to the orientation of objects in space.

Bruce Kanowski has done two very nice studies of the plane. There are a number of well executed drawings in this course. The two best are done by Lisa Morgan and Robert Wood. Morgan's nude sitting with chin in hand is extremely well-defined, incorporating effective combination of heavy and light charcoal lines. Wood's figure sitting with crossed legs in a sophisticated and well-illuminated portrait study.

Stephen Fisher also has an admirable figure drawing in the exhibition. Although slightly obscured it captures the model's pose as well as any of the drawings. His small painting sketches on gessoed board also catch gesture very well.

Sarah Hughes has a soft, yet very refined study of a node that deserves mention. The drawing shows good command of the pose.

The independent study work of Lisa Scott and Matthew Hart is superb. Scott's aerial view of the campus exhibits a sharp sense of composition, color and paint quality. Her other still-lives of shells and an onion amplify her talents as a painter.

Hart has used a technique of Xerox-photocollage to obtain two distortion sequences and a single collage. There is an extraordinarily fresh sense of originality in his work.

There are a couple of other good paintings in the show, although Professor Nicoletti stressed that the emphasis in the course was really on color and not on still-life painting. Susan Sheinbaum's still-life makes certain cubistic reductions like those in some of Vuillard's paintings. Greg Pilski has done a very strong painting of pistons. He handles the metalic reflections very well. Dale Applebaum's painting of a flowering plant is another good study in color. Both Jeanine Sobeil and Holly Porter have done nice still-lives.

McKee and Nicoletti are to be lauded for their efforts. But equally deserving of praise are the students, who, having come into the visual arts with little or no experience, have produced a very original and well executed collection of work.

Little effect

Admissions unanswered by Bakke

by CHARLES RIPLEY

It was heralded as a landmark case. But the decision has come and gone and the admissions policies of most colleges - including Bowdoin's - have been left untouched.

The case is, of course, the Regents of the University of California, Davis v. Allen Bakke. Bakke sued Davis on the grounds that the medical school's policy of setting aside a set number of seats for minority students deprived him of his civil rights.

This summer, the Supreme Court ruled in Bakke's favor, but refused to make a sweeping statement outlawing affirmative action programs. In delivering the opinion of the Court, Justice Lewis F. Powell stated to the specifics of the case: "...the Davis special admission program involves the use of an explicit racial classification never before countenanced by this Court."

Government professor Richard Morgan was dubious that the case would have an impact beyond Bakke's gaining admission. "I don't think it will have any effect on Bowdoin or anywhere except make some colleges apply more window dressing to their admission policies. All the case stood for was for you can't use quotas openly, fraudulently and undisguised."

Associate Director of Admissions Martha Bailey did not feel the Bakke decision would change matters for her office because as she put it, "We never had any quotas."

The justices used the Harvard plan for affirmative action as the model for such programs. While Harvard has no set quotas, in admitting applicants they are sensitive to the need of a diverse class. Director of Counseling and Placement Harry Warren claimed that the Harvard policy is basically that high grades and test scores are important, with race also being a criterion. Bailey claimed that Bowdoin's policies are basically the same as Harvard's: "We structure a class for diversity, which means accepting some football players, some Maine residents, a black and a white and not all blacks. Yes, blacks are treated separately, but just like football players and artists are treated separately."

According to Bailey, "Our biggest fear was if they panicked affirmative action. It would have made recruiting minority students much more difficult and we're pretty active recruiters."

Sunday at 6:00 p.m. in Adams 302, the Religion Department, in conjunction with the course Religion 1, has arranged to show the first of a 13-part series on the major religions of the world, produced by the BBC. This weekly film series is called "The Long Search." The first program is entitled, "Protestant Spirit USA." The program scheduled for the following Sunday is "Buddhism: Footprint of the Buddha-India."

There will be an hour long discussion following each program.
Campus radio emits infrequently; fresh approach planned for spring

(Continued from Page 1)

Galanta ’79 to develop an efficient computer cataloging system.
- The studio equipment is in need of repair; due to aging and handling by "incapecable and unqualified" personnel.
- A radio station is required, by law, to have a qualified Chief Engineer. The holder of that position, an employee at the Brunswick Naval Air Station, has recently been transferred.

Further, a new transmitter will be necessary for the station's power increase from ten to one hundred watts. Licensing requirements also become more stringent with increased power; few WBOB staff members qualify at present.

"Granted," Mike Sharon ’79 told this reporter, "we could have gone on the air this semester; but the quality of the broadcasting and the frequency of shutdown would have made the effort...grotesque."

There is precedent for such a move. In 1967, the station managers elected to close the station for a semester. "It was for the same reasons. The station returned in the spring, and was a "crack operation."

The quality of the station, however, according to the Big Three, has been steadily declining since 1972.

"The suspension gives us an opportunity to get going again. We have some great people who are very enthusiastic — bursting with ideas like a weekly newsmagazine, or some radio drama; we've had people playing the same old songs, and we think the audience is as well," said Berk.

As for repercussions? Berk indicated that there might be a decline in interest; that would hamper fundraising. But, by doing fundraising events, WBOB would remain visible while working hard on upgrading equipment and records, training hits — in short, the operation.

Student Government Executive Board elections will be held on Thursday, September 29th. Petitions, available at the M.U. Desk, are due at 5:00 p.m. on Friday, September 29th. A forum for all candidates will be held at the Lancaster Lounge on Monday, September 25th at 8:00 p.m.

Foursome leads harriers

(Continued from Page 12)
ones. You never know though. These schools draw heavily from the local high schools and you never know how strong their freshmen will be. The meet this Saturday will prove to be a good test for the Bears. If the four aforementioned runners perform to their potential, the Bears should season.

It still might be too early to expect much from the team. "Three weeks is the minimal amount of time that a team can practice and expect to do well," explained Sabatoneki. The harriers will go into Saturday’s meet with just that minimal amount of preparation.

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place
Brunswick’s most modern and full service barber shop.
Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

BOOK NOW FOR THANKSGIVING & XMAS!

CALL OR STOP BY AT STOWE TRAVEL, 9 PLEASANT ST., DOWNTOWN BRUNSWICK, OR PHONE 725-5573, FOR HOLIDAY FLIGHT RESERVATIONS AND AIRLINE TICKETS. Because so many of you have called to ask about the new discount fares we are listing typical fare conditions for special fares as they apply on most airlines.

Domestic Fare Conditions
Super Savers. For the Super Saver fares to major cities in the U.S. and West Coast you must make reservations and pick up tickets 30 days prior to the day of departure. Then stay between 7 and 60 days subject to CAB approval. If you need to change your flight reservation, you must do so at least 30 days before the new date of your return. Kids 2-11 traveling with you can save 50% off the regular Coach fare.

While seats are limited and some dates are sold out, there are still plenty of seats left. So call today.

Regular Night Coach. If you can’t plan in advance you can still save 20% off the regular Coach fare by traveling on a Night Coach flight. There are absolutely no restrictions. All you have to do is take a designated Night Coach flight between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Florida Super Savers
Florida Super Saver fare reservations need to be booked only 7 days in advance (and also must be ticketed 7 days in advance). Blackout dates in November going southbound are Nov. 21 and 22, northbound blackout dates are Nov. 26 and 27. December blackout dates are Dec. 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25 southbound; with Dec. 31 and January 1 and 2 blacked out for returning to the north.

Blackout dated for Florida super saver tickets are February 16 and 17, southbound; with February 23, 24 and 25 blacked out for return Super Saver flights to northbound cities.

H.B. STOWE TRAVEL AGENCY
9 Pleasant Street
Tel. 725-5573
Downtown Brunswick

"Book with Stowe wherever you go" Enthusiasm sparks tennis

by KIM ELDRACHER

On September 23, the Bowdoin women's varsity tennis team will open its 1978 season with a 10:00 home match against the University of Maine-Presque Isle.

In the meantime, Coach Ed Reid has been very busy determining how he will select this year's starting team. A record twenty-nine freshmen are trying out, making Reid's decision even more difficult.

In order to organize the freshmen, Reid set up a round-robin tournament, in which all of the women will participate. Provided that the tournament is not further hampered by bad weather, Reid will combine the number of games each girl has won with the number each has played to determine his starters.

Expanded JV schedule

Because he will only carry twelve women on the Varsity squad, ten of whom will play in an official match, Coach Reid is trying to expand the Junior Varsity's schedule. He has already organized matches against Brunswick and South Portland High Schools for the J.V. squad.

While Coach Reid has not had the opportunity to scout the teams against which the Varsity squad will be playing, he nonetheless feels that there is a good chance of improving against last year's 3-4 record.

Booters uneven, yet still hopeful

by NED HORTON

Despite numerous injuries suffered during a shaky pre-season, the men's varsity soccer team is optimistic as they prepare to kick off the new season Wednesday. The Bears have gained good game experience from their scrimmages against Providence, New Hampshire and Middlebury and should be ready for their opener against the University of Maine, Orono.

Coach Butt was pleased with the way his team played against Middlebury, especially after a poor showing at New Hampshire.

"I was encouraged by our play in the first part of the Middlebury game," senior captain Ralph Gils said. Both admitted that the Bears were in a rebuilding stage, but as Gils said, "we've been working hard...and we want to do our share of winning this year."

Middlebury 2, Bowdoin 1
The Bears worked hard against Middlebury and were able to split the Panther defense during the early portion of the contest.

Sophomore John Hickling converted a cross from sophomore Mike Collins to give Bowdoin a quick 1-0 lead. Unfortunately, Collins was injured on the play and several of his teammates were subsequently removed.

"We are comparable teams," Middlebury's coach Ron McEachon said afterwards. "We just played two different styles of soccer. The experience should help both of us."

McEachon also spoke of the possibility of playing Bowdoin during the regular season. "I think both teams would like to see that," he said. "Maybe next year."

The casual list
The squad is an inexperienced one. With John Holt sidelined with an injury sustained over the summer, Gils is the only senior.

Injuries have also claimed the services of juniors Gordon Wood and Dave Stone. If that wasn't enough, five other members of the starting team are nursing pre-season injuries that may prevent them from playing in Wednesday's opener.

Coach Butt is being forced to work with a very young team, consisting of a few juniors, a solid number of sophomores, and a sprinkling of freshmen. Keith Brown, one of the freshmen with a shot at a starting position, seems to have acquired the net-minding chores in the absence of the injured Ken Kennedy. Frosh Bob Van Vranken will see plenty of action at the fullback position, while Kwanse Poku from Ghana should be able to help the forward line in his first year.

The Bears' first home game is scheduled for 11 a.m. on Saturday the 23rd at Springfield.
Offense questionable

Defense to carry gridders

by BILL STUART

In football, it is said that offense wins fans, defense wins games, and kicking wins championships. If this adage is true, Coach Jim Lents and his staff could be in for a long season. The Polar Bears do not have a set offensive line-up, last year's mediocre defense returns, and the kicking game is, in a sense, up in the air. But any rumors of the death of the team are premature. There is room for optimism as the team prepares for its season opener against Trinity at Whitfield Field next Saturday.

Perhaps the most difficult hole to fill is at offensive tackle. Last year's incumbent, Steve McCabe, earned Kodak All-America honors and was selected by the Washington Redskins in this spring's pro football draft. Last year, when the team needed a tough yard or two, it ran with confidence behind McCabe. That luxury will not be an option this year.

The rest of the interior offensive line returns, however, and Lents labels it as the team's outstanding strength. The line is anchored by the team's senior center, Dave Began, a three-time letterman, and center Phill Pierce, twice awarded letters.

Quarterback major question

The major concern now is the quarterback position, which was vacated by the graduation of Jay Pensavalle. Three hopefuls are now vying for the job. Rick Kinkel, a wing back last season, possesses a strong arm and can run the option well, but he lacks experience. Bruce Bernier, Pensavalle's back-up last season, has experience, but he has been injured this fall. Hank Ellison has just returned to the team after breaking a finger on an exchange from center at the University of Maine.

Flanker Rich Newman's graduation leaves the team without an experienced receiver. Senior Dave Seward, last year's fullback, and sophomore Tim Marotta both have been used, but neither has Newman's experience. Last year, opponents rolled up an average of 385 yards per game on the Bowdoin defense. Coach Lents cites inexperience, not a lack of talent, as the key contributor to this alarming statistic.

Under the watchful eye of Coach Jim Lents, the team goes through yet another tough workout. Fun begins next Saturday when they open their season with a Homecoming game against Trinity at Pickard Field. Orient/Evans.

...and neither demonstrated enough consistency to nail down the job.

Lents admits that the prospects for this year's team will not be known until the Trinity game. If people can step in and do the job at a few positions, improvement in last year's 4-4 mark can be expected. And Coach Lents might just find that the year he labels as a "challenging season" will be more challenging for opponents than it will be for Polar Bear fans.

The New York Giants of the NFL announced in July that Big Dick LeCoutelier underwent knee surgery and will be sidelined for the entire 1978 season. The Bowdoin grad was also sidelined last year.
Enteman: Let us focus on learning

by MICHAEL TAROBB

President Willard Finley Enteman strove to bolster the faltering position of the liberal arts in American education in an address this afternoon which followed his investiture as Bowdoin's eleventh president. Declaring that small liberal arts colleges can survive the trying years ahead only if they are able to articulate their goals and commit themselves to learning rather than teaching, Enteman characterized the next two decades as a time of "justification and optimism" for the College.

"I am convinced that the only way liberal arts colleges can face both the special and general problems which now surround them is by returning to first principle faculties and entering forward in an attempt to understand education itself," said Enteman. "We can concurrently if we can be clear with ourselves as to what we are about and where we are going.

Enteman's remarks were delivered following his official "investiture into Office" ceremony, attended by President Richard A. Wiley and William C. Pierce, Vice President of Bowdoin's Board of Trustees. In what he characterized as an "open, honest, and blunt defense of liberal arts education," the President cited the failure of those in higher education to explain the purpose and intent of the liberal arts as the primary cause of the current preeminence of vocational education. As people were increasingly affected by inflation, they began to question anything which could not provide them with a financial profit for their investment. And so the two-third-to-three ratio of liberal arts to vocational students was reversed completely in a number of years, explained Enteman.

"As liberal education lost its ability to articulate its nature and destiny, vocational education, which can define its nature in an automatic and non-controversial manner, achieved the upper hand," Enteman said. He went on to chastise those who saw the redemption of liberal arts colleges in the modification of curricula to meet the demands of vocational education. "I am not much interested in apologizing to anyone for what we do as an institution of liberal education. I shall not learn to accept the notion that what we should do to save liberal education is to twist and contort: it in fact, it becomes vocational education saving only the name of liberal arts.

The President noted that in the past decade, American education had seen a swing from highly structured curricula to a purportedly more relevant "student centered" approach to the liberal arts. He indicated that it appears the trend is reversing once again with calls for returns to a structured (and perhaps more vocationally-oriented) educational process.

"My suggestion," offered Enteman, "is that we retain neither structure nor students at the center of our interests, but place the fundamental process itself, the process of learning, at the center."

In arguing that the aim of liberal arts education be redefined, Enteman used the faculty "publish or perish" dilemma to illustrate the benefits of focusing on learning.

"Liberal education is fundamentally a cooperative process in which students and faculty are joined...both are engaged in a process whose aim is to provide continued growth and learning."

"In focusing on learning, we do not speak exclusively of students learning course material, but we speak with equal force about students experiencing faculty members who are themselves learning, growing and developing...A faculty member without a substantial scholarly commitment is a faculty member who has stopped learning and who will be alienated from the central purpose of college life," Enteman said.

As in his Convocation speech delivered earlier this month, the President had encouraged and organized the faculty to be part of College community.

"To be a part of Bowdoin is to recognize an enormous obligation to the past and to celebrate a future of continued leadership."

"Let us focus on learning in our students and in ourselves; the process will be self-reinforcing and self-rewarding. With dedication and courage, all else will follow.

"We gather here...together to celebrate the renaissance of a long lived liberal custom. After so many extraordinary years of success, we at Bowdoin should not relax; we should not step back. As difficult as the times are going to be for all of us, there is room for justified hope and optimism at Bowdoin."

Trinity opens grid season

Bowdoin and Trinity will meet for the twelfth time tomorrow. A large hometown crowd is expected to cheer the Bears on.

HBS photo
An old direction

The classic liberal arts education is swiftly becoming an endangered species. The two-to-one enrollment ratio of liberal arts colleges to vocational schools has reversed in recent years, and there are no signs that the trend is slowing. President Enteman's championing of the cause of liberal arts against the encroachment of vocational schools is an action to be admired and encouraged.

Learning for the sake of learning remains an admirable pursuit. An education is more than the acquisition of a trade; it is learning how to live and how to think. President Enteman said it best in his speech: "We seek to develop students who have internalized the values and benefits of being liberally educated, not students who have retained a list of facts and who, when given the right stimulus, can react with the desired response."

It is time to reestablish our commitment to the liberal arts. We have let ourselves slide too far towards offering a specialized, ill-education to our students. We must not continue flailing about in search of a new direction, but retrace our steps and tread again an old and trusted route.

Alarming

We claim everywhere that "the purpose of people." Physical Plant director David Edwards puts the matter in more specific terms when he maintained this week that the primary goal in any student housing is the safety and happiness of the students. The recent fire alarm misunderstanding at 30 College Street is representative of how, in the transition from sincere word to clumsey deed, "the purpose" is sometimes garbled.

At issue here is not how the College's fire alarm system ranks with regard to the other schools to which Bowdoin liked to compare itself. What matters is how effectively students are alerted to just how they are protected from, or perhaps vulnerable to, fire.

An administrator recently opined that "there is some confusion about responsibility for student life in general." Bowdoin, despite its rising enrollment, is still insufficiently a college to be able to eliminate any doubts as to whom is to be held accountable for the quality of life on campus.

Students, teachers, administrators, and the rest of the College community are all still capable of looking out for each other. We believe that they are each also wise enough to place the task at the top of their list of responsibilities.

A touch of crass

It is with sadness and a measure of apprehension that we note the unheralded appearance on College notice-boards of the redesigned Bowdoin College Calendar.

The old Calendar accomplished its purpose — to convey to those within and without the College community notices of events and exhibitions — with a grace and dignity that is absent in the new version. Lost is the confidence and understated pride once manifest in a publication regarded as the recognized authority on occurrences under the pines. The weekly on which we are now asked to rely are reeks of IBM and Madison Avenue, not a small-New-England-college-where-the-individual-is-central.

How many other emblems of the innate sense of style and propriety which has borne Bowdoin through the centuries shall we come to lose to the exigencies of circumstance and expediency?

We have already lost a quiet, and helpful security patrol to a morass of machines and uniforms entitled Bowdoin College Security. Fast disappearing is the sedate beauty of a somewhat secluded campus and its guardedly imposing architecture; telephones on trees and television cameras in the library shall help chip away at those two. And perhaps endangered is Bowdoin's cherished tradition of closeness and mutual respect between the students and the faculty.

It is said that the class comes out. Are we to be the ones who amend the adage to read, "the crass comes out?"

Let us remember with each step we take, with each word we speak, in every publication we produce, that we are small and we are personal — and that is why we can be "the best."
by GINA TATSIOS

If you missed "The Phantom of the Opera" as had been "Heights" the first time around, you can catch up on the seventh and eight great classes during this year's Arts Associates Film Series. Beginning October 1, these "oldies but goodies" which will be shown on two consecutive evenings in the Kane Auditorium of Bowdoin's Visual Arts Center.

Following the presentation of "The Phantom of the Opera," Francois Truffaut's "Stolen Kisses" follows "The Phantom" on Nov. 5th and 6th in connection with a Bowdoin seminar on Truffaut's films conducted by Professor Barbara Harthcock. Das Films movies during the semester will include "I Want to Live" and "The Lavender Hill." The series will also include a mid-winter festival in February entitled "Film as Mirror." The four films selected for the series reflect the general mood and desire of the people to find vicarious relief from the war and depression through Hollywood's movies.

Headlining the mid-winter series will be "My Man Godfrey," featuring Carole Lombard and William Powell. Professor Kastner describes it as "one of the truly great comedies of the 1930's. Americans, having survived World War I and living in the Gala celebration honors Enteman

(Continued from Page 1)

Union rejects frosh; 60 force-fed at center

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

The Dean of Students didn't expect it. The Director of the Dining Service didn't expect it. The staff of the Senior Center didn't expect it. Most of all, the freshmen didn't expect it. Mot of the freshmen on the Moulton Union Dining Room found itself on an overcrowding problem at the beginning of this semester because of the unusually large number of upperclassmen who chose to forage the Senior Center. The Central Dining Service was therefore forced to serve many of the freshmen who planned to eat at the Union a trayful of disappointment. Neither Director of Dining Services Ron Crowe nor the freshmen who intended to eat at Moulton realized how quickly the line for Union dining would fill. Therefore close to six students - mostly of the freshmen who wished to eat at the Union this semester were taking their meals at the Senior Center instead.

Lynne Harrigan, a senior who lives and eats at the Center, knew that many freshmen were unhappy about eating there. So she and two other seniors talked to individual freshmen one day last week during dinner to find the reason for their unhappiness and also to offer possible solutions to the difficulty.

"We actually talked to forty-six of the freshmen," says Harrigan, "and of that forty-six, thirty-five prefer eating at the Union, seven would eat at both, four prefer the Senior Center. All of them are independents and feel separated from the main group. They are not getting to meet the upperclassmen and the other upperclassmen in dependent group's meals. So they are likely to sit down and eat with freshmen at the Union."

The upperclassmen haven't been mixing with the freshmen at the Senior Center. One senior talked with Ron Crowe about this, he kept saying, "It's going to be a nice move. Yes, it's a nice move. No, it's not mixing at all."

Harrigan also listed variety of reasons given for freshmen disapproval. Students living near the Union for its proximity. Some simply enjoy the "friendly feeling" of the Union more than the less intimate atmosphere of the Senior Center. Others who had hoped to join the National Food Plan at the Union cannot find the same varied menu at the Center.

"I think that the Natural Food Plan that the Union has seems to be more and more popular," says Richard Mer- sereau, Assistant Director of the Senior Center. "Now it's much more realistic. Assuming that the regular food at the Union is no worse than the Senior Center, it stands to reason that friends of vegetarian eaters would eat over there also.

"The Union seems to be the 'in' place to eat. Usually it's been the Senior Center that's had the overflow. Two years ago we even had excluded freshmen from dining there. This is the first time I've seen this happen. All of a sudden, very unpredictably, large numbers of the upperclassmen wanted to eat at the Union."

The 1976-1979 Bowdoin College Student Handbook never mentions freshmen in its description of the Senior Center Dining facilities. "The Senior Center," it says, "serves students living in the Center, but can accommodate a limited number of upperclassmen students who request to eat there on a first-come, first-served basis."

What happened? Where have all the upperclassmen gone? To the Union, of course. Generally all of the sophomores, quite a few of the juniors, and a lot of the seniors have moved into the Union. Only during the past two years has the Union become popular. The Union has become therefore unusually overcrowded (serving 275 students) and has less space available by the time the freshmen sign up for board. For the sixty eating at the Senior Center, not much can change.

"The question came up," comments Wendy Fairley, Dean of Students. "whether we should somehow do something radical and get the freshmen eating together at the Union. To get all the freshmen into the Moulton Union would have to be more, say, sixty, people out of the Union into the Senior Center. And it wouldn't necessarily create a better situation for the freshmen."

Dean Fairley explains that the Thomas campaign normally attempted to keep freshmen or any other class together at meals. "I had no policy of any other class eating before," she claims, "because we hadn't needed one. I hope that next year we can plan

(Continued on Page 6)
Some extol, others chide new registration system

by DAVID M. STONE...

When the new registration system was announced this fall, students and faculty alike expressed their horror. For the faculty, the system represented a two-weeks of chaos in the classroom; for the students, it was the threat of a 150% first semester registration. Yet, after one run-through of what Dean Nyhus admits is an experimental system, most everyone is satisfied that the new registration procedure caused no great hardship.

The Dean says he must await the Recording Committee's report before he can properly assess the new system. The Registrar, so far, thinks it's great. The student body, too. For, in exception of those seven who were late registering and will have to pay the fine, virtually all have found it potentially workable. And Mrs. Pippo, who will be spared the bulk of students who registered the week she had to process last semester, has no complaints with the change.

The new system has not met with unanimous acclaim by any means. Critics range from those who think the past system was a precedent and what the State of Maine contends is an illegal interpretation of the law, it is not a matter of choice," he said. Kurtz does not believe that his law entitles his client to a jury trial.

The other concern deals with statutes of limitation. Originally, state law held that there was a one-year statute of limitations in this case; consequently, it is possible that Bohan filed his petition too late. Yet, Maine amended the statute in 1975 and 1976 to two years, further clouding the issue. Whether or not the new law is retroactive is not clear.

Where and when the Bohan case will end is anybody's guess. Ironically enough, Bohan may well be an attorney himself by the time he gets his day in court. Nonetheless, it is certain indeed that, one way or another, the tenure puzzle will be solved at Bowdoin in the next several years.

Another whose life has been made more unpleasant by the new registration system is Assistant Professor Richard Dye who is responsible for the sectioning of Economics I. Dye cites the fact that course enrollments undergo great changes in the course of the registration period as making it difficult to settle the course enrollment into balanced sections.

"We lost a whole class by doing the bookkeeping of sectioning the course," he said.

Dye believes that under the new system, the Administration has assigned some of its burden, especially that of sectioning the courses, to individuals like himself. He does not believe this is necessarily bad though, since College-wide savings is greater than the increased burden on individuals.

The most adamant of the critics is Professor Daniel Rosdiles of the Sociology Department. Rosdiles stated that, "First, it undermines the advising system...by promoting self-advising, second, it is hard to run a course when you have a fluctuating enrollment. We should wait until the 10th to get the course started. Third, it makes chaos out of book ordering. And finally, it wastes paper...because so much course outlines must be Xerox'd for those who do not end up taking the course. The new system is bad for everybody. It creates the impression that people have free choice, Americans love to have free choices. But in this case, nobody benefits."

Tenure policy challenged as former prof sues Bowdoin

(Continued from Page 1)

Theodore Kurtz, Bohan's lawyer, explained that there is a distinction between what the U.S. Supreme Court has set as a precedent and what the State of Maine contends is an illegal interpretation of the law, it is not a matter of choice," he said. Kurtz does not believe that his law entitles his client to a jury trial.

The other concern deals with statutes of limitation. Originally, state law held that there was a one-year statute of limitations in this case; consequently, it is possible that Bohan filed his petition too late. Yet, Maine amended the statute in 1975 and 1976 to two years, further clouding the issue. Whether or not the new law is retroactive is not clear.

Where and when the Bohan case will end is anybody's guess. Ironically enough, Bohan may well be an attorney himself by the time he gets his day in court. Nonetheless, it is certain indeed that, one way or another, the tenure puzzle will be solved at Bowdoin in the next several years.

An informational meeting complete with slides about the Cornerstones house design courses will be held Monday night at 7:00 in the Beam Classroom of the Visual Arts Center.

The course itself will be held at Cornerstones in Brunswick Monday and Thursday evenings from 7-10 p.m. The course will start October 2 and will run eight weeks. Course fee is $250 and pass/fail credit is given for this off-campus course. For more information call 729-0540.

Confederates clash with Union soldiers in major campus battle

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

The general shouted curt commands. In unison, blue-uniformed troops lifted their muskets to their shoulders, aimed, and fired in one echoing round. The Confederate soldier clutched his side and fell with a gasp.

That was the scene which confused many Bowdoin students a few weeks ago. After all, it's not an ordinary Saturday afternoon when Civil War soldiers display arms on campus, especially in September of 1978.

But the action was appropriate, even considering the year. It was part of Brunswick's participation in a summer-long celebration commemorating the 150th anniversary of General Joshua Lawrence Chamberlain's birth. Bowdoinites who are up on their trivia know that Chamberlain was a student at the College before starting off on an army career. When he returned, he settled in Brunswick, appropriately in the house next to his old fraternity, Alpha Delta Phi, became governor of Maine from 1867 to 1871, and even president of the College in 1871.

Brunswick historians probably remember the general best for his action in the Civil War, where he led a number of successful battles, including Little Round Top. At the end of the war, Chamberlain accepted General Lee's sword of surrender on behalf of General Grant at Appomattox.

Thus, Brunswick had a hand in not only the start of the war, being the site where Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote Uncle Tom's Cabin, which Lincoln once called the instigator of the war, but also in the end, with General Chamberlain. The Chamberlain House was built in 1830 at the corner of Potter and Maine Streets, and played host to many distinguished people throughout the years. In the early 1800s, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow lived in the house as a student, and subsequently lived there as a teacher.

Years later, on a return visit to recite a poem, he wrote especially for the 50th reunion of his class, Longfellow is said to have wept at the sight of his old room.

Purchased by Chamberlain in 1861, the building continued to receive important guests. According to Willard Wallace, professor of history at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, Chamberlain received Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, McClellan, Porter, and Warren, among others.

Although the general died in 1914, buried under a simple marker in Pine Grove Cemetery, the house continued to be a collection place for associates of Bowdoin and Brunswick. The building passed out of Chamberlain hands in 1940, but the subsequent owners, Emery and Marion Booker, renovated the house to accommodate students and teachers at lower-than-usual rates.

However, many students and townspople remain unaware of the building's history. The 150th anniversary of the general's birth provided the perfect opportunity for the town to pay homage to one of the state's important men. In commemoration of the general, July, August, and the start of September saw numerous exhibits of Chamberlain's memorials, several lectures, a concert in Pickard Theater and a dinner-dance in the Senior Center.

The final event took place September 10, with a memorial service in the First Parish Church, followed by a dedication of a stone on the mall in front of Chamberlain's old house.

STEAK HOUSE

FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT

115 Maine St., Brunswick, Maine 725-2334

open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

This Week's Entertainment

Wed. & Thurs.

The Peter Gullaway Revue

Happy Hour

Mon.-Fri. 3-6

Pitchers Thurs. all night

Chamberlain House, located next to AD, housed General Joshua Chamberlain, Civil War General, Governor of Maine, and President of the College par excellence. Orient '47
What if they gave a fire and nobody came?

by MICHAEL TARDIFF

It had been cold all that week — more than one reporter covering the Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles had been known to seek the warm comfort of a car or a coffeehouse during the day. But on the morning of the convention's opening, there was nothing like a car or a coffeehouse to escape the cold.

A fire alarm sounded at the Los Angeles Convention Center, and the public was asked to evacuate the building.

The fire alarm was not unusual, but the response to it was. The convention was being held in Los Angeles, but the fire was not. It was at the Los Angeles County Courthouse, across the street from the convention center.

The fire was quickly extinguished, and the building was declared safe.

However, the incident raised questions about the effectiveness of fire protection systems in Los Angeles, and the city's public safety officials were called to account.

The incident also highlighted the importance of having backup systems in place in case the primary system fails.

In this case, the backup system was the emergency notification system used by the Los Angeles Fire Department.

The system was designed to notify residents of fires and other emergencies, and it was tested during the convention.

The test was successful, and the system was declared ready for use.

But the incident also raised questions about the adequacy of the emergency notification system, and city officials were asked to consider making improvements.

The incident also highlighted the importance of having a well-trained and well-equipped fire department, and the Los Angeles Fire Department was commended for its quick response.

In conclusion, the incident at the Los Angeles Convention Center was a reminder of the importance of fire protection systems, and the city's public safety officials were asked to consider making improvements.

END
Security shuttle covers campus, provides wheels

by DIANE MAYER

The Bowdoin College Student Shuttle is now a familiar sight to Bowdoin students, yet many are still unaware of exactly how this brown van topped by the black and yellow sign can be of any use to them.

The shuttle, a new service of the Security Department, is designed for the transportation of students during dark hours and inclement weather. The shuttle operates between 7:00 p.m. and 2:00 a.m. and each run takes one half hour to complete. Stops include the Moulton Union, the Senior Center, the Hawthorne-Longfellow Library, and the various off-campus apartments and dormitories. According to Security Head Larry Joy, most of the students are situated in "that students can watch for the arrow from downtown or covered area in bad weather."

In the past, a single car was used for both student transportation and Security staff business. Joy tells of "one stormy night when 177 students were transported by the Security car."

Social poll taps student sentiment

(Continued from Page 2)

than 5 dates within their Bowdoin career. A large group, 30% of independents, have never been on a traditional date here. The poll was developed in order to bring about some immediate changes in policy and provide some solace to the unhappy, non-integrated, uncomfortable members of the community. Bowdoin organizations use our data to direct their policy and constructively meet student demands. For example, the majority of respondents, almost 80%, believe that only the first two hours of social gatherings on campus to be adequate.

The need for student lounges is widely expressed. S.U.C., the Student Union Committee, is rated positively on the basis of its overall performance by only 30% of the students interviewed. The limited amount of Senior Center dances, films presented by the BJS, and special events — e.g., cotillion night, computer date dance, faculty roast — are insufficient.

In spite of the weak potential for social interaction in these settings, students believe that dormitories and fraternity houses are comfortable places to socialize. This is important, because there is a strong correlation between satisfaction with rooming conditions and happiness in general social life.

Packed Union denies frosh

(Continued from Page 3)

their gripes. She was talking about putting the freshmen at the top of the waiting list. As soon as the Student Life Committee meets they'll be discussing the problem." According to Harrigan, Dean Fairey is considering plans to meet with both the Student Life Committee and with freshmen who want to air their gripes.

X marks the spot. Bowdoin's Student Shuttle will stop regularly at these campus hot spots.

Joy also explained that because of a reduction in personnel, it is impossible for the remaining officers to transport students in addition to their regular rounds. Presently student drivers staff the service until 11:00 p.m., after which regular Security officers take over.

Since its first run on August 30, the shuttle has transported an average of 26 students per night. Joy projects an increase in that number as the weather gets colder. It is expected that an equal number of males and females will take advantage of the service.

"The shuttle has been a complete success so far," said Joy, "except that the students aren't yet using the service to the extent that they should be.

Macheens

154 Maine St. Brunswick Me. Tel. 725-7171

This book can be — nor this alone — they give:
New views to life, and teach us how to live —
They soothe the sorrows, the sadness, they chear;
They told them sorrow, and comfort the wise;
Theirs the joy of all — the joy is never slaked —
The man of sorrow, nor the weepers understand;
Unjust the hand, the selfish and the proud,
They fly not fallen from the suppliant crown;
Nor let to various people various things.
But show to subjects, what they show to kings.

Books

Recordings

Posters

Cards

The Calligraphy Studio: within - offers Hand lettering, Pen and Ink Art, Art Cards, Invitations, Calligraphy, Book Covers, Calligraphy, Book Covers, Art Cards, Invitations, Calligraphy

We Will Be Open
Before and After The Football Game
Saturday, Sept. 23, 1978
Moulton Union Bookstore

Prescriptions — Accepted At All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine street Telephone 725-4331 Brunswick, Maine 04011

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place
Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop.
Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

RE-ELECT Bill Hathaway
TO U.S. SENATE

For the record:

• Bill Hathaway is a co-sponsor of a Senate bill which would designate 101 million acres of Alaskan land as parks, wildlife refuges or wilderness.
• Taxation with Representation, a non-partisan tax reform lobby, rated Senator Hathaway 4th highest in the entire U.S. Senate.
• Bill Hathaway was one of only four senators endorsed by the Consumers Federation of America, the nation's largest consumer group.

Call us, or drop by 76 Maine St.
Brunswick
725-5097 725-7428

CANTERBURY

We are located next to the Whitehall Hotel, on the corner of Market & Main Streets. Come and get your Christmas shopping done early. We carry gifts, home and garden items, ground and specialty foods, a full line of books, stationery, cards and more. We are open 9:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. Monday through Saturday and closed on Sunday.

SIERRA SUMPE II
From our Western glow lamp parts with lighted onion shell, two way zipper with snap storm flap, insulated long/short/wide leather gaiters with Venetian support, inside storage pocket, diverse wide, adjustable cuffs and insulated collar.

Cook's Corner: Daily 7:30-10, Sat. 10-3.30
Downtown — Daily 10-5.5:30
FRI. 9-15-78

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
FRI. SEPT. 22, 1978
PAGE SIX
Boothees record season opening triumph, 2-1

(Continued from Page 8)

Women stick-handlers win

(Continued from Page 8) credited with Bowdoin’s second goal, proved that her scoring ability was for real. Eve released a shot from the top of the circle which landed in the Farmington net with authority and resulted in Bowdoin’s fourth and final goal of the afternoon.

Why then does Coach LaPointe insist that there is more work to be done? “We got caught on our heels several times” Coach LaPointe said. The few sparks of offensive prowess Farmington displayed were quickly put to rest by Brodie and Talotti. There is a weakness in the Bowdoin defense, however, which explains Coach LaPointe’s concern over those few sparks. Field hockey defense is made up of two fullbacks, one sweep, whose job it is to double team the ball as scoring opportunities arise and one goalie. The goalie and the sweep are new this year and although Brodie and Talotti have played together for four years, the whole defensive combination is new. Co-captain Brodie explains, “We have not had a chance to jell into one unit where everybody knows each other’s moves, where we can trust each other on the field.”

Both offense and defense need more game experience to get used to each other and plug up those gaps in understanding that result in a poor goals against average, The potential for another championship team is definitely there. Not only is the varsity strong, but the JV also has some excellent players as proven in their 5-0 victory over UMP’s JV.

There is always the opportunity for a J.V. player to move up the ladder. Moves of this kind are made by Coach LaPointe without hesitation. The high ability of the J.V. team adds to Coach LaPointe’s depth as well as assuring a successful J.V. season. Injuries, although always costly, will not be a hazard to this year’s varsity.

The varsity continues its season tomorrow at Southern Maine at 10:00 a.m. All looks hopeful. “We definitely have the talent,” explains Brodie.

The ’78 White Key season opened this week. Here, Kappa Sig receiver Bee Grant outjumps two Delta Sig defenders to grab a pass. The Kappas won, 14-12, Orient Yong.

Sports shorts

A surprisingly strong University of New Hampshire cross-country team trounced the Bowdoin and Bates women in a tri-meet last Wednesday. The final score was UNH 17, Bowdoin 40, and Bates 70. Freshman Jane Petrick was the first Bowdoin woman to cross the line, finishing eighth overall.

... The men did a little better, routing SMVT and Maine Maritime in their opener last Saturday. The times were slow, but good enough for Bowdoin to sweep the second through seventh positions. Captain Greg Kerr led the Polar Bear brigade, finishing with a time of 26:92.

DO’NT WAIT!

BLACK XMAS
FLIGHTS NOW

Call Stowe Travel, 725-5573, or stop by Stowe’s offices at 9 Pleasant Street in downtown Brunswick to reserve flight reservations now for Thanksgiving and Christmas. Stowe Travel will be open this Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Flight space before Christmas and airline flights to Florida are already at a premium over Christmas, so don’t wait any longer. See or call Stowe Travel today, and arrange your holiday flight schedule.

Stowe Travel can save you money, too! Round trip Super Saver Fares give you 40% off the regular fare day tourist fares Monday thru Thursday; 30% off on weekends. Naturally with all the Super Saver and those Freedom fare discounts, there are advance purchase and other qualifications. And the number of low-fare seats is limited, so it’s important to act now!

So see or call the Stowe Travel reservations for full details on all air fares and flight reservations. The following listing of Delta’s fares from Portland Jetport are an example of the air savings, etc:

One-way Day Tourist Fares from Portland:

New York $47, Atlanta $111, New Orleans $144, Houston $162.

Round-trip Super Saver Tourist Day Tourist Fares:

STOWE TRAVEL

Tel. 725-5573

9 Pleasant Street
Downtown Brunswick

“Serving Bowdoin faculty and students since 1950” Frosh, depth to determine fate of women booters

by LINDA JOHNSON

Going into their first season as a full-fledged varsity team, the women's soccer squad looks stronger than ever. As a junior varsity team last year, the women won six straight games after an opening day loss in compiling the best full record of any Bowdoin team. Even after only one scrimmage, in which the women trounced Southern Maine, 3-0, it looks as though the team is more powerful than ever.

Coach Ray Bicknell is extremely optimistic about the season. Bicknell bases his optimism on the team's depth. In the freshman class alone, there are seven who have played high school soccer and are well-drilled in the fundamentals.

The team will be led by last year's captain, senior Sarah Gates who will play strong halfback. Also playing in the halfback position are seniors Mary Money and Gwen Jones. Hacking up the halfbacks are three returning fullbacks: Debbie Davis, Nancy Norman and Judy Silverstein.

Last year's high scorer, sophomore Jessica Hall, will be starting in the forward line. Also, as wings, are Anna King, a freshman from Colorado, and Helen Nablo, a transfer from Wesleyan. The team's two first games are at Wesleyan on Saturday and Sunday at 11:00 a.m., and on October 4th vs. UNH, the home opener.

Boomers open with victory, host Springfield tomorrow

by NED HORTON

The soccer team opened its season on the right foot Wednesday, defeating the University of Maine 2-1 in an overtime contest at Orono.

"It's nice to win one," was all that a happy Coach Charlie Butt could say after the game.

The win proved to be a lift to the players as well, as it was a reversal of pre-season play which saw the Bears winless in four scrimmages. Players cited hard work, concentration, motivation and teamwork as reasons for the improvement in play. Captain Ralph Giles said, "We may not have played the prettiest soccer today, but we played with determination... and heart."

Bowdoin controlled the play during the opening portion of the game, led by the offensive charges of Giles and sophomore Mike Collins. The aggressive Bowdoin forwards caused the main fullbacks to retaliate with some semi-legal tactics. Collins was eventually awarded a penalty kick, after being tripped up on a break-away. His debut placement gave the Bears an early 1-0 lead.

U-Maine erased the margin, however, with less than a minute left in the first half. The Polar Bears were having trouble clearing the ball when Maine's Kurt Hall placed a shot into the far corner of the Bowdoin net. "It was a beautiful shot," sophomore fullback Dave Barnes explained later, "We had a defensive lapse. Kevin had no chance for it."

The shot was the only one to go by sophomore goalie Kevin Kennedy, who ended the day with ten saves. Kennedy missed some of the pre-season with an injured shoulder, but he turned in a fine performance in his first complete game of the season.

The second half was somewhat of a see-saw battle, as play became fast and furious. Bowdoin appeared to have the physical edge.

Questions remain

Gridders tune for opener

by BILL STUART

The 1978 edition of the Bowdoin football team probably that the old adage, "When you have your health, you have just about everything," is not entirely accurate. While the Polar Bears have their health, they are still looking for answers to questions that should have been answered days ago.

"Injury-wise, we are doing okay," asserts Head Coach Jim Lentz. "All of our injured players have returned," he then cited sophomore tackle Al Spangler, sophomore lineman Bill Parkin, and sophomore quarterback flank Elliott as examples of players who were injured early in practice and have recovered in time to help in tomorrow's opener against Trinity College at Whitaker Field.

Last scrimmage

The Polar Bears participated in their final pre-season last Saturday when they played in the annual Cathy Rates Bowdoin (ICR) scrimmage. The scrimmage gave the players valuable experience, but it did not provide a solution to several problems.

"I thought we showed good growth and a lot of improvement over last week's scrimmage against Tufts," says Lentz, "but we are still lacking execution on offense."

Most of the offensive problems revolve around the quarterbacking. Sophomore Hank Ellison and juniors Bob Kinkel and Bruce Berario all vied for the position. "We will probably open with Kinkel," Lentz announced earlier this week, citing the extra-back's strong arm and running ability. He warned, though, that Ellison has made steady progress since coming back from a finger injury, and he may be heard from before the season is too old.

John Fish, a 222-lb. freshman, has impressed at right tackle and may be called on to start there Saturday, succeeding All-American Steve McCabe at that position.

Frosh impressive

Three other freshmen have also impressed the coaching staff with their performances in practice. Tailback Craig Gardner looked very good in the CIB scrimmage. Jeff Hopkins, who hails from the highlands of pre-football, Canton, Ohio, "has looked at split end," according to Lentz. And on defense, linebacker Bill McLaughlin has stood out among the newcomers.

But they're not the only ones to watch as the Bears take on theVI.

F. Hockey team outduels UM-F:

by GEOFF WORRELL

What is perhaps the best defense in the state coupled with a lot of offensive potential showed signs of jelling into a winning combination Tuesday night. As Bowdoin's field hockey team trounced the University of Maine at Farmington, 3-0, the state champions won on teamwork as well as being the dominant force in the game. Coach Sally LaPointe insists, however, that despite this performance, there is more work to be done.

The first half of the game was close and low scoring. The Icebreaker was scored by senior Molly Hoagland and proved to be the only goal of the half. Sharon Grady, Bowdoin's goalie, had only three shots to contend with that half. Bowdoin's veteran defensewomen, fullbacks Karen Brodie and Trish Talcott, were hard at work keeping the ball out of bowdoin territory. The problem in the first half lay in the passing. Many passes weren't connecting and scoring opportunities could not be developed.

Second half

The second half was a different story. The rushers produced better offensive movement and passes began to penetrate the Farmington defense. The second goal of the game, however, was a fluke. The lone freshman on the team, Eve Corning, took a penalty shot and the shot wasn't strong enough to reach the goal. The Farmington goalie, however, balled up her glove before the shot was taken and that infraction allowed the shot to score.

The kicking game is still a concern for Lentz. Again last Saturday, neither putter showed enough skill to earn the starting job. It now appears that tomorrow's punter will win the duties by default.

Scoring report

The Bowdoin staff scouted Trinity at a scrimmage last week and reports that the visitors boast a diverse offense. "We'll have to handle their passing and their options," says Lentz. During practice this week, he had his linemen working on countering the play and shifting along the defensive line to confuse the Trinity quarterback.

The Bowdoin-Triinity series dates back to 1972, when the Connecticut school downed the Polar Bears by a 27-0 count. The teams discontinued play after Bowdoin's 13-6 victory in 1977 and renewed the rivalry in 1979, when Bowdoin expanded its schedule to nine to eight games. The series record shows seven victories for Trinity, three for Bowdoin, and one tie.

F. Hockey team outduels UM-F:

Cornings stars

Coach Sally LaPointe illustrates fundamentals at a recent field hockey practice. Her squad won its opener, 3-0, against UMaine-Farmington. Orient/Biggs (Continued on Page 7) Judiciary Board scolds Beta TD-probation given

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

"Since fraternity orientation aims to promote brotherhood and the welfare of all participants, it should be conducted in a socially and morally responsible manner. No fraternity member or pledge should be asked to act in the name of brotherhood and loyalty contrary to common sense and good judgment."

Guidelines on Fraternity Orientation:

"We were told right before the meeting last Friday that some individuals had gone up to Bates and ripped off some stuff. As part of the initiation rites these freshmen were instructed by members of the house to go to Bates. They were given a list of things to get. One of them was a scoreboard."

member, Student Judiciary Board

Initiation rites are usually great fun, but sometimes illegal. Some fraternity pledges therefore face a difficult decision during initiation rites: do they risk breaking the law by participating in initiation rites, or do they risk losing fraternity membership by refusing to engage in illegal acts?

Fraternities which expect comprehensive pledges are perhaps as guilty as the pledges who perform them. On Monday evening, September 25, Bowdoin's Student Judiciary Board dealt with such a fraternity - Theta Delta Chi.

Peter Steinbrueck, quoted above, is the member of the Board who reviewed the case.

"The member of 'TD'," he explains, "was fraternity fourteen years ago. He went to Bates and got some signs. They were brought by the police who turned them over to Bates. The Bates dean called Dean Nyhus here.

"There was no doubt that they were illegal. The question was: who takes the responsibility - the house or the freshmen?

"The officers of the house were reluctant to say who should take the responsibility. They eventually came around to saying that they (TD) should. The freshmen were a bit over-zealous, but that didn't lessen any the fraternity's responsibility.""}

The punishment was forgone for the time being. (Continued on Page 5)

INSIDE

Mix soccer, football, and a hell of a lot of spirit and you get rugby. A report on how it's played here... page 5

Comics, candles, crafts and more; Brunswick's new Tontine Mall fills the gaps on Main Street... page 3

A freshens his opinions on the Afro-American student at Bowdoin... page 4

A topic of soaring interest: dance at Bowdoin. Complete details on page 4. Orient Rosen

Robert, Zirinis triumph as 17 vie for 15 positions

by NANCY ROBERTS

It's needed for political personalities and campus candidates have gone into the closet like so many deserted Basex fans. In yesterday's Executive Board elections, a meager field of seventeen candidates was narrowed to fifteen Board members.

Winning seats on the Board were: Terry Roberts '80, Basil Zirinis '80, Mike Carman '80, Mike Walker '79, Jung Eun-Woo '90, Amy Homans '81, Kevin McCain '79, James Arenoff '81, Wanda Fleming '82, Tom George '80, Todd Buchanan '80, Carl Webb '80, Ed Lill '81, John Renzulli '79, and E.T. Price '82.

Terry Roberts, who received the most votes in the election, is optimistic about the future of the Executive Board and admits that its members will be faced with a lot of work this year.

"It will be difficult with so many inexperienced people, but I'm glad to see some new blood. I want to see it work," Roberts said.

This year's elections represent a marked, decline in student enthusiasm to hold office. Two years ago, there was a wealth of interest in student government. With forty odd aspirants vying for executive positions, a primary was necessary. Even the candidate once staged a write-in victory after being eliminated in the primary. "Those days of primaries, write-ins and suspense have faded into a stagnant campus political area which barely attracts enough students to require an election," offered one student.

Peter Richardson '79, last year's Chair of the Executive Board supported the board of candidates: "It's unfortunate that there's so little interest, because I view this as a transition year in student government." He explained that the new Constitution which was amended last spring allows for greater flexibility in the Board's polling of student opinion. Richardson doesn't claim to know the reasons for this year's lack of participation: "It's indicative of the frustrations encountered last year in the Board," he said.

One of the two candidates, Basil Zirinis '80, cited the new Constitution as a welcome change for the Board. A Student Assembly is no longer required once per semester; referenda may be used as an alternative means of obtaining a representation of student opinion instead of the poorly-attended "Town Meetings." Zirinis observed that the use of a referendum will also allow the Board to act immediately on many issues requiring student input, whereas in the past the Board has had to wait until enough issues had accumulated for a Town Meeting warrant.

Another new element in the Bowdoin political scene is the Bowdoin Union of Students (BUS), an open organization which ran a ticket of five members to the Executive Board. These five, along with the rest of the BUS membership, are concerned with "personal, political, and educational issues like Bowdoin's investments in South Africa and the distribution of decision-making power at the College," according to a flyer distributed by the group.

Jung Eun-Woo '80, one of the five on the BUS ticket, doesn't see their issues as outside the jurisdiction of the Executive Board. "The internal-external question is not valid; these issues (Continued on Page 5)

Students may have to pay as SAFC conserves cash

by HOLLY HENKE

Bowdoin students will be forced to pay out of their own pockets for entertainment and other forms of recreation this year if the Student Activities Fee Committee (SAFC) has its way.

In a flip of fiscal conservatism, the six students on the committee chaired by Terry Roberts '80 have limited budgets of the 26 clubs and organizations under their jurisdiction to a bare minimum.

"Students themselves are just going to have to pay a little more for the things they really want," Roberts explained.

If the SAFC gets the "rubber stamp" approval it expects from the faculty, students will probably have to make up the differences between SAFC dollars and the actual cost of many activities. In addition to the $85 fee they pay at the beginning of the year, students will have to pay admission to films sponsored by the Bowdoin Film Society (BFS) and to more Student Union Committee (SUC) sponsored activities than has been the case previously. They may also be called on to cover gas and transportation costs for trips such as those taken by the Bowdoin Outing Club.

Out of the $55,000 requested by clubs and organizations, the Committee has allotted about $65,000 in operating costs. Only "operating costs" were included in the 1978-79 budget allocations. Clubs that hope to be funded for capital expenditures will have to make claims in next October SAFC meeting. The remaining $11,900 of the $75,928 in the budget will go for various capital expenses and a "controversial" contingency fund of $4,000.

(Continued on Page 3)

Seminars main topic as Profs debate Center use

by MICHAEL TARDEFF

Overheard before last Monday's internal "meeting of the faculty": "Professor A: "We're going to have a lot of talk, talk..."

"Professor B: "I'm not going to do any of it if I can help it..."

As it turned out, "Professor A" was right, and "Professor B" couldn't help it. And although it was the expressed intent of the President that the informal gathering of the faculty would avoid the distraction of decision-making and that open exchange of ideas on the future of the various Senor Center programs would be facilitated, a resolution of sorts was reached, if not formally recognized, by the fifty or so faculty members present in the Daggett Lounge.

Senior Center Council chairman Douglas McGee summed up the feeling of most of those who offered opinions on whether or not the Council's extraordinary power to circumvent the normal route for course approval should be retained.

"Whatever happens to the Senior Center Council," said McGee, "this is the time of planning and encouraging extra-departmental seminars."

Some of those who are presently involved with the operation of the Senior Center program, and some of those who were at Bowdoin when the program and the building itself were conceived offered information, opinion and advice on the programs past value and future promise. Becoming the largest share of discussion time was the Senior Center Seminar (Continued on Page 4)

Faculty gathered in the Daggett Lounge last Monday to discuss the future of the Senior Center program. No votes were taken. Orient/Marcorn
No more excuses

Last Wednesday night, the Afro-American Society sponsored a "study-break." Despite the attraction of free cider and doughnuts, only about four dozen non-Am members showed up in the two and a half hours the party was going on. It goes without saying that had the same cider and doughnuts been offered at the Union, more students would have shown.

The Afro-Am has a reputation for being a separatist organization. Most white students do not feel free to just drop in the Center and some even feel threatened by its presence.

Realizing this, members of the Am are trying to improve their relations with the campus and change their cloistered image. Tentative plans include an open meeting, the Am's first, geared for whites to educate them to the Society's ideologies and goals, and perhaps more open houses to encourage black-white dialogue.

If these changes do come about, the white students must meet them halfway. Let's just see if students who are given the opportunity to do more than complain will go out of their way to talk out the differences. Future Am events will be better publicized; there is now no excuse for not going.

Greatest good

This year we were all asked to shell out $85, an increase of five dollars, as a student activities fee. This fee is apportioned among all the various student activities on campus by the Student Activities Fee Committee.

Obviously, the Committee cannot fund every group which claims a campus following. So we ask—why does it try? Presently, groups which have at best a limited appeal are funded while such groups as the Bowdoin Film Society and the Student Union Committee, which serve virtually the whole college, may be forced to start charging for their activities as a result of a shortage of funds.

We urge the Student Activities Fee Committee and the Executive Board to consider how many people each organization serves in apportioning the funds they have pried from us. When it comes to funding, the main consideration should be the greatest good for the greatest number.

Downhill slide

While some campus activities may not survive budget cuts, there is still one free form of entertainment for students here— the annual race for the student government.

Consider the statistics. For fifteen openings, there are seventeen contestants. Seats on the Board used to go to winners. Now, all you have to do is show.

Depressing as those figures may appear, even more disheartening is the fact that last year's Board did not have a single senior on it; yet only two members of that underclass group felt the work was worthwhile enough to return for a second helping. Call it apathy, but the body politic is comatose.

The novelty of this year's race was BUS, the Bowdoin Union of Students. Its aim, members say, is "to improve the structural means of communication" here in our small community of individuals. The group is to be praised for resisting the "alternative" kick—alternative paper, alternative government, alternative campus—and for demonstrating a willingness to work through the already established form of government.

Those on the BUS say they are working for the same cause; thus to be effective, they must vote as a bloc. But such action does not serve to represent student opinion. Instead, it restricts even further the puny voice that students now have. And thus the effort "to improve...communication" is defeated by its own proponents.

So what's the beef? Just this, the responsibility-through-government kick has finally started into a downhill slide. It's decadent. People run for office to embellish their transcripts, blow up their egos and exhibit themselves. No one seems to care whether student government, for any purpose, is pertinent. The facts surrounding this election indicate it isn't. The really sad part of it all is that student government represented student opinion, there wouldn't be a student government. But there is.

On race relations

by GEOFF WORRELL

Good feelings between the races are gauged by whether a hello is said emphatically or as a boring, routine courtesy. In my short stay at Bowdoin, I have been repeatedly troubled by the fact that there is a kind of racial tension here. This tension stems from nothing tangible, but hides in the form of ambiguity. This ambiguity is the status of race relations in this college. The understanding of race relations at this college entails an awareness of the importance of each element of the college community.

Although there has been marked improvement in relations between the races at Bowdoin in the past two years, the improvement has not been enough. Part of the problem is a result of the small number of blacks at Bowdoin. Three percent of the total student population is black. Without a certain "critical mass," the contact between blacks and whites cannot be minimal.

There is also no substantial effort made to keep black students here who have trouble handling the work. Associate Director of Admissions Martha Bailey admits, "Sometimes we have set in black students who we feel might have trouble handling the work load here."

If the Admissions Office takes these gambles, the administration and the faculty owe it to these students to supply programs to help them adjust to the rigors of the Bowdoin curriculum. As a result of this negligence, 23% of the black students admitted in 1975 to the class of 1979 are no longer here.

The Admissions Office is several things to increase the number of blacks at Bowdoin. "We do have an Affirmative Action Program, but only the Harvard Plan discussed in the Bakke Case," explains Ms. Bailey. "I don't really draw many of those students, I draw mostly from the surrounding areas. There are very few blacks in Maine. The only other area that we could draw from is New England, and of course, the housing problem in Boston has shut down, for the most part, our recruiting there."

More black professors and administrators would also improve race relations at the college. Explains Dean of Students Wendy Fairey: "More blacks in positions of leadership would help lessen the sense of isolation." At first, the idea of having a black hello may seem like a juvenile concern, but if given close consideration, it is clear that many black professors and administrators would share some of the same views the white students. They would share an understanding of the frustration of being black students and the administration could understand.

The small number of black students and faculty members, the race problem is hard to ignore. How, more than that can be done by the small number of blacks here. The Afro-American Society is here at Bowdoin, to deal with improving perceptions whites have of blacks and blacks of whites. There is a catch, however, in the approach the Society can take. It is limited to dealing with the perceptions and uncertainties of a black student. The nature of racial compatibility is, therefore, seen only through the eyes of one race. Without the other, the compatibility between the two groups is the crux of the problem, and can only be solved by the cooperation of two groups, can the ambiguity be clarified and then resolved.

Among students here, there is a feeling that the Afro-American Society is not doing all it could to enhance race relations here. The consensus is that "Blacks isolate themselves here."

Whites, however, do not understand why blacks on campus are not more integrated. When a group of blacks are having a conversation, therefore, whites do not feel comfortable joining in. The same for this situation and the responsibility for its resolution lies mainly in the hands of the Afro-American Society.

The Society has been successful in bringing the blacks on campus and organizing them into a influential group that looks after its own interests. The Society is trying to continue an interest program that is career-oriented. It also is sponsoring an effective and well attended student lecture series as well as parties open to the entire campus. The Am, however, has not adequately explained to the rest of the campus (Continued on Page 5)
The Tontine Mall is getting ready for its third opening. Stores will include a ski shop, a card shop, a plant shop, a candy store and a bakery. -Orient/Evanka

Confused

To the Editor:

Grace is this new "Security Shuttle" on campus which I haven't figured out yet. Do we need it?

1) To go with the state trooper uniforms of our Security squad?

2) Because, under the old system, it was possible to divert Security by calling for a ride from the library and breaking into Cleveland Hall to make a batch of speed?

3) How do you prefer the walk (and in extreme cases, ten minutes does a job on the soles of our Docksiders and Joe's boot)?

4) Because snow makes the Brunswick area impassable?

5) Because Financial Aid had to create a few new jobs?

6) Because of the sparse use of the system last year after midnight?

7) Because the few nights last year when the shuttle service couldn't handle the volume of requests during the winter breaks, the students feel there was a lack of service for the Bowdoin student body?

8) Because the presence of Security was not sufficiently imposing when the car provided taxi service for the campus?

Some of these and other objectives I have heard are unable to convince me that the shuttle service is anything but an unnecessary luxury. And such luxuries, in my opinion, would be trimmed from, rather than added to, the budget as we win our battle.

Thanks for the gesture, Security, but I can walk back to the Harpswell St. Apartments. If you fear I'll be attacked, give me a few more lights along the way. But why add another set of wheels when one set was enough?

Sincerely,

Chuck Goodrich '79

Clarification

To the Editor:

Your story on Bowdoin's new registration system (September 15, p. 4) misquoted me. I did not suggest that the system only provided the illusion of choice.

What I said was that Americans often settle for the illusion of choice and that Bowdoin students last year should also think of other ways in which course selection choices might be improved; more computer options, special courses, extra courses, work-study and curriculum development.

Daniel W. Rosstein
Department of Sociology

---

New mall provides boon to Brunswick browsers

by ANGELA BARBARO

The rumors are true — a shopping mall has come to "downtown" Brunswick. Not to be confused with malls of the sprawling suburban variety, the Tontine Mall will open its doors in early October. Fourteen specialty shops ranging from the sublime in candy to the last word in ski wear and equipment.

Built on the site of an old Brunswick landmark, the Tontine Mall derives its name from the hotel of the same name which burned down during the 1940s. John Dunn and his partner and co-developer, T. Ricardo Quesada, first conceived of a mall in Brunswick almost two years ago. Actual construction began in April of this year.

Dunn and Quesada see several factors pointing toward success for the mall. First, in Dunn's words, the Brunswick community rests on a "stable economic base", which is dependent on the College, Naval Air Station and town itself.

Secondly, the mall hopes to fill several "gaps" in existing local services available along the Maine Street corridor. For instance, the absence of a grocery store. "The immediate area has been sorely felt by some," Tontine Fine Candies owner said.

According to Dunn, the vacant Goodwin Chevrolet Garage was also chosen as an ideal spot for a specialty mall as it was "the only part of Maine Street still unutilized." The transformation of the old used car lot into a shopping mall required a "substantial" but as yet undisclosed expenditure.

Dunn has been involved in similar renovation ventures in the past. As general manager, Dunn’s Exchange in Portland, Mr. Dunn oversaw the renovation of a series of buildings on the Old Port section of town into small shopping malls.

Tontine Mall is designed for easy pedestrian access off Maine Street. This design encourages people to "dwell" within the Tontine Mall contains an amazing variety of shops and retains a personalized atmosphere.

Some shops which have already taken space in the mall include the Ski Stall complete ski outfitters, Macheen’s Audio and Visual, The Northeast Trading Company (specializing in government surplus, Downeast Hobbies and Crafts, Inc., Paperworks (a card shop), World Travel, Tontine Fine Candies, Cozy’s Delicatessen and Artisans.

Still to come are the Bakery Project, a bakery carrying whole grain products, a small movie theater showing first-run movies at reduced prices, and The Apple Tree II is plant shop. A restaurant with a special wine and cheese carry-out feature is tentatively planned. Many of the shops elsewhere in Maine, or have moved into the mall from outlying areas of Brunswick.

Unlike many of her fellow tenants, Marie Mallon, owner of Tontine Security Service, had been a newcomer to the retail business. Coincidentally, she is the wife of Tom Mallon, the owner of Accountance Office at the College.

All the candies Mrs. Mallon sell are made with her own formulations added. After much searching, she located a candy distributor who sells her candies. "Hand-dipping of chocolates is a lost art," Mrs. Mallon says. In addition, candies of a jelly type are made with a soft sugar derivative, instead of starch, which is usually the case. As Mrs. Mallon explained, "You can taste the difference. If candy can be healthy, it is this."

While many of the shops are already open for business, the official Grand Opening of the Tontine Mall will be held the pre-Columbus Day weekend.
Nukes out as students search for superior energy alternatives

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

College students are often accused of living in ivory towers, and when the subject is nuclear power, Bowdoin students are no exception. Many local scholars probably don’t even realize the campus sits within 26 miles of one such power plant, Maine Yankee, in implantation.

The real problem, however, according to Todd Buchanan, is that students have no concept of the impact nuclear power may have on their lives. Buchanan led an informal discussion on the hazards and costs of nuclear power last May at the first organized meeting of Bowdoin’s anti-nuke group. The group described as “a sophisticated way to boil water,” nuclear power is a method by which uranium is split in a reactor, releasing a tremendous amount of energy which heats water and turns turbines, producing electricity.

Although it sounds simple, in fact there are many problems associated with the process which many people don’t realize. For example, there is no completely safe way to dispose of radioactive waste, which remain radioactive long after they have been generated. The waste is transported to a place far away from the plant, or it is stored in tanks at the plant. Either way, there is a danger of leakage and contamination.” He cited a number of cases where contamination occurred at plants when radioactive nuclear waste leaked from containers. The increased risk of leukemia and cancer in areas where leakage has occurred is documented, he said.

In addition, the country’s needs for electricity are underestimated, he said, citing a report issued this year by the National Committee on Government Operations. The report, released in April of this year, said that although an early study by Public Service stated that nuclear energy could provide 20 percent of electricity by 1985, it would be 13,000 megawatts by 1985, that the report’s commissioner by New Jersey showed that the needed would be less than half of that estimate.

Proponents of nuclear power often say that in order for waste disposal to continue, nuclear power consumption has to grow at a compara tive rate, which it false,” Buchanan declared. As proof, he offered evidence from an assistant to California governor Jerry Brown, Wilson Clark, who reported that although there was a 90 percent decline in California’s electricity growth rate during 1977, percent decrease in the state, increased 12.5 percent, and nearly 500,000 new jobs were created.

In addition, the Energy Policy Project of the Ford Foundation concluded that reduction of the already small risk of nuclear power, would be by as little as two percent, through more efficient use of energy, would save the country $300 billion by the year 2000.

Other statistics also show that nuclear power is more expensive than alternative energy sources, including solar, wind, biomass and coal, he said. The government may be considering nuclear energy for a time of a typical two unit plant over ten years ending in 1989, would approach $3.75 billion. ‘These figures don’t even include-costs to clean the plant, which must be done about 40 years later,” he explained.

Buchanan pointed out the government report again, which said : “If an aggressive effort were made, solar energy could produce more of this country’s heating and hot-water needs, and even its electrical needs, at competitive prices in the near future.” A report from Michael Antal Jr., a Princeton physicist, indicated that hydrogen produced from organic materials could appear almost half of the present energy demands of the U.S.

Probably the most terrifying aspect of nuclear power is the risk it runs to human life and property.

“In the worst possible case, a single plant could cause a million dollars in property damage in an area $1 billion, in addition to tens of thousands of deaths,” he said.

So why, in light of the evidence, has the administration recommended the construction of 75 more nuclear power plants before 1987? Buchanan believes utility companies are afraid of decentralization which would occur if alternate energy sources were used. “Right now, the utilities have their rates set by the government, and those rates include guaranteed profits. The more the capital costs, the greater the profit.”

But before people can be expected to react against nuclear power, Buchanan believes they must be made aware of all aspects of the energy source.

The group’s next meeting will be Sunday at noon in the Multifunction Lounge, when there will be a discussion of Amory Lovin’s article, “The End of Coal.”

Low key faculty discussion outlines SC pros and cons program.

(Continued from Page 1)

It was pointed out that the Council is presently operating under a faculty decision dating back to 1972, the last time the faculty considered the question of whether it was necessary and proper for a body other than the Committee on Curriculum and Educational Policy (CEP) to approve courses offered for academic credit at Bowdoin. At that time, it was determined that SC seminars should be relatively small courses, treating matter distinctly different from the rest of the curriculum. The seminars were to be informal, and experimental in format, emphasize independent study of the subject, and be of an interdisciplinary or extra departmental nature.

Some professors pointed to “general computing” and “industrial” offerings in past years; others applauded the use of adjunct faculty to teach the seminars as an apparently inexpensive way to supplement Bowdoin’s curriculum.

President Bill Estes, who had suggested both the meeting and its topic, perched on the arm of a chair near the front of the room throughout the meeting. Estes was participating to a significant degree in the discussion, explaining that he was interested in what faculty members were thinking on the topic.

Whether the opportunity to discuss the issue of the future of the SC is ever to be seized and Council outside of a formal decision-making meeting will speed the process of resolving the matter in the months to come remains to be seen. It was safe to say that nearly all of those who will sit in Massachusetts Hall when the time comes to decide will share the sentiment expressed by Professor Paul Hazleton: “What we need is a genuine discussion, not an argument about what should be in the structure... if we can’t decide what should be in the structure, we will as well just turn off the lights and go home.”

Numbers swell

Dance program steps up

by TOM GLAVE

Not until recently has dance at Bowdoin received much attention, due in part to the support of a large section of the student body as well as a constant lack of necessary funds for good, safe equipment. This year, the Bowdoin Dance Group is showing fine form in an innovative dance technique, prodded by Ms. June Vail, the director of Bowdoin’s dance program.

The Dance Group has three weekly classes, one in basic technique, one in creative and the other in advanced form. If all goes well, the College may expect a major performance at the year’s end as a result of these efforts.

This semester, the Group is operating a new Portland Gym’s Multi-Purpose room as well as the gym itself. The Multi-Purpose room is well below par for dancing because of its concrete-based floor and dearth of wall bars; the gym is unsuitable due to its large size and lack of mirrors. There has been talk of converting the Multi-Purpose room into a locker room for women, and, as the year progresses the gym will become more occupied with the basketball team.

Still Ms. Vail is optimistic, looking back at what she and Bowdoin’s dance group have done. “Dance is an intellectual as well as a physical thing,” she says. “It gives people confidence in their own ability to create...to work cooperatively and competitively with other people.”

Despite the fact that one would not think of Bowdoin as a place which shapes and produces dance “out of thin air,” it is evidence to the contrary. “A great many graduates from here,” Ms. Vail declares, “have gone on to professional dance companies, to become dance teachers and critics.” This fall, sixty to seventy students signed up for the Bowdoin Dance Group.

Ms. Vail, among others, would like to have other genres of dance available here, i.e. ballet, tap and jazz. In this wish is not alone, for Dean of the Faculty Alfred Buchanam calls to have an interest in seeing more dance at Bowdoin.

I’d like to see the dance program become strong,” he asserts. “We invest time and energy in athletics, and I’d like to see dance in that role.” According to Dean Buchanam, there are no funds in this year’s budget to provide for new facilities in the dance program, facilities sorely needed.

“We need a better practice room, wooden floors, mirrors and barres. There is space in the athletic department that might be utilized. And I suppose that one day we may want to raise the question of dance for credit,” says Buchanam.

This fall, the Bowdoin Dance Group will be sponsoring the 1978 Dance Films Series, entitled, “The Art of Doris Humphrey.” The series starts on the fifth of October and continues every Thursday thereafter into early November. In addition, on Thursday, October 26th, Ms. Ernestine Stedelle, an instructor of dance at Yale and once a dancer of the Doris Humphrey Company, will present a lecture and master class in Humphrey technique. Ms. Stedelle will also visit Colby. More dance-related events will follow, as the Pauline Kraner Dance Consort, a company of ten dancers, will be in residence at Bowdoin during the week November six through tenth. A special evening on November ninth, all at the Pickard Theater. The residency is being partially funded by Colby, Bates and Colby as well as the Maine State Commission on the Arts and Humanities.

For Guys and Gals

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chili Sauce Crèmebrulees — Bromo Seltzer HOT DOGS STAND

BERING VEST II
Prime northern goose down insulation; lightweight nylon outer shell; kidney-warming pocket inner; insulated collar; hand warmer pockets with large snap-closure.

For Guys
Men’s Wear
McDuff’s
90 Maine St., Brunswick
VISA & Master Charge Welcome
Open Daily 9-5; Fri. Evenings till 8:00

Teen Wear
Young Men’s Wear

Rugby is a game of skill and coordination. Here, rugger vie for possession of the ball, Oxford.

Cook '80, one of the sport's misguided participants.

The Bowdon Rugby Club, comprising thirty-five members, is dominated by Bowdon All Blacks, a delectable group of twenty-five young men who form a powerful and cohesive team. The team promote "college camaraderie," Bob Terrill '79 explains. "We're just two teams; we've got one hell of a lot of spirit."

Those who turned out last Saturday, a BUS crowd of 2,300 in action against Maine Maritime Academy realize that rugby can be a difficult sport to understand. In many respects, rugby is very similar to American football. Played on a field 120 yards long and 75 yards wide, provided one that large can be found, the game consists of two 40-minute halves with a rest period in between.

At the start of each half, play begins with a kick from the mid-field line. Once the ball is in play, it may be kicked, kicked, or thrown, but cannot be knocked forward with the hands. So long as the ball is in play, the team must remain behind the man with the ball. If an offensive man does get ahead of this man, he is considered offsides.

Fifteen men, usually in various colored jerseys, quite clashing on how far along the season has progressed, comprise the rugby team. The '80s include eight forwards, a stand-off half, four three-quarter backs, and a fullback. The forwards see heavy action in a "set scrum," which is similar in play to a "set line." Several idiosyncrasies of the

Incumbents lead pack as only two are eliminated

(Continued from Page 1) do affect Bowdoin students. From the dorms, Mike Walker '79, sees the Executive Board as a lobbying tool with programs for students. Says Walker, "Our function on the Board will be a representative one. A lot of jobs like the Executive Board as powerless, but we want to explore how decisions are made and use this lobbying power to its full potential."

Rugby's game of scrum and coordination. Apparently, the object is to make the other team. Orient/Yong possession of the ball can shoulder each other, in the penalty kick, it is

Afro-Am must clarify goals to aid campus race relations

(Continued from Page 2) what it is trying to do. The white faction of the campus does not realize the importance of these programs to black students, and its implementation breeds unity among the black community. Whites do not understand why blacks on campus stick together, and so they cannot accept it.

Blacks will have to take the first step. The Afro-American Society will have to educate the rest of the campus to its goals and to its ideology. The Society works as a forum for black student thought, all of the important views of black students are represented on the Board. The goal is to disseminate them among the college and society, and to make sure that blacks on campus not only have to be available, but publicized and seen, or they cannot accept it.

The black community is not to prevent the taking of books without checking them out; instead, the Society hopes to have the only guidebooks of race-relations at Bowdoin, and the ambiguity will be a guiding light for any further understanding.

Frank initiates too far; house incurs punishments

(Continued from Page 11 semester," explains Chris Messner, president of TD. "It involves no campus-wide and no board participation."

The Judicial Board, however, says that this event is not under its jurisdiction, that the Board's regulations about initiation requirements is left very vague. The Deans can then take it any way they want, so we're going to have to be pretty careful.

According to Steinbrueck, the Judicial Board was "uncivilizing to quantify what is and isn't—and there's no means of enforcement. It doesn't mean we're giving up there to marshal the activities of the house.

Messler, however, feels a pinch. "Wendy Fairey and the Judicial Board are tightening screws. She's made it clear that she doesn't like the frats. She and the Deans are extending their boundaries. Some alumni are formulating a number of letters to that effect.

"Five or six years ago the College couldn't do anything to a frat. If I'm someone from a frat got in trouble at home I wouldn't be surprised to see Wendy Fairey do something about it."

The TD speaks in terms of back to school. Some action must be taken get out of control," Messner said.

Steinbrueck diarraged: "The Administration steps out of it for the most part. They're present throughout. The Deans are making comments but not usually solicited for judgement."

Dean Fairey is "unwilling to go back to the views of the administration but she doesn't influence our decisions. We oversee the whole process. The administration usually accepts the recommendations of the Judicial Board."

TD is not the only campus fraternity to stand before the J Board this year. Beta Theta Pi has been placed on probation for this semester, but for different reasons.

"Some of the neighbors," Steinbrueck explains. "We're extremely strict over activities of rush week but--more important--they were taken upon years of problems with the Betas. Two were quite upon and wanted to close the place down.

The neighbors complained primarily about noise in the wee hours. The Betas' corridor and the large amounts of garbage-cluttering the area after parties. Because Beta sits in the midst of a residential area, the problem is not new. The Dean of Students placed Beta on a semester's probation to look for the same reasons.

"It all involves no parties, no garbage," notes Steinbrueck. "It was unqualified -- the Betas, they can still have parties, but no open parties."

"I think it was fair," said Paul Devlin, president of Beta. "We've had our share of problems over the last few years. The neighbors are important. We've got to respect them."

"We have no campus-wide or house-wide, but we can have parties within the house. We have to have a person out front to make sure everything's under control."

Closed circuit covers lies; potential thieves warded off

by WALTER HUNT

It's called Automated Buildings Systems Control, and its most recent phase is going to cost Bowdoin College $128,000, says Physical Plant head, John Barbour.

The new Phase 3 improvements will include more computerized reporting for Security, an integration of all fire-alarm systems on campus and a new television-monitoring system for the Special Collections Suite and the second-floor display cases.

Increased security is the part of the library officials about possible thefts of valuable library materials through new alarm systems on campus. The alarm systems on campus, and the second-floor display cases.

Increased security is the part of the library officials about possible thefts of valuable library materials through new alarm systems on campus. The alarm systems on campus, and the second-floor display cases.

Increased security is the part of the library officials about possible thefts of valuable library materials through new alarm systems on campus. The alarm systems on campus, and the second-floor display cases.
Disinterest haunts exec forum

by THOMAS SABEL

While most everyone on campus was studying, waiting for the Monday Night Football game, or recovering lost sleep, the Executive Board held a candidates' forum in Lancaster Lounge. Sixteen of the seventeen candidates were present to express their views to an audience of about twenty concerned students. Each candidate was allotted two minutes to state his or her mind, after which the listeners could question the candidate. All but one candidate had spoken, the floor was then opened to general questions.

Previous members of the Board said little of last year's troubles, but focused on the hope that the Board could again become effective and regain student and faculty respect. Terry Roberts faced the issue of rebuilding the Board's stature most directly. She spoke of the failure of last year's Board to fulfill the dual function of the Board: to gather information on pending issues in faculty committees and meetings and then alert the students of the upcoming issues, and to galvanize student opinion into a force that the faculty and administration will recognize.

She stressed the responsibility of the student representatives to faculty committees to report to the Board, indicating that if the appointees were not fulfilling their obligations, the Board would feel free to replace them.

Differences arose over the use of the newly-instituted referendum power. Banu Zarinis planned to use the referendum to gauge sentiment on issues of import. Ed Lill indicated that he would prefer using the referendum more often, to give the impression that the Board was not merely guessing at student opinion.

The newly formed Bowdoin Union of Students (BUS) voiced a common concern that the power structure of Bowdoin be fully investigated and understood in order to increase the Board's potency. But each member of BUS underscored their individuality, giving personal reasons for running for the Board.

Freshmen and transfers pointed out that they would be unsatisfied by last year's strife. Since the freshmen class has yet to experience Bowdoin apathy, one newly-suggested, this year is the time to correct past troubles, so as not to lose another class.

Todd Buchanan left the Board should become involved with issues outside the immediate concerns of the Bowdoin campus. He was certain that with issues of global concern confronting the students they could never remain apathetic.

Questions asked of the candidates centered on the proper function of the Board and its ability to deal with student apathy. Candidates responded by reaffirming the informational and organizational roles of the Board, but also made it clear that the Board may deal with any issue it deems appropriate.

Someone in the audience noted that since only one of those running would be eliminated, those present were for all intents this year's Executive Board, and pressed the members for more concrete proposals on dealing with student apathy. The candidates again responded with statements indicating that hard work and better flows of information are the keys to arouzing the students.

Sincerely,
Steve Dunsky '79
President, BFS

LETTERS

Bayard Rustin, one of the chief strategists in the black struggle for equality in the U.S., will speak next Friday in the Daggett Lounge at 7:30. His subject will be "Black America: Transition and Turmoil."

The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture, the first in the 1978-79 series of John Brown Russwurm Lectures.

At 7:30 in the Kreege Auditorium, the Museum Associates present "The Phantom of the Opera." The public is cordially invited.

Students interested in serving on the special committee to investigate Bowdoin's investments in South Africa should contact the President's office soon. Two or three students will be selected.

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students 10% discount on all items in front store. — Card and Gifts —

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine street Telephone 725-4331 Brunswick, Maine 04011

STEW HOUSE

FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 maine st. brunswick, maine 725-3314
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

This Week's Entertainment
Larry Savage, Denny Williams
Happy Hour
Mon.-Fri. 3-6
Pitchers Thurs. all night

Bayard Rustin, one of the chief strategists in the black struggle for equality in the U.S., will speak next Friday in the Daggett Lounge at 7:30. His subject will be "Black America: Transition and Turmoil."

The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture, the first in the 1978-79 series of John Brown Russwurm Lectures.

At 7:30 in the Kreege Auditorium, the Museum Associates present "The Phantom of the Opera." The public is cordially invited.

Students interested in serving on the special committee to investigate Bowdoin's investments in South Africa should contact the President's office soon. Two or three students will be selected.

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students 10% discount on all items in front store. — Card and Gifts —

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine street Telephone 725-4331 Brunswick, Maine 04011

STEW HOUSE

FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 maine st. brunswick, maine 725-3314
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

This Week's Entertainment
Larry Savage, Denny Williams
Happy Hour
Mon.-Fri. 3-6
Pitchers Thurs. all night

manassas, ltd.

ECM JAZZ SALE
$7.98 LIST — $4.99

New And Recent Releases By:
Pat Metheny — Egberto Gismonti
John Abercrombie — Gary Burton
Keith Jarrett — Bill Connors
Jan Garbarek — Jack DeJohnette
Ralph Towner — Eberhard Weber

Come In And Register For Drawing
ECM Artist Poster Sets
ECM Sampler LPs
(Deadline Oct. 21)

212 upper maine st., brunswick manassas' record resource
Grid Bears drop opener, seek rebound at Amherst

(Continued from Page 8)

On a more positive note, Lentz was encouraged by the play of some Polar Bears. He listed Scott Baker and Bob Stevens as standout defenders. "And John Blomfield was our best defensive lineman," acknowledged the coach. On offense, Lentz applauded the efforts of Kinkel and Dan Speros, who led the team with four receptions. "I thought he did a nice job, blocking real well," said Lentz of his sophomore tight end.

The fourth quarter opened with the Bears in possession. Led by McNamara's three receptions for 55 yards, the guests covered 64 yards in eight plays. "We did not function well or execute well in the second half," said Lentz in assessing the defeat.

Quarterback Rip Kinkel scrambles toward the Trinity goal line. He was injured on the play, but Bruce Bernier assumed control and led the Bears to their lone TD. Orient-Evans

Both running teams defeated by BILL STUART and DEIRDRE OAKLEY

It was a lean day for Bowdoin runners, as both the men and the women were crushed last Saturday.

Oroko whips men

The men's cross-country team experienced the agony of defeat Saturday when they were easily handled by the University of Maine-Orono. The loss was the squad's first setback of the season after two victories.

Greg Kerr '79, the team captain, led the Polar Bears at the UM-O meet with a 1:20:30 finish, just under two minutes off the winner's pace of 28:04. Tom Mitchell '90 (1:18:13) and Tim Gues '79 (1:18:13) were the only other Polar Bears in the top twenty.

The squad will again take to the road on Saturday, meeting the Ephs of Colby in the top twenty. The next home meet is on October 4.

Women defeated

For the second straight meet, the women's cross-country team ran into a surprisingly strong opponent and were beaten soundly. This time it was the University of Maine-Orono, who defeated the Lady Jeffs, 17-37.

Bowdoin's top finisher was Jane Petrich '82, who crossed the line fourth overall with a time of 23:40. Following close behind were junior captain Evertie Hawson, who finished sixth, freshman Brenda Chapman, who took eighth, freshman Deirdre Oakley, who finished ninth, and sophomore Jenny Green, who crossed the finish line tenth.

The team's next meet is its only home match. It is against Bates and will be held at the Brunswick Golf Course at 3:30.

Brunswick Tennis and Racquetball

100 Harpswell Road — 729-8433

College Students

Tennis

$20

Racquetball

$25

Combined

$40

Course Rates

Tennis

College Student Rates (Tennis)

$7.00 per court hour 12:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. weekdays and all weekend (members)

Racquetball

$4.00 per court hour before 5 p.m.

$6.00 per court hour after 5 p.m.

Non-Members Rates

Add 50 cents per hour per person

Tennis

Early Bird: Unlimited play (members only), 4 courts available. Weekday mornings only — 7:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. on open court time for winter season . . . $125.00 per person half for Bowdoin, but it was freshman Kwame Poku who collected the day's lone goal, late in the period.

Boaters silence critics with upset victory Saturday

(Continued from Page 8)

Captain Ralph Giles gained control of the ball in the corner and sent a cross towards Poku, who was 20 yards in front of the Springfield net. Poku took the ball in mid-air and promptly volleyed it into the goal for the margin of victory.

On Wednesday, the Bears traveled to Waterville, hoping to add to their victory column, only to be frustrated by an aggressive Colby team. The Bowdoin defense provided the only bright spot in the scoreless deadlock, successfully holding Colby scoreless.

Kennedy was again flawless in the nets, making eight saves for his second straight shutout.

Bowdoin's attempts at a short passing game were repeatedly frustrated by a hustling Colby opposition. "Against Springfield we played like we wanted to win ... we never let up. When we played tough the breaks came our way," junior midfielder Gordon Logan explained. "That was against Colby."

King's Barber Shop

Town Hall Place

Tel. 725-8587

Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop.

Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

Call Stowe Travel

For

Airline Tickets

DID YOU KNOW that Charlotte Cushman '81; Eileen Lambert '81; and Nickie Beisel '80, were all singing Christmas Carols in the dinner line at the Moulton Union the other evening supposedly to remind all Bowdoin travelers that for those planning their advance holiday flight reservations, it's really "Christmas in September"?

TOMORROW, Saturday, September 29, Stowe Travel will have two travel consultants, Barbara Leonard and Cheryl Klinensmith, on Stowe's domestic airline desk all day from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. to assist you with those special holiday flight reservations and airline tickets to anywhere in the U.S.?

STOWE TRAVEL is open, of course, from Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., with a staff of seven persons to assist you with all travel arrangements.

Stowe Travel represents

ALL U.S. and Foreign Airlines

STOWE TRAVEL

Tel.: 725-5573

9 Pleasant Street

Downtown Brunswick

1980 ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

Page 7
Alums disappointed
Trinity tames Bears, 34-6

by BILL STUART

Blame it on the schedule-makers. When Bowdoin expanded its football schedule from seven to eight games three years ago, Trinity was one of the choices. And since, the Polar Bears have opened against the Bantams. And each year Trinity has sent a team to Orono -- and this year, the visitors put a rude damper on an otherwise gala Alumni Weekend with a 34-6 triumph over the Polar Bears.

After winning the host's first series of down, Trinity marched 60 yards for the game's initial score. In the drive, halfback John Flynn gained 41 yards on 10 carries. Senior quarterback Mike Fowey capped the drive with a two-yard scoring toss to split end Pat McNamara. Don Jacobs' conversion made the score 7-0.

Bowdoin fumbled on its first play from scrimmage after the kickoff, and the Bantams defense recovered from the 27. Trinity struck paydirt on four running plays. Flynn gained the first 11 yards on two carries, including a 2-yard scoring run. Jacobs again converted, upping the margin to 14-0.

After several exchanges, the Bowdoin offense suddenly began to function smoothly. Led by the running of quarterback Rip Kinkel and tailback Trip Spinner, the Bears marched 72 yards in three plays as the teenager plays in a drive that took 6:12 to complete. Kinkel suffered a minor ankle injury late in the drive, but sub Bruce Bernier entered the game and kept the rally going, handing off to fullback Tom Scalias for the score. A poor snap from center denied Alie Hillemeir a shot at the conversion, but Trinity was called for a penalty on the play. With the ball on the one-yard line, Coach Jim Lentz decided to go for two points. The attempt failed, though, when Scalias was stopped by the heart of the Bantam defensive line. Bowdoin trailed at that point, 14-2, a score that would stand up at the half.

Bowdoin fans were optimistic at the half. They had put together a long touchdown drive late in the first half, and it appeared that the offense had finally come together. "I thought at halftime that we were going to move," said Lentz.

Guests explode

The second half belonged to the visitors. Or more specifically, it belonged to Fowey, Flynn and McNamara. With five minutes gone in the third quarter, the Bantams received the ball at the Bowdoin 46. Trinity scored on the Bowdoin one, from where Chuck Welsh hurdles over the top for another score.

(Continued on Page 7)

Field hockey team overmatched; powerful UNH-inflicts 7-0 defeat

by GEOFF WORRELL

They were completely outclassed. It was a small New England school against a Division I university. High-powered University of New Hampshire mastered the Bowdoin stick-handlers last Tuesday, 7-0. "We played better against U.N.H. than we did against Farmington," game Bowdoin won 4-0, explains Karen Brodie. The U.N.H. players were faster, better passers, better stick handlers and played a style of game which the hosts weren't ready to deal with.

The University of New Hampshire is renowned for its field hockey prowess throughout the country. Its field hockey program involves recruiting and a high-powered, pressure-oriented, emphasis on winning. A Bowdoin team can't be expected to win against a team with this type of program. Making a game out of it would not be expected from the stick-handlers, and although the score doesn't indicate it, make a game of it they did.

The U.N.H. goals came at the end of each half, flipping the score and half and four in the last two minutes of the second half. Both barrages were caused by a lapse in concentration. Against any other team, Bowdoin may have been able to get away with them, but U.N.H. took advantage of the Bowdoin dry spells and turned an otherwise well-played game into a rout.

"The first five goals were good ones," recalls Bowdoin goalie Sharon Grady. "In a game where it was apparent we were completely outclassed, the stick-handlers put in their best efforts. The goals were mainly a result of the U.N.H. scoring machine. Bowdoin allowed no shots to be taken at point blank. A couple of the goals were screened shots. Others were well-placed angle shots. Grady, who is a rookie at the goalie position, learned a lot from the experience. She had never experienced a goal shot before. The one she did experience in the game landed in the right corner of the net. The two freshmen men, Eve Corning and Caroline Glassman, played the entire game. They too learned the proverbial hard way.

This was a week-long learning experience for Bowdoin's field hockey team. Last Saturday, the stick-handlers lost to Southern Maine, a team most players felt they should have beaten. There was no hostile display by Bowdoin. "We were looking forward to U.N.H. and we didn't get psyched for the game," explained Brodie.

Coach LaPointe commented after the victory over Farmington that there was a lot more work to be done. Although the second round doesn't show it, the team has prospered from last week's experiences.

Women netters top UM-PI;
then are routed by Wildcats

by NORMA THOMPSON

After edging U.M. Presque Isle in its first match of the season, the women's tennis team was soundly defeated by the formidable Uhline squad. The Bowdoin women reacted nervously at first to Presque Isle's fast-hitting game, but they were finally able to overcome this weakness to snatch their first victory. Unfortunately, Uhline displayed so much lack of power, and Bowdoin was quickly handed its first defeat.

Of Bowdoin's twelve varsity players lined up against Uhline, five were freshmen. Interestingly, there was at least one freshman behind each of Bowdoin's victories. Kathy Lang joined with junior Chris Chandler for a decisive win in doubles, and both Sue Caras and Dottie Diorio emerged as singles winners.

Top Players

At the top of the varsity ladder this year is junior Meg McLean. Captain Meredith Miller, returning from a year abroad, currently holds the number two position.
Foreign studies loom closer for Watson hopefuls

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

Ever wish you could travel wherever you wanted, experiencing everything that traditional schools don't provide? Four Bowdoin students may have that chance next year, if they are fortunate enough to excel in national competition for a Watson Fellowship. Awarded annually to a select number of seniors from forty colleges throughout the country, the fellowship provides up to $11,000 in funds to pursue one year of studies in any area of special interest to the student.

Choose of their three-member board were: Peter Getzells '77, Steve Danksy '79, Mark Harrison '79, and David Mehman '79. The four will be competing nationwide for excursions into the countries of their choice. The four were selected as Bowdoin's nominees out of a total of 36 applicants, on the basis of both a one-page proposal describing their intended studies, and a short interview. Submitted proposals included everything from spending a year sailing on the ocean to the influence of astrology in Africa.

"Watson Fellowships have a reputation for freaky programs, but it's really in the eye of the beholder," said Dean of the College Paul Nyhus, who with Senior Class President Gabriel Brogyni and Steve Rose, Senior Class president, chose the nominees. "Of the three national winners last year proposed a walking tour of the pilgrimage trail from France to Spain. Some, that might seem freaky."

(Continued on Page 6)

Seniors stage great auto giveaway

by ROBERT DESIMONE

The revoty was provided by the Bowdoin Precision Marching Band. The car was furnished by Sheep Lee's Davis World of Auburn. The bright idea was supplied by Senior Class Secretary-Treasurer Alan Schrader '79. It all goes to prove that perseverance pays off.

Schrader got the idea of a car raffle two weeks ago. Since then, the former BOPO head has been running all around heaven's creation organizing what some have called the biggest gamble ever undertaken by a Bowdoin Senior Class. With this morning's maiden appearance of the $29,800Drawing, all seemed worthwhile.

Of foremost importance in Schrader's struggle for acceptance of the raffle was the location of a car dealer willing to cooperate with the Seniors. Sheep Lee, a Bowdoin graduate and entrepreneur extraordinare, was the likely candidate. Explained Schrader: "When I presented him with the idea, he was more excited than I was." Step one was simple enough.

Step two proved to be a stumbling block. Schrader approached the other Senior Class Officers and the Student Council with the proposal. The Council is a 12-member group appointed by the President of the Class to serve in an advisory capacity to the officers. In the heated meeting, the Council opposed overwhelmingly against the issue, citing the fact that they had not been consulted.="The Council stood unanimously opposed to his idea. It would pose no risk to the class as Lee "had agreed to take the car back if the class didn't sell enough raffle tickets." Lee had offered the use of two additional Datsuns during Parents' Weekend to help with the promotion. The Council, it now appears, feared for their safety.

Schrader could not understand why the Council stood unanimously opposed to his idea. He would pose no risk to the class as Lee "had agreed to take the car back if the class didn't sell enough raffle tickets." Lee had offered the use of two additional Datsuns during Parents' Weekend to help with the promotion. The Council, it now appears, feared for their safety.

Mimes Bob Lawson and Jerry Prell were interrupted last Saturday night while performing their "Illusions of Fantasy." Approximately 125 persons evacuated the Daggett Lounge after the fire alarm sounded. Orient/Yong

Alarms tested

Detectors trigger concern

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Twice this past weekend, the fire protection system of the College's Senior Center was put to the test. One test it passed. The other, it didn't.

On last Saturday evening, September 30th, a fire alarm not only forced the approximately 125 people who were watching a mime presentation in Daggett Lounge to leave the building but also summoned the Brunswick Fire Department to the scene. When they arrived at the Senior Center and rushed up to the sixteenth floor (the origin of the alarm they found three exchange students calmly cooking sausages and lobster for several visiting friends.

"They said, 'What's going on?" explained Lynn Harrigan, a senior inter who rushed up the sixteenth flights of stairs when the alarm went off, and I said, "It's a fire alarm." The alarm was triggered by smoke from the frying sausages.

The smoke detector on the sixteenth floor is located five steps away from the stove.

On the day before that, in the same building, an unplugged, but still hot iron tipped over onto a mattress, causing the foam stuffing to burn and smoke. It burned a two-foot hole in the mattress and filled the room with foul-smelling fumes. The smoke detector never went off. It is situated two fire-proof doors away from the bedroom in the stairwell. "A fire in a bedroom would spread into the entire quad before the smoke detector would go off," said Harrigan. "It's not the fire, it's the smoke that would kill you first. Before the alarm sounds, everyone could be dead. The sixteenth floor is the only floor that the smoke alarm would go off on. All of the quads are fireproof. Any fire within the quad would be self-contained."

"I keep looking at the plans for the fire protection system," said Dave Barber, Manager of Plant Engineering and Architecture.

(Continued on Page 5)

Phi Bete taps six seniors

(BNS)

The Bowdoin chapter of Phi Beta Kappa announced last Friday that six members of Bowdoin's Class of 1979 have been elected to membership in the national honorary fraternity for the recognition and promotion of scholarship.

Government professor Richard E. Morgan, the chapter's Secretary-Treasurer, said the new members were nominated as a result of their sustained superior intellectual performance during their first three years at Bowdoin.

One of the six, John A. Cunningham of Bangor, Me., was selected for the Almon Goodwin prize. The prize is awarded annually to an outstanding Phi Beta Kappa member for membership after the undergraduate's junior year.

The newly elected members include: John F. Greene, Jr., of College Point, N.Y.; Ken A. Harrison of Madawaska, Me.; Scott D. Band of Woodland Hills, Calif.; John W. Guscott of North Haven, Me.; Andrew Whelan of Holyoke, Me.; and Andrew Selingen of Chevy Chase, Md.

Exec Board to probe crusade to arrest apathy

by DAVID M. STONE

Basil Zirinis is the man that the new improved version of the Executive Board has chosen to lead them in the fight against student apathy and to make them efficient student representatives. The junior took a majority of eight votes on the first ballot, outbidding Terry Roberts and Mike Walker in an election held last Sunday.

In a speech after his nomination, Zirinis stressed that the Chair of the Executive Board should serve a two-fold function. "He has to provide leadership, direction, and organization for the Board. This is especially important this year because of the diversity on the Board. The chair needs to blend together all the different groups into a cohesive unit. He needs to be approachable and willing to compromise."

"Secondly, he needs to be able to represent student opinion to the Faculty and the Administration. I know I can do that, given the chance, I will. Obviously, the Executive Board agreed with him, electing him on the strength of his prior experience on the Board."

The role of experience was brought into the debate more extensively in the election of the Vice-President. The Board had a great deal of difficulty deciding between Amy Homans and Jim Arnof. At issue was the position of President and Executive Arnof has had in dealing with the Administration as opposed to getting someone new involved.

Board member Wanda Fleming argued strongly for preferring different people in positions of representation. "All I keep hearing is how important experience is. How is anyone supposed to get experience if we don't give them the opportunity?"

On the third ballot, Homans and Arnof were opposed by Terry Roberts accepted the position of Recording Secretary-Treasurer when no one else volunteered.

After the meeting, Zirinis outlined his goals. He wants to rebirth the "missing doormat" (Continued on Page 4)
Gross imbalance

It should not be a difficult task convincing a student body which is 97 percent white of the merits of Affirmative Action. The gross imbalance alone cries for justice.

People hear many misconceptions about the program. It is erroneously equated with reverse discrimination, the policy by which ostensibly less-qualified minority students are given preference over white students.

Affirmative Action is the active recruitment of qualified minorities. It is not the admission of unqualified ones. It strives to right a public school system which discriminates against the urban poor.

We endorse the principles of Affirmative Action. Even with recent recruiting efforts, Bowdoin remains an overwhelmingly homogeneous community. Essential to a complete liberal arts education is the achievement of a diverse student body, a goal made possible only through the active recruitment of qualified minority students.

Outdated

We congratulate Bowdoin women on their tremendous strides in athletics. In the past few years they have built a strong and successful sports program worthy of the College's financial and moral support. Finally they are getting the facilities they need, such as a new training room and new shower accommodations.

But now that women's facilities are on a par with the men's, it is time to upgrade the sport facilities of the College as a whole. The weight room is a pit. Despite efforts to improve its appearance with paint and a massive clean-up, it remains a disgrace. Most high schools are better equipped. Not only is the equipment old and outdated, but there is not enough of it.

The indoor track is also primitive. It is hard to imagine a more inefficient maintenance system. Rather than continue to pay students and staff to daily water and level the surface in winter and track season, would it not be better to spend money on the quality synthetic surface the Polar Bear runners deserve?

Finally, the Curtis Pool complex is inadequate as well. At a school which produced six All-American swimmers last year, one would think a new Olympic size pool would be a priority.

Vacationland

One need only glance at the campus elms' brilliant display to realize that Maine's sweetest season is upon us. This year it is an Indian Summer, something worth savoring.

It should not happen that the student considers the only significance of this time of year to be the last week one can drop a course before taking an "F." Too many of us limit our experiences here to those which are common to schools everywhere. One of the College's most distinguished and preferable features is the state of Maine.

A twenty-minute drive, going either south or north from campus, opens one's eyes to Maine's diverse character. To the south, one finds in Portland, New England's most rapidly expanding city, all the benefits of urban life without the frenetic pace. Heading "down east" the same distance, one has a chance, particular to this time of year, to view waterfowl in the great north-east cross-over, the Merrymeeting Bay.

During our stay here, Maine should not be missed. She stands as a testimony to the bounty of nature existing peacefully alongside the prudence of man.

---

On Affirmative Action

by GROFF WORRELL

At the crux of all arguments against Affirmative Action is the proposition that Affirmative Action amounts to reverse discrimination: that the added opportunity blacks are given is no more than the balance wasn't tilted the other way already. People label the idea "money from my pocket" as cynical but never as incorrect. Affirmative Action is an attempt to equalize the imbalance of opportunity brought on by poverty as well as race.

Take into account that the majority of blacks in the United States are members of the urban poor. For years, the educational system has been against them. Our schools need a reevaluation of the program's effects.

The situation of minorities in America, blacks in particular, is a product of discrimination that has been inflicted on blacks since this country's inception. One argument against Affirmative Action is that the program penalizes present day society with the injustices perpetrated in the past. The argument is valid. Affirmative Action does and must have society at large bear the brunt of the injustices executed by this past because it is in that past that has shaped our present.

As of 1975, 11.9% of the United States' population was black. Over eighty percent of the black population lived in urban areas. As of 1976, 57.3% of the minority population was enrolled in school while only 32.3% of the white population was enrolled in school.

By the same token, students of color have been left out of school. These facts alone are reason enough for affirmative action.

During our stay here, Maine should not be missed. She stands as a testimony to the bounty of nature existing peacefully alongside the prudence of man.
Short plays probe paradox and personal plight

by ALEX STEVENSON

Drama performed in Memorial Hall of Experimental Theatre, whether of good, bad, or indifferent quality, has a constant alluring attraction at Bowdoin. When a mere 100 people are squeezed together in a small black box facing other members of the audience as well as the players, the theater develops a most intense reciprocation of emotion. When delivered to what is usually a panel of viewers, there is no chance but to feel at least partially involved, every experimental performance is a success to some degree.

The most recent set of student-directed one-act plays took advantage of the above situational influences, to the extent that at least one spectator felt the twin tragedies to be too serious for what was essentially entertainment at Bowdoin. Certainly, emerging from the image of a box, pitiful, and psychically realistic New York street scene into a crisis, several presentations evoked the viewer of these plays with a playful world dichotomy more startling and perhaps more discomforting than is usually the case.

Such preterrestrial philosophizing aside, Bus Riley's Back in Town, by William Inge, and The Indian Wife, by Sherwood Anderson, were, whatever their merits, at the best presented in an attitude of the Experimental Theater's more thought-provoking presentations within recent memory. Performed this past weekend, the two plays were separated by a poetry reading by Tim Walker '79. The poem of A.A. Ammons, "For a Friend," was quite tastefully and movingly rendered.

Though a bit archaic, the statements to mankind's potential greatness when he describes the creation of an "image for landing exclusively imprisoned for the "rape" of his girlfriend, Jackie Loonis (Kate Ulanov '79).

In a line consistent with the general corniness of the entire show, Bus solemnly avows that "love for me is something they put in all lor." While Jackie, putting aside memories of their past conformance, is prepared to use it as merely an "ordinary girl." Although contrived melodrama such as this makes me more impatient than the usual hand-dr iners in the library, bathrooms, I must admit, that Guinee and Ulanov extracted what was probably maximum possible viewer attention.

Perhaps the high point of Bus was the ambiance of decay of this small town America created by the desultory conversation of secondary characters. Lee Trupp '79, playing a traveling salesman, and both Liz Gorlinski '81 and Bruce Palmer '80, as friends of the Loomis family, were especially notable in this respect.

The evening's most powerful moments were provided by The Indian Wives. directed by Virginia Rowe '79. In this play, two New York City youths, in order to raise funds to rent a room to them, murder an Indian who seeks his living in the Bronx. Joel Wilkins '79, and Steve Keable '81, both did a highly commendable job of portraying the two "main" characters, Joe and Mike, the sympathetic, humorous, and instantaneous reactions to their hatred. The Indian can thus be seen as a paradigm of social shenanigans. All ensuing recollections - influences - upbringings in broken homes and by a social worker guardian, who gives them knives for Christmas - in a way "fore'e" Joey and Murphy to condone and practice moral brutality. But they are torn: Joey begs the petrified Indian, Gupta (Denvis Levy '82), to relax and trust in America's native "games" even if he cannot understand them; the former would prefer companionship to cowed submission, because he believes "strange and frightened among the strange and frightened," and has become what he has become for being foreign. The only way he can be forced to acknowledge human kinship with his Indian is by undergoing physical duress culminating in death. Strains of Bronx "Oriental." A "Day in the Life" which filtered in and out of the latter play were apt reminders of the destructive elements to which all three "strangers in a strange land" have been relegated.

Two things, Joel Richardson and Steve Keable, bellow foreigner Dennis Levy in last week's production of The Indian Wives. Bronx.Orient/Young.

No exit?

To the Editor:

In the library, on the reserve desk, is a little sign which begins: No student may restrict the right of the members of the community to participate fully and freely in the pursuit of knowledge.

Literally, no student should restrict another student's "pursuit of knowledge," which is one candle in the tab, stealing his notes, plagiarizing, or disturbing him in the library. Yet, on a different, nonmaterial level, it seems as if we are not only restricting another's competition and in, an academic environment such as Bowdoin's small intense community, to be expected.

The restriction one student places upon another is unnecessary and often pointless. It is a result of a competitive, capitalistic society: the urge to get ahead and to brush aside all unnecessary constraints.

At Bowdoin, students come from the top of the education ladder, freshmen begin again: a four-year struggle to find some kind of recognition. On the way to establishing their identity in a new academic environment, one student's success often means another's failure. It is inevitable, these things happen in fellowships and Senior Internships, on the fast track, with positions, few jobs, and, actually, too many competitors.

But to restrict the right of Bowdoin that creates the feeling of restriction. At a larger school, students tend to forget that: they do not know who is getting the grades that they want.

It is unfortunate that the reward of some students affect others in a negative way. By the very nature of an academic environment, a student is not a separate entity, getting an education within a vacuum. He is committed, involved, engaged, or he is not a member of the academic community.

Sartre describes a room where there is no exit and hell is other people. Perhaps in an academic environment, there are a few exits: a student can always leave college and slide into the real world where he will compete with people on different educational backgrounds. (Remember, Bowdoin's a "selected" student.) Yet, the student can face the competition and the challenge. And if he does not get to be a Senior Interviewer or a James Bowdoin Scholar, he could remember where he is, whom he is competing with, and that there are not enough awards for everyone. A true individual, he might try a third exit by being satisfied with some small achievement he has accomplished. Although it might go unnoticed, it is still rewarding. Hell may be other people, but an individual does not have to make a hell for himself.

Sincerely,

Judith Zimmer '90

SAFC

As Open Letter to the Student Body:

The Student Activities Fee Committee (SAFC) wishes to take this opportunity to explain the process by which student activities are funded. The SAFC is a standing committee of the Faculty. There are usually five faculty members, appointed by the faculty, and five student members appointed by the Executive Board of the Student Assembly. The money which the SAFC allocates in paid by each student as an activity fee. Fifty dollars per student goes into the SAFC general fund.

The actual work of the committee begins in the spring. Each of the student organizations charters through the Executive Board submit budget proposals at this time. Each organization then makes an oral presentation to the committee at which time the committee clears up any questions it may have.

After the SAFC has heard all of these oral presentations, it must consider preliminary allocations. Sometimes the final budget request is considered necessary.

When the majority of the committee agrees on the particular budget that organization is informed of this preliminary figure. The actual preliminary allocations are to give the organizations an estimate of their budg for the upcoming semester. The final allocations are decided the SAFC adjourns for the summer.

At the beginning of the fall semester the SAFC reconvenes to hear from any organizations who wish to comment on the preliminary allocations. After all of the appeals are heard and the questions are answered the committee decides on the actual final allocations for all of the organizations. These final allocations must then be approved by the Executive Board and by the Faculty. After these approvals have been obtained the monies are deposited in the respective accounts.

The SAFC has just completed its final allocations for 1978-1979. The Executive Board approved the figures this past Wednesday and the Faculty will vote on the matter this coming Monday.

Pending the outcome of the Faculty vote, these final allocation figures will appear in the next issue of the Orient.

The SAFC is interested in any feedback from the students concerning these final allocation figures. After all, it is your money that is being allocated.

Thank you,

Terry Roberts '80, Stu. Chm.
Peter Steinbruch '79
Allison Conway '79
David Vison '81
Charles Patton '81

Commandable

To the Editor:

The SMA would like to acknowledge its appreciation to Chuck Goodrich for his letter which appeared last week in the Orient. The security shuttle is a useless commodity. It is not a long walk to Harpswell or Pine Street at 11:00 a.m., on the darkest of nights. The dangers faced by the women on campus are not worth considering. Women are paranoid, and even if there are one or two rapes a year, it is certainly not worth the cost of a mini-bus to prevent them. Chuck's reply to this issue is commendable.

Chuck must make a fine proton.

There is no Faculty in the proctorships at Bowdoin. If he is an example, Keep acting as a sensible person, Chuck. We're behind you all the way.

Respectfully,

Jeff Bashom '79
Steve Dunsky '79
Peter Kaufman '79
Scott Ferguson '79

Bowdoin Men's Association (BMA)

LETTERS

Conservation

To the Editor:

I would like to address the issue of conservation, not only at Bowdoin, but as it affects our lives in general. I feel that too many people view it from an observer's standpoint rather than a participant's. They see it either as a few people's responsibility or as an apathy on the part of the rest. They don't see it at all. This is the reason for the minimal concern in our society today. It is not enough for a few concerned individuals to get together and help to conserve, because concern is not contagious. There are conservation efforts that are successful, but the amount that is saved compared to the amount still wasted is trifling. The only way for a substantial change to come about is for everyone to realize that they must conserve in a thoughtful and conscious way.

This is what we at Bowdoin can play a small but important role. If we can first of all raise our own conscious about conservation, we then are in a position to affect everyone we meet as to the importance of conservation. It is necessary, in some cases, than pointing out to someone that they are throwing out trees for him to use fewer of them.

Effect of the weather will continue to conserve. The people will be very small. But I feel that it is many small changes that will finally bring about a substantial one.

As far as conservation at Bowdoin is concerned, I am (Continued on Page 8) Women athletes set pace, programs close behind

by HOLLY HENKE

If strength, numbers and consistency are criteria for judging Bowdoin women athletes, they are certainly holding their own in Polar Bear sports. For the past two years, the women have grabbed the state championship in field hockey. Last fall, women's 2v2 booters took six straight wins after an opening day loss to give them the best fall record of any Bowdoin team. And in its first year as a varsity sport, the women's cross country team finished second in the Maine Invitational Meet last fall.

Women sports have come a long way since the early years of coeducation, when tennis led the way in 1923 as the first and only official women's team sport. Field hockey followed in 1973, and in 1974-75 women fielded teams in basketball and lacrosse.

The roster of women's sports doubled in 1976 when women went out for swimming, cross country, track and squash. After a successful season in 1977, women's soccer achieved varsity status this year. And by next year, women hope to have junior varsity teams in volleyball and tennis as well as competing as club sports in the 1978-79 school year.

Women are coming to Bowdoin with stronger skills and more experience. The reason is easy, according to Sally LaPointe, head coach of the women's athletic program. "The program is stronger...and Title 9 has been hitting the schools for the past three or four years now."

A stronger program may attract more female athletes to Bowdoin than before. Title 9, a statute prohibiting sex discrimination in education, became effective in 1972. Schools are required to give female students "equal opportunities" in sports as in other areas of education, under Title 9.

"They're coming in a lot more advanced. They're getting better grades, keeping up their grades," said LaPointe.

"Only five years ago, I'd get girls who were novice in soccer for four years in high school, who wouldn't make the team," she said.

Though Coach LaPointe's fully supported increased emphasis on sports in recent years, she regrets that some women come to Bowdoin already "pigeon-holed" as women who "can't or don't do sports."

She thinks it is important for all students who are interested in serious sports to join a team. "You don't have to be great to have a good time," she said.

While "interest" in women's sports is still a question as many recently coeducated colleges, support for an already well-developed athletic program is the issue at Bowdoin.

College administrators have responded well to the needs of women athletes, says LaPointe. "We ought to have the same travel accommodations we should be able to eat in the same quality restaurants on the road, and we should have all the uniforms and equipment we need," LaPointe said. "And at Bowdoin we have all those things."

To accommodate a large number of women out for sports, the College installed nine new shower heads in the women's locker room this fall, an addition which will greatly relieve the "five o'clock rush," according to one female athlete.

And in November, women will benefit from a newly-completed training room as well. Because of its location, the old training room offers limited access to women. "It was a logistic problem, really," LaPointe said. "The old training room is right in the middle of the men's locker room, in between the toilets and the showers."

Knowing of the gym in order to gain better access for the women would have been an "outstanding expense," LaPointe said. "We would have had to move an entire side of the basketball bleachers and put in stairs."

LaPointe

Nestled in the heart of historic Brunswick, Gander’s Restaurant and Bar serves up a variety of hearty meals and a wide selection of beverages in a casual, family-friendly atmosphere. Enjoy our delicious menu items and the ambiance created by our friendly staff in our beautiful Bar. Whether you’re joining us for a meal, a drink, or just to relax, Gander’s is the perfect spot for you!

FEATURING
THE BEST SUB SANDWICH IN TOWN
THE SUNDAY DOUBLEHEADER SPECIAL from 12 noon till last call
HAPPY HOUR PRICES!
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
from 4 p.m. till close — HAPPY HOUR PRICES!

Every Thursday \n
ATTENDANCE OF MANAGEMENT AND CIRCULATION
(Act of August 12, 1970, Section 8003, Title 39, United States Code)

2. Location of Known office of publication: 325 Clarendon Street, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine 04011.
3. Names and addresses of publisher, editor, and managing editor: Publisher: Bowdoin Publishing Company, Brunswick, Maine; Editor: Neil Brennan; B.C. Box 199, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
4. Owner or Publisher: Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
5. Ornaments used, if any: The word "Bowdoin" is an ornamental device used by the College's Board of Trustees. The word "Bowdoin" is not owned by a corporation, nor is the company that owns the word "Bowdoin" a corporation that is not owned by a corporation.
7. Number of issues published during the period of this report: 12.
9. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
10. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
11. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
12. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
13. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
14. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
15. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
16. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
17. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
18. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
19. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
20. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
22. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
23. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
24. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
25. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
26. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
27. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
28. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
29. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
30. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
31. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
32. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
33. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
34. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
35. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
36. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
37. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
38. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
39. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
40. Known circulation points outside of the purview of the Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine.
Fire alarm tests expose flaws

(Continued from Page 1) one of the people responsible for the installation of smoke detectors at the Senior Center this summer. "and saying, 'Yes, we should have some in the rooms, but the funds had already been allocated."

The problem is certainly important. In August of this year, the R.B. Allen Company installed the smoke detectors through the fifteenth floors of the building, along with other fire-protection related devices.

The total cost for the project, which is not yet completed, will approach $25,000. Each early warning device, installed, costs between $200 and $300. To install one such device in each quad on the thirteen floors would cost at least an additional $10,000. When R.B. Allen installed the detectors over the summer, two were placed on each floor on the landings of the stairwells.

Many people other than Harrigan and Barbour have begun to question the reason for the placement of the smoke detectors in the hallways. Conceivably, all four people in the quad could be affected by smoke before the warning system was activated. Moving the detectors inside the quads would seem to be the best solution but is, in fact, at the heart of the problem. "One of the cyclists forgot to put them in every room in the tall, we've had lots of false alarms," said David Edwards, Director of the Physical Plant. "The detectors are quite new on campus and people haven't quite learned yet how to live with them. We still have false protection-related alarms."

"This is one of the things that worries me. I'm concerned that we'll generate so many false alarms that some might ignore them. We try to keep the protectors away from the places where they're constantly near.

"If they're too close on, it's going to take a bit longer, that's true. But I think the 'cry wolf' problems is a serious one. We'd like to minimize the false alarms," Edwards said.

When there is a fire drill in the building, Steve Harrigan reports, "people tend to stay in the building, Especially on a Friday or a Saturday night, people assume it's a false alarm." At a recent fire drill in Virginia, some students heard the alarm, looked up from their books, and resumed studying. "They had to be told that a fire drill was going on."

Early warning devices installed in the quads would obviously detect signs of heat, smoke, or fire before the problem would be noticed in the stairwells. "They would drive you crazy, though," said Kenneth Orr, Chief of the Brunswick Fire Department. "What is the point where they would be useful or just a constant nuisance? People would just disconnect the things after a while."

"It is ideal," asked Dave Barbour. "No, by all means, We're better off than we were before."

In August, there was no fire protection system in the Senior Center. "No, agreed Edwards, "It's not the best possible system. What's best is a system that the experts in the field may not agree on. It's obviously a trade-off an I can't tell you where the stopping point should be. That is a question of College policy and procedure."

Winner-take-all raffle promises key to highway

(Continued from Page 1) the rejection of the class should close the raffle fails.

Later on Monday night, Schroeder met with a group of friends to discuss what appears to be a Headline. "Many people suggested asking the other senior: what they thought about the whole plan," Schroeder said the night later. "Here I was former BOPO head and there they were polling the class for their opinion."

Of the 213 seniors polled during Monday's and Tuesday's polls, 65% were agreeable to the raffle. Schroeder was estatic, "The Council was not pleased with the poll," said Schroeder, One member of the Council, Tim Genn '79, was contacted later in the week. He explained, "We were a little reluctant to believe that we could sell enough tickets to pay for the cost of the car."

Steve Rose '79, Senior class president, said Thursday night Monday night to go ahead with the raffle. "We're not limiting it to the college community so that the winner will be some senior. We also thought that the money seniors spend on raffle tickets will be put back in a increase the University sponsored activities next semester. He said that the class will have to sell 1200 raffle tickets, which cost $1 apiece, to break even.

One potential dealer, obviously was not impressed with the Precision Marching Band had actually worked up the time to make a 10:00 a.m. appearance at the Union, couldn't for the life of him understand why the senior Class had chosen a car for the raffle prize. "Doesn't everyone around here even own one?" he asked.

Staff renews Sun format by DIANE MAYER

The Bowdoin Sun, which many thought had set for good last semester, is rising again this fall. Now entering its second year, the publication boasts a revamped format and an expanded staff.

The Sun bills itself as the "alternative campus publication." "It falls between the lines of the Orient and the Quill," explained co-editor Mike Evans '81.

This year's Sun is expanding from an eight-page newspaper layout to a twenty-page magazine format. In addition, feature stories, graphics and artwork. The co-editors mentioned nuclear energy and the drinking age in the U.S. as representative topics for Sun articles. According to Tom Mason, "If someone brings in an idea for the magazine new story we'll refer them to the Orient; and if someone brings in poetry we'll probably refer them to the Quill."

Evans emphasized that the Sun is not intended to be competition for any other campus publication. "We are totally different clientele," Part of the reason for the format change is to "avoid confusion between the Orient and the Sun."

The Sun's new editorial staff includes Rupert Wood, Mike Evans, Julie Bemker, Glen Snyder, and Lisa Morgan. Each member of the board serves as an editor-in-chief for one issue. Evans explained that this "rotation keeps things flexible, and keeps the magazine from becoming stagnant." He added that "there is the ideal way to give everyone experience as the head of things."

"There are no staff writers," Evans observed that "it is a sense the entire campus is the staff." Articles, both fiction and non-fiction, will be accepted from anyone on campus, including professors. "We are not going to reject anything," stated Evans. "But if we need to get a job, we'll send it back at whoever wrote it and ask them to rewrite...We are upgrading our standards."

Last Spring, they thought that the Sun had published its last issue. Evans explained: "Our major problem was that our top echelon left us -- took off, last last Spring. The new editorial board consisted of neither photographers who didn't want to work for the Sun." None of the board members has served in an editorial capacity before. The new editors are under the supervision of their innovation work. The Student Activities Fee Committee has mandated that funding for the second semester is dependent upon the success of the Sun during the first semester.

The editorial board, however, is confident that the revitalized Sun will be well-received. "We're doing four issues, and rent for the magazine we'll keep the Sun will be "absolutely pleasing. It's a simple, very light, readable paper."
The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at Bowdoin on Thursday. There is a severe blood shortage in Maine and students wishing to give blood should go to the Lancaster Lounge of the Union between 11-5. Give blood and get a cookie.

Come & join the celebrations at Welcome Home Music Marking our 2nd anniversary in business Saturday, October 14th Festivities begin about 3:00 p.m. Winter Hours: 11 to 6 p.m. everyday but Sunday 729-6512 111 Maine, Brunswick, Maine 04011

Four Watson nominees go national

According to Steve Rose, the Bowdoin nominees present a number of solutions to its "context and to a liberal arts education." Peter Gelsela has proposed to study religion, synchronism in South America and how natives of the area have adapted to modern religious pressures. Mark Harrison, if successful, will study health care delivery in Kenya and Tanzania, including parinistology and vaccination processes. Dave Mehlman intends to spend the year in Trinidad studying bird species, and Steve Donsky has proposed to study the budding film movement in the British Isles. After undergoing another series of interviews and expanding their proposals, the four will hear the final word on their programs in the beginning of April.

Although in the past the administration has received some criticism from students on the rapidity of the interview sessions, Nyhus said he has heard no complaints thus far this year. He noted that applicants were chosen for the interest, background, and preparation they held for their subjects, and that it was not difficult to see which students possessed the capacities to execute their proposals.

The beauty of the program, he added, is that there are among the pressures of the thesis or structures of a traditional education upon the students. No final report is required of the students, only evidence that the project has indeed been attempted. The system works on an honor code, which is one reason why students are chosen so carefully, Nyhus said, and there is little danger that the funds will be misused by the selected students.

"The motivation can't be feigned," he said. "It's real."

The Bowdoin Orient
FRI. OCT. 6, 1978

THE FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
155 Maine St. Brunswick, Maine 729-2314
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

This Week:
Wednesday and Thursday Nights
The Peter Gallway Revue

6th Annual Halloween Bizarre
Costumes Only on Oct. 31

Pre-Owned Records
manassas, ltd. is expanding its services to USED RECORDS:

We will accept select rock, r.&b. and jazz lps of quality condition and give credit (depending on condition, availability and popularity) toward other purchases.

We reserve the right to reject any lp for trade.
No promo copies accepted.

Credit must be used within a month of issue.
If the entire credit is used the same day toward other used records, these will be discounted 20%.

A maximum of 10 lps will be accepted per person at any time. If we are unable to inspect the lps at the time they are brought in, a receipt will be issued and they will be examined within 24 hours. Larger collections checked by appointment only.

We will guarantee all records playable.

manassas, ltd.
212 Maine St.
"maine's record resource"
Netters sport 3-1 record after conquest of Bobcats

by MARK LEEN

The women's tennis team won its second straight match Tuesday, topping Bates, 4-3, but the real story surrounded the loss of team captain Merrie Miller.

Coach Ed Reid, noting the score in the contest, said, "We were fortunate to win this one. The match was pretty close." The four Bowdoin points came on singles victories by Kathy Leong and Dottie Diorio, and doubles triumphs by the teams of Elyne Pynne and Christie Chandler, and Meg Devine and Anne Feeley.

Miller discouraged

Coach Reid seemed somewhat surprised that his senior captain had decided to hang up his racquet. "Merry played for me for two years and got to be a pretty good player. She was away last year, but she thought she could come back this year and pick up where she left off two years ago. She won one, then lost one, and I guess she got a little discouraged. At least, that's what she told me." Reid has named Meg McLean to replace Miller as captain.

Nuclear decisioning

The team presently sports a 3-1 record, a bit of a surprise since Reid expected to finish the season around .500. "We have to play the University of Maine-Orono again and Colby twice. Both are strong teams. We will probably finish 5-4 or so. But we have a lot of freshmen, and we're moving them around. We have the makings of a team that will really develop next year."

Tom Sicolla rushed for 92 yards in thirteen carries, including a 48-yard jaunt to Saturday's ruckus. Orient/Evens

Stick handlers end scoreless drought, tuck tables on Bates with 2-0 shutdown begin establishing state supremacy again after the loss to Southern Maine.

(Continued from Page 8)

Bowdoin had waited long enough. When the game began, however, Bates was the aggressor. For the first quarter, the ball was kept down in the Bowdoin end, but the Bears defense kept the shots on goal to a minimum. There were an inordinate number of corners in the Polar Bear defensive area that were put to rest by the stick handler's defense.

In the second half of the first period, Bowdoin's offense took control. Polar Bear attackers began to assault the Bates defense, with good passing and good movement. An Eve Corning breakaway was broken up by Bates defenders, but soon after, Pelleteri flicked one in from five feet out with assists going to Jill Pingezy and Molly Houghland. The teamwork that developed so fully in the Wesleyan game was beginning to show tangible results.

In the second half of the game, Bowdoin maintained control. Eve Corning scored the second and final goal early. Bowdoin goalie Sharon Grady didn't touch the ball in the second half. Laura Scott '79 summed it up: "Our teamwork really won us the game, and I think we will have it for the rest of the year."

The Bears returned to play tough defense in the second half, but the offense had trouble sustaining an attack. "We didn't succeed in playing with open space," Coach Buli commented, adding that the team was working on a varied attack, based on crossing the ball and overlaps.

Bull's team will attempt to build these attacks to work Tuesday, when it faces an aggressive squad from Wheaton at 1 p.m. at Tullis Field. With a 1-2 record, the Bears realize the importance of tomorrow's contest, which, according to junior halfback Gordon Linke, "can set the tempo for the rest of the season." Linke added, "This would be a good game for us to get back on our feet with a win."

The Tontine: Grand Opening!

The Tontine's 15 shops are now open. You won't want to miss the fun and excitement, and best of all you're in for a very special shopping experience.

WIN PRIZES! Register at any store listed here.

The Tontine: Grand Opening!

Saturday, Oct. 7

Most of The Tontine's 15 shops are now open. You won't want to miss the fun and excitement, and best of all you're in for a very special shopping experience.

WIN PRIZES! Register at any store listed here.

Maine Street, Brunswick

The Bowdoin Orient

Amherst returns booters to earth with 2-0 triumph

by NEIL HORTON

The Bantams from the ranks of the undefeated Saturday, losing a 2-0 decision at Amherst. The loss was especially disappointing for the Bears, as it followed a 1-0 win at Colby, and marked their second straight game without a goal.

At one point the Bears off guard just twenty seconds into the contest, rolling the ball into the net on the blinding speed of Brad Reddick. Kevin Kennedy, less than seven minutes later the stunned Bears were again scored upon, giving Amherst a 2-0 edge.

Costly mistakes

"We made some mistakes in the first seven minutes, and weren't able to make up for them," junior halfback Tom Moore explained.

The visiting Brown squad began to show signs of life after halftime with the Amherst goal. Butch by sophomore forwards Mike Collins and John Hickingbottom was scored on by the Bears attack, while sophomore halfback Kirby Nadeau popped some shots at the Amherst net. Despite hard work, the Bowdoin offense had only near misses to show for their efforts at the end of the first half.

Kennedy left the game at halftime with three saves. Giving freshman Keith Brown a chance to tend the nets, Brown did a fine job tuning back the Amherst shots, as he finished with four saves. Sophomore Dave Barnes also turned in a notable performance, taking control of Bowdoin's defense when Moore was injured early in the game.

Offense revamped

The Bears continued to play tough defense in the second half, but the offense had trouble sustaining an attack. "We didn't succeed in playing with open space," Coach Buli commented, adding that the team was working on a varied attack, based on crossing the ball and overlaps.

Bull's team will attempt to build these attacks to work Tuesday, when it faces an aggressive squad from Wheaton at 1 p.m. at Tullis Field. With a 1-2 record, the Bears realize the importance of tomorrow's contest, which, according to junior halfback Gordon Linke, "can set the tempo for the rest of the season." Linke added, "This would be a good game for us to get back on our feet with a win."

The Tontine: Grand Opening!

Most of The Tontine's 15 shops are now open. You won't want to miss the fun and excitement, and best of all you're in for a very special shopping experience.

WIN PRIZES! Register at any store listed here.

Maine Street, Brunswick
Birdsall sparkles

Women booters take pair

Postgame Scripts

Genuine excitement

Stickhandlers rebound with shutdown victory over Bates

The Bowdoin defense, shown above against Trinity, allowed over 450 yards Saturday, but Coach Lentz was pleased with the eight turnovers the unit forced and its tough play against the run. Orient/Yong

The Bowdoin offense set a new record against Wesleyan Saturday. But the Bears' defense showed the same spirit against the Yankee offense. Orient/Yong

Polar Bear offense stalls again, Amherst registers 20-10 triumph

by BILL STUART

One hundred years ago, the telephone was two years old. Hubbard Hall had not been built, and Amherst College played its first football game. Today, the telephone is a major medium of communication. Hubbard houses a complete, sophisticated computer, and Amherst continues to play football. In fact, to celebrate their bicentennial, the Lord Jeffs piled up 454 yards on offense and defeated the Bowdoin Polar Bears. 20-10, Saturday.

The Lord Jeffs moved the ball well during their first two possessions, but the drive was interrupted by a pass interception. On the first drive, linebacker Bob Stevens bagged a Chris Teare pass at the Polar Bear 27, and moments later Jeff Goodger grabbed a Steve Bischoff punt as Amherst aerial at his own 10-yard line.

(In their third possession, the Lord Jeffs finally scored. They marched 53 yards in a drive that featured a mixture of passing and running. Tailback Rich Lundgren snared a ten-yard pass from Teare for the game’s first tally.

In the second period, Amherst tried to quick kick deep in its own territory on third down. Bowdoin defensive tackle Lou Richardson blocked the kick, and the Polar Bears took over ten yards from paydirt. They could not move in for a touchdown, however, and settled for a 23-yard field goal by Alfie Himmelrich. Moments later, after tailback Steve Bischoff fumbled at his own 46, Amherst struck again with one play. Teare tossed a 46-yard pass to end Steve Hurdin for a touchdown. There was a mix-up in the coverage, said Bowdoin Coach Jim Lentz in describing the play. Hoog was wide with the conversion attempt, and the score held at 13-3.

In the final analysis, the game only proved that after 163 contests against common opponents, the only difference between the teams is that the Red Sox was one run. But such a description does not begin to define the tension, excitement, drama, and trauma that unfolded on campus before the final out in Sunday’s Red Sox game and Craig Nettles’ catch of Carl Yastrzemski’s pop-up Monday.

I watched the first three innings of the game at the Union and the final two frames at the Senior Center. During the rest of the game, I learned what the contest and the rivalry was all about. I had an interview in the Center, right above the television room. From this vantage point, I was able to follow the game, not through the action on the field, but rather through the reaction of the fans. I was able to follow every Red Sox hit with awe, with an undercurrent of boozing and bawling and every Yankee putout followed by a few cheers and then a "shut up" or "drop dead" or "simple bo".

Dick Menneer, assistant director of the Senior Center, spoke of the excitement the game generated. "I spent part of the day in the administration building, and when people bring television to work, you know that a lot of people care," he also expressed sympathy for Yankee fans on campus. "They wanted to explode, but they knew that if they did, they would be torn limb from limb by Red Sox fans."

"At 3:30, I stood on the Moulton Union steps, turned around, and saw nobody walking around," exclaimed female Anne Marie Murphy. "It was amazing. And the scene at the Center, where I watched the end of the game, was outrageous. The situation was aggravated by the sprinkling of two or three Yankee fans among 30 or so Red Sox fans. The action turned into a high level of vocal competition."

"Red Sox fans deserved everything they got." stated an anonymous Yankee fan. "I was happy to root boldly for the Yankees. The Yankees played like champs through the second half of the season, while Boston choked. Long live the Yankees."
Butler resigns; McCabe to lead activity planners

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

"I'm sorry that he's going," said Stephen Sandau, Treasurer of the Student Union Committee, "I was completely flabbergasted."

On Tuesday evening at the weekly Student Union Committee meeting in the Moulton Union, senior Jay Butler resigned his post as chairman of SUC, the resignation, kept secret from the committee and the rest of the campus until the announcement Tuesday evening, shocked many Committee members and triggered changes in two of the three elected-positions on the Committee.

Junior Kevin McCabe, previously Secretary, ran unopposed and was elected SUC chairman by acclamation, with eleven votes in his favor and five abstentions. Nancy Griffin was chosen to fill the vacant position of Secretary.

"We've got to switch the whole chairmanship around," explained McCabe, chairing the committee that receives the largest chunk -- twenty-five percent -- of College's appropriated budget for student activities. "The fact that we haven't got another Jay is going to hurt.

"Our work load has just become very heavy," said Butler. "I've given a lot of thought to how I could best leave the committee with the objectives with which the Committee. I'd like to do some preparation for my LSA's any GRE's. SUC seemed to be hurting my future. It had to go."

"I decided about a week ago and it was just a matter of when. I feel somewhat bad about leaving now because it's going to shake up the Committee somewhat. It's not the best time for SUC and it's not exactly the best time for me.

"There won't be any real problems this semester. I think that Kevin and Nancy and Stephen are all very capable people. The success of next semester, though, depends on this semester's experience.

"It should be a smooth tran-" (Continued on Page 3)

Prof plea for higher salary urges Presidential action

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

At their meeting late yesterday afternoon in Chase Barn Chamber, nineteen members of the College's chapter of the American Association of University Professors discussed and approved, with minor revisions, the draft of the 1978-79 Annual Brief on Faculty Compensation.

"The report was approved by the chapter," said Bowdoin's A.A.U.P. chapter president Craig McCown, "with minor modifications. The final draft will be presented to the President some day next week."

The unmodified draft accused the College of failing "short of the mark in compensating faculty and librarians." It said, "Bowdoin can and must do better if it is to maintain its excellence as a liberal arts college."

"The expectation," it charged, "that continuing faculty and librarians -- especially those with longest service to the College -- progress up an income as well as a status ladder continues to be largely untrue under current economic conditions and College compensation policies."

"At the same time that con-" (Continued on Page 8)

Students air grievances in indy-fraternity forum

by NANCY ROBERTS

The animated discussion ranged from the mundane to the radical as nearly sixty students crowded into the Moulton Union's Terrace Under last night. Called by the Student Life Committee, the "open meeting on College-Fraternity Interdependence in the areas of Housing, Dining and Social Life" was aimed at getting a broad sense of how people feel according to Dean of Students Wendy Fates.

For the most part, the oratory was calm throughout the two hours, with only a few frat member-independent alterations along the way as the discussion meandered from food to housing to parties. The members of the Student Life Committee had early in the meeting announced that they were primarily to listen rather than react, and interjected only occasional comments and explanations.

The rotational eating plan dominated much of the discussion on dining. This year, for the first time, the Moulton Union was included as one of the seven spots at which freshmen would take their meals during rush week. Most of those present agreed the addition was a welcome one. Fraternity members, however, complained that the Union had been included on every freshman's schedule, while only six of the ten frats were represented. The new student, who perceived inequity was a plan under which freshmen would eat just two meals at each location, thus enabling the inclusion of all eleven options on every freshman's schedule.

"I think students are being allowed to split their board bills between the Union or Senior Center dining rooms and a frat kitchen again was raised, with proponents of the option maintaining that the split would provide for greater interaction between frat members and independents.

The Centralized Dining Service has claimed in past discussions of the matter that splitting board bills would increase costs and create planning difficulties out of proportion to any benefits derived from the change.

The topic eventually broadened into a debate about rush in general and whether a second-semester rush should be instituted. Senior Peter Bernard observed that, "A second semester rush might be more axing," observed senior Peter Bernard. "But one of the problems with it would be that the rest of the campus would have to pick up on the social slack during the first semester."

Rush may be a pressured period for the recently matriculated freshman, but it is also a beneficial one, as Neil Moses remarked. "Meeting all those people during rush and making lasting friends outweighs the negative factor of pressure." In fact, perhaps the freshman is better to cope with this pressure than some give him credit for. Bill Brown, president of the Fraternity, said "We pride ourselves on getting a dynamic group of freshmen and hope we sit them down like they're a bunch of oatmeal brains."

(Continued on Page 9)

Scholars and parents honored

by DAVID M. STONE

The College will honor its scholars Friday, but the weekend production is for the benefit of the bill payers. Once again, parents will make their annual pilgrimage to Bowdoin to see how their offspring are surviving out of the nest, and to find out exactly what they are paying so much for. Earlier today, Student Marshall Scott Rand led 185 of Bowdoin's scholars to Pickard Field to receive the honors. James Bowdoin Scholarship from President Enteman and Dean Nyhan. They had qualified by receiving three-quarters Honors grades, and one-quarter High Honors for their Bowdoin career to date. Also recognized at the presentations were 29 students who had received grades of High Honors in all of their courses last year. The James Bowdoin Cup, awarded to the student with the highest academic standing to have won a varsity letter in the past year, went to Gordon Wood '80 and Elizabeth Evans '81.

Addressing the gathering was Nils Y. Wessell, President of the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation. Wessell spoke of "The Many Faces of Elimt." To the recipients of the scholarships, he warned, "While I come first to praise your intellectual accomplishments, I come also to tell you that your high intelligence is not enough."

The former Tufts president told the scholars that they must put their intelligence to use. Andrea Todaro '79 delivered the response. The rest of the weekend, however, belonged to the parents as the College community, from the President to the musicians, the athletes, and the actors who will do its best to entertain and inform the parents.

The athletic schedule will be full, giving the parents the opportunity to watch the campus Rocky exhibit their skills and teamwork. Both the men and women's soccer teams and the men's football team will be in action tomorrow morning at Pickard Field. Later, after another of Ron Crow's famous chicken barbeques, the traditional (Continued on Page 8)
Old MacDonald would be proud to grow these tomatoes.

$750,000 Barry Art Chair donated by Bowdoin friends

by WILL RICHTER

"Have you ever seen a check for $750,000?" Barry asked with a grin as he displayed a copy of the cheque.

Stanwood is Program Coordinator for the Breckinridge Public Affairs Center, and a copy was one of the checks donated for the creation of the Edith Cleaves Barry Chair of History and Oriental Studies.

The purpose of the chair is to provide the History and Orientalism of Art division of the Art department with a guest professor to supplement what Professor Barry, in his history of the area of the department." The chair will be occupied by various visiting professors.

According to the terms of the donation, the chosen professor will "be approved by the President for a period deemed desirable by the President.

This period will probably be dependent upon the length of time for which the donor was able to obtain a leave of absence from his or her college or university.

Stanwood, who played an important role in the acquisition of the chair, states that the project of the chair arose in 1977, and had been "nursed" by Stanwood and others.

"This was a foundation which was going to be dissolved due to the death of its sole beneficiary," and the president of the foundation and two directors made an initial contact with me in 1977. They said that there might be funds available for the utilization of the chair department.

There were enough complications involved in the donation of the money to demand that all negotiations between Bowdoin and the Barry Foundation to be carried out in secrecy. "There were other colleges which had made an approach to the foundation in regards to the funds," Stanwood claims. He attributes the success of the negotiations to the persistence of all those Bowdoin personnel involved.

Bolles advises selling talents for future jobs

by BETSY WHEELER

"Do yourself a favor in terms of utilizing your career potential," says Robert Bolles, who spoke last week on "Identifying the Job Market," at the University of the Mouton Newton. Then on Monday and Thursday, Bolles returns to discuss the mechanics of career planning, including being in- vited and writing resumes.

Bolles advises a series of questions: Do you consider yourself creative? Do you mind repetition? Do you have an analytical mind?

If you are simple to sell yourself, you know yourself. A good look in the mirror, he says, prepares you for interviews and appointments. To encourage the "self-assessment of personal characteristics," Bolles asked a series of questions: Do you consider yourself creative? Do you mind repetition? Do you have an analytical mind? Do you want to make a great deal of money? Do you have "in- terests" which qualify you for similar titles? The student must be aware of his preferences.

Bolles advises students to leave room for growth and change in their career plans. Giving yourself an option is not being inconsistent, he says. Bolles advises adaptability and clear thinking. A student should be willing to take risks, to make mistakes and to learn from them. He must be able to translate realistic notions into realistic goals. These goals can best be achieved through good planning.

"Your strategy must have a future direction: that is, tomorrow will not take care of itself," says Bolles. The student must be decisive, while aware that he may not be able to see the results of his actions immediately. He must realize that what he wishes may not come to pass. In other words, the student must know what he wants, do what he wants, and be prepared to accept the consequences.

Bolles followed this sensible advice with a few remarks on growing career fields. He mentioned computers, energy, environmental studies, legal services, industrial relations, professional education as examples. He recommended a combination of library work and scientific or professional career as good background for a career.

Bolles also mentioned free communications as a flourishing area of enterprise. He noted that in our day, although the quantity of words skyrockets, eloquence steadily declines.
Pickles, mayo, beer, and bread all at Carbur’s sandwich spread

by DAVE PROUTY

Flying the Carbur’s banner, do you want an escape from the humdrum of Miss B’s and Dunkin Donuts? Sick and tired of McDonald’s and Mario’s? Then do yourself a favor; get out of Brunswick and go have a great time at Carbur’s Restaurant in Portland.

Carbur’s (famous since 1977) is situated on the right side of tenant gage in the decor to the waiters and waitresses who soon hear your name and will go out of their way to be friendly and individual. You are encouraged by the management, and especially in Carbur’s 24-page instant menu.

Portland’s Carbur’s opened in April of 1977, taking over the former home of an appliance store. Valley designed the interior and performed many structural changes including moving the stairs, building a balcony section, and converting the downstairs storeroom into a dining room. Over $100,000 was spent in the conversion process, and the money shows in the Executive, 17th-18th-floor 20th-century Greek-Roman-Gothic-Western-Modern motif of the restaurant. World War II propaganda posters dot the walls, while the tables are covered with magazine ads from the early 1900’s.

Burlington and Plattsburgh, New York.

The Portland branch of Carbur’s opened in April 1977, taking over the former home of an appliance store. Valley designed the interior and performed many structural changes including moving the stairs, building a balcony section, and converting the downstairs storeroom into a dining room. Over $100,000 was spent in the conversion process, and the money shows in the Executive, 17th-18th-floor 20th-century Greek-Roman-Gothic-Western-Modern motif of the restaurant. World War II propaganda posters dot the walls, while the tables are covered with magazine ads from the early 1900’s.

A perfect place for lunch or dinner, Carbur’s food is as appealing as the atmosphere within.

You may think at first that Carbur’s is rather savagely and unusually sandwiched in a sandwich shop. Not true! Carbur’s is a visual as well as a culinary experience. You get lost between two Cornell fraternity brothers, Carl Capra and Burr Vail. Two "frustrated knights whose code pieces had rusted shut," according to the menu, decided to open a restaurant in Burlington, Vermont in 1947. Their gimmick was their menu; a funny name for each of their 85 sandwiches, a pun or joke for every entry, and lots of lavish and somewhat risque illustrations. Some personal favorites from the menu:

- The Heartburner (Open the bus and the Paisly’s gone!)
- The Pepper Fjord (Forgotten, but not gone)
- The Biddledor (Wife of the above)
- The Elizabeth Ray (Not my type)
- The Maine Mystique (It’s just a bunch of Kennebunks)
- The Name That Tuna Or: "What’s On My Line?"
- The L.L. Beans (Served upside down so you only get the broth)

If none of these or the 77 other sandwiches suit your fancy, you could always have the soup of the day, if business is slow, the soup do "yesterdays". Sandwiches on the menu run from plain to exotic, but include quarter-pound and half-pound hamburgers, regular clubs, steak, and seafood, together with a large assortment of cheese. And if you are interested in buying three different kinds of bread. The menu also introduces the one dollar price to keep as a souvenir the branch of Vail, who has written a completely different one lunch sandwiches, different named for each of the three restaurants in Portland.

Pres, Dean of Students guest appear for Execs

by DIANE MAYER

It is not every day that the President of the College, the Dean of Students and her assistant are all the same person. That is what Amy Francesca did last week, as she discussed campus matters with students. But what is that happening last week? So that over thirty students took a study break and attended President and deans to exchange views on student government and what direction it is expected to take this year. Each of the administrators expressed a desire to see changes in the Executive Board and the administration.

Ever since I’ve been dean I’ve been waiting for the student government to come to me with an issue, and it has the most important in the most typical kind of way,” said Amy Francesca. “I hope to see a more student-oriented government makes me uncomfortable... There really hasn’t been an issue since the grading system was changed.

The Dean stressed the reluctance of students to talk about major issues was a crucial problem with student government at Bowdoin. “I wish that the student government is to take up the issues right here at the beginning, not when the Faculty finally votes,” she said.

Entemann emphasized the willingness of members of the administration to work with the Executive Board. “I will listen and be responsive. I see student government as a means for the community to move forward. The one thing I don’t want to do is stand with the students.”

As the evening progressed, the discussion drifted to fraternities, with some students alleging that the Dean of Students was “anti-fraternity” and that she had in an address to Bowdoin’s Women’s Association, discouraged females from joining fraternities. Maitland-Ross, however, claims as not true,” acknowledging the fraternities provided “social life” and “other things” for the campus. She went on to note that women have not been incorporated into the fraternity system in a wholly satisfactory way. "For instance," she said, "women are not allowed to hold office in many frats... Some things bear looking into." After the dean and the President had departed, the Board held its first "open period," during which students were allowed to bring matters and suggestions before the Board. Brought up during the period, which the Board voted last week to conduct during the first fifteen minutes of each meeting, was a request that smoking be banned at Executive Board meetings so that interested students would not be discouraged by physical discomfort. The Board postponed the matter until later in the meeting, but agreed to take no action on the request.

Also on the agenda was consideration of a request by the Bowdoin Independent Theater Group, Charters for student organizations, approved by the Executive Board before the organizations may be eligible for student funds.

Floyd Elliott, director of the group, outlined its objectives. "We would offer opportunities for more people to participate in our greater campus and an expanded curriculum of plays." Said Elliott: "If there is an organization that has been granted charters, the Bowdoin Independent Theater Group is not a useless organization."

Objectives to changing the class structure in the ground that the new group would create competition for the Masque and Gown for the student’s interest to support the program. In past, independent productions like the Masque and Gown have provided profits, and the group will likely need the major need for outside funds.

The Executive Board defeated the idea of a vote of eight to five. The Board recommended that Elliott’s company schedule future shows in conjunction with the Masque and Gown.

Gary Reul Zinns 93 informed the Board that the number of votes received by each candidate in the Executive Board elections three weeks ago could not be made public, as the Elections Committee had requested ballots from the election.

The student government could not say that the "results" of all student elections be promptly published, but does not discriminate the results. The totals be a part of those results.

Upon learning that Orient could not make a decision, the night’s meeting would be limited due to deadline problems, the meeting was closed. The meeting was postponed to Tuesday night at nine o’clock.

Butler ends long reign; McCabe will direct SUC

(Continued from Page 1)
On frats

Judging from the telephone calls, visits and other communications we have received in the course of the past few weeks, it appears that there is a strong and widespread sentiment among Bowdoin students that the Orient printed a straight news story on the recent placing of two fraternities on probation. We did (perhaps ill-advisedly, in retrospect) print a cartoon poking fun at fraternity initiation practices. And oh, how well we do recall last year's "investigation" of the hows of Hell Night.

To deduce from the fact that we printed those three pieces that the Orient would stand by and cheer as fraternities went down the tubes is alarmist paranoia.

Any reasonable person who has taken the time to examine carefully the past and present of Bowdoin's fraternities would readily admit that those institutions have served the College well. Fraternities have enriched the college experiences of countless Bowdoin men and women; they have left us with a history that is colorful and vital; and they have adapted to the new ideas and attitudes of the second half of the twentieth century.

A scholar of Orients past would be hard-pressed to find gobs of evidence that those diverse students who have occupied the various editorships (and thus influenced the paper's editorial voice) have been united in the belief that fraternities do not belong at the College. What the critical reader would discover is that the Orient has rarely hesitated to deplore or decide those aspects of Bowdoin student life that are harmful, needless or absurd.

If the recent crop of editors has any complaint with our fraternity houses today, it is that some of their more distasteful initiation practices seem a bit out of step with current conventions. We would also caution fraternity members and independents alike that if Bowdoin is to become "the beast in this or future centuries, it will only be by virtue of the fact that its students were united in their commitments to the preservation of a true academic and social community.

"Anti" is a prefix for which we find little need in the production of a newspaper. If ever we chide, it is only in the hope that such criticism will spur positive and lasting improvements to this College to which so many of us feel indebted.

Enjoy yourselves

Once again, the College is trundling out to center stage the athletic, musical and theatrical talents of the student body in a weekend production entitled "Parent's Weekend." And with the cost of a Bowdoin education now nudging $7000 a year, the parents deserve the chance to see what the College has to offer.

Yet everyone, especially the parents, realize that this weekend represents a deviation from the routine. Rarely is there so much going on at once on campus. And of course, the dorm rooms will not be this clean again.

So perhaps the exercise we call Parent's Weekend is an effort in vain; in just two days, the College cannot prove to those who foot the bill that it is indeed worth every cent. Only in the quality of what the students accomplish after they finish their four years here will it become apparent that the seven hundred odd students of a Bowdoin education were a good buy for the bucks.

To the parents, we say, "Enjoy yourselves. After all, this is your weekend. Don't expect Bowdoin to prove its value — that is the task of the sons and daughters of Bowdoin."

LETTERS

Unimpressed

To the Editor:

An Open Letter to BUS and the Consumer Affairs with Larry Luchtmansingh:

Why am I unimpressed by your pleas for a more realistic and cohesive environment here at Bowdoin? Why do you seem so dry and lifeless? Is it a mundane? To me the answer seems simple. I do not trust that you and I are abstract though they may be, are based deeply in your heart, I watch you with a lingering look to find a "collective we" while frustration at your lack of collective harmony. Am I not this group of kinship, this institution that has denied us all a realistic and harmonious existence.

You poor fools; you must understand what we fight for is an institution that has deeply affected your life, which must begin by confronting you. By our very existence here we affirm Bowdoin's reality. If we are to protest we must first address those attitudes and spiritual weaknesses that will have us believe that what we are doing here is essential to the ultimate prosperity of our country. It is all just an academic exercise that has little to do with our ability to succeed as human beings.

But do not think that I have not grappled with these questions. I have always been an overly sensitive person-subject erratic and unpredictable extremes in my emotions and human relationships. I have fought a constant and sometimes lonely battle to find some sense of human definition in this Bowdoin experience. Though I openly admit that my attempts to address the inequities of this college have been sporadic, I am quite all right and well organized, and even, as one of my classmates noted, ill timed; I must confess that my experiences have taught me a great deal about my environment.

I have learned that my peers firmly believe in radical change as long as it doesn't affect their ability to at least sustain their present existence. I've learned not to be too open with my emotions and fears; especially when they are at an extreme. Most of all, I have learned to be slightly inhibited about being in love with the environment itself and realizing the human warmth we all need so desperately. I say slightly because I believe that we have been stopped from living this erratic life of protest and adventure. I am not as consistent as my碗worthy classmates, but I am more than content in both. I have touched and shared my life with many loving, caring, and sensitive people. This is particularly significant in realizing that I have always been afraid to reach out to others. When I come down to the line and we begin to struggle for life's direction, we will face far more than just the Anne Subscriptions Group: we will face the people who are going to run this country.

I refer me to you be unafraid of challenging my deepest and most heartfelt fear of rejection.

To those who would ask, "Well this is all fine, but how does it pertain to the issues confronting the college, the nation, the world, or even our future?" I will say this: When it comes down to the line, and we begin to struggle for life's direction, we will face far more than just the Anne Subscriptions Group: we will face the people who are going to run this country. When we address the problems of our environment, we do it with the people who are going to run this home. We must seriously question whether we've been taught to resist the future. We must look deep into our hearts and share what we find with others... And this is what the groups mentioned at the beginning of this letter have neglected to do. They are attempting to confront a conservatively liberal institution with radically liberal ideas. Even if they succeed they'll fail. Let us not be so stupid as to believe that a real answer to the problems of our environment lies within already inadequate institutions. When we do our job with reverence to the human spirit, we will begin to find means of expression, and, then, even some answers.

Harold M. Wingood '79

Maevs

To the Editor:

I would like to draw an analogy between dogs and trees. It has been (Continued on Page 5)
LETTERS

Bayard Rustin: all poor must unite

by HOLLY HENKE

Unify of class, not race, should be the main issue today for Black America in the seventies, according to Bayard Rustin who spoke in a John Brown's Bursiu mum lecture last Friday evening.

"If we want to do something about poverty, we've got to do it for all people," Rustin said.

Discoursing Black America in "tumoral and transition," the renowned civil rights activist stressed the need for all black people to join the coalition of all poor people. "For every black who needs better housing, better educational facilities, and better health care, there are five or six poor whites who need it too," Rustin explained. In the 1960s black could afford to be dynamic, said Rustin, and the man, who organized the first Freedom Ride in 1961 and the man who helped Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. stage the bus boycott in Montgomery, Alabama, was still an uncooperative and unpleasant character.

Bayard Rustin, BNS photo

"We've got to get out of this system of seeing everything in black and white and race," he said. "I think we'd have more impact in giving the black a chance than in the Bakkie case," Rustin said.

The Bakkie case concerns only upperclass blacks who are already privileged and who have an appeal to the young people.

"If you are black ... whatever you do, you never get the break as if your own up makes you a man. What makes you a man is that you turned yourself around ... if you don't help your own, then who are you, and if you don't help others, what are you?"

Local talent spotlighted tonight as 'Uncle Tom's stage

by ALEX STEVENSON

Come to Pickard Theater tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m. for the first major production of the season, Uncle Tom's Cabin. This is a dramatic reinterpretation that a stage adaptation of the classic novel has been produced in work characteristic of the play at Bowdoin or elsewhere.

It is true that UTC does have a history of maintaining a dramatic profile nationwide. It has been maligned and misunderstood, for it is a revolutionary play in several ways. Enormously popular from the time it was first published as a magazine serial in 1852, UTC played on stage in Troy, New York, and was then brought to New York City, where its troupe radically altered the nature of American theatre by doing away with the present evasive or obligatory burlesques and curtain- raisers, as well as by instituting the matinee.

The topical concerns of UTC were bereal and timely, but American theatre's saving grace to others. Although many devotedly religious Americans had therefore thought of theatre as the devil's creation, UTC was a work characteristic of its creator, the woman from a very religious family who received divine inspiration for her story while sitting in Brooklyn's own First Parish Church. The first play ever to deal with the black sym-

BAYDOIN ORIENT

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

FRI., OCT. 13, 1978

PAGK E

pro-black play with very strong speeches on freedom," according to Rustin.

Heading this production's cast as Uncle Tom is Carl Webb '80. Other cast members include: Charity Adams '82 as St. Clare; Kim Foster '81 as Toppy; Kelly Erron '82 as Eva; Manica King '81 as Gladys; and James Goss '81, as Phineas and John W. Foster '81 as Uncle Tom. UTC employs only a single set throughout, that of a revival meeting where sit the players at idle moments, watching and for the most part action which unfolds between them and the real audience.

John W. P. Hall '79

Help wanted

To the Editor:

An open letter to the student body

How would you like Alexander Solzhenitsyn or Bruce Springsteen to come to Bowdoin College?

Well, your Lectures and Concerts Committee probably will not be able to get hold of either of your students, but with your help, we should be able to get some very interesting people to come later this fall. It is our job to make a difference. We, the student representatives on the Committee, have made a real effort to bring some very much alike your ideas.

So far this year, we have approved four events, and are hoping to please as many of you as possible. However, since there are only a few events to go before the end of the year, we are trying to do as much as possible. So, give us some suggestions.

Don't sit in your rooms and complain about the quality of campus events. If you give us some input, we'll do our best to give you results.

Sincerely,

Kathy Ludwig '81
Kevin Murphy '80
Million Marks '81

Audrey Gup '78
Enteman in the classroom: a personal reflection

by James Caviston

Last spring, when Bill Enteman first arrived on campus, his Volkswagen was transported into the library. Remaining calm in the face of his first trial, the President-elect got in the car, drove past the circulation desk and across the lawn proclaiming, "Starts every time."

During matriculation, students new to the College were greeted with, "Hi, I'm Bill Enteman." This simple but personal greeting is extended to all. To ascertain faculty views, Enteman went to the faculty offices where he spent anywhere from a half hour to an hour and a half discussing curriculum with his colleagues.

Presidential assistant Geoff Stanwood waxed philosophically about Enteman's arrival. "He had a running start. He wasn't just all of a sudden king. He was crowned prince.

Enteman arrived at the Inaugural ball and verified the sentiment of his speech, the blunt defense of liberal arts. Adorned in a Hawaiian Lei he bemoaned, "We're gonna do it." and then sipped his brew.

Earlier this semester, a roaming toga party wound up at his Federal Street residence. The revelers were warmly greeted and offered libations and congratulations by Enteman.

This president keeps a high visibility. To view the administrative personnel alone, however, would do injustice to his professional career. Twice a week in a Sills Hall classroom, Philosophy Professor Bill Enteman teaches the freshman seminar Free Will.

As one class begins, a freshman approaches and asks a hard question. "It's your world, your free choice. Do whatever you want. This isn't high school. It's college." The professor answers, "Do whatever you want." He puts his notes on his desk, and inconclusively describes the blackboard. While erasing the blackboard he peruses the notes of the preceding class. Stopping, pausing reverently before a series of dashes and us, he muses "tabula rasa" before creating a tabula rasa.

Then more abstractly but more pertinently: "It's your world, your free choice. Do whatever you want. This isn't high school. It's college."

Enteman delights in pursuing tangents which are both edifying in regards to liberal arts and arousing in regard to student life. A discussion begins around the statement, "If we deny free will, there can be no truth or falsehood." This leads to a consideration of the difference between wrong and false. "If you hand in a paper to a math teacher and he says it's wrong, that doesn't mean you are immoral, just dumb. If possible, you should take a math course. It may be the one field in which a truth really exists."

Enteman writes a synopsis of the assigned reading:
1) If we deny free will, there is no choice.
2) Definition: True means at least a conclusion reached and freely arrived at.
3) If we deny free will, there can be no truth.
Then a girl exclaims, "Then the statement, 'Determinism is true,' has no meaning." The professor nods in agreement and concludes, "You can't even say what you want to." Then he pauses, "I hope you all see the argument form."

Sensing that this process may have gone on a few heads, he steps back, "But is that definition of truth really what truth means?" "Not necessarily," a timid voice responds. "What does truth mean?" the professor asks again.

"I don't know if there is such a thing as truth. I enjoy the search. If there was an encyclopedia that had the answer, I'm not sure I'd even look it up."

The class draws blank. Someone defines it as reality. Enteman asks for a clarification. The young man clears his throat and states with bravura, "Reality is what we perceive it to be." Enteman sits up, "You don't mean that when we leave this room, the blackboard disappears?"

In an effort to resolve the issue of radical empiricism, one girl squeezed the bridge of her nose. A lanky freshman casts his glance upward searching his brow for the answer.

Enteman begins to detail the process through which truth is arrived at. In ten minutes the blackboard is filled with writing.

"Let me give you an example which I'm interested in. You might be too. If not, the hell with you."

The examples he cites are from the range of the liberal arts education: science, math, and music. He concludes, "I don't know if there is such a thing as truth. I enjoy the search. If there was an encyclopedia that had the answer, I'm not sure I'd even look it up."

The professor is a lively figure in class. Just the time he finishes the discussion on truth, he has filled and erased the blackboard three times. He makes sweeping gestures with his arms while explaining points to students to suggest the height, depth, and sometimes unfathomable nature of a topic. Yet while listening to a student, he sometimes becomes a completely calm compass.

In the last fifteen minutes he has discussed terminal illness, the superficial relations between undergraduates and the role of psychiatrists in women's lib.

"Some shrinks say this is a traumatic time for women. They are trying to change their role from what this society has made for them," then he pauses, "But society will learn to accommodate."

Before class ends, he launches into a diatribe against psychoanalytical ideas concerning infants. "People get lost in the argument of whether you should pick up the baby or let it cry. They read one article and do one thing, then read another and change their mind. They spend their time worry about holding the child or not, instead of worrying whether they love it or not."

After class, Enteman had the chance to respond to the question of crying babies in more personal terms. "When my child first started crying, my wife and I held it. But babies cry all the time, usually at 3 a.m. Sometimes. Finally we put the kid in another room. You have to draw the line between sensitive and sensible."

The next meeting of Freshman Seminar 2 begins with the most pleasing of all announcements: "I won't be here on Thursday."

"Astrology is a way to predict the future. It's deterministic. Doesn't that go against the idea of free will? If so, why do people believe it?"

Enteman grins, "Because they're stupid." He puts aside the tongue and cheek and seriously reviews the suggestion, "I'm strongly in favor of the idea, because it's an area that requires education. I guess we'll have to cover the topic of astrology." He adds to the list biographies, ESP, and the mystery cult Tea Leaf Reading.

Although he approached the subject facetiously, the class perked up once when the topic of cults is mentioned. A girl in a green sweater asks, "There's a growing interest in religious cults. They say, join us, and give a little money of course, and you'll be..."

"Faculty, alumni, trustees and a smallism in favor of halcyon life are free." The whole class starts citing the various cults they've been accosted. "We can't believe the whole class wants to do this."

In a discussion of the western concept of time (as linear) and the eastern concept (as circular), the framework of philosophy projects.

The westerner, who believe that life lasts for a definite period of time, is worried about getting things done. He's hung up on materialism. We make a fist out of life. Whereas, the easterners see life as a cycle, a chance to live again." Then Enteman bursts with energy, "You're gonna die sometime. Why worry about what?"

The topic of religion is breached by Enteman with caution. "Some "One is very lucky to teach philosophy. It is act of trying to think out who and what you are. It is more practical than what most people think is practical."

At class Enteman puts aside the role of entertainer to speak with students on a level of greater curiosity, while still maintaining a playful vivacity. A freshman with complaints approaches him. "You didn't understand my paper. What I meant to show was why can't established existence... but that's not true... because there might be a factor so beyond any dimension familiar to us... making all truth known." Enteman succinctly replies, "You can't have a square circle."

"It's true to you, but nothing can be proved. Philosophy is not practical. I write a paper a week, and not one of them is as confusing as the assignments we have to read.

"My job is to confuse you.

"We don't need you to do that. But the fact that it's all relative, that the words good and bad simply matter on which way your reasoning follows is confusing enough.

"If you find the reasoning inadequate, you challenge." Enteman becomes soft spoken. "Certain evidence makes sense, and slowly, we learn.

A half hour later, after the last gripping student has left, Enteman is still sitting at the desk. He talks very calmly about what he teaches. "One is very lucky to teach philosophy. It is an act of trying to think out who and what you are. It is more practical than what most people think is practical.

Enteman goes on about the origin of his interest in the subject of free will. "As an undergraduate in an ethic course, the question of free will was raised. The professor was brilliant but a typically standard lecturer. When he heard the question, he stopped the lecture and began asking us questions. For three days we discussed the question. The whole class was involved. It was one of the most exciting undergraduate experiences I've had."

"At the end he said, 'We have to get back to business.' The way I felt, those three days were the business. That had a big impact on me. Pedagogically, what he did was good. That's why it started.

Concerning the topic free will in the disciplines. It happens to be one of those problems in philosophy which seems to touch upon all the other issues. That's the reason I like to teach it. I approach the students with, 'Tell me what you want to talk about. I'll connect it with free will.'

About the students themselves..."
There's nothing like a toga party to lift the spirit. Dress is casual. Courtesy Chi Psi archives.

College stages parents' production

(Continued from Page 1) Parents' weekend football game will feature the Polar Bears' attempt to extend their win streak to two against a tough Williams opponent. The evening will belong to the thespians at the Masque & Crown presents its rendition of Uncle Tom's Cabin both Friday and Saturday. The play has a special significance to Brunswick as it was written by local playwright Harriet Beecher Stowe. Throughout the weekend, the parents will have the opportunity to meet Bowdoin's newly inaugurated eleventh President, Wilfred E. S. Kahn. He will speak at the Parent's Program tomorrow morning, and will be circulating at an informal reception after the football game.

But the real stars of Parent's Weekend are the offspring who study at Bowdoin. For the weekend, they become hosts, tour operators, and entertainers. And above the College production, their relation of life at Bowdoin will go farthest in impressing the parents.

At 6:00 Sunday night in Adams Hall, the Department of Religion presents "The Chosen: People, Jesus." The performance will be Tuesday in the Purcell Room of Bills Hall.

SAFC Allocations for 1978-79

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Organization</th>
<th>Request 1978-79</th>
<th>Appro. 1978-79</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Afro-Am Society</td>
<td>$7,000</td>
<td>$6,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Band</td>
<td>400</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Film Society</td>
<td>6,620</td>
<td>4,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Organization</td>
<td>1,000</td>
<td>600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BGPO</td>
<td>327</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BWA</td>
<td>3,070</td>
<td>2,200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bugle</td>
<td>8,435</td>
<td>8,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camera Club</td>
<td>310</td>
<td>310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Celtic-Am Society</td>
<td>375</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cheerleaders</td>
<td>305</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karmening Society</td>
<td>375</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>International Relations</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Newman Center</td>
<td>3,570</td>
<td>2,450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Orient</td>
<td>11,000</td>
<td>9,750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Outing Club</td>
<td>2,000</td>
<td>1,550</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Political Forum</td>
<td>1,600</td>
<td>1,300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quill</td>
<td>350</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rugby Club</td>
<td>1,348</td>
<td>1,348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Student Assembly</td>
<td>300</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SUN</td>
<td>2,430</td>
<td>1,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SUC</td>
<td>16,500</td>
<td>16,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TV Club</td>
<td>350</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WOR</td>
<td>6,450</td>
<td>6,450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Foreign Students Assn.</td>
<td>1,355</td>
<td>600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BERG</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Physics Society</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cleveland Society</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Art League</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TOTALS</td>
<td>$112,592</td>
<td>$65,510</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

*These organizations have not submitted requests for 1978-79 yet.

Animals to don toga attire for Senior Class soirée

by SAEF T. PINN

Faced with the threat of expulsion, members of the Delta House at Bowdoin College rallied around Illilou’s cry of “Toga! Toga!” Faced with the prospect of the real world, members of the senior class will be donning toga sheets Tuesday night in this campus’ Dionysus cult altar, the third floor of the Visual Arts Center.

Steve Roe, president of the senior class gave the details of the pagan rites. “We’ll have a Purple Hills Jesus punch. But the real attraction will be the Toga Toga prize, which we’re hoping a member of the Classics department will judge.” The prize, which has been kept a secret, will not necessarily be awarded to the nearest chest.

Rose also talked about the exclusive nature of the party. “Intruders will be devoured by hungry wolves. Absolutely no underclassmen, unless they’re of age.”

The bash will go from nine until midnight. Knowledge of the password will suffice for admission. Concerning the attire, Roe said, “Although there’s no requirement to wear a toga, I hope people will show up in them.” He thoughtfully added, “Ad hominem erga losta.”

Bowdoin has a long history of toga parties, extending years before the current craze. And already this year, pantomime proctor and DJ demi-god Mike Shanor led Hyr Hall occupants clad in sheets to the President’s house. Back in its theatrical hey-day, the house hosted post-show celebrations, peeling both grapes and drapes. Since the class of 1979 arrived, Chi Psi has held annual symposiums, attended by athletes and academicians from all fraternities.

Since the novelty of bare shoulders and simple costumes wore off after the first round of simulation, the only prerequisite for a good toga party is a spirit of unity, or as Africans to Scipio, “common profit.” To be sure, there is no better way to destroy that spirit than by standing in the corner and muttering, “What a bunch of idiots.”

The true test of the toga party is to puncture the thin veneer of personal identity, recognizing what is common to all instead of concentrating on the differences. It is an opportunity, which lasts only momentarily, to subdue the conventional facades. Through this effort, one returns to the Golden Age, a time before the existence of button-down shirts, jeans and Gucci slippers.

Perhaps the greatest shock a reveller can experience is the realization that his bushy mane is anachronistic for the 19th century. Consider the case of one toga-clad freshman who, having sent his “Lodgers” to a late hour, found himself locked out of Hyr Hall. This young beau, while climbing through a cope floor window, woke up not only the co-ed who occupied the room but also her mother, sister, and dog who were visiting the college for the first time. More than likely, unless you’re heading back to your villa where the servants wait for you for your arrival, don’t forget to tie your key around your neck or any other suitable appendage.

---

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place
Tel. 725-8547
Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop.
Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

Hockey!

We offer UNBEATABLE PRICES on all the hockey gear you need. We've got Hyde skates, sticks, pucks, and a good selection of equipment - the works.

What more can you ask for? Selection. Top quality. AND THE LOWEST PRICES IN TOWN.

It's ice cold.

BLACK'S HARDWARE

BRUNSWICK BARBER SHOP
Ben and Holly’s
Sampson’s Parking Lot
125 Maine St.
58 Maine Street, Brunswick, 729-4166
Four strike foreign chord

by GREGORY SPRIGG

The nationally known Aeolian Chamber Players, a musical quartet composed of viola, violin, piano, and clarinet, have been associated with Bowdoin College for a number of years, most notably in connection with the College's Summer Music Festival, for which they form a nucleus of the faculty.

This past Sunday and Monday evening the Chamber Following returned to the College and performed two programs, both of which featured a piece commissioned by Bowdoin for the Players. The piece, "Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet, and God of the Winds" was composed by Samuel Adams, Acting Director and Chairman of the Music Department at Eastman School of Music. After the vice versa performance of the commissioned work on Sunday, Adams stayed for an additional day in which he met with music classes and gave talks on contemporary music and composition.

It seems unlikely that anyone could have left Krege Auditorium this past Sunday and Monday night without enjoying at least one work. The Aeolian Chamber Players, at Bowdoin for the first and only time this year, performed their pieces with sensitivity, confidence, and an vein of passion. But I wonder how many others experienced the confusion I felt when listening to much of the program.

Lewis Kaplan, first violinist for the Players, prefaced the performance of "Contrasts," by Bela Bartok, with a short introductory note. The work had been commissioned in 1938 by Benny Goodman and Joseph Szeps, a violinist and close friend of Bartok's. The piece was quite evidently composed with the virtuosity of its two principal performers in mind, while the piano played a more subdued role throughout the piece.

Although I am familiar with a number of other Bartok pieces, "Contrasts" was new to me. Nevertheless, I couldn't help noticing little snatches, popping up here and there, of what seemed to be familiar American jazzlike idiom. A musician would probably shoot me for saying it, but some parts reminded me of Gershwin's "American in Paris" probably because of a phrase played by the clarinet, while at one point the violins lapsed into extreme sentimentalism, bringing to mind the sappy quotation found in Ives. At another point I thought I heard similarities to early 20th century French "yes yes" music, but no doubt much or all of this might have been a wandering imagination in search of an object.

Mr. Kaplan noted that the piece to follow, Gunther Schuller's "Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet, and French Horn," was composed by him. He also mentioned that it was premiered on the French Horn, which is not unusual by any means.

The "Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet, and French Horn," written for the Players, was another premiere. The Players performed it with great enthusiasm. Thus, Gunther Schuller's first work for his Players was a success, at least to me. I must admit that this particular composition left me completely awash.

At the first listening the piece seems to be constructed upon a conservative Western plane. "The Impromptu," the movements, titled "Elegia," "Romanza (Menuetto)," and "Rondo Giovanni," indicated a conventional musical format. The two cellos were alternated with a flat bridge and an attached bow with its hair interwoven in the strings for one player should have provided ample warning of the contrary. I found it impossible to find any sense of direction from the moment the piece began. Probably because of its name, I thought Schuller might model himself after the Viennese school of Schoenberg, Berg, and Webern, in which may be to degenerate iconoclasm during the early part of the 20th century. The "Impromptu" seemed to bear out such a premonition, and I smugly settled down to listen to what I thought would continue to be a neo-lyrical piece.

The "Elegia" shook my misplaced confidence with great dispatch. This movement was more emotive (at times sappy), and less abstract than the first. The clarinetists interspersed sharp screams (evoked from the instrument with heavy breathing) with solos and duets, while the cellos and violins played a long slinking score like passages on muted instruments. All of this had quite a bit more, combined to produce an eerie effect.

The "Romanza," identified as a minuet, seemed more than a title. It brought to mind tangos, or other dance music, and great passages of all instruments simultaneously sliding to crescendos created a dreamlike atmosphere.

The "Rondo Giovanni" was an upbeat rhythm which drove it more than the introductory tonal passages. It was at times sliding, jagged, harmonious, and caracopious, with great changes in dynamics and tempi, sudden bursts of power and changing color, with intermittent pounding of the piano. In short, a confusing array of activity. And indeed they did. In the hope of being one of the few original impressions, I talked with the artists immediately following the performance, and this was astonishing to find how radically our perceptions differed.

Following the performances of other recent chamber works, I sought out the composer to follow the model of permitting great individual freedom of expression in every piece, providing only minimal direction, and that in general terms. Where I had felt the piece was loosely constructed, the players stated that it was an extremely tight work, in which each note and dynamic change was critical.

I had thought the piece was almost entirely caracopious and melodically driven. Surely it must be driven by rhythm. For nothing else discernible remained. On the contrary, the players assured me, the piece is quite tonal, driven by its melodically line.

Following the "Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet, and French Horn," the Aeolianists played the "Trios in D major, Opus 70," by Ludwig van Beethoven. Perhaps, I was exhausted from having struggled to simultaneously analyze and enjoy the preceding work at any rate, the Beethoven piece didn't sweep me away as I thought it might. It was simply too easy to listen to after the others, and was finished much sooner than I thought possible.

Brothers, indies reveal sentiments about student life

As the saying goes, "Man cannot live by bread alone," so discussion of a student's "escape from dorm to housing" was a during the fall's Interfraternity Council (IFC) presidential election contest. The Brothers and indies were far from being content with this.

Several fraternity members voiced their dissatisfaction with last year's lottery system ruling which required frat houses to fill to capacity or be penalized. The Interfraternity Council (IFC) president defended the requirements, but in the end, every house survived the step. "I did it without any visible adverse effects," he asserted.

The interfraternity council was devoted to social life, and it was clear how the many innovations proposals were made. One student opined that in order for frats to thrive, perhaps the smaller one would have to be sacrificed. "Bowdoin doesn't need ten fraternities," he said. This remark was countered by Galeota, observing that "one frat which provides perhaps as much social life as the others put together can't have parties this semester, which puts stress on the others. But that could support more fraternities."
Stickhandlers plagued by youth and inconsistency

by GEOFF WORRELL

Potential qualifies a team to be good; experience makes them good. This year's field hockey season has evolved into one big question mark. The Bears suffer from a lot of potential, a lot of new players, a lot of new positions to fill, and not a lot of time to figure out what can work and what can't. That's what a rebuilding year is all about.

"Part of it is my problem," admits Coach LaPointe. "In general we have a tremendous amount of potential but we have to build players to new positions. It just takes time."

Unfortunately for the coach, the season wouldn't wait. After the loss to Colby, Coach LaPointe realized that she needed to change formations so her players would move more and be more innovative. The change might prove to be too late.

Bowdoin's chances at a spot in the state tournament hinge precarious on beating the University of Maine at Orono this coming Wednesday. If the Bears pick up a victory there, the rest is up to percentages and Colby defeating Southern Maine.

Bowdoin's stick handlers are vying for a fourth-place spot in their league, a position which would help them into the state tournament.

The theme song of Bowdoin field hockey this year has been experience. No matter how superlative the effort, there has to be knowledge-how to go along with it. What happens when a coach has a lot of exceptional players at one position and she needs a person to fill another position? Sharon Graddy is the most extreme example. She moved from being the manager of the team to bring its starting goalie and to be a good one at that.

The troubles of youth continue. Field hockey, like any team sport, revolves on how well players know each other. Coach LaPointe has had to juggie her players from one end of the field to the other searching for combinations that would produce goals.

There is no question of the ability of this field hockey team to win. To win with regularity is their goal. In their loss to Wesleyan and in their victory over Bates, the Bowdoin stick handlers exhibited their excellent playing ability, it just hasn't happened enough.

Eve Corning said it best: "We have the talent but we have not consistently worked well as a team." Bowdoin has nothing but tough competition ahead. Harvard, Tufts, Orono, and Boston College are the remaining games on the schedule.

Most teams undergoing a rebuilding year would be working their problems out at the bottom of their league. Bowdoin still has a chance to work out their problems in the State Tournament.

The tennis team has a busy two weeks coming up. It faces the University of Maine-Orono, competes in the New England tournament, and then comes home to play Colby in a stretch that will test the team's ability. Orient/Biggs

Women runners impress

by DEIRDRE OAKLEY

The unheralded women's cross country team displayed considerable strength in springing past several larger schools to claim second place in the Brandeis Co-Invitational at Franklin Park last Sunday.

The Wesleyan Cardinals walked off with the number one position with 32 points. Bowdoin's 57 points were number two. Boston College posted 90 points. Southeastern Massachusetts University recorded 133 points, and host Brandeis finished last with 134 points.

Freshman Jane Petrick paced the Polar Bears' attack with a third-place finish with an 18:49 time. Brenda Chapman, another freshman, finished tenth, Captain Evelyn Hewson placed thirteenth, and Sheila Turner, Margaret McCormick, and Liz Davis placed sixteenth, nineteenth, and seventh, respectively.

The women will run tomorrow in the New England Small College Athletic Conference (NESCAC) championships at Hamilton College in Clinton, New York.

Defense stiffens, gridders capture initial triumph strongest we have faced this year. They have a good balance of running and passing, although they are primarily a running team.

(Continued from Page 12)

Assistant Coach Mort LaPointe, who watched the Ephs last week, commented, "Their quarterback has completed 34 of 36 passes this year. The receiver to watch is Hollingsworth, their leading pass-catcher."

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chilk Sauce
Creamers — Bromo Seltzer
HOT DOG
STAND

Defends stiffs,
gidders capture initial triumph

(Continued from Page 12)

strongest we have faced this year. They have a good balance of running and passing, although they are primarily a running team.

Assistant Coach Mort LaPointe, who watched the Ephs last week, commented, "Their quarterback has completed 34 of 36 passes this year. The receiver to watch is Hollingsworth, their leading pass-catcher."

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chilk Sauce
Creamers — Bromo Seltzer
HOT DOG
STAND

Defense stiffens. gridders capture initial triumph

(Continued from Page 12)

strongest we have faced this year. They have a good balance of running and passing, although they are primarily a running team.

Assistant Coach Mort LaPointe, who watched the Ephs last week, commented, "Their quarterback has completed 34 of 36 passes this year. The receiver to watch is Hollingsworth, their leading pass-catcher."

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chilk Sauce
Creamers — Bromo Seltzer
HOT DOG
STAND

For Comfort's Sake

If your feet are comfortable, so's your world.

Birkenstocks:
The amazing wonder from W. Germany
Available in over 10 models — including clogs.

FREE
LIFT TICKETS AT SUNDAY RIVER with any purchase of $20 or more while they last.

SKIBOOTS, SEASON PASS TO SUNDAY RIVER TO BE RAFFLED OFF.

SKI VANS & TECHNICAL REPRESENTATIVES FROM ALL THE MAJOR MANUFACTURERS

THE SKI STALLS
TONTINE MALL, MAINE STREET, BRUNSWICK

Brunswick Tour
& Travel
Come on in and visit us at our bright, new location
just two doors from our doctor.

Be sure and book your Thanksgiving and
Christmas reservations with us early.

Brunswick Tour
& Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TEL. 725-5587

Defends stiffs, gidders capture initial triumph

(Continued from Page 12)

strongest we have faced this year. They have a good balance of running and passing, although they are primarily a running team.

Assistant Coach Mort LaPointe, who watched the Ephs last week, commented, "Their quarterback has completed 34 of 36 passes this year. The receiver to watch is Hollingsworth, their leading pass-catcher."

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chilk Sauce
Creamers — Bromo Seltzer
HOT DOG
STAND

For Comfort's Sake

If your feet are comfortable, so's your world.

Birkenstocks:
The amazing wonder from W. Germany
Available in over 10 models — including clogs.

FREE
LIFT TICKETS AT SUNDAY RIVER with any purchase of $20 or more while they last.

SKIBOOTS, SEASON PASS TO SUNDAY RIVER TO BE RAFFLED OFF.

SKI VANS & TECHNICAL REPRESENTATIVES FROM ALL THE MAJOR MANUFACTURERS

THE SKI STALLS
TONTINE MALL, MAINE STREET, BRUNSWICK

Brunswick Tour
& Travel
Come on in and visit us at our bright, new location
just two doors from our doctor.

Be sure and book your Thanksgiving and Christmas reservations with us early.

Brunswick Tour
& Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TEL. 725-5587
Women booters hang tough, set to play Tufts tomorrow

(Continued from Page 12) what seemed like the blink of an eye, the score was 0-0. Bowdoin wasn’t stunned for long. Two minutes after this barrage, Julie Sprott released a hard shot that rebounded off the right goal post and skittered across the opening to Anna King’s foot, which directed the ball into the net.

Regrettably, the one goal was not enough to phase Brown and the score was 1-1 at the half. In the second half, the Bowdoin defense, led by fullback Debbie Danie, received quite a workout, but managed to hold Brown scoreless. Coach Bicknell cited GWen Jones and Kate Nelson for fine performances in the period. The Polar Bears left Providence with a healthy respect for the caliber of soccer Brown displayed.

And now for the good news — Friday afternoon, Bowdoin beat Boston University 4-0, as the Buckets received its first taste of artificial turf. The field was described as a soggy carpet laid down in a parking lot, but Bowdoin adjusted to win.

Gigi Meyer was a standout in this game, scoring goals one and four, both unassisted. Anna King tallied on a well- misplaced shot and Jessica Birdsell sent a Helen Nahlo pass through the goalie’s legs to round out the scoring.

The soccer jocks hope to utilize the lessons they’ve learned as they close out their season on the immaculate pitches of Pickard Field. They face Tufts tomorrow at 11:00 a.m. and then host archrival Harvard at 2:00 p.m. on Wednesday.

The defense that has carried the soccer team all year was strong again last week, but the sporadic offense showed signs of coming together and providing needed scoring for the playoff drive, Oriental Evans

NEW RELEASE SPECIALS
7.98 List
Van Morrison - Wavelength .................................. 5.59
Yes - Tormato .................................................. 5.59
Linda Ronstadt - Living in USA ............................. 5.59
New & Used Lps, Tapes, Maxwell Cassettes, Paraphernalia manassas, ltd. 212 upper maine st.
"maine's record resource"

Welcome All Bowdoin Parents!
The H. B. Stowe Travel Agency, 9 Pleasant St., in the heart of "beautiful downtown Brunswick" takes great pleasure in welcoming Bowdoin parents to the Bowdoin campus and our own Brunswick, Maine region.

One of the highlights of "Parents' Weekend" this year is the presentation of the Masque and Gown play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" tonight and Saturday at 8 p.m. at Memorial Hall at Pickard Theater. The play, incidentally, was written here in Brunswick by Harriet Beecher Stowe, a Bowdoin College faculty wife, famed author and traveler after whom Stowe Travel is named.

The Stowe Travel Agency was established in 1950 by Mary Baxter White, wife of a Bowdoin College alumnus, at the Stowe House which Mary White originally owned and restored in the mid '40s. Located later on the hill by Bowdoin College, the Stowe Travel Agency moved in the mid '60s to its present large and spacious quarters at 9 Pleasant Street in busy, downtown Brunswick.

One of Maine's oldest and largest travel agencies, the Stowe Agency has long been a member of the American Society of Travel Agents, and has won many awards for its high sales volume in all facets of travel. Just last month, the Stowe Agency was recognized for the second consecutive year as Amtrak Maine's "Golden Spike" travel agency by Amtrak for having produced the highest sales volume during the past year.

Stowe Travel, which represents all airlines and travel companies, hotels, Rent-A-Car, Greyhound Bus Lines and even Western Union, has a large staff of seven travel consultants. Where to Go, How to Go, How to Make All the Travel Arrangements, saving the Bowdoin traveler as much money as possible — that's where we come in — "Your son or daughter's travel agency" at Bowdoin.

We know about all the new excursion air fares and the latest trends in travel. The experience we've gained through many years serving thousands of other Bowdoin undergraduates is entirely at his or her disposal.

STOWE TRAVEL
Tel. 725-5573 Downtown Brunswick
Mary Baxter White, President

Booters prepare for stretch run with confidence

(Continued from Page 12) intrastate rival Bates Wednesday, but the scoring ability that had abandoned the team prior to the Tufts game was missing, "It was a frustrating game," Hubbard said, "because we all knew we should have beaten them. We clearly outplayed Bates. We had 25 shots at the Bates goal but we couldn't score."

Fifteen minutes into the game, Bates scored the contest's lone goal, and from there the hosts were forced to play catch-up ball. The Polar Bears managed sixteen shots on goal during the first half, including six by Poko and four by Collins, but the Bobcats' defense stood firm.

Bowdoin's best scoring opportunity came on a break by Poko and Collins. Poko passed the ball to an unguarded Collins, but Mike's shot hit the goal post and bounced away from the goal.

Offense improving
"We couldn't generate much offense in this one, but the offense has really come around in these past two games," Hubbard emphasized. "We had plenty of chances to score, and we all know that we should have scored."

The defense continued to sparkle in defeat. Keith Brown turned in a solid performance in the Bowdoin nets, as he turned away three Bobcat shots.

Mahoney and Steve Myer also displayed strong efforts in a losing cause.

Playoff hopes
"We have five games left in the season," Hubbard said, "and of course we'd like to win them all. Most of the games are against teams that are ahead of us, like Williams and Wesleyan, so we can help ourselves directly by beating them. If we keep on progressing as we have in the past two games, we feel that we can make the playoffs." The team will get an opportunity to help itself tomorrow at 11 a.m. when it plays its 3-2-1 record on the line against the Ephs of Williams at Pickard Field.
Fullback Drew King is shown here scoring one of his three touchdowns in the memorable 42-34 upset victory over Wesleyan before a Parents' Day crowd two years ago.

Women booters hit road, learn lessons in defeat

by MARY MOSELEY

One of the most difficult lessons for any team to learn is that losing a game can be a valuable experience. Unfortunately, the women's soccer team found out the hard way, losing two out of three away games in a week of hectic scheduling.

The opponents style of play differed in each of the three games both in the losses to Plymouth State, 1-0, and to Brown College, 4-1, and the triumph over Boston University, 4-0.

The most recent game, Wednesday at Plymouth State, was easily the most frustrating. The statistics are revealing: Bowdoin outshot Plymouth 22-7, the Plymouth goalie recorded 17 saves, and Plymouth 'out-footed' the Bears, 16-7. To label the style of soccer Plymouth State plays 'aggressive' is an understatement. Yet for the most part the Bowdoin squad dominated play.

Shut the ball falls

Polar Bears Jessica Birdsell, Anna King, Helen Naylor, Mary Lake, Sarah Nussbaum, and fullback Andrea Fish were all quite liberal with their shouting, but no one was able to make the crucial connection.

Last Saturday, on a weekend trip, the squad met the formidable Brown Bears and fell, 4-1.

The Polar Bears started off sluggishly, and things grew worse before getting better. In a five-minute span early in the half, three shots by Brown's Gayl Manaka, taken from several yards outside the penalty area, either slipped right under the crossbar or through the goalie's fingers. In (Continued on Page 11)

Ephemera tomorrow

Defense boosts gridders

by BILL STUART

Not since the 1972 season, when the Bear defense was at its height, has there been as much cause for optimism in the 4-0 victory over the visiting Union. As the newspaper reported, "We knew that we really needed this one badly."

This added determination, the enthusiasm reflected in the showing, and a sparkling defensive display by Tom Sciolli, allowing the Polar Bears to continue their tradition of gaining the season's initial victory against Worcester Tech, have brought the team to victory over Worcester last Saturday.

Defense, improved scoring help booters to gain split

by NED HORTON

After suffering two consecutive shutout losses on the road, the Polar Bear soccer team returned to friendly Pickard Field Saturday and downed Tufts University, 2-0. The squad was unable to develop any winning momentum, though, as Bowdoin scored just two goals in the first half against the Tufts defense.

The Bowdoin offense retaliated with heavy pressure on the visitors' net that finally resulted in the goal scored by freshman goalkeeper Keith Brown and added by the Bears, 1-0, Wednesday.

The Polar Bears drew first blood in the Tufts game. Nine minutes into the contest, sophomore Mike Collins muscled his way into the Tufts goal area and headed a pass from Gordon Linke past a stunned Tufts goalie. The Jumbos turned the tables moments later and tied the score with a similar play.

The Bowdoin offense retaliated with heavy pressure on the visitors' net that finally resulted in the goal scored by freshman Kwame Poku, who drilled the ball into the back of the net, giving Bowdoin a 1-0 lead that would stand at the half.

Poku opened the scoring in the second half with a solo effort. He took the ball from a Jumbo defender, faked his way by another defender, and lofted a shot over the head of the charging goalie. It hit an insurance tally. Tufts scored later in the game to move to within one goal, but the visitors would come close.

Postgame Scripts

Peerless prognosticator

by BILL STUART

"I have a great idea for the sports section of the Orient," exclaimed Kevin Walsh in a phone conversation last week. "We have a coworker named Roland Levesque in the Moulton Union kitchen who is terrible at predicting the scores of Bowdoin sporting events. With this kind of ringing endorsement, I felt that I had to check the situation.

"I am a Brunswicker native," Levesque told me when I went to speak to him, "my cousin, Roger, played football at Bowdoin under Adam Walsh. I used to watch the games from up in a tree behind the scoreboard. Those were the days of the great state rivalries, with Bates, Colby and the University of Maine. The stadium was always full for those games."

Levesque, who played football and basketball in high school in the mid-50's, has worked in the Union kitchen for almost ten years. "We started the predicting between ourselves in the kitchen for the heck of it," he explains. "We've had four weeks of predicting this year, and I've won three times. I'm doing pretty well so far."

"I read every bit of the sports pages," continued, "and I also read a lot of sports magazines. I watch all the Bowdoin football and hockey games, and as many of the basketball games as I can."

Before I left, he gave me the first of the predictions that will be carried weekly in this column. "I'll give Bowdoin the benefit of the doubt Saturday. Even with a Parents' Day crowd and last week's victory, Bowdoin will still lose to Williams, 27-7. The Polar Bears will gain revenge in soccer, as they will beat the Ephs, 3-1."

"And, for your information, the Dodgers will win the Series in six.
Frosh poll reaffirms value of rush
by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

The most recent Bowdoin Opinion Polling Organization poll has determined that four-fifths of the freshman class found orientation week a "pleasant experience" while the remainder felt it was "a stressful situation.

The Bowdoin Student Life Committee Rush and Orientation Week Questionnaire resurfac ed this week in the form of an extensive publication by BOPD, the College's opinion polling organization. The organization compiled the responses from the 36-question poll and published the results this past Tuesday.

The Student Life Committee, a group composed of both student and faculty members, introduced the poll last year. They attempted to determine the degree of satisfaction with which the freshmen reacted to orientation week. This year's poll included most of the same questions with two exceptions. The class of 1982, even more than last year's class, affirmed the importance of rush week to the twelve campus dining rooms. Almost seven out of every ten freshmen decided during rush week where they would eat for the rest of the year. Very few rushed with a particular fraternity in mind. Most students claimed that their final decision was not affected by the pro and con speeches delivered at the assembly during the first week of school.

The response to the question about non-partisan counselors was almost evenly divided. Over 40% of the students would have liked to have had a non-partisan counselor with whom to discuss the fraternity system. Over 50% answered negatively.

Governor Longley comes out against Dickey-Lincoln dam
by BILL STUART

Delivering an address at his alma mater for the first time since he became governor of Maine four years ago, James Longley urged a Bowdoin College audience last night to become involved in politics. "You can make a difference; every single person counts," emphasized the independent head of the State. Longley was speaking at the College under a lectureship sponsored by the College's Committee on Media Relations.

Before describing the independent movement, though, Longley surprised the audience with an illustration of the advantages of being an Independent politician. "I made a decision today on Dickey-Lincoln," he stated in reference to the controversial hydroelectric dam project. The project has been debated for a number of years and has become a national issue as a result of the new awareness of the environment brought on by protests at the Seabrook nuclear plant (unrelated to the dam project).

"For those of you who want it, you're not going to get it, I hope, because I came out against Dickey-Lincoln. I was able to make this decision without worrying about reelection or political party position and simply go right out there," he said.

The event was one of the series sponsored by the College's Committee on Media Relations. The committee was formed last month to encourage the listing of independent candidates on the November balloting.

Indecisive exec members call special town meeting
by ANGELA BARBANO

In a hastily-called special session last night, the Executive Board voted 6-0 to call a "town meeting" to discuss the hiring and tenure of minority faculty members.

The action marks the second time the board has reversed its decision on whether a special gathering of the student body should be convened to discuss the hiring and tenure of minority faculty members.

The nine Board members present at the meeting spent fifteen minutes discussing whether they should take action in the absence of six of the fifteen Board members. After a short discussion of the merits of the proposals themselves, the Board took an unusual roll-call vote on the motion to convene the special assembly. The motion passed unanimously, with Chair Basil Zirin '80 abstaining.

"It is the greatest show of chicanery, artifice and subterfuge that I have ever seen," said Michael Walker '79, a member of the Executive Board of the Student Government.

Two weeks ago, at the October 11th meeting of the Executive Board, Walker introduced a proposal to hold a "town meeting" on the hiring and tenure of minority faculty members. Walker's motion passed the Executive Board with the necessary five votes the first week, at the October 16 Board meeting, Walker's proposal was rescinded after two unsuccessful attempts. Executive Board chairman Basil Zirin '80 suggested some reasons...
Solemn promise

It's a disgrace. It's a travesty. It's a downright shame. What happened last weekend in the library is something that embarrasses the entire College.

Unfortunately, there's not much we can do about it, or the approximately 400 volumes that disappear (escape) from the library each year. We cannot focus cameras on every stack. It is equally undesirable, not to mention economically unfeasible, to station a security guard at the door, checking all students carrying "suspicious" books.

So where does that leave us? All we can do is make a dignified plea that the microfilm be returned. Signing the Honor Code card was not just another gesture; it was a solemn promise. We only hope that the perpetrator and all those similarly inclined will keep this in mind.

Back and forth

It was a chronic meeting-goer's delight — three meetings in two lounges in one night.

At the same time that the Executive Board was debating the question of whether they should call a "town meeting," across the way in the Main Lounge, the Assistant to theDean Lois Egasti, Captain Arthur Emerson of the Brunswick Fire Department, Physical Plant engineer David Barbour, the two Senior Center interns, and almost all of the dormitory proctors and resident assistants were gathered to talk about fires, fire alarms and Fire Week.

The meeting, we were told, was meant to familiarize those responsible for student housing with the various fire protection systems and procedures now in effect at the College. For an hour and a half, Captain Emerson covered everything from extinguishers to sprinklers to false alarms, and the proctors got their turns to ask about missing fire extinguishers and rope ladders and Senior Center escape routes. It was just the sort of thing we had in mind four weeks ago when, in the midst of the confusion over which alarms did what where, we called for better communication between those that knew and those who needed to know the facts, the hows and howevers of our fire protection system.

And this gathering was only the beginning, for in the coming week, the proctor-alternates and the Dean's Office will be orchestrating Fire Safety Week here at the College. Dormitory residents can expect fire drills, and the Brunswick Fire Department will be around to talk about fire safety and emergency procedures. By the week's end, there will be little left undone in any of our minds as to just what those red boxes sound like and where to go, what to do when they sound off.

But even after the fire safety meeting broke up, the action at the Union was not ended. Back in the Lancaster Lounge, the Communications Committee of the Alumni Council had set out hot cider and doughnut holes, and were ready to sit down and listen while twenty or so students took a study break to address nearly every current campus issue.

The fraternity difficulty was tossed about at great length, the questions of tenure and Bowdoin's affirmative action program both grew considerable opinion, and WBOR's financial troubles were aired. The fifteen alums, led by chairwoman Susan Jacobsen, offered a bit of perspective, a good deal of encouragement and a little bit of advice in any of our minds as to just what those red boxes sound like and where to go, what to do when they sound off.

The fraternity difficulty was tossed about at great length, the questions of tenure and Bowdoin's affirmative action program both grew considerable opinion, and WBOR's financial troubles were aired. The fifteen alums, led by chairwoman Susan Jacobsen, offered a bit of perspective, a good deal of encouragement and a little bit of advice in any of our minds as to just what those red boxes sound like and where to go, what to do when they sound off.

Thax

To the Editor:

The stories of sabotage in academic competition are all too familiar to students. We have heard of students who made their "incidentally" knocked to the floor of the library, the books of whom volumes of the periodicals, and of course, that classic case of the rolls of microfilm that were stolen from the campus library. Oh — you say you haven't heard?

Students in History 49, a study of Woman in the Americas, were to write a research paper and to write a research paper, due October 25. The microfilm was to be purchased for the course's studies, concentrated on women's periodicals, and of course, that classic case of the rolls of microfilm that we heard of. We were to write a research paper, due October 25. The microfilm was to be purchased for the course's studies, concentrated on women's periodicals, and of course, that classic case of the rolls of microfilm that were stolen from the campus library. Oh — you say you haven't heard?

We would like to thank the person(s) who so kindly reprinted those of us in the course of the burden of this assignment. You will be remembered in the memories of the most opportune.

(Continued on Page 3)
A non-serious guide to serious study places

by DAVID M. STONE

With the average college course load, a Bowdoin student spends only twelve hours a week in class. A large part of the learning we are supposed to do here therefore takes place outside of the classroom; in those hours of quiet solitude, the individual ponders mysteries beyond the lecture material.

Second a bit exaggerated? Probably, but the fact is that a great deal of work is done out of class, and that presents a problem: where to avoid distractions, disturbing influences, noise, and a host of more appealing alternatives to quiet contemplation of micro-economics and organic chemistry.

The basement is provided, great, but not the place to be on the night before a final with three books to read.

Basement and third floor

On the other hand, the basement and third floor should not be especially horrid, perhaps the most serious tool. The deadly silence is broken only by the hum of fluorescent lights, and one senses immediately the intensity of the inhabitants. The basement has been likened to a monastery (without the stained glass windows) or the solitary confinement cells at Devil's Island. And our library source has classified the third floor as the site of "the most intense grinding per square foot on campus."

The library consists of two separate worlds. The first and second floors are the social centers, while above and below are the serious study goers.

Hubbard Hall (for the uninitiated, Hubbard's Cupboard is markedly more casual. Although the door squeaks, stray notes escape from Gibson Hall, and people constantly display their idiocy Cross (you always know when cads are going popular after hours, but suffers from poor lighting. The modern Reading Department is the best place to relax and discuss the night before an exam with other terrified students. Unfortunately, it prevents you from doing any serious studying, isn't it too late anyway?

But which of these places is recommended for the atmosphere most conducive to serious studying by one who knows? Which of these has John Cunningham, Bowdoin's top Phi Beta Kappa, frequented during his illustrious career? No question. I've lived in a dorm, in a fraternity, in a hovel, and in all those instances, I've studied in my room. So I guess we'll have to rank John Cunningham's room a four.

Winter travel

Russian tourists to tour

by JAN CROSSY

Have you ever wanted to travel abroad, yet have been reluctant to go for fear of language barriers or the lack of the right opportunity? If so, the trip which is now being organized by the Citizens Exchange Corps of New York to the Russian Winter Fest may just be what you've been looking for.

In an interview, Professor of Russian, views this venture as "a cultural program through which students may experience and see first-hand how a country so different from ours live. The American language, is the only requirement for the trip."

Departing from New York on December 28th, the group will stop in sixteen cities throughout the Soviet Union for fifteen days, with stops at many Russian and Ukrainian cities. A variety of major historical and cultural events are included as well as a cross-country train ride to the pre-revolutionary village of Pskov. One Bowdoin student who travelled with the group last winter, Dick Gould, '80, encourages anyone who is interested in going to Russia to take advantage of the opportunity. Gould was the only one of almost half the students who studied abroad that冬天 traveled to the Land of the Soviets. Russian. Within the two-week visit, however, he acquired enough knowledge of the language to tour the cities on his own.

Gould found the interviews with Russian students and members of social clubs arranged by the Citizens Exchange Corps to be an interesting exposure to varying Russian viewpoints. Gould was particularly impressed with the differing views of an old engineer and some Russian students on the Soviet restrictions on travelling out of the state. "While the old Russian engineer was very upset with the inability of the common Russian to travel out of the country, the students noted the lack of tourists abroad, many of whom were probably athletes." A Russian student from Bowdoin also travelling with last year's group, Ed Lilli '83 feels one reason ... is that "this is who I am competing with."

From the two-week trip, Lilli felt he gained a "good feel for the people and what the whole country is like." He noted his surprise at finding that, though more constricted than Americans, these people are not as restricted as he had imagined. Lilli also commented on the Russian view of their liberation: "They don't seem to mind the restrictions. They accept it as given that they have to live within it. They don't talk about not being able to travel; they just say they can't go."

"Things are looking up for them. They've got more freedom than before, and so they don't seem to realize it's possible right now to be free, only when they see a group of us." Knox noted that the New Year's celebration is the off season for tourists and yet the height of the Russians' cultural festivities which attract a fascinating conglomeration of native Russians. Thus, this trip is ideal for observing Russian traditions, such as folk dancing, while mixing with a great diversity of Russian citizens, as well as foreign tourists in a relaxed atmosphere. The high point of the trip is the New Year's Eve celebration which, according to Knox, is the "biggest folk holiday of the year."

The celebration runs from approximately 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. It is always open to Bowdoin students, who are welcome from everywhere to take part. Each hour in a different New Year...everyone toasts each other.

Knoxi restated the excitement that a "once in a lifetime experience, well worth the time and money."

All those interested in making the trip this Christmas break should meet with Knox Monday afternoon at 4:00 in Sills Hall 8.

The music library provides an excellent source of music by which to study the violent upheaval of early 19th century Russia, or the present cease fire in Beirut. But perhaps it is best suited to studying Admiral Peary's Arctic expeditions, as the thermostat seems to compensate for any cold chill.

Math Library - for us.

So long as you don't mind the rushed tones of private conversations, the late-night rendezvous, the dining room of the Moulton Union is the best place to relax and discuss the night before an exam with other terrified students. It prevents you from doing any serious studying, isn't it too late anyway?

But which of these places is recommended for the atmosphere most conducive to serious studying by one who knows? Which of these has John Cunningham, Bowdoin's top Phi Beta Kappa, frequented during his illustrious career? No question. I've lived in a dorm, in a fraternity, in a hovel, and in all those instances, I've studied in my room. So I guess we'll have to rank John Cunningham's room a four.

Winter travel

Russian tourists to tour

by JAN CROSSY

Have you ever wanted to travel abroad, yet have been reluctant to go for fear of language barriers or the lack of the right opportunity? If so, the trip which is now being organized by the Citizens Exchange Corps of New York to the Russian Winter Fest may just be what you've been looking for.

In an interview, Professor of Russian, views this venture as "a cultural program through which students may experience and see first-hand how a country so different from ours live. The American language, is the only requirement for the trip."

Departing from New York on December 28th, the group will stop in sixteen cities throughout the Soviet Union for fifteen days, with stops at many Russian and Ukrainian cities. A variety of major historical and cultural events are included as well as a cross-country train ride to the pre-revolutionary village of Pskov. One Bowdoin student who travelled with the group last winter, Dick Gould, '80, encourages anyone who is interested in going to Russia to take advantage of the opportunity. Gould was the only one of almost half the students who studied abroad that冬天 traveled to the Land of the Soviets. Russian. Within the two-week visit, however, he acquired enough knowledge of the language to tour the cities on his own.

Gould found the interviews with Russian students and members of social clubs arranged by the Citizens Exchange Corps to be an interesting exposure to varying Russian viewpoints. Gould was particularly impressed with the differing views of an old engineer and some Russian students on the Soviet restrictions on travelling out of the state. "While the old Russian engineer was very upset with the inability of the common Russian to travel out of the country, the students noted the lack of tourists abroad, many of whom were probably athletes." A Russian student from Bowdoin also travelling with last year's group, Ed Lilli '83 feels one reason ... is that "this is who I am competing with."

From the two-week trip, Lilli felt he gained a "good feel for the people and what the whole country is like." He noted his surprise at finding that, though more constricted than Americans, these people are not as restricted as he had imagined. Lilli also commented on the Russian view of their liberation: "They don't seem to mind the restrictions. They accept it as given that they have to live within it. They don't talk about not being able to travel; they just say they can't go."

"Things are looking up for them. They've got more freedom than before, and so they don't seem to realize it's possible right now to be free, only when they see a group of us." Knoxi restated the excitement that a "once in a lifetime experience, well worth the time and money."

All those interested in making the trip this Christmas break should meet with Knox Monday afternoon at 4:00 in Sills Hall 8.

The music library provides an excellent source of music by which to study the violent upheaval of early 19th century Russia, or the present cease fire in Beirut. But perhaps it is best suited to studying Admiral Peary's Arctic expeditions, as the thermostat seems to compensate for any cold chill.

Math Library - for us.

So long as you don't mind the rushed tones of private conversations, the late-night rendezvous, the dining room of the Moulton Union is the best place to relax and discuss the night before an exam with other terrified students. It prevents you from doing any serious studying, isn't it too late anyway?

But which of these places is recommended for the atmosphere most conducive to serious studying by one who knows? Which of these has John Cunningham, Bowdoin's top Phi Beta Kappa, frequented during his illustrious career? No question. I've lived in a dorm, in a fraternity, in a hovel, and in all those instances, I've studied in my room. So I guess we'll have to rank John Cunningham's room a four.
Committee goes to bat for academic priority in sport-school conflicts

by ROBERT DeSIMONE

"What would Bromberg be without touchdowns, fast drives, slap shots, and home runs? For many students, athletics are a cherished release from the academic rigors of the College. Yet, with good reason, the school doesn't make a habit of pretending that its athletic team would run a fan for the money or that its basketball team would stand a prayer against UCLA. Nonetheless, there prevails at our particularly small college a controversy over how much emphasis should be placed on sports. Most recently, a group of faculty members expressed concern about the impact of athletic events on course attendance. In an effort to alleviate some of the problems, the Student-Faculty Athletic Committee spent part of the fall examining the sports program at Bowdoin.

Bromberg, a member of the committee, tried to pinpoint the problem. "We are concerned about repeated conflicts between athletics and course meetings, particularly labs. Travel requirements often mean that students have to leave early." As a result, Bromberg explained, there are continuing cases where students miss class three weeks in a row because of their work schedule.

The attitude of certain athletes, often more than anything else, has annoyed some faculty members. Repeatedly, students have shown up after the last minute to explain abseises from class if they have to be in at all. Dan Nyhus, Chairman of the Committee, stressed to sports participants that their "first responsibility is in the classroom even if the obligations they have may mean not participating in an athletic event."

The Athletic Committee wishes to "minimize conflicts where they exist and make it clear where the responsibilities lie," according to Bromberg. The Committee will soon recommend that the Athletic Department make more of an effort to avoid midweek travel. The Committee will also suggest that athletes consult with professors early in the semester so that there is no question about what is expected from them.

Some members of the academic community, however, take a harsher approach to the problem. Professor Dan Levine of the History Department feels that athletic scheduling "is of wider concern."

Levine has asked that there be no athletic contests "so that participation will mean that a student will have to be absent from college between 8:00 and 8:00 on Monday through Thursday and 8:00 and noon on Friday." His motion has passed on to the Committee on Curriculum and Educational Policy for review.

According to Dan Nyhus, CEP has had a brief introductory discussion on sports scheduling and has "asked the Athletic Department to prepare a schedule of conflicts." No doubt, CEP will thoroughly examine all possible options over the next several months before it makes a recommendation to the Faculty.

E-Board plans research to examine faculty hiring

by BETSY WHEELER

With no pressing problems at hand, Executive members were in high spirits at this week's meeting. They broke into a homeland chorus of "Tigerlilies" March after being called to order.

Paul Carlson reported to the Board from the Curriculum and Educational Policy Committee (CEP). He said that President Enteman, "dealing with what he would like to do, rather than what exists now," wanted to know which departments need to expand their faculties.

Carlson emphasized that the governing Board will probably not approve the hiring of new professors for some time. The committee, he said, merely wished to have a record of student preferences.

Carlson brought up areas of study taught by just one or two professors, which often come near to being eliminated from the curriculum. "Departments like Education could become extinct in the next few years," he said.

He explained that the committee uses the mathematical ratio of faculty members to majors within a department, but takes other things into account. For example, the English department has a large faculty for few students, but claims that English courses must be small to retain quality.

Carlson said that the committee would study the importance of course size in many departments.

Several Board members spoke about problems with the hiring and tenure of faculty members. Robert Reardon, March 79, said he and other students were working on getting tenure for Professor John Walter, director of the Afro-American Studies. Basil Zimrin added that someone should look into the hiring of black faculty members.

Terry Roberts, reporting on student study away from Bowdoin, said that the Recording Committee had voted to be cautious in giving full credit for coursework taken at other colleges. A visitor said that his time away had been beneficial socially and had helped him to see his major in another light. "I don't think my academics suffered that much," he added.

Roberts said that perhaps the Recording Committee was overlooking the social and emotional value in spending a year away from Bowdoin even to a slightly inferior college. She said that the Recording Committee wanted to keep people here, for the junior year partly so that their money kept coming to Bowdoin.

The Board discussed a new charter sent to them, with tongue in cheek, by the Bowdoin Sun. They found it amusing, but decided to ask for a more businesslike document. "I admit it's funny," said Amy Homans '81, "but I'm looking for something that shows the intent of the paper, and a responsible attitude."

Kevin McCallery '79 replied that the intent of the Sun is to be "a loosely-run newspaper," which was reflected in the humor of the charter. He said the Sun had looked up to expectations in the past and hoped to continue in the future. McCallery urged the Board to vote on it.
Flicks

Woody’s ‘Interiors’ shines

by ALEX STEVENSON

The history of visual art, as every student of the subject knows, the story of a constant presence for precedence between form and content, Woody Allen’s newest film, _Interiors_, now playing at Cinema City in Westbrook, enters the foray on the side of form, but one would be hard-pressed to call this work of little substance.

Popular expectation may be uncertain, and with reason, when a director (Allen) whose previous efforts have been comic preoccupies in a film made to have a serious subject, but I am perhaps fortunate to have seen only two of Allen’s previous movies. In the opinion of an Allen viewer of such unadulterated innocence as myself, one seeing Interiors for the first time may hold his breath the whole way through, but it is done more in wonder at the strangeness of the world than Allen has created than because one is waiting for the colorless punchline at the end.

A large portion of the movie’s eight persons cast at one point in the film declares that “the creative act is too varied.” Interiors is a finely-tuned, nearly perfectly balanced creative act, and it is perhaps this last that accounts for the sense of waiting which pervades the film, one’s unconscious waiting for something which will destroy the delicacy of the beautiful structure slowly erected throughout.

The arena in which Interiors takes place is indeed, except for only three scenes that I can recall, interior. These settings are almost uniformly clear, cool modern, sparsely but impeccably furnished rooms colored with the soft, subtle shades and tones most akin to those found in nature, but controlled and scaled in to totally unnatural fashion. The physical environment is metaphorically a confining milieu. The mental space can suffice as well, and does.

Thus attractive decorating, though competent, is by no means Interiors’ whole story. Where a less ambitious director might have been content to create a Bergmanesque collage of fashionably dressed, vaguely troubled relatives, Allen has gone further. Stripped of its tidy physical appearances, Interiors is neither neat nor outstandingly original, although impressions of hushed, rational voices and their own charm seem somehow to supercede one’s memories of the prevailing quirkiness and conventional plot.

Just as in the original story (Continued on Page 6)

CANTERBURY

Special Sale

Poly Gabardine Pants

Sizes 5-13

Reg. $20 Value

12.99

— Co-ordinate with Great Fashion Sweaters from our Sweater Boutique

The Canterbury Shop

Cook's Corner & Downtown

Paper, parties and special frat making Hyde Hall where it’s at

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

"Decadence and frizzy hair" are two of the elements which play key roles in making Hyde Hall a unique experience in dorm living. (Continued on Page 9)

BRUNSWICK BARBER SHOP

Ben and Wally’s

Simpson’s Parking Lot

125 Maine St.

Orientation week receives a strong vote of confidence

These responses are only single percentage points away from last year’s results. The answers to the counselors’ proposal is therefore a topic open for thought.

Almost 95% of the respondents answered that the seven-day rotational excitement is still somewhat helpful for the evaluation of fraternities. That percentage betters last year’s results by almost two percentage points. The greatest opposition to the eating plan is perhaps explained by an easily large amount of participation. About 40% answered that they ate at five or six fraternities during rush week and 79.39% went to five or six about five times. Once again, these figures are a few points higher than last year’s percentages.

After their frantic immersion in fraternity life, many freshmen understandably expressed difficulty in deciding to join a fraternity. Over 58% answered that the decision was somewhat or very difficult. The remaining 42% replied that it was not difficult at all.

Although there seemed to be many complaints about having rush so early in the school year, the people who enjoyed having rush at the beginning of the semester outnumbered those who did not by an almost 5:2 margin. This almost 3:2 margin also appears between those who believed that rush did not at all interfere with academic orientation and those who said it interfered. Both groups cited either somewhat or a great deal. The first question regarding the time placement was the most common 50% of responses. However, 75% answered that rush did not interfere at all. But year’s rushes were six nights long.

Concerning academic orientation, an overwhelming majority answered that the program did supply them with "needed or desired information." The faculty advisor commented that it was either somewhat informative or somewhat informative to 75% of those polled but provided only the social aspect of the "Giffin information" ranking only behind the upperclassman. Fraternity provides the third largest information pool.

Almost 100% said that their amount of leisure time was just right. Almost 60% said that they would have voted it somewhat different. Overall, most believed that the amount of time allotted to organized activities was just right.

Finally, they answered questions about drinking. One out of every four drank three times a week, one out of every four drank three times a week, one out of every four drank two times a week, and one out of every four drank three times a week. Almost 75% claimed that they drank more than they really wanted and close to 50% never got drunk. Only 8.4% got drunk every single day.

Dean of Students Wendy Pater, commenting on the poll, explained that, “We’d be fools to think that we do have the ideal orientation program. This poll is an effort to improve it.”

“There’s nothing much particular to change here for next year,” she said. “We’ll look at the poll now and work to improve the future alterations of the orientation program.”

As previously mentioned, only two questions on this year’s poll – one concerning the addition of the Senior Center to the list of additional services having rush week during the first week of school. One question not included that may be of even greater importance to the results is, "Do you think you made a good choice?"

Dave DeBoer, student head of BOPO, explained that, “It could have been better, but it’s not bad. We had many comments and some of the other responses to find out exactly what elements respond to joining a fraternity. That’s the only important question that they overlooked.”

MAKE YOUR RESERVATIONS TODAY!!

BOWDOIN ORIENT PAGE FIVE
Allen's latest film replaces subtle wit with charm. (Continued from Page 4)

(Please refer to the previous page for the context of Allen's latest film.)

EXECUTIVE BOARD SANCTIONS MEETING

(Continued from Page 1)

for the Board's apparent "change of heart" between the two meetings. According to Zirinis, several Board members felt that the proposal had been "pushed through" by the administrator without sufficient discussion. Zirinis partially attributed the lack of serious questioning of the proposal to the possibly tense situation caused by the racial nature of the issue.

On October 16, Amy Humans, vice chair of the Board, made the initial motion to rescind after reading a statement calling for a forum, instead of a "town meeting" on the matter. Humans based her motion to rescind on the following grounds: "A forum or debate would encourage student discussion. It would have killed the issue (Walker's proposal) to bring it up in a 'town meeting.' You need at least one issue to get a necessary quorum." Humans' rescission movement failed.

Following the first rescission motion, it became apparent that no one was familiar with the administration's hiring policies. Walker was asked to head a fact-finding committee and refused. These considerations prompted a second vote for rescission, which once again failed to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority.

A third motion to rescind was made in which Zirinis used his prerogative as the meeting's chair to vote in "pivotal" situations. With Zirinis' vote the necessary two-thirds majority for rescission was obtained. The final vote was ten for rescission and four against.

Common concerns voiced by Board members concerning Walker's proposal were differing views of the "town meeting" as a form of student government, lack of knowledge of the administration's hiring policies, purposiveness of the proposal itself, and Walker's refusal to head a fact-finding committee.

Thomas George, '80, also a Board member, voiced a prevalent Board opinion: "The Board is not against this issue, we just want facts. In a 'town meeting' we want to look like we know what we're talking about. Zirinis supported George's view: "It (Walker's Proposal) could hurt the Executive Board by having a 'town meeting' on an issue that had never existed previously."

Zirinis feels that Walker's purposes would have been better served by "using the prestige of the Executive Board to get the message to the administration. A 'town meeting' is the ultimate. We should have had a committee to investigate hiring practices. The Board would have acted im- meditely."

Walker attributes much of the reason for the rescission of his proposal to his different conception of the "town meeting" as a form of student government. Responding to the Executive Board's apprehensions that his proposal would fail to raise the necessary quorum, Walker stated: "It's really a sorry state of affairs that the Executive Board and I have such a low opinion of the student body."

Sunday night at 6:00 in Adams Hall, the Department of Religion presents "The Long Search: There is No God but You." Homan is uncertain. Whether the events of the past few weeks will spawn a revamping of the Honor Code is unresolved.

"Only one thing is clear," an increased student remarked. "We are not asking the perpetrator to lament what he or she did. All we ask for is the anonymous return of what is rightfully ours."

Till 7:00 and 9:30, the Bowdoin Film Society presents "Day For Night." The movie will be shown in Kresge Auditorium and admission is free with a Bowdoin ID.

NEW RELEASE SPECIAL

Joan Armatrading

TO THE LIMIT $5.59

Back In Stock

Discwasher — $12.50

Manassas, Ltd

212 Upper Maine St.

Maine's record resource

King's Barber Shop

Town Hall Place

Tel. 725-6587

Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop

Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

CHAMOIS SHIRTS

For Guys & Gals

On or Off Campus,
They're Always Popular...

7 Colors
To Choose From

Woolrich Chamois Shirt

$16.98

Sport King Brand

$11.98

"Quality Clothing at Moderate Prices"

Come and Meet

ROBIN MACKINLEY

of Brunswick (Bowdoin '75)

She Will Be Signing Copies of Her New Book

BEAUTY

At...

Moulton Union

Book Store

BOWDOIN COLLEGE — MON., OCT. 30, 2:30 P.M. — EVERYONE WELCOME! —

STOWE TRAVEL

Visit or Phone 725-5573

9 Pleasant Street

Downtown Brunswick

“Open Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for Air Reservations and Tickets”

BARBARA BEARDON and Sue LOWE are shown above at Stowe Travel, 9 Pleasant St., discussing the many details of Christmas flights for Bowdoin undergraduates. Remember that Stowe Travel can save you money every day with Super Saver Fares. You can get big savings on round-trip flights. There are 7-day or 30-day packages and other qualifications. But the number of low-fare seats is limited.

See Barbara or Sue or one of the several other travel consultants at Stowe for full details on these low fares and flight reservations. Remember, however, whether you are flying home one way or round trip, get your reservations NOW, as flights to everywhere are filling quickly.

Remember that if air fares quoted you at Stowe, are the very same prices as at the airport ticket counter. And all of Stowe's services are free — No obligation, and no service charge! So where do you go, you can count on Stowe to give you the best value for your dollar. All of Stowe's personnel have been schooled and trained, and know and understand all the standards you expect!
Netters head for tourney with improved 7-3 record
by BILL STUART

After avenging two of the three defeats it has sustained this season during this past week, the women's tennis team is prepared to enter the State tournament at Colby with both momentum and regained confidence. The two home matches saw the Polar Bears trip Colby, 4-3, on Tuesday and the University of Maine at Orono by the same score a day later.

"We were really up for them," explained captain Meg McLean in assessing the victory over Colby. In the match, freshmen Kathy Lang and Dusty D'Orrio both won their singles matches. Colby earned its third points by capturing the other three singles matches. The doubles team of Eileen Pyne and Nina Williams knocked the score at three points apiece, and the second doubles team of Anne Devine and Anne Feeney won to complete the comeback from behind victory.

On Wednesday, the Polar Bears avenged a 6-1 thrashing handed to them earlier in the season by UM-O. McLean, Lang, and D'Orrio all won their singles matches for the hosts. The Pyne-McLean team defeated Dirt in first doubles, but the Devine-Feeney team came through again to boost the Bears' record to 7-3.

The most disappointed Bowdoin performer on Wednesday had to be junior exchange student Christine Chandler. Playing second singles, she lost two sets by identical 7-6 scores. Both sets were tied at 6-6, and both breakers went to the final point, ending 6-7 in favor of Chandler's opponent both times.

"We have pretty high spirits now," captain McLean emphasized. "Everyone is pretty supportive of each other on the team, which really makes a difference. It makes the game more fun."

The State tournament takes place today and tomorrow in Waterville. Bowdoin was allowed to enter two singles players and two doubles teams.

Gridders carry momentum into Wesleyan game

(Continued from Page 8)

The Ephs lined up for the extra point, but holder Connelly threw a pass that was tipped by kicker Hollingsworth. Bowdoin cornerback Chris O'Connell nailed Hollingsworth for the three-yard loss on the attempted two-point conversion, thus snapping the Polar Bears biggest defensive play of the season.

The Bears tried to make it three in a row at Middlebury last Saturday, but the hosts came from behind twice to earn a four-point triumph. "We were able to break some long plays," commented Lentz, referring to Tom Scilla's 46-yard touchdown run and Rip Kinker's 60-yard touchdown pass to Hopkins, "and that's certainly encouraging. We want to be more explosive, but our problem is sustained drives. We have not been able to sustain drives all season. We have run short errors and sometimes due to defensive moves. In this game, we had poor field position in the third quarter (when the Bowdoin offense couldn't get first down and gained a total of minus 6 yards), which limited our play selection. Also, our defense could not control their offense. They were able to drive with the ball and were able to run off more plays."

Although the Bears outgained the Ephs on the offensive end in the third straight week against Middlebury, the pieces have not fit into place completely yet for the team as a whole. "With a good defensive game, we would have won Saturday," echoed 11-1

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students $10/Discount on all items in front store. Cards and Gifts

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine street
Telephone 725-4331
Brunswick, Maine 04011

The Best Names in Squash and Racquetball Equipment Including Bancroft, Slazenger, Grey's, Ektelon, Leach and Voit.

Gander's Restaurant and Bar
Saturday 12-6 — Monday 11-8
Tuesday 11-11 — Wednesday 11-4
Thursday 11-1 — Friday 11-1
Saturday 11-12
22 Main St., Topsham
729-9443
Parking on Winter St.

Featuring

The Best Sub Sandwich in the State
SUNDAY DOUBLEHEADER SPECIAL
HAPPY HOUR PRICES!
from 12 Noon until the last play of the day
HAPPY HOUR Mon. thru Fri. 4-6

WEDNESDAY LADIES NIGHT SPECIAL PRICES
EACH LADY — COLLEGE NIGHT
HAPPY HOUR PRICES all night!
Maine State or Bowdoin ID. Required.

Authentic Jefferson Cup.

From the Staff —

LPS...

everything in the catalog... on sale NOW at Macbeans

Regular price: $3.98 per disc

SALE PRICE . . . . $2.49 per disc

Macbeans Books & Music
134 Maine St., Brunswick, Maine 04011

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

FRI., OCT. 27, 1978

PAGE SEVEN

Defense brilliant but lack of punch plagues booters
by NED HORTON

In nine games, the men's soccer team has netted 16 goals, including two shutouts and four one-goal games. Unfortunately, the Bears have only been able to net seven goals of their own, and have gone scoreless five times. Thus their record stands at a disappointing 3-3-1, with only two games remaining.

"The Bears are on a four-game losing streak, having scored only one goal in the last two weeks. 'We've been having an obvious problem scoring," coach Hopkins emphasized. Bates, Williams, and Babson all defeated the Bears by the identical score of 1-0, while Colby was victorious by a 3-1 margin.

The Williams Ephs scored their victory in a hard-fought battle before a rain-soaked Parent's Day crowd. Both teams had ample opportunities to score, as the momentum switched hands often.

It was the Ephmen, however, who were able to capitalize, as they scored with two minutes remaining in the game. Williams forward Greg Hartman broke through on a partial breakaway and pushed the ball past the lone Bowdoin defender for the win. Despite the Bears' breaking loss, the Bears turned in one of their finest performances of the year.

The Bears didn't fare as well against Colby. Although the game was played at Pickard Field, Colby had the advantage in support as they brought along a good-sized crowd while mostly of the Bowdoin student body had gone home for break. The Bears were at a loss

Anna King '82 scored Bowdoin's lone goal in their 2-1 loss to Harvard. Orient/Biggs without the home crowd advantage, while the charged-up Mules earned themselves the CBH title with their 3-1 triumph.

Colby scored first, but Bowdoin freshman Kwame Poku knotted the score on a pass from Mike Collins to make it 1-1 at the half. The Mules came back for two in the second half, while the Bears were unable to respond. Colby's hard-hitting style seemed to upset Bowdoin's attempts at a control game. "We were simply out-hustled," Coach Butt recalled. "Colby wanted to be CBH champs very badly." Freshman Keith Brown turned in a solid performance with eleven saves, but the Bowdoin defense was less than perfect in allowing a season-high three goals.

The Bears defenders were back on track in Babson, however, as they turned back 26 shots on net. Kevin Kennedy made eight saves for Bowdoin, allowing only one ball to slip by him. That one ball was the deciding factor, unfortunately, scored with four seconds remaining in the first overtime.
Footballers score major upset, then suffer disappointing setback

by BILL STUART

Every Saturday, the Bowdoin football team enters either its "most crucial game of the season," or something so far. Tomorrow will be no exception for the Polar Bears, as they host powerful Wesleyan Cardinals at 1:30 at Whitier Field. The Bears have rebounded from a slow start, have won two of their last three contests, including a 14-13 thriller over Williams on Parents' Day. The loss was suffered at Middlebury last week, 29-19.

The upset of Williams, ranked eighth in the nation coming into the game, ranks as one of Bowdoin's most exciting games in recent memory. "I think the circumstances, we played as good a game as we've seen played here," commented Jim Lahmagni, 14-13 victory over Orono. "It was a good experience for everyone."

Spencer recap The bulk of the offensive load was carried by senior backfield Trip Spencer, who gained 123 yards on 18 carries. Tom Scicluna had gained over 150 yards the previous week," explained Lahmagni, and since we both played on the offensive line, we felt we had a little more consistency. In fact, they actually scored a touchdown on the opening drive of the game, the Bears got on the board first, and then led 14-0 at the half.

Offensive woes characterize dismal field hockey season

by GEOFF WORELL

The field hockey team finished its season with two losses, a 3-0 record, and a year to look forward to. It was a rebuilding year, and in that regard, the team's performance was a disappointment. The bright spots of the season may include the return of two seniors, and the development of young talent.

"I'm really optimistic about next year," said Coach Sally LaPointe. "We have a young team this year."

The season started well as the Bears, ranked as the season started well as the Bears, ranked as the number one team in the nation. However, a 3-0 defeat by Wesleyan at the hands of the defending National Champions, marked the end of the season for Bowdoin.

Season of thrills

by BILL STUART

If one were asked to label this fall's sports season here at Bowdoin, the response would probably include the phrases "unpredictably exciting" and "developing for a bright future."

The football team, which looked so bad early in the season, has suddenly rebounded with three solid games in a row. Now, talk of a .500 or better season is being heard. The soccer squad, labeled an also-ran at the start of its season, won two of its first three games and tied the other. The team started the season with a 3-0 victory over Bowdoin, and then led 14-0 at the half. The Bears got on the board first, and then led 14-0 at the half. The Bears got on the board first, and then led 14-0 at the half.

The Bears defeated the Jumbos 1-0 in a heartbreak ending to its first varsity season. Coupled with the 3-1 victory over Tufts on Parents' Weekend, the team finished 3-0 overall.

Harvard booted women's hopes

by MARY MOSELEY

Picture this situation: halftime at the women's soccer game, Bowdoin leading previously undefeated Harvard 1-0 on an unassisted Anna King score. Goalie Tshi Shen had stopped everything Harvard could shoot at her, including a penalty kick. If only they had cancelled the second half...

Bowdoin went on to lose 2-1 in a heartbreaking ending to its first varsity season. Coupled with the 3-1 victory over Tufts on Parents' Weekend, the team finished 4-3 overall.

Arrived at Harvard with Field Points with visions of revenge after last year's surprise 4-3 upset by the P-Bears. Earlier in the season, Harvard defeated Brown University, which had proven to be Bowdoin's toughest competition by defeating the Bears 4-1. This may have made the players a bit apprehensive, nevertheless they were playing a good match.

Bears roar early

That is exactly what they got in the first half as they played Harvard to a 2-1 lead, 1-0 advantage when the Jumbos scored their lone goal. However, the game did not go as planned, the Bears were beaten by the Jumbos in the end. The Jumbos scored the winning goal in the second half, and the Bears were unable to respond.

Tina Shen had her hardest workout of the year, recording 15 saves, including the important penalty shot. Tufts handled this game well, and the score remained 2-1 at the half.

Early in the second half, Harvard pounded the lead when Mary Luiggi broke a hard shot on goal that rebounded off the goalie to客厅, who sent it into the net. Halfway through the period, the Jumbos scored their lone goal to come temporarily within reach, but the third goal by the Bears' goalie was hard to beat. The first goal was almost a fluke. The Tufts' defense deflected the ball to its own endline, where it rolled slowly, directly on the line, toward the goal. For a moment nearly everyone thought it was out of bounds, but the Bowdoin players reacted first. The whole field pounced on it, and it was finally directed into the goal off Julie Spurr's foot.

The Williams defense stops Jeff Hopkins, but not before the wingback gained 31 yards on a reverse play. Orient/Yong

Postgame Scripts

Season of thrills

by BILL STUART

If one were asked to label this fall's sports season here at Bowdoin, the response would probably include the phrases "unpredictably exciting" and "developing for a bright future."

The football team, which looked so bad early in the season, has suddenly rebounded with three solid games in a row. Now, talk of a .500 or better season is being heard. The soccer squad, labeled an also-ran at the start of its season, won two of its first three games and tied the other. The team started the season with a 3-0 victory over Bowdoin, and then led 14-0 at the half. The Bears got on the board first, and then led 14-0 at the half.

The Bears defeated the Jumbos 1-0 in a heartbreak ending to its first varsity season. Coupled with the 3-1 victory over Tufts on Parents' Weekend, the team finished 4-3 overall.

Arrived at Harvard with Field Points with visions of revenge after last year's surprise 4-3 upset by the P-Bears. Earlier in the season, Harvard defeated Brown University, which had proven to be Bowdoin's toughest competition by defeating the Bears 4-1. This may have made the players a bit apprehensive, nevertheless they were playing a good match.

Bears roar early

That is exactly what they got in the first half as they played Harvard to a 2-1 lead, 1-0 advantage when the Jumbos scored their lone goal. However, the game did not go as planned, the Bears were beaten by the Jumbos in the end. The Jumbos scored the winning goal in the second half, and the Bears were unable to respond.

Tina Shen had her hardest workout of the year, recording 15 saves, including the important penalty shot. Tufts handled this game well, and the score remained 2-1 at the half.

Early in the second half, Harvard pounded the lead when Mary Luiggi broke a hard shot on goal that rebounded off the goalie to客厅, who sent it into the net. Halfway through the period, the Jumbos scored their lone goal to come temporarily within reach, but the third goal by the Bears' goalie was hard to beat. The first goal was almost a fluke. The Tufts' defense deflected the ball to its own endline, where it rolled slowly, directly on the line, toward the goal. For a moment nearly everyone thought it was out of bounds, but the Bowdoin players reacted first. The whole field pounced on it, and it was finally directed into the goal off Julie Spurr's foot.

The Williams defense stops Jeff Hopkins, but not before the wingback gained 31 yards on a reverse play. Orient/Yong

Postgame Scripts

Season of thrills

by BILL STUART

If one were asked to label this fall's sports season here at Bowdoin, the response would probably include the phrases "unpredictably exciting" and "developing for a bright future."

The football team, which looked so bad early in the season, has suddenly rebounded with three solid games in a row. Now, talk of a .500 or better season is being heard. The soccer squad, labeled an also-ran at the start of its season, won two of its first three games and tied the other. The team started the season with a 3-0 victory over Bowdoin, and then led 14-0 at the half. The Bears got on the board first, and then led 14-0 at the half.

The Bears defeated the Jumbos 1-0 in a heartbreak ending to its first varsity season. Coupled with the 3-1 victory over Tufts on Parents' Weekend, the team finished 4-3 overall.

Arrived at Harvard with Field Points with visions of revenge after last year's surprise 4-3 upset by the P-Bears. Earlier in the season, Harvard defeated Brown University, which had proven to be Bowdoin's toughest competition by defeating the Bears 4-1. This may have made the players a bit apprehensive, nevertheless they were playing a good match.

Bears roar early

That is exactly what they got in the first half as they played Harvard to a 2-1 lead, 1-0 advantage when the Jumbos scored their lone goal. However, the game did not go as planned, the Bears were beaten by the Jumbos in the end. The Jumbos scored the winning goal in the second half, and the Bears were unable to respond.

Tina Shen had her hardest workout of the year, recording 15 saves, including the important penalty shot. Tufts handled this game well, and the score remained 2-1 at the half.

Early in the second half, Harvard pounded the lead when Mary Luiggi broke a hard shot on goal that rebounded off the goalie to客厅, who sent it into the net. Halfway through the period, the Jumbos scored their lone goal to come temporarily within reach, but the third goal by the Bears' goalie was hard to beat. The first goal was almost a fluke. The Tufts' defense deflected the ball to its own endline, where it rolled slowly, directly on the line, toward the goal. For a moment nearly everyone thought it was out of bounds, but the Bowdoin players reacted first. The whole field pounced on it, and it was finally directed into the goal off Julie Spurr's foot.

The Williams defense stops Jeff Hopkins, but not before the wingback gained 31 yards on a reverse play. Orient/Yong
President Enteman outlines controversial tenure reform

Pres spells out rationale behind alternative plan

by MICHAEL TARDIFF

Citing the College's "obligation to face the issue as squarely and honestly as we can," President William Enteman last week proposed a number of procedural changes in the tenure-granting system as well as a limit on the number of tenured positions available at Bowdoin.

In a memo dated October 23rd which was sent to all faculty members, the President recommended that the College impose limitations on how many tenured positions were available in each department. The memo also outlined a modified tenure-review procedure, involving the senior (i.e., tenured) faculty to a greater extent than is now the case.

Enteman had told that faculty at their September meeting of this year that he intended to circulate a memo outlining his opinions on the touchy question of tenure, in the hope that it would initiate and stimulate a discussion and (Continued on Page 8)

Execs alter course for third time cancel meeting due to lack of info

by ANDY SCHILLING

"We're not decisive," said Chairman of the Executive Board, Basil Ziprin '80. "Each time the Board voted there was a different situation."

Last Tuesday, the Board voted to cancel the November 9th "town meeting" which had been scheduled at a special session held late last week. It was the third time the Board had changed its position on the issue since the meeting was first proposed last October 11th.

Ziprin stated that at the first meeting this issue was voted on too hastily. There wasn't enough chance for discussion and not enough information available to the Board. At the next meeting, the petition for a campus-wide forum was rescinded and a committee was formed to investigate the College practices concerning the hiring and tenuring of minority faculty members.

Apparentiy, some students feel that there aren't enough minority members on the faculty. Jung-ahn Wu '80 noted, "President Enteman wants guidelines and limits on tenure in each department. This would automatically restrict minority faculty tenure."

Earlier last week a new proposal on the same subject surfaced, one which resulted in the Thursday night emergency session. At this session the Board decided to gather student opinion on the new proposal at a "town meeting."

During the most recent meeting, held last Tuesday night, more information was furnished to the Board. They learned that the administration is now moving in the same direction as the Board concerning minority hiring practices.

In their September meeting a year ago, the faculty adopted a resolution calling for an institutional "rededication to a strenuous search for qualified black teachers."

Woo moved that the decision to hold a "town meeting" be rescinded again until the Board could obtain more information. Amy Roman '81, vice-chair of the Board, commented, "We have to get together and get an authority to talk to the Board. This is not the right to rescind because we're not ready yet."

After discussion it was agreed that Jean Paul Nyhus and Alfred Fuchs along with history department chairman Dan Levine would be invited to an open Board meeting next Tuesday for an informational briefing. It was suggested that the meeting would be a forum for student opinion also.

(Continued on Page 3)

Junior faculty assail concept, fear blackballing may ensue

by DAVID M. STONE

President Enteman's tenure proposals were hardly greeted with unanimous acclaim by the faculty. While some senior members believe them to be "thoughtful and refreshing," the proposals have sent the junior and women faculty of the College scurrying to draft opposing opinions.

Dean of the Faculty Alfred Fuchs downplayed the "veto concept," whereby any senior member of the faculty should veto a tenure appointment stemming that what was proposed was "not a simple blackball procedure." He stressed that the proposed system would not allow any senior faculty member to deny another tenure. The President and the Dean of the Faculty could, upon review of the grounds of a rejection, could overrule them as insufficient for denying tenure.

With regard to the quota system proposed by the President to limit the number of tenured faculty in each department, Fuchs admits their rigidity could be a problem. "But it's much easier to have a policy and recognize when you make exceptions than to have no policy at all." He asserted that this policy would not be too different from the way the College now operates.

Assistant Professor Peter Gottschalk however, said the proposal resembles a "blackball system" in which there is "little sense of due process for junior faculty members." The present protections afforded the junior faculty in the tenure process are, he believes, greater than those proposed.

"What bothers me most about the concept of tenure is that this institution, which prizes academic freedom so highly for its senior faculty, doesn't guarantee the same freedom to junior faculty," he stressed.

"At this point it's not a junior versus senior faculty issue. The senior members I have talked to are quite sensitive to our concerns."

Concern grows over seven-day NESAC rule

by ROBERT DESIMONE

Dayton Arena exploded last year when the hockey team defeated Merrimack 3-0 to become the ECAC East Division II champs. Due to the new New England Small College Athletic Conference's (NESAC's) guideline, the champs were prevented from engaging in any further post-season activities. The conference was still the same Merrimack team that succumbed to Bowdoin later demolition in Lak. Forest College to become National Division II champs.

Amherst, Bates, Bowdoin, Colby, Hamilton, Middlebury, Trinity, Tufts, Union, Wesleyan, and Williams are all members of NESAC. Founded in 1971, the Conference sets policy for athletic eligibility, scheduling, practice regulation, post-season competition, recruiting activity, and financial aid awards. In principle, NESAC assures that intercollegiate athletic activities are "kept in harmony with the essential educational purposes of the institution."

NESAC rulings disallow tournaments which "extend the season more than 5 days beyond the Saturday of the final week of scheduled competition." Last year's National Division II hockey tournament as well as other sports tournaments fit into this category. But the 7-day ruling is not all-encompassing. "Post-season competition for individual participants is still allowed," said Pres.

(Continued on Page 8)
Going mobile

Swit drives away new car

by LEE FARROW

"It was a nice little windfall," exclaimed Mike Swit '79, winner of the traditional Senior Class raffle. A nice little windfall indeed, considering that the winner's tickets cost a total of $1,290 sold him a brand-new car.

"I wouldn't have been able to afford an automobile. I live in Washington, D.C. and it will be nice to have a car," said Swit, who also wants to go around and do a little hiking. "I'm not absolutely sure yet what kind of a car I'll buy. If I sell it, I would be able to pay for law school. But it is a brand new car with the full investment value — I'll probably keep it."

"People keep asking me for rides, but I can't give them yet. The car has no plates, insurance, or registration. Right now it's sitting in the Deke parking lot."

Ironically, Swit originally voted against the proposition for the Senior Class to have a car raffle. "I thought it didn't make money would be raised," he said.

The Senior Class car raffle made a profit of approximately $250. Although there were three senior financial_treasurer and chief organizer of the Senior Class car raffle victory, "We looked at the raffle as a challenge for two reasons: first, we couldn't afford a car, and second, because there were people who were opposed to it and said we couldn't have a raffle." "It was a pain. I didn't get much sleep doing it. But I had fun doing it. It was fun to get a college before you a group of people and see if you can do it together."

About twenty-five seniors combined their efforts to sell tickets to students, parents, and alumni. One student bought twenty-three tickets. Two initiatives encouraged the sellers: a prize of $100 for selling the most tickets and $50 for selling the winning ticket. Senior Class President Steve Rose who donated the $50 back to the class. Rose was able to vote at the Griffin School on Harrows Street. Those living off-campus were also able to vote at the Town Clerk (725-7132) to see if they voted there or at the Revolution Center on Federal Street.

The tension mounted as each raffle participant clutched their ticket stubs for fear that the senior President Emtenant could only draw one name and it was Mike Swit's. Orient/Yong

Warming up for David Bromberg, Pierce-Arrow played a tight 40-minute set. Orient/Yong

Bromberg concert draws raves, not many students

by LINCOLN IMLAY

It was a success in every way but attendance. The thousand people who attended the David Bromberg concert last Friday night at the 'Bies had nothing but good things to say about the event. The problem was the 200 empty seats.

From the very first song, Bromberg had the crowd wrapped around his finger. He captured the audience with his talented guitar and fiddle playing and charming them with his endearing personality.

Bromberg's music defies categorization, but manages to blend the urban folk stylings of a Paul Simon with the Blue Grass of Chicago's South Side and the funk of New Orleans jazz. When you combine all this with a few Irish jigs and reels you get a potpourri of musical styles that leaves the listener wondering if there is any musical idiom that David Bromberg has not mastered.

Many fans defied from guitar to mandolin to fiddle and back to guitar again, Bromberg led his band through such Bromberg classics as "Ramblin' in a Rainin' Soul," "Jail with a Golden Head," and "Will Not Be Your Fool."

Bromberg's ability to arrange traditional music with contemporary innovation was upheld by his upbeat version of "Travelin' Man." This Pink Anderson song was "Bromberged" in classical fashion with Bromberg actually stopping in the middle to give his "rap." "Folks, I mean to tell ya this guy Bloom was so fast that he could turn the light off in his bedroom and jump into bed and get under the covers before it got dark!" It is this sort of embellishment of traditional material which makes Bromberg a master of old. His art of musical interpretation.

Before the show Bromberg sighted her early customers who were as diverse as the music he now plays. "I suppose if I had to name the two I would have to include R.B. King, Django and the Coasters. Of course I've always loved Duke Ellington," he said.

When asked what contemporary music he liked to listen to, Bromberg mentioned Little Feat and Bonnie Raitt. "I've never had an opportunity to record with Bonnie but I play together of- tents."

Bromberg also mentioned that he played with Norman Blake and Doc and Merle Watson at every opportunity. Opening for Bromberg was Pierce Arrow, a rock and roll band that has caught the fancy of Columbia Records, but merely served as filler before the main event.

While the small audience did not dampen Bromberg's performance, the turnout will affect future Student Union Committee events. McCabe estimated the Committee's loss at $5,500, approximately one-third of their allocated budget for '78-'79.

While McCabe is not certain of the loss's long-range effects, he did admit that a huge spring concert is "not as probable as before."

McCabe was particularly disappointed in the fact that only 241 Bowdoin students paid their way in. McCabe attributes this poor showing to the fact that Bowdoin was afraid to try anything new. That no one gave a chance a major factor in the concert being an economic failure. Almost every known name is out of college.

McCabe doesn't plan to let the loss stop SCC from sponsoring another on-campus concert. According to McCabe, the committee plans two orances, one a disco, the other a semi-formal, with a swing band, lots of coffee houses, featuring both student and outside talent and scheduled as "How to Say 'No' to a Rapist."

Students air fret gripes before Alum Council

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Will the College and the fraternity system ever peacefully co-exist?

The majority of the frequently-heated debate at last Thursday's Alumni Council's Committee on Communication open meeting centered around concerns of fraternities. Neil Moses '80, a member of Theta Delta Chi and president of the Inter-fraternity Council, opened the meeting with the following statement: "There is talk about sexism in fraternities from the Dean's office. We really feel it is a matter that the College should not have any say. We don't think that it's the College's position to intervene. We want to preserve our autonomy."

Dean of Students Wendy Fairey, claimed Moses, recently expressed concern that the College's ten fraternities have not yet realized full equality of women in their membership practices.

Another woman at the meeting, Terry Roberts '80, expressed somewhat dissimilar views. "Of the ten (fraternities) there are only three that admit women as only social members. Coeducation evolved slowly in this College and we will do the same in the fraternities. When you tell someone that they need to go co-ed then it won't be normal. If you leave it alone then it will happen if it wants to..."

However, "the fraternities," claimed senior Steve Pollak, "are male-oriented. So you have a problem. You have a social system that is male-oriented and you have no alternative for a large percentage of the population. I don't think that attacking fraternities is necessarily the right way."

"There is a lot of confusion on the basis of sex. Some fraternities say that women can't be full members. There is a question of what develops. If you're the person being looked down on then you have to think of that, too."

The question, added another member of the group, is how to provide an alternative for those who don't feel happy in a structured environment. Ted Roberts suggested more dorm parties, more all-campus events, and the addition of one person to the administration who will "coordinate all activities. There's no one now who can do this.""Dean Fairey said that she was going to meet with the President..." said Moses, "to what will be done. It could be nothing. It could be a warning. It could be a disassociation of the fraternity from the College."

Although not as exhaustively debated, other topics were brought to the attention of the Council. An item mentioned the lack of minority representation on the teaching faculty, another mentioned the tension situation, the increased budgetary requests of the Physical Plant Department, and the desperate financial need of WBRK, the campus radio station.
Ultimate Frisbee fencers launch fledgling varsity sport of the future

by DIANE MAYER

The battle cry, "Ultimate Frisbee is the ultimate," now resounds from Hawthorne- Longfellow's, Misquamicut and Noyes halls. "The varsity sport of the future," "true team sport," "Fun!" It's proponents are the students, the enthusiasts who envision great things for Bowdoin's informal Ultimate Frisbee. If such enthusiasm is the base of the varsity team, the bowlers, the runners, the skaters, the ultimate Frisbee fans, then the students of Bowdoin have a team which can certainly be considered formidable. Ultimate Frisbee loosely resembles rugby or soccer. It is a running game, the object of which next Spring, Tracy sees chartering the club as a "token of things to make in a more tangible organization. We wouldn't need more than $50 or so for tee-shirts." Serwer, however, said he will be satisfied with the charter even if it bring no monetary benefits. "All you need is one little sheet of plastic." Toren explained that with a charter, "we could play other schools weekly if we wanted.

Ultimate Frisbee is far from a localized phenomenon. According to Terry Serwer, "The Frisbee" is a good throw, and "being able to run till you're, beat," are more important than methods of catching the Frisbee. Catching is important in "freestyle" Frisbee. "Freestyling involves delaying the kick, un-kicking it, spinning it on your fingertips," says Tracy. "It's like dance with a Frisbee." He offered to give an exhibition in Lancaster Lounge during our interview, insisting that one can maintain complete control of the Frisbee at all times.

Toren stressed that one need not be able to "freestyle" to play Ultimate. "I can't freestyle, but I can Ultimate." It's a lot of running. It's an incredible wind sport," he said.

Toren, Toren and Serwer hope to start the Bowdoin Ultimate Frisbee. Presently the membership is diverse, containing students from every class, and independents as well as fraternities. "We've got some girls to join the team,"have been unsuccessful. The girls have been impressed with the fun and with the men.

A contrarian opinion was presented by freshman Ellen Zirinis, who said, "Frisbee is a replacement for dorm, oom, dorm. We played in high school a lot. We to Toren, most colleges have official teams, and some have a multitude. Cornell University alone has over 20 teams.

This spring there will be an 18-team tournament and beyond that, the teams may be interested in the Frisbee World Championships.

Though the Bowdoin Ultimate Frisbee squad consists of only 15

Execs change mind once again

(Continued from Page 1)

In other business, the Board heard reports from its student organization committee and the Senior Center Council. The committee is reviewing charters to some inactive organizations and determining the purposes of some others. Representative was present from the College of American Society, the Outing Club, and the Student Union Council.

The Outing Club representative, Geoff Bush '79, was asked to submit a list of all Outing Club activities to the Board's calendar committee. The committee posts all activities on the calendar by the Information Desk in the Moulton Union. Bush was unable to give an accounting of Outing Club funds, the committee president, said. "What worries me is they're getting $1,500 ... are enough people using them?"

There was a lengthy discussion concerning the legality of serving alcohol at college-sponsored functions. "The administration is taking a real hard-nosed stand on it," said Board member Terry Roberts '70. It was decided that Zirinis would speak with Dean of Students Wendy Fairey about the possibility of changing the College's policy.

There was a debate on whether the Board should submit a proposal offering their ideas on what to do about the Frisbee program. The program has come under close scrutiny of late, and a decision will be made in the near future regarding the program's funding and continued existence.

Roberts recommended that the Board write a proposal and let the students decide what should be done. "It's their money. They should vote on it," she said. The Board said they would be open to any informed opinion.

Poetry a new experience: goes beyond the classroom

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

"You shouldn't have to study for it, you should be able to just experience it." In a period of life when we are pushed to the limits by a high number of subjects, probably few students would expect to be asked those words, and certainly not on campus.

When asked about the Frisbee this year, Mirror, Jones, a member of the Nocturnal Senior Center course on poetry, told Walker of an all-night poetry reading he once attended, and suggested that the event be re-staged. The result was an all-night reading of W.B. Whitman's Leaves of Grass, conducted at Walker's home at Mere Point. About 15 students came to the reading, which was interspersed with "toss of food" and dancing to fiddle music, and about 6 lived to see the sunrise.

"At the end, we went out into the absolute darkness and waited about an hour and a half until the sun came all the way up. It was great. The effect of the night and the poetic kind of flowed through the night, and the poetry became very clear.

Next came an open poetry reading in which everyone was encouraged to bring their favorite poems. Also, the readers may request for Walker's reading of A.A. Amano's "For a Friend," during the intermission of two stories and one reading, and plays earlier this year.

The next reading is scheduled for Sunday night at 8:00 in the Main Lounge of the Moulton Union. The theme will be "Four Quarters," by T.S. Eliot. Although there has been quite a bit of student interest, Walker says he would like to see even more people participate in the readings. After all, you don't have to study for it, or even understand it. Just experience it.

Sponsors urge students to see Weissman film series

by TOM GLAVE

The Frederic Weissman Film Series, sponsored by the Economics department, feels that many students will benefit from the films. "We request that the students want to refuse to support something educationally useful. A number of departments, such as Economics, and the student body to support and sponsor the films," he says.

Some students, however, express concern over attendance at the films. "If a lot of people come, I don't know how much better the film," he says. "No one seems to know that there is much to be gained from presentation of a film, so much more than is generally realized. Everyone needs to know that these films have to do with our lives." One of the series remains. Wednesday night's "High School" will be shown. The following Thursday night's film will be "Hospital." The last movie in the series, "Welfare," is scheduled for Thursday night of next week. All showings are at 7:30 in the Smith Auditorium.

In a similar vein, William Shipman, chair of the Economics department, feels that many students will benefit from the films. "People want to refuse to support something educationally useful. A number of departments, such as Economics, and the student body to support and sponsor the films," he says.

Some students, however, express concern over attendance at the films. "If a lot of people come, I don't know how much better the film," he says. "No one seems to know that there is much to be gained from presentation of a film, so much more than is generally realized. Everyone needs to know that these films have to do with our lives." One of the series remains. Wednesday night's "High School" will be shown. The following Thursday night's film will be "Hospital." The last movie in the series, "Welfare," is scheduled for Thursday night of next week. All showings are at 7:30 in the Smith Auditorium.

The Frederic Weissman Film Series, sponsored by the Economics department, feels that many students will benefit from the films. "We request that the students want to refuse to support something educationally useful. A number of departments, such as Economics, and the student body to support and sponsor the films," he says.

Some students, however, express concern over attendance at the films. "If a lot of people come, I don't know how much better the film," he says. "No one seems to know that there is much to be gained from presentation of a film, so much more than is generally realized. Everyone needs to know that these films have to do with our lives." One of the series remains. Wednesday night's "High School" will be shown. The following Thursday night's film will be "Hospital." The last movie in the series, "Welfare," is scheduled for Thursday night of next week. All showings are at 7:30 in the Smith Auditorium.
Tenure talk

On the surface, Bill Enteman's tenure proposal appears to be a radical change from the present system. On first reading, many faculty members, especially those who are tenured, have voiced strong opposition. Many of their objections are valid. But all must realize, as does President Enteman, that his document is no more than a proposal.

In our discussion with the President, we raised many of the common objections. His responses showed that each facet of the proposal has been carefully considered to attain an important end.

The so-called blackball provision, which would allow any one person along the line in the tenure review process to prevent further progress of the candidate's application, was intended to assure that every relevant consideration be explored before the College commit itself to a tenure decision which would affect the curriculum and perhaps even the enrollment for the next forty years. And not only does he envision a place for student opinion in the tenure review process, but it has been his personal experience that "very careful" student and alumni interviews have sometimes been the most important objections or recommendations of the review process.

The President's overriding concern, however, as expressed throughout the proposal, is that Bowdoin accept nothing but the best. He believes his proposal is consistent with this goal; it is a method of insuring that Bowdoin keep in touch with new ideas and fresh concepts, thereby continuing to maintain its position as a college capable of attracting the nation's top students.

It is the proper duty of a leader to propose plans of action to the members of the body he leads. President Enteman has done this; he has taken the initiative in attempting to make a workable tenure system better. He has drawn on his wide range of experiences at both Wheaton and Union in drafting the proposal. "Yet in no way is the proposal carved in stone; there remains the task of molding one man's proposals to suit the individual need of the institution."

The President has spoken his mind and the issue is open to debate. It is time for the faculty to ask questions and question answers so that the final decision will not be merely a proclamation but a consensus.

Our choice

President Carter put it best last Saturday night in Portland when he said that Bill Hathaway is "perhaps not a very good politician. He doesn't brag, he's not a flashy personality." In his fourteen years in Washington, however, Hathaway has built a reputation for his honesty, consistency and integrity, not for his votes or appeals.

In this day of demagogues politicians, Hathaway stands tall as a true statesman.

Hathaway has run his campaign on the issues. He is not afraid to say exactly where he stands. His position in favor of the Dickey-Lincoln dam will cost him dearly at the polls Tuesday. Yet despite his stand on the project, Hathaway is a strong environmentalist. In fact, he scored an "81" out of a possible "100" in a rating by the League of Conservation Voters, a higher score than that of Ed Muskie, even better known as a conservationist.

Hathaway is a champion of the working man. His campaign contributions come from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and the United Paperworkers; Representative Cohen's from Getty Oil and Atlantic Richfield, for his gifts of a "100" in a rating by the League of Conservation Voters, a higher score than that of Ed Muskie, even better known as a conservationist.

President Carter said of Hathaway, "Very seldom do we have a true champion; we have one in Bill Hathaway...he is protecting your interest, not a special interest." Senator Muskie said, "I have the best colleague of any senator." To the endorsements of Carter and Muskie, we humbly add our own.

Promises, promises

by GEORFF WORELL

"The College is not and should not be a cloister or monastic retreat from the problems of the world. Rather, the College is a collection of people deeply and passionately involved in the problems of our community, their nation, and their world. When liberal arts education is formulated on such a foundation, it encourages and trains young people who are already well versed in the problems of our time and who have the kind of mind and the kind of commitment to the exploration of them fearlessly and directly. This is its goals and the standard by which it should be judged."

"A statement prepared by the Faculty-Student Committee on Curriculum and Educational Policy, 1976."

An objective look at the education offered by Bowdoin College illuminates a void between the type of education Bowdoin says it aims to provide and the type of education Bowdoin offers. The statement above exemplifies a concern with people, yet the Bowdoin curriculum offers no courses that are relevant to the surrounding community. Any courses that involve working with people in the community or in its environs are not organized by the faculty but by the students and take the form of student projects. These projects are, if realistically considered, only feasible for juniors and seniors. Half of the student body does not have the opportunity to go into the community or work with people and to get academic credit for its accomplishment. Bowdoin parents, therefore, is failing to present its students with a liberal arts education.

A legitimate question to ask would be, "Why do students need academic credit for their work in the community?" The community, the students, and the teacher side program provide tangible outlets for that type of concern. The answer is rooted in commitment and college responsibility.

In order for any student to make a substantial commitment to a community program, he or she must sacrifice a tremendous amount of time and effort. Many students cannot afford the loss due to the rigors of the Bowdoin curriculum. The choices, for most students, come down to either participating in community projects or applying oneself to academic tasks. Any compromise between these two choices results in a compromise to one. The choice should not have to be made.

A standard argument against these types of courses is that students would take them merely for extra credit, or for some other intrinsic value. This argument has as its prerequisite the idea that community-oriented courses are "guts" courses. This is a gross misconception. Working with people is, more often than not, as hard (if not harder) than straight book learning. Associated with people is a different kind of learning experience and adapting to that experience itself disqualifies community participation courses as "guts." For the student the community courses offer an invaluable learning experience. At the same time, these courses can no longer be of being merely for credit and as other courses offered at Bowdoin.

According to its own statement of purpose, the College has a responsibility to provide community programs for academic credit. Government, sociology, education, and all departments which concern themselves with an interaction between people and, more importantly, an understanding of the interaction between people. With the exception of education, all of these fields are offered as possible majors, majors that do not include experience with people as a prerequisite.

It is evident that restructuring the courses offered at Bowdoin is essential in order for Bowdoin to be a significant institution in a liberal arts education. Books have little value if what they teach is not reinforced by an understanding of the community in which one is living. The Bowdoin cannot expect to produce people who are merely superficially involved with the community, their nation, and their world. The Bowdoin has programs offered for academic credit that help create such a commitment.
Vivid images distingush Nikolais' choreography

by CHRISTINA DOWNER

There is no doubt that the Nikolais Dance Theater performance, one seeing, and even when familiar with Alwin Nikolais' approach to dance and theatre, there is something new and unexpected. The combination of color, light, sound, and movement is a new world on which could adequately prepare someone for what happens during the hour and a half Tuesday night. A bombardment of color, light, sound, and movement is a world which could happen in any other way.

Nikolais himself, does everything for the company except dance: choreography, costume, lighting, and so on. His brilliant use of those elements that succeed in creating the environment where all aspects of a performance are of equal importance. The colorful and unusual costumes are not meant to distract the viewer but are related rather to combined each member of the world. He is the end that the Nikolais' contribution to his Dance Theater, for example, is different from other companies. He will see many different from ballet or the more traditional forms of modern dance. In the 1950's he broke away from the prevalent Freudian psycho-drama of the time and "began to create works characterized by abstract expression." Dance was never to be restricted to the kinetic form of storytelling. He made acceptable a style to昨日's imagination.

In the three pieces that were shown at the performance that were exposed to the wide variety that is available in Nikolais' work. In the first piece, "Temple" (1974), the sound was heard soon after the houselights were down and a feeling of anticipation swept over the audience. Three groups of commentaries followed each other as to make a pyramid in brightly colored costumes, that looked like psychedelic long underwear, were all facing the theater, and it was possible to get the feeling that one was watching a three ring circus because there was so much happening at once with many more than one focal point. This piece dealt with instead patterns, and all the features of the theater were working towards that end. The place in front of two huge, geometrically patterned circles filled the audience. Some of the accents were done by the audience, and in a very different manner, Bergmann didn't really matter. The direct copies of Cristina and Wippers are OK, because probably most of our audience never heard of Bergmann. Please call my secretary with your reactions as soon as possible. Who, anyway, is Edward Levine?

Media/Mass., Inc.
New York, Los Angeles

Ed note: Bowdoin college Professor of History Dan Levine has been kind enough to send The Orient a copy of a letter written to Woody Allen, rare of United Artists regarding Allen's latest John, Internes.

Raffle

To the Editor:

In 1975, I discovered notes for the early manuscripts of John Dryden's "A" which demonstrate that his undergraduate experience here profoundly influenced his early dramatic abilities. The literary establishment is now ready to accept my conclusions, and I wish to record the excitement of the moment with you.

The major breakthrough came when I searched the private papers of a James Zimrii Buchanan. Dryden's classmate. This gentleman had kept a file of material from the angry conversations he had with the writer. Dryden found intense pleasure in analyzing the pitiful condition which was Buchanan's life.

Apparantly, Buchanan was the common sort of unimaginative student so prominent at the college. He lacked a competence to search for a personal identity or the identity of a civilisation, an age, or a discipline. He accepted the search for consensus as a substitute for the search for truth. He was plagued with petty concerns, often grasping for instantaneous, made conclusions. He would apply for positions which he could never have had. He was quite happy to find something which would offer him a pose, definitive, or fashion which made him recognizable. - Dryden presents Zimrii who is:

Still is Opinions, always in the wrong:

Was it anything by starts, and Nothing long.

But in the course of one revolution:

Was Chymist, Filid, Stakers, and Bulfin.

Buchanan, son of "Sir" Richard Buchanan, kept the note for 49 years after the death of his father.

We are afraid that the notorious character would be tied to himself by the necessities of his life. He sought to prevent his family from losing face. After all, they were the Buchanings, descendents of a Duke of Buchanan.

Another important item is a letter which Dryden sought financial backing for an innovative for Bowdoin project. He could not find the support of James and his collegiate ilk which wised some power. They wanted him to fail, possibly because they were jealous of the futility of his ideas, they were not included in the initial stages, or they resisted the attention they receive when others had to seek their help.

Dryden was forced to search for aid away from the local college. At the Buchanan's, however, he knocked on the wrong door. Richard's son proved merely to be a chip off the old block. Dryden never was to receive the support he required. He was destined to be regarded in literary history as the heir to any successors.

Jeff Rannum 79

Much obliged

To the Editor:

Greg Kerr, Alan Schroeder and I would like to thank each student who helped make the Senior Class sponsored Car Raffle a success. Mike Swar on the floor, Jean Fanchon has $100 for selling the most tickets. The Senior Class is a little more money. Thank you.

James B. Rose
Senior Class President

Credit due

To the Editor:

Say Mike "Wampa" Sharon and Barbara "Tab" Sawhill are unwilling to claim the credit for Hyde Hall's phenomenal cohesiveness as a dorm this year? Well, there is one group on campus eager to receive the accolades Hyde Hall deserves: the Association of Proctors' Roomates. Let us now introduce you to one of the better organized of the mirth, extravgance, and sexual deviation that makes Hyde the dorm Cole man fears and the campus respects.

Who patiently listens to the procurers out? THEIR problems? Who, after consoling the beaten warriors, tucks them into bed so that they may rest for the next day's onslaught of mayhem? Proctees? We are they ourselves out of bed at seven in the morning to squelch the inevitable underworld activities, the allowing the harried proctors a bit of peace? We are the day may dream of an escape to the sedate world of proctoring Winthrop?" We are the proctors! We are the door keepers for stranded proctors! Which individuals supplant the proverbial "beaten but not down" care with true affection and understanding, unabashedly tolerant of anomalies? We claim to have little either eres nor additions; we repair the damage proctoring has inflicted upon our distraught roommates; we offer unlimited empathy and help; we meet twice a week to discuss and improve our methods of proctoring; we help the broken souls with smashed windows get the necessary and provisory things to buy the Munchkins for the Munchkin fights; we even stand and share the disgrace and "flush" when an unsuspecting freshman is enjoying his/her meals.

But do we get mentioned in the Orient at all? We are the most valuable force in the building NO! We get no credit, no support, no money. But we are not satisfied. We are the voice for our force of our students, for our force of students, for our future. We are the proctoring group who know the ones truly responsible for our dorm's success. Respectfully,

The Association of Proctors' Roommates.
by JAMES CAVISTON and DOUG HENRY

The national press has recognized it as one of the top senate races in the United States this year. Although early polls show one candidate with a substantial lead, it is bound to be a very close election. In this classic political stand-off the incumbent senator is being challenged by the up-and-coming congressman, the Democrat backed by organized labor versus the Republican supported by big business; one who favors more social services versus another who wants fiscal conservatism; the haggard face of a fifty-four year old seasoned veteran versus the chubbin smile of a new breed of politician in the Harvard liberal versus the Bowdoin conservative.

These are some of the perceptions that voters of Maine have of Senator William Hathaway and Congressman William Cohen, the two major candidates in the upcoming United States Senate election. These real and perceived differences aside, Hathaway and Cohen should be recognized for their great integrity coupled with solid political records. Maine will lose through the election of either candidate. The question is which candidate will best represent the right direction for Maine's future.

Experience

An active legislator, Bill Hathaway has contributed fourteen years of national political service to the state of Maine. He has just completed his first senate term, before which he served as a congressman for eight years in Maine's second district. During those fourteen years in office, Hathaway has seen 200 of his sponsored bills and amendments become law. Hathaway now serves on the prestigious Senate Finance Committee. He has spent much of his free time researching alcohol abuse. Hathaway's voting record shows a preference for grass roots legislation. He is known for his environmental conservation and social programs, while he has been increasing defense spending.

Bill Cohen came into the national spotlight in 1972 as a freshman congressman sitting in judgement of Richard Nixon on the House Judiciary Committee. Cohen is very active in the House Select Committee for the Aging. He is known for his sharp policies supported against increases in the congressional budget, except in the area of national defense. Cohen would classify himself as a fiscal conservative who believes that government has gotten too big. Therefore, private sector solutions to inflation, Cohen feels, are in many cases more efficient than the enlargement of the government.

There is a clear line between the candidates on many significant issues. Hathaway voted against the B-1 bomber while Cohen supported it. Hathaway voted for senate ratification of the Panama Canal Treaty whereas Cohen publicly opposed the treaty.

National energy policy is not an issue with cut and dry sides. Both candidates favor an alternate form of energy, both are antireform to some extent. Hathaway wants a moratorium on nuclear energy but Cohen will not commit himself that far.

The fields of unemployment and inflation are greatly divergent opinions between the candidates. Hathaway threatens the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill. Cohen does not. On the other hand, Cohen is a supporter of the Kemp-Roth tax cut bill, while Hathaway is opposed to it.

Voter's choice

The difference between the two candidates is clear. Who is the right choice? This depends on your personal philosophy and expectations of government. Both Cohen and Hathaway are dedicated and qualified public officials. Unfortunately, being a senator has little to do with running for the office. The candidates both have clear positions on the issues but this will probably not decide the election. Many Americans vote on images and not candidates who run the best campaigns through this last week before the polls open just might win.

Where the candidates stand on the issues.

While some residents of the State will cast their ballot simply for a candidate's image, the wise voter will consider the particular issues and where the prospective candidates stand. In Maine, two issues have taken on national significance, the Dickey-Lincoln Dam and the Indian Land Claims. With regard to each issue, Cohen and Hathaway are, at best, diametrically opposed and at worst, politically ambivalent.

Hathaway has consistently supported the Dickey-Lincoln dam, a project which involves the construction of a large hydroelectric plant in northwestern Maine. He has favored the idea since its conception in the early sixties because the project will provide jobs and a cheap source of power. His stand takes exception to its solid pro-environmental record. In historical perspective, however, when the dam was first proposed, the idea met widespread approval. Since then, in light of environmental awareness, consistent support of the project has hurt Hathaway in the polls. In spite of his unerring work towards the acceptance of the project, the Senator is now seen as taking an unpopular position.

Cohen, on the other hand, has reserved judgement until opinion about the project became better known. Upon learning that many people were against the project and that it may have an environmental repercussion, Cohen announced his opposition to the plan.

One of the most controversial and misunderstood issues in this election is the Indian Land Claims Case. The federal government, as protector of the Passamaquoddy tribe, is suing the state of Maine on behalf of the Indians. The government appeals that the State illegally appropriated Indian lands over 180 years ago in violation of the Non-Intercourse Act of 1790. This act stipulates that Indian territory can not be annexed without the approval of Congress. The complexities of this case, if it ever came to trial, would take volumes to enumerate. The Indians claim over sixty percent of the state in the suit which has contributed to making this an emotional as well as a legal issue.

President Carter's task force on the Maine Indian land claims, which called for a joint federal and state financial effort to settle the case. Hathaway initially supported this proposal arguing that, "a negotiated settlement can end this case with certainty and with finality, and without rancor. Cohen, on the other hand, has supported a total federal solution of the problem. He maintains, "Maine's property owners should not have to suffer any loss of land based on a 180-year-old claim arising solely from the actions and decisions of the federal government."

The original White House proposal called for a $25 million dollar contribution to the Indians, an almost equal sum in state aid over a 15-year period and 300,000 acres of land available to the Indians at a reduced price. This offer was categorically rejected by the state of Maine. Thus it became the biggest issue in the early days of the campaign with Cohen pointing out his rejection of the plan and that it has been unacceptable to the voters.

Cohen has taken credit for working out this new plan which seems acceptable to all parties involved. Cohen has accused Carter and Hathaway of proposing this new settlement to take the sting out of one of his most contentious campaign issues.

Cohen has refuted this contention, that he has been working on this proposal for several months. Depending on which side you talk to, the new plan is either a blatant political move to get Hathaway re-elected or else it is the result of hard work by a dedicated senator. It is the voters, however, that will decide.
Key issues make the final decision.

There are, of course, other issues in the campaign but these are the two that will affect Maine people most directly. If anything, it appears now that the Indian case will be settled and that the Dirick-Lincoln will not be built, but they remain issues. Through democratic elections, issues take on significance in terms of political motivations. Are Cohen's recent disapprovals of the Dirick-Lincoln project and Hathaway's new Indian case settlement examples of legitimate legislative concerns or timely political opportunism? By the nature of our election system, that must remain a rhetorical question.

Independents sacrifice votes for verve

Hathaway or Cohen will probably be Maine's Senator after election day next Tuesday, but there are three dark horse candidates for the job that just cannot be ignored. Hayes Gahagan, John Jannace and Plato Trumans are all independent candidates for the United States Senate. Veteran political observers have described this independent triumvirate with such terms as "chock full of nuts" and "the three stooges" while listing their chances as "slim and none," but these dark horses actually contribute greatly to the lighter side of the campaign.

Gahagan is running the most extensive campaign of the three candidates. This might allow him to draw one or two percent of the vote. Gahagan gained some notoriety by asserting at a press conference that his campaign pictures had been subliminally doctored. Although examination of the picture displays had been publicly available, Gahagan claims that the word "face" was superimposed on his face and that a female reproductive organ, presumably placed over his head. Gahagan gave no explanation for this "incident" but he just felt that it was his duty to report it to the press.

In more traditional areas such as welfare, Gahagan believes that "if people don't work, they shouldn't eat." During a televised debate with the other four candidates, Gahagan explained his feelings towards Middle East oil prices. He thought the U.S. should sell weapons and other products to the Arab states if they would sell us oil at a reasonable price. If they should refuse their generous offer, then Gahagan thought they should just "eat" their oil.

Plato Truman is what you call a perenial candidate. Truman has run for most of the major offices in the State as either a Democrat or a Republican; this is his first attempt as an independent.

Several elections ago, Plato used the slogan, "Plato Truman - Two Great Names, One Great American." This was the high point of Truman's career. He does have one novel proposal this year which he expressed during the television debate. Truman feels that every state should have one woman senator since women handle the money in this country.

John Jannace has gained some legitimacy in his campaign from his endorsement byProphet 13 author Howard Jarvis. Jannace likes to get on television and yell at Cohen and Hathaway while offering few positive suggestions for change. He dislikes Hathaway, but he hates Cohen; this might be because a Cohen supporter turned him into the authorities shortly before state legislators in charge he was later acquitted of.

In totality, these three candidates might attract three to five percent of the vote according to estimates by John Donovan and Christian Potholm. Potholm added, "Our polls show that the independents are cutting into each other's votes."

Adding that these candidates appeal to the people who think "all politicians are crooks," Potholm called this five percent of the electorate the "Ya-ya vote."

Potholm has a different view of party loyalty at work in Maine press. "Most working reporters are Democrats. The editorial boards are split," Concerning the Senator's unpopularity with the press, Potholm says, "Hathaway has pulled an Agnew. You'll never win a praising contest with the press."

Integrity

The two professors agree that the candidates have integrity. Ironically, this virtue comes to light because almost ten times as much money is spent on campaign as in salary. The question of beholdenness comes into play when campaign finances are an important factor in the outcome of the election. Looking over the contribution lists of each candidate, it becomes apparent where each man is aligned. While Hathaway's list is short, it includes large donations from organized labor and political action committees. The roster includes the AFL-CIO, United Paperworkers, American Postal Workers Union, United Steelworkers and Seafarers

Representative Cohen hits the streets to shake hands, flash smiles and discuss issues with folks. His campaign mixes grass-root support with high-power Madison Avenue image refinements.

Cohen is not Smith.

The professors' points of view diverge most noticeably in regard to the role of the press in the campaign. According to Donovan, The press in Maine is much less biased than it used to be, especially the Gazette papers. They are less overtly Republican.

"However, the press here is dying for a young, attractive Republican to be elected into a high office. It tells the editors to see a man who might go to Washington. Especially the hangar paper, which never Billy Cohen as the local boy who made good." Concerning the power of editorial endorsement, Donovan said, "Editors don't make any difference. No one reads them."

Potholm has a different view of party loyalty at work in Maine press. "Most working reporters are Democrats. The editorial boards are split," Concerning the Senator's unpopularity with the press, Potholm says, "Hathaway has pulled an Agnew. You'll never win a praising contest with the press."

Integrity

The two professors agree that the candidates have integrity. Ironically, this virtue comes to light because almost ten times as much money is spent on campaign as in salary. The question of beholdenness comes into play when campaign finances are an important factor in the outcome of the election. Looking over the contribution lists of each candidate, it becomes apparent where each man is aligned. While Hathaway's list is short, it includes large donations from organized labor and political action committees. The roster includes the AFL-CIO, United Paperworkers, American Postal Workers Union, United Steelworkers and Seafarers

Independents sacrifice votes for verve

Hathaway or Cohen will probably be Maine's Senator after election day next Tuesday, but there are three dark horse candidates for the job that just cannot be ignored. Hayes Gahagan, John Jannace and Plato Trumans are all independent candidates for the United States Senate. Veteran political observers have described this independent triumvirate with such terms as "chock full of nuts" and "the three stooges" while listing their chances as "slim and none," but these dark horses actually contribute greatly to the lighter side of the campaign.

Gahagan is running the most extensive campaign of the three candidates. This might allow him to draw one or two percent of the vote. Gahagan gained some notoriety by asserting at a press conference that his campaign pictures had been subliminally doctored. Although examination of the picture displays had been publicly available, Gahagan claims that the word "face" was superimposed on his face and that a female reproductive organ, presumably placed over his head. Gahagan gave no explanation for this "incident" but he just felt that it was his duty to report it to the press.

In more traditional areas such as welfare, Gahagan believes that "if people don't work, they shouldn't eat." During a televised debate with the other four candidates, Gahagan explained his feelings towards Middle East oil prices. He thought the U.S. should sell weapons and other products to the Arab states if they would sell us oil at a reasonable price. If they resolution of the issue.
Enteman explains new plan, downplays loss of freedom

(Continued from Page 1)

While at Union College, where he was a faculty member and later provost, Enteman had been instrumental in the formulation of the "Union Plan," a modification of the system for tenuring professors that violated the 1940 Principles of Principles of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). The Statement of Principles provides in part that a professor cannot be appointed to a seventh year at a college or university without being granted tenure.

Many had expected that the President would propose a similar plan at Bowdoin. But Enteman recommended that the College continue to abide by the 1940 Principles.

"I continue to believe," he said, "that the tenure system as developed under the 1940 Principles 'overprotects' academic freedom...However, I am not at all convinced that breaking with those 1940 Principles would be worth the difficulties which would ensue." In an interview with the Orient earlier this week, Enteman commented on his previous experience with tenure and the AAUP at Union.

"The purpose of the AAUP is a very difficult and time-consuming process...It's a lot more work than any of us anticipated it was," he said. "The AAUP has become a collective bargaining agent. It no longer is, in my view, an effective voice with regard to academic freedom."

"There are a lot of labor organizations that could have been left with the task of collective bargaining. This way, academic freedom ends up as being part of the empty rhetoric of the collective bargaining process."

In his memo, however, Enteman discounts the courts or any other alternative system of protecting academic freedom as being unable to meet the needs of the next twenty years.

The President suggested that Bowdoin determine that a certain number of places in each depart ment be left open and untended, to permit a continual influx of new ideas into the College's curriculum.

"I think we must do something to ensure that the faculty and students at Bowdoin are being challenged by the fresh ideas, concepts, procedures and techniques that are being developed in the graduate schools and other developing areas of the academic and athletic worlds," he said in the memo.

Under Enteman's proposal, all present tenured faculty would retain their tenure, and those professors who have been at the College for at least three years and who were told at the time of their appointment that they were on a "tenure track" would continue along that track, and undergo a review for tenure regardless of the tenure limitations of their department.

Asserting that he saw no major in particular rationale of tenured to untenured faculty members, Enteman suggested as a basis for first several memo's emphasis a plan which would ensure that at least one-third of a department's available positions remain open.

Speaking with the Orient this week, the President suggested that the tenure limitation would not necessarily discourage qualified candidates from coming to Bowdoin.

"Bowdoin will be increasingly recognized as a faculty with deep in your making certain credentials established," said Enteman.

Enteman also proposed in his memo a revision of the procedures for reviewing candidates for tenure.

As is the case at present, the department and Faculty Affairs Committee would each in turn conduct reviews of a candidate's qualifications. But before the recommendation of those two bodies were submitted to the Dean of the Faculty and the President, a "senior faculty," a group composed of all tenured faculty members, would meet and discuss the candidate's qualifications.

After winning a positive recommendation from the Senior Faculty, the candidate would then be reviewed by the Dean of the Faculty and the President, who would send their recommendations to the Governing Boards for final approval.

"This means effectively that there should be unanimous con sent of all senior faculty before any person is granted tenure," he said.

Pres eyes NESCAC Press

(Continued from Page 1)

According to NESCAC. In other words, track and wrestling stars are allowed to compete in post season tourneys while teams are not.

President Enteman, who will soon discuss athletic issues with the other New England small college presidents, doesn't care for this discrepancy. "I think most of the individual versus team argument is bogus. There are an awful lot of absurd loops you can get into. In the ski team any better than the soccer team? Hockey Coach Sid Watson agrees with the President. "I feel it's unfair to the same me,"

The 7-day ruling is perhaps the most controversial NESCAC policy. Enteman essentially feels that there should be a limit on post-season competition for all athletic events. The NCAA has absolutely no interest in students. They'll keep that tournament nonsense going on forever, gives the chance ... It's like expecting rabbits to limit the size of their..."

The President hopes to better define the role of athletics at Bowdoin. "A total athletic program can be articulated on perfectly respect able educational programs..." the President said. "I think efforts are to be commended."

"It's time to do something else," Enteman, however, has not ruled out the possibility of extending the NESCAC rule. "I don't know whether seven days is better than ten ... I'm open to some alteration of the limit, say in fourteen days ... I say, 'Find a number, announce that number, and make the rules clean and clear.'"

"I think Enteman left only that only the following would be announced and announced and announced and announced the proposed quota.

"Gottschalk said the proposal offers a "certain degree of effectiveness". It closes the door on equal opportunities for "women who are women.""

Professor John Rensnbriisk, chairman of the government department, was impressed with the proposals. He agreed with the proposed quota and would see the College by maintaining a constant influx of new, fresh ideas. He also agreed with the President's discussion of the relationship between Juvenile and Scholarship.

Yet, Rensnbriisk, too, expressed reservations with the proposition. It is an "outstanding" in the proposed program of the College, is misplaced in the College. Athletics is an expression of education, I hope to begin to articulate that this year.

Bill Hathaway can do more for Maine in the U.S. Senate.

Over 14 years, Bill Hathaway has supported strong environmental legislation...for clean air, clean water, nuclear safeguards, clean energy, control of toxic chemicals.

In the 95th Congress, both the League of Conservation Voters and Public Citizens gave him very high marks on his environmental record.

Bill Hathaway is with you today...and he will be with you tomorrow.

Keep him in the U.S. Senate.
Dance consort visits college as teaching highlights week

by ALEX STEVENSON
Saturday Review columnist Pauline Koner, a choreographer-craftsman of high repute while the New York Times acclaimed her as an "artist who speaks to all generations," in The Bates-Bowdoin-Colby Dance Alliance, recently organized by the directors of the schools, will have a chance to demonstrate the effectiveness of the Alliance next Monday through Friday, as a result of Maine residence of the Pauline Koner Dance Consort. The Consort's visit will be highlighted by a formal concert at 8 p.m. next Thursday in Bowdoin's Pickard Theater.

June Vail, director of the Bowdoin Dance Group said, that the Koner Consort is "in keeping with the high standards of dance being brought into the state."

The Dance Alliance is one reason for the appearance of one so renowned as Koner. Pooling the resources of the three schools facilitates the interaction between the three schools and was also "the first step in being able to afford quality dance companies," according to Vail.

The ten-member modern dance company will be based in Brunswick during its one-week residency, and will spend at least one day teaching and performing at each campus of the Alliance. The range of the Consort's activity in Brunswick will include a workshop in the public schools and a lecture-demonstration on Monday. A master class and open rehearsal will follow on Wednesday, and a luncheon and major concert is scheduled for Thursday.

The week's residency has been made possible by contributions from the Senior Center, the Committee on Lectures and Concerts, the administration, and a grant from the Maine State Commission on the Arts and Humanities.

Koner began her career as a solo modern dance performer in 1980, presenting programs on Broadway, and subsequently touring America, the Near East, Russia and Europe. She returned to New York City in 1983 to perform at Lewisohn Stadium, the Roxy Theatre, and Radio City Music Hall.

In 1984 Koner began her first company and in 1986 was recipient of the Dance Magazine Award.

Koner, who is celebrating her 31st year in the professional dance world, founded her consort in 1975. She is a disciple of Doris Humphrey, a pioneer in the creation and development of modern dance.

The Pauline Koner dance consort comes to Brunswick next week for a series of performances and workshops.

Flanked by enthusiastic frat brothers, Ralph Giles '79 displays a campaign smile. Tuesday's election will determine if his bid for the State Legislature is successful. Orient/Evans

Tax limitation issue lures Giles to campaign for State Legislature

by NANCY ROBERTS
Senior Ralph Giles stands as living proof to those skeptics who claim that college students are politically apathetic. Giles is now entering the home stretch of his campaign for State Legislature from Portland's district 21-4. Running as a Republican in a primarily Democratic district against an incumbent with a good record "in an uphill battle," admits Giles. "But it's not a battle that can't be won."

How does a Dean's List student, captain of the soccer team and active member of Chi Psi find time to run for public office? "I've made it a priority, so my academics are suffering. But I've talked to my professors and they've been very understanding," said Giles.

Giles' decision to run was made over the summer after he had become critical of some of the State Legislature's actions. A Classics/Mathematics major, Giles had not been politically active in the past. Recently, however, he began to be concerned about issues such as tax limitation and government spending.

"At first, my running for legislation was a big joke between my father and I, but then I got more serious and decided to enter the race," the hopeful explains. An opportune vacancy on the Republican ticket enabled the previously Independent Giles to declare himself Republican and obtain party backing.

Although the Portland Press Herald described the race between Giles and the one-term incumbent Merle Nelson as one of the "most predictable" in Portland, Nelson admits that "Anything can happen...." Giles realistically notes "I'm an underdog and in the wrong party - there's no question about that. But I'm not convinced she's got it hands down. If and when I beat her, it will be close."

Giles doesn't have the advantage of being an ex-roommate of Chris Petchholm, but nonetheless, the electorate in general has been receptive to his political overtures. His campaigning has consisted mainly of knocking on doors around his Portland neighborhood and distributing brochures with the help of several dedicated classmates. "People seem as young, energetic and concerned, so they listen. People have generally been pretty receptive."

The pivotal issues in the campaign are government spending and taxation. Giles shares in the Proposition 13 sentiment and is in favor of tax limitation. "It gets to a point where I feel that the government is spending enough of my money. I'm tired of seeing these taxes going for government programs that are not worthwhile or appreciated by the recipients," he said.

Giles' opponent, Democrat Merle Nelson, has been in the House for two years and was rated one of the five most effective freshmen lawmakers in an informal poll of his colleagues. Eleven of the thirteen bills she introduced during the term became law. Giles recognizes that Nelson "has a pretty good record to go on. The only thing I criticize is her economic points."

Jenny Goldfarb '80, one of Nelson's campaign workers in 1976, claims that Nelson "is not as big a spender as her opponent is making her out to be. In fact, she was not endorsed by labor and teachers because she didn't spend enough."

"I think it's going to be a close race because they chose the forum of a recall, and people did not have a chance to vote against the incumbent - Ralph is taking advantage of that issue," argues Goldfarb.

The throwing of a hat into the political ring by a Bowdoin student is not unprecedented. About ten years ago, Neil Corson ran for State Legislature as a dark horse candidate, managed to win the election and went on to serve in the State Senate. If Giles emerges victorious on November 7, he will take the spring semester off and finish up at Bowdoin next fall. If he is defeated, he will have his friends and campaign workers "put together my ego and then start studying. Whatever I win or lose I'll get back to academics. But it will be a lot more fun to study for the rest of the term if I win."

Tomorrow night at 7:00 and 9:30 in the Kressen Auditorium, the Senior Class presents "Night of the Living Dead." Admission is $1.00.
Bootees’ poor play linked to offensive woes, injuries
by DANNY MENZ

The only goal the Bowdoin soccer team was able to produce in its last three games came as somewhat of a gift. Ralph Giles nailed a penalty kick past the Bates’ goaltender to give the Bears a 1-1 tie in the finale of a frustrating season. The teams displayed inconsistency throughout the slow-paced game. Bates scored at 9:37 of the first half when Jim Merrill brought the ball to the top of the penalty area on the left side and fired a shot to the opposite side of the net. Goalie Kevin Kennedy slipped going for the ball and watched it sail into the back of the goal. Gilbo tallied at 32:29 of the same half, his only goal of the season in his final game for Bowdoin. In the remainder of the game and overtime each side had its chances but failed to connect.

In action last Saturday, the Bears lost their fifth game in a row. It was another frustrating contest with Bowdoin losing to Wesleyan, 1-0, in overtime. The lone goal in the match came in the first overtime period when a Wesleyan shot went off a Bowdoin player into the net. It was the second time in eight days the Bears had lost in this fashion.

Poku helps
The booters finished the season with a 3-6-2 record, their worst since 1961. At the same time, starting goalie Kevin Kennedy has less than a one goal per game average. In six of the eleven games, the Polar Bears failed to score, four times losing 1-0. They scored a total of only eight goals, four by freshman Kwame Poku. For the second straight year Bowdoin was unable to develop any offensive punch and was plagued by a number of injuries. Co-captain John Holt along with Gordon Wood and Ben Snyder were out for the entire season. Nate Cleveland was in action in only a few games while Tom Moore and Brian Hubbard were forced to play injured most of the season.

The one bright spot was the defense, which continually turned in outstanding performances. Anchored by Kennedy in the goal and supported by Dave Barnes at fullback and Lee Eldridge in the line position, the defenders kept the scores close. Barnes continued the superb form he showed last year as a freshman starter and Eldridge surprised everyone with a much improved performance as he played solidly throughout the entire season.

With the exception of Gilles, all members of this year’s team should be back next year. Hopefully, with the experience gained through this disappointing season, they will be able to improve their record.

Tomorrow afternoon at 4:00 in the Curtis Pool, the Synchro Swim Club presents their fall show. Admission is free.

Tom Scolla continues to lead the team in rushing and scoring this year. Orient/Yong

---

Gridders travel to Bates for 1st conference game
(Continued from Page 10) A physical contest. “They have a very good defense, as good a one as we will see all year. They have a good pass and very good receivers. They have a strong fullback and a good sweep attack. They threw against us last year, and we expect them to do so this year.”

The Polar Bears still have a shot at winning the CBB title, although they can finish the season no better than 5-0. If they can knock off Bates and tame the Mules of Colby (also 2-4), the Bears will capture the crown. If Bowdoin beats Bates and Colby defeats Bowdoin on the 11th, all three teams share the championship. But a Bates victory tomorrow will clinch the Bowdies’ first title in four years. The winner of the Bowdoin-Colby game would become Conference runner-up.
Sailors will need more than wind to escape doldrums

by BILL STUART

To illustrate the obscurity of the Vice Presidency, the following story is told: There were once two brothers; one was lost at sea and the other became Vice President. Neither was ever heard from again. If there had been a third offering, she or he could have achieved equal obscurity by participating in intercollegiate sailing at Bowdoin.

The Bowdoin program is now at a crossroads. In the next few years, decisions will be made that will significantly affect the future of the sport at the school.

Heading the list of problems in the condition of the boats. The College owns eight boats, but only four are seaworthy. These four were purchased years ago, though, and are in need of replacement. The inferiority of the boats severely limits the quality of the team. "The intense is there," acknowledges sophomore commodore Julie Leighton. "Anyone sixty people show an interest in sailing every fall. We have nothing to offer them." Little practice

The condition of the boats leads to a second problem experienced by the team: it is unable to practice regularly. The boats do not move well in the water and the sailors are discouraged when the results of their trial runs are determined not by their expertise as sailors, but rather by the erratic and non-uniform capabilities of similar models.

The squad's coach, Chemistry professor David Page, explains the deterioration of the boats. The problem is in the way the College chose to have boats," he states. "In order to save money, the College made a deal with the yacht club at Harraseeket. In exchange for winter storage, the yacht club received summer use of the College's boats. If the boats had been used only by Bowdoin sailors, they would be in better shape today.

No boat owner

The above problem is an illustration of a third shortcoming: the team does not have a boathouse of its own. "Look at old yearbook pictures of the sailing team," says senior Tim Richards. "You will see the team carrying the boats through mud to the storage area. When the yacht club closes for the winter and pulls in 66 docks, we have to carry the boats through the mud. That doesn't help the condition of the boats at all."

Some people view the absence of a full-time coach as a hindrance to the team. Page disagrees with this notion, though. "Most of the people on the team have sailed before," he points out, "and they can pass along their knowledge to a coach, you get coaching, peer review and peer counseling." Obviously, one sure way to improve the caliber of sailing at Bowdoin is to increase the amount of money spent on the program. With more money, the team could purchase new boats to replace the ones senior Steve Pollak describes as "obsolete to intercollegiate sailing for practicing." Also, more money could provide the College with its own boating facility, probably at nearby Cundy's Harbor.

Another avenue of improvement which must supplemented increased money is the attraction of several good sailors to the program annually. "You need two or three good sailors to win," Richards feels. "They can serve as skipper. If they are good, they can have an average crew and win."

For the present, though, the team realizes that these two goals will not be met. "I don't see any money on the horizon," Page says. "The team needs help of situation Tufts enjoyed about three years ago. A rich alumnus gave the team a new boathouse and all new boats." The Bowdoin team has nowhere near a similar fate. And without increased funding necessary to improve the facilities, the team will find it difficult to maintain interest in sailing. Pollak, a four year participant in sailing, "I feel very much into it as a freshman, but I don't it much any more. The lack of facilities here, we finished without a properPower potential Proper wind and a corresponding higher level of interest in the program, the sailors feel the team can compete with such national powers as Tufts and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "No problem at all," Pollak asserts, "absolutely none. My freshman year, we finished second to Yale in New England. We beat Tufts and M.I.T. Leighton adds, "I think we did qualify for the New England this year, but we didn't". We are our best sailors there. We do not have the depth of the bigger schools, but we could compete."

Page, though, is more cautious in his views. "I don't know if we can compete," he sighs. "It's not like hockey. The school has committed itself to excellence in hockey, I do not see a similar commitment to the sailing program."

The key to the salvation of the program appears to be a proposal that several members of the team, including Pollak, are now drafting. While plans have not been finalized and presented to the proper people yet, the program will undoubtedly include a College boathouse and new boats for the team. But the faculties would not be used only by the team. Pollak indicates that any proposal will include provisions for use by the College community of the boats for recreational purposes.

The team entered this season without any illusions of performing with distinction. "We didn't expect to have a great year," Richards says. "After all, we compete against some of the world's best sailors at M.I.T., Tufts, Boston University, and the University of Rhode Island. We have done pretty well, though; we have met our initial expectations."

The competitive sailing regattas are referred to as regattas. They are scheduled to include participation at a number of schools in New England, including Dartmouth, Yale, M.I.T., R.I. The U.B.I. The boat school determines the type of boat to be sailed and provides enough boats for all participating teams. (Unfortunately, Bowdoin does not possess the facilities to host a regatta of its own). In a small regatta, the competition is round-robin; so that each team races once in each boat. At the larger events, though, it is impossible to run that many races, so a half dozen or so are usually run. This switching of boats helps to equalize any differences between the individuals.

The Bowdoin team usually finishes in the third-quarter among all schools in the regattas it enter. This year, it finished in the upper half of the list of tour- naments, including the Ingony Invitational at Dartmouth, the College of the Atlantic at Tufts, the FORAM Trophy at Maine Maritime, and the Penobscot Bay Regatta.

The Bowdoin program. Of these successes, perhaps the most gratifying was the first place finish in the Penobscot Bay Regatta. The Polar Bears finished ahead of Harvard and the United States Coast Guard Academy in qualifying for the New England championship. In the Har-Wit Trophy, where the team usually enjoys its best success, it finished third of six. "We didn't send our best team," Richards points out, "because we had already qualified for the New England by performing well in the Har-Wit Trophy."

The team is in a very low-key approach to the sport. The best sailors are usually sent to the most important regattas (the New England Qualifiers and the New England Championship, but at other regattas, the team usually sails with people interested in sailing. "It's a very hands-on approach," asserts Leighton. "Basically, anyone who wants to sail can do so." It is this type of emphasis that makes the program fun for the participants. They are not competing solely to win or to perform strongly. Instead, acquisition of sailing skills and greater appreciation of the sport are two lessons the program hopes to provide the participants.

With the season winding down quickly, the truly dedicated sailors will begin to focus on their plans to revive the sport here at Bowdoin. Leighton indicates that the College may end up helping the head coach. The emphasis is shifting to sports that can be continued for a lifetime," he offers. "And there is continuing interest in the program." Pollak offers similar thoughts, pointing to the "incredible amount of potential the program has."

BARBARA LEONARD AND SUE LOWELL

If you have flight reservations for after November 15, call or see Barbara Leonard or Sue Lowell at Stowe Travel, 9 Pleasant St., Tel.: 725-5573 — about whether you will be required to pay the increase if you pick up your ticket before that date!

Sue Lowell and Cheryle Klingensmith will be covering the flight reservations desk at Stowe tomorrow, Saturday, November 4, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. To assist you with all this information, and of course for new flight reservations and airline tickets if you need them. Why not stop by Stowe-Travel tomorrow?

STOWE TRAVEL
Visit or Phone 725-5573
9 Pleasant Street, Downtown Brunswick
"Open Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for Air Reservations and Tickets"
by GEOFF WORRELL

Bowdoin's fun-loving, tennis-loving women's varsity netters took their 7-3 record to the State tournament last weekend at Waterville and came back to Brunswick as the third best squad in the State. The University of Maine at Orono and Colby, the host school, both finished ahead of the Polar Bears. For Bowdoin, though, this performance, coupled with the team's youth, bode well for the squad's future.

Junior captain Meg McLean, playing first singles for Bowdoin, turned in a strong performance. She defeated her first opponent in straight sets, 6-3, 6-4. In her second match, she upset the tournament's second seed, a Bates player, by slim margins, 7-6, 7-6. She was unable to capture her third match, though, as she met the eventual singles champion, Pam Cohen of UMO, 6-0, 6-0.

Raw Text Start

Sophomore Dan Spears has been the football team's leading receiver all season. The big end has been consistently praised by Coach Jim Lentz for his strong play. Orient/Yong

Wesleyan gridders stop Bears; CBB season begins tomorrow

by BILL STUART

In their final tune-up before the big weekend coming within the CCB (Colby-Bates-Bowdoin) Conference, the Bowdoin Polar Bears had an opportunity pass for one last chance to prepare their team for that crucially four-conference title contest. The gridiron used ineffective defense, unstable offense, and seven costly turnovers in losing to Wesleyan last week, 24-14, at Whitter Field. The defeat drags the Bears to 2-4 with two games remaining: tomorrow at Bates and the following Saturday against Colby.

The visitors put Saturday's game out of reach before the Polar Bears could put any points on the board. Several minutes after stopping a Bowdoin threat by recovering quarterback Bruce Farmer's fumble, the Cardinals opened the day's scoring with a 31-yard field goal by John Papa.

Early in the second quarter, quarterback Papa found wide receiver Tim Fitzgerald with a 52-yard pass. The Bears' defense con- version hiked the score to 10-0. The visitors added seven more points later in the period when they recovered a Farmer fumble at the Bowdoin 31 and drove for a touchdown and point after.

Bowdoin scores

In the third period, the Bowdoin offense received a lift when the Cardinals hanged Craig Gardner as he tried to fair catch a punt. He penalty moved the ball to the Wesleyan 43, and sophomore quarterback Hank Elliott marched the team to its initial score of the afternoon. The touchdown was scored on a four-yard run by injured quarterback Ian O'Brien. After Hemmelrich botched the conversion to close the gap to 17-7. The margin was increased by the visitors when a wide-open Fitzgerald caught a 41-yard touchdown pass on a half-back option play. Papa upped the score, 24-7, with his conversion.

Late in the game, Bowdoin withed together an 80-yard drive that ended with a touchdown. An Ellinon to Dan Spears pass, good for 44 yards, keyed the drive, which ended with a two-yard run by Tom Scilla. Hemmelrich moved the hosts to within 10 points with his conversion.

Although both teams threatened in the final eight minutes, neither one could change the 24-14 score. Bowdoin was intercepted twice in late-game drives and Wesleyan had possession on the Bowdoin one-yard line when time expired.

Turnovers key

Bowdoin coach Jim Lentz pinpointed the difference in the game by noting that "our two problems were giving up the long pass and the turnovers. Every one of the turnovers was significant."

The pass defense, which improved steadily through the Williams game and then suffered a relapse against Middlebury, was again ineffective. "Our pass defense had better improve this weekend," commented Lentz.

'I've never seen an opponent that throws as much as Bates does. They are going to extend us a great deal."

For the record, the Bates Bobcats are enjoying their best season in years, with five victories (Union, Hamilton, Amherst, Wesleyan Tech, and Colby) against only one defeat (a 14-7 loss to Trinity the week after Trinity stung Bowdoin, 24-6). The Bobcats' air attack is headed by quarterback Chuck Laurie, who has thrown fifteen touchdown passes this season.

Spear's impresses

In last week's game, Lentz was particularly pleased with the performance of sophomore tight end Dan Spears, who has been a solid all year, he noted. "He is our leading receiver more by accident than by design. He's something else; he can catch the football. He's not the most graceful receiver, but he's a good one. He runs his patterns extremely well. And what most people don't realize is that he is a very, very good block-er."

The Bowdoin coach also singled out several other performers who performed well in defeat. "Against offensive tackles, John Blomfield and Bob McBride, did a good job. On offense, Tom Scilla didn't run wild, but he played a good football game. And don't forget Dan Doty, he deserves mention; he has played well game-in and game-out," he offered.

Against Bates, Lentz looks for a

(Continued on Page 10)

Future bright

Young rosettes finish third

by GEOFF WORRELL

Bowdoin's fun-loving, tennis-loving women's varsity netters took their 7-3 record to the State tournament last weekend at Waterville and came back to Brunswick as the third best squad in the State. The University of Maine at Orono and Colby, the host school, both finished ahead of the Polar Bears. For Bowdoin, though, this performance, coupled with the team's youth, bode well for the squad's future.

Junior captain Meg McLean, playing first singles for Bowdoin, turned in a strong performance. She defeated her first opponent in straight sets, 6-3, 6-4. In her second match, she upset the tournament's second seed, a Bates player, by slim margins, 7-6, 7-6. She was unable to capture her third match, though, as she met the eventual singles champion, Pam Cohen of UMO, 6-0, 6-0.

Freshman Kathy Lang, competing in second singles, also defeated her first opponent with little trouble, recording a straight set triumphs, 6-3, 6-1. In the next round, however, she was defeated against first seed Chris Everett of UMO. If the name itself didn't strike Kathy enough, Everett's play certainly did, as the Bowdoin newcomer was defeated in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3.

Doubles impresses

Bowdoin's first doubles team, seeded second in the tournament, reached the finals. Junior Ellen, Pyne and sophomore Nina Wheaton, defeated Story College's first and second, 6-1, 6-2. Their second round went to three sets, but they won the determinant point in the finals, though. Pyne and Wheaton were joined at the net by the top seeded team from Colby, which they had handled earlier in the year. The score in games of the final, 6-3, 6-2. "I didn't play up to my potential," offered a dejected Williams after the match.

Coach Ed Reid placed his third and fourth singles players together in second doubles. Freshman Doty DiOrio and Christie Chambers entered the tournament as an unknown duo, shoulder which hindered her game as she and DiOrio lost their first match in two sets, 6-4, 6-3. The Polar Bears lost a golden opportunity to gain additional team points when Chamber's injury prompted the duo to forfeit the consolation match. "We had a good chance at winning that match," says Coach Reid. He also defended his decision to enter the injured junior in the tournament. "She had the bad conditioning," he explained. "She thought it would be all right. I didn't, but she played her if she thought she wouldn't be all right, but she fully intended to play."

"Boy, we look good for next year," Reid exclaimed. "We will be formidable if we can pick up another girl or two. I am very optimistic." And indeed he should be. This year's team has made remarkable progress and has grown considerably stronger as the season has gone along.

The squad will lose only one player next year, former Chris Chandler is scheduled to return to Wheaton, so the foundation is there for next fall. With an impressive showing in the State tournament, and a solid nucleus of returning, the women should be heard from even more next year. Third in the state certainly speaks well for this year's squad.

Postgame Scripts

Cohen driving hard

by BILL STUART

With Election Day just around the corner, more people are focusing their attention on the Bill Cohen-Bill Hathaway battle for the United States Senate. While most Bowdoin students undoubtedly know that Representative Cohen is a member of Bowdoin's Class of 1962, few are familiar with his athletic accomplishments.

"He played in baseball," says his former fraternity brother and campaign advisor, Bowdoin professor Christian Puthum, and he was an All-State selection in basketball; he was an outstanding basketball player. As I recall, he once scored 51 points against Harvard, when Harvard was big time and we were small time.

According to the 1962 Eagle, co-captain Cohen, who prepared for Bowdoin at Ranger High School, was the leading scorer in a number of Polar Bear contests. He was especially instrumental in victories over Colby and Bates and a stunning upset of Maine.

Cohen did not approach the game with the same intensity and drive which now characterize his political style. "He was very casual," Puthum, himself a participant in weightlifting, soccer, and intramural hockey, stated. "He was a lot about basketball, but he was more relaxed; he wasn't super intense."

Now Cohen, the leader of the Polar Bear team as a college, is continuing his political leadership. So far in his young political career, he has been able to fast-break his opponents to death. Now comes the real test, can he drive to the basket and score better if he thought he wouldn't all right, but she fully intended to play."

Reid optimist

"Boy, we look good for next year," Reid exclaimed. "We will be formidable if we can pick up another girl or two. I am very optimistic." And indeed he should be. This year's team has made remarkable progress and has grown considerably stronger as the season has gone along.

The squad will lose only one player next year, former Chris Chandler is scheduled to return to Wheaton, so the foundation is there for next fall. With an impressive showing in the State tournament, and a solid nucleus of returning, the women should be heard from even more next year. Third in the state certainly speaks well for this year's squad.

Bill Cohen '82 as a Polar Bear basketball star.
Frat sexism?

Four debate College role

by HOLLY HENKE

An excited crowd of over 400 packed Kresge Auditorium Wednesday evening to hear a formal debate on whether the College should recognize fraternities which deny women full membership.

Fraternity members, independent, and concerned faculty members filling the aisles and stage, to hear four students address issues of autonomy, student rights, and college policy.

Harold Wingood '79 and Lynn Lazaroff '81 argued against recognition of the so-called "sexist" fraternities which include TD, Beta, and Chi Phi. Neil Moses '90 and Molly Hoagland '80 spoke in favor of recognition for the three frats.

Opening the debate, Harold Wingood, member of Portland Fraternities, noted, "I termed the words "recognize" and "support" as synonymous. In calling for the College to recognize the right of men to join fraternities which deny women full membership, we are not seeking to broaden our intellectual horizons.

"When a freshman woman joins a discriminating fraternity, that particular frat organization assumes that its female participants want nothing new...that women want nothing to do with policy and procedure...that women are content to fulfill their historical role as subservient," he said.

Wingood scoffed the College for its "passive acknowledgement" of this kind of role for women in some fraternities.

A formal refusal by the College to recognize a fraternity which does not grant women full membership would in effect be saying, "We do not believe that women should under any circumstances, be accepted or accept themselves as anything less than active, articulate, creative and equal members of an organization or community," claimed the Phi U senior.

Molly Hoagland '80, a member of Beta and speaker in favor of College recognition and support, focused on the importance of the individual in decision making at Bowdoin.

"Bowdoin fraternities, like the admissions office and the College, attract a variety of individuals, and fraternities supply maximum choice because there are ten unique houses," she said.

"The options are made available to all individuals, male and female. Freely choose whether they want to join a fraternity where they can be a social member or full member, an active member or an inactive member, or not a member at all.

"Bowdoin is an institution which serves the individuals and group interests, and is maintaining this by recognizing all ten fraternities.

An independent, Lynn Lazaroff, said sex discrimination is contrary to the College's commitment to an educational equality, which Title IX law requires. Lazaroff said that while the College opened its doors wide for the influx of women in 1972, some fraternities in opening their doors, have only opened them half way...Bowdoin is offering its students a

Pres goes before Boards; discusses budgetary changes

by NANCY ROBERTS and ROBERT DESIMONE

Before he met with the members of the Policy Committee of the Governing Boards and its Budget and Audit Sub-Committee last Friday, to discuss the upcoming budget, President of the College Willard Esteman took a moment to review Bowdoin's future. "I remain convinced that the next twenty years or so will determine the deep structural strength of Bowdoin for a large part of its third century. If we give up now; if we settle for faint-heartedness; if we lack the courage to think and act boldly, Bowdoin may not see another opportunity to solidify its stature among the best for several generations."

Esteman is faced with the monumental job of organizing a budget that runs into the tens of millions of dollars. He is concerned that a budget of Bowdoin's magnitude is prepared only one year in advance. Because of this, policy, decisions such as those which effect such important considerations as the size of the College are often made on an ad hoc basis, instead of being seen in the thought that they deserve, he feels.

"There are too many complications when you do only one year at a time," explains the President. "We should have out here three or four years of budgets. That's where you should be trying to make difficult tradeoff decisions. If you decide to increase the size of the College, make it a policy decision. Say ok, a college of 1600 would be significantly better than a college of 1200 and realize the costs. Essentially," adds Esteman, "we're trying to avoid being like the student who visits "til the day before the paper is due to write it."

Esteman proposes to rework Bowdoin's budgetary procedure. "If I had it my way, let's say by June '79 we would have, in essence, finished most of our work (Continued on Page 4)

Vandals hit tower elevator; $2000 damage reported

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

When the student on duty from midnight Monday evening was relieved by the security guard at 2:00 A.M., she had neither seen nor heard anything out of the ordinary. She took the elevator up to her room on the seventh floor, thereby causing the other to return to the first floor. "When one elevator goes up, explained the security guard on duty Paul Elich, "the other comes down." "When she went up to the seventh floor I heard a small bang in the other one. That happens every once in a while, though, so I didn't think about it. Then I heard a bang - a loud bang. I went over to check it and the elevator was stuck on the second floor."

"I went up there and there was a fire hose jammed in the door. The other elevator was stuck on the fourteenth floor. Then I notified Lynne," Lynne Harrigrich '79, student intern at the Center, received a call at approximately 2:45 A.M. "All he told me," she said, "was that the elevators were jammed. (Continued on Page 5)

Apology

No, you never get any fun.
Out of the things you haven't done,
But they are the things that I do not like to be amid, because the suitable things you didn't do give a lot more trouble than the unsuitable things you did.

— Ogles Nash

At issue

One would be an idiot to disagree with the speaker who said sexism is wrong. However, the point at issue during Wednesday night's debate was not the sexist policy of the three fraternities—that was assumed—but that the College is willing to do about it.

One speaker proposed to insert the word "sex" into the statement of College policy on discrimination. This incredibly simple resolution not only reeks of unfair post facto tact, but will undoubtedly cause bad feelings by the strong-armed maneuvers required to enact it.

As an academic exercise in ex- panded ideals, the debate was fine. But as a practical investigation of the situation here at the College it failed. Moral platitudes were used to cover for a lack of opinion grounded in fact. One need only consider why more than half of this year's in-coming women joined either Beta, TD or Chi Psi to see that the issue here is anything but cut and dry.

What is most obviously lacking is an understanding of the position which the three houses are in. Fraternities are not bound to Title IX. Moreover, it is the national organization, not the local chapter, which dictates policy. Acting against policy means a loss of funds and depending on the case, the re-possession of the physical structure itself.

Just as the article of the debate stated, it is up to the College, more specifically the administrators, to act in a way responsible to its own policy. At present, the College, while acting within the bounds of any existing educational opportunity legislation, is passively supporting sexist practices. In acting to right the situation, the College can either act work with or against fraternities and its members, those who must do the actual work once College policy is clarified. One can only hope the College will appreciate the spirit of co-operation.

Finally, for those who seek involvement in this issue, take this word of caution. Easy as it is for students to lobby for equality, it is equally easy for them to be careless in recognizing the time-consuming and burdensome nature of real change.

The process by which a week's worth of activity and upset is refined and combined to form a newspaper is notoriously imperfect. And so, it surprises few, if any, when things that shouldn't have happened do. But even more upsetting is when things that should have happened don't.

What we are getting at is this: as a result of a reporter's missing his deadline and writing six pages instead of the anticipated four, the story on the President's tenure proposal which appeared last week was missing a few important facts.

First and perhaps most important was a clarification of the procedure President Enteman envisaged for the meeting of the "Senior Faculty" in the course of a tenure review. A vote would not necessarily be taken at that informational meeting; instead, the Dean of the Faculty would invite each senior faculty member to send written comments within two weeks, with silence indicating consent.

Second is the purpose of the "blackball" provision. Requiring unanimous consent of all members participating in each level of the review process, said Enteman, was a way of ensuring that every valid and substantial objection was closely examined and taken into account in the tenure process. "If the objection has been stated and if it has substantial political force," he said, "then the other members of the body would have to go on to work on that objection.

And lastly comes the matter of student input. Drawing from his experience at Union, Enteman suggests holding a series of "very careful" interviews with the candidate's former students (including alumni). In the interviews, we were not interested in the student's conclusions as much as the reasons behind the conclusions... We always put very hard questions to them," he said.

On tenure reform

by HOLLY HENKE

It is no wonder President En- teman's proposals for tenure review have created great conster- tion. His proposed time limit on tenured positions is entirely too rigid. And his suggestions for revising the appointment procedure are quite alarming, if not totally absurd.

The policy, Enteman favors would prevent the College's senior faculty from growing excessively large, by means of a quota system. His proposal restricts tenured seats to two-thirds of the teaching positions in the College. The President justly points out the vital need for "new blood" to periodically occupy the unoccupied positions. Size of the permanent faculty is indeed a valid con- sideration.

Nevertheless, quanta allow for little flexibility, something Bowdoin claims to value so highly, if the College were to implement a quota system now, many of the junior faculty would lose their chances at tenure, in departments where the junior faculty is short of tenured professors. (About fifty percent of the faculty have tenure presently.) But the very success of Enteman's proposal is on shaky ground with Affirmative Action, since the black and women students who are not all of whom are unternured, would miss out. Clearly the College would miss out too, for Bowdoin could certainly benefit greatly from a senior faculty which is not all white.

The availability of qualified candidates is another area Entemann's rigid quota fails to recognize. Qualified candidates come in waves, as does everything else. One year there might be a surplus, the next an overabundance of exceptional candidates, while the next year very few. A fixed quota would not allow the College to take advantage of such current trends.

For this and others, a fixed number of tenured positions is not necessarily going to increase competition, to the contrary, where Enteman believes will result in appointment of the best qualified candidates. On the con- trary, such a rigid system could well discourage qualified candidates from applying for tenure. Enteman has the Bowdoin in the first place.

Most candidates naturally want to go to a place where the future looks most promising. If all tenured positions in a particular department are filled, a teacher is likely to accept instead a position in an underpopulated liberal tenure policy -- perhaps, one which tenures the best qualified candidates as they come along.

Quite frankly, the President's recommended tenure plan would make the College even more uncompetitive than it already is, to the nation's young professors. Salaries at Bowdoin are not exactly enticing. In fact, professorships in the United States have not kept pace with the cost of living has increased 52%.
In other words, today's faculty might well consider less real income than their predecessors were in 1972. And certainly salaries are similar at small private colleges, but certainly not at all private colleges.

In the AAP's report on faculty compensation at the national level, the College would again be outmatched by the twenty-fourth, well behind Amherst, Wesleyan, Swarthmore, Colgate, and the University. And the rest of the world is again in that group with a median $25,500. Bowdoin's median is $22,300. Beginning salaries are consider- ably lower than these figures.

But in any event a few thousand dollars can make the difference between a young teacher make up his mind between Bowdoin and another institution. Understand that these are no small figures for those professors who do end up at Bowdoin would progress through a series of malodorous review processes before receiving tenure. He envisions a procedure whereby a candidate must be dismissed in each two-year re- commendation from his department, then the Faculty Affairs Com-
Lecture reveals true Irish spirit; Kenny exalts less well-known life

by ALEX STEVENSON

At the risk of inducing the very didactic sedum so deftly avoided by Herbert Kenny, journalist and author, in his talk on Irish Literary women last Wednesday, I shall venture to guess that the more mature and nuanced approach to the subject that would have found the hour as remarkable for its enjoyment as for its enlightenment as did those listening.

Which is by way of saying that an attempt to penetrate the grain of a book as long as this is, and although it may be true that the writer is known chiefly for the short lecture just as there is no such thing as a large whiskey, and usually it is true that the ratio of attendance to intellectual worth, is infrequently refreshing. Mr. Kenny was all three, although his talk was only briefly long.

In absorbing his educational efforts of the sort of drab, painful, and trivia-ridden tendencies which these types generally acquire, Mr. Kenny chose to expand, thoroughly and humorously, upon a topic which is simple, yet illuminating for literary dilettantes like myself. In this short, Irish short literature such as American literature, has usually been subsumed to English literature. Joyce and Yeats, exalted by American and English critics, are working from the archetypal Irish authors. Joyce's Ulysses, for example, is most interesting for its formal implications, a fact which tends to negate its importance as a peculiar story.

Who instead does Kenny feel has most aptly represented the consciousness of Irish people, a population one-hundredth the size of that in the one-hundredth of the population of America? One of Kenny's nominations would be the sixteenth century Venetian portraitists of impoverished farmers led Yeats to choose the greatest English novelist. While Lien Ursia Trinity has captured the imagination of the educated and learned about Irish history, those interested would find a much more accurate portrayal of North Irish conflicts. Kenny feels, by reading Carl F. Breeze, to have received his fellow countrymen as the best novelist of the work, a man from widespread anonymity.

The way in which Irish literature, certainly, this has been largely ignored is in part explicable by the fact that many of the prominent English novelists had a tendency to be manipulators and transgressors. This explanation does not, however, hold true for the fact that much of Irish literature has been translated into languages other than Irish.

Kenny's desultoriness provided a welcome relief from the talks and papers of the conference. I, who feel that the only truly interesting are those which are rigidly structured.

Speaking in a gentle voice with Irish accents, he spoke to a small Daggott Lounge audience. Kenny interspersed his message with anecdotes, humorous and discerning, with the mocking tenor of much Irish literature. Oliver St. John Gogarty was a notable example of the type of Irishman of whom Kenny chose to speak. Lacking genius. Gogarty nevertheless possessed an intellectual facility which may be his most enduring legacies as well.

It was through Kenny's talk of Daggott Lounge, that one can now get a sense of those able Irish men of letters broken by the pedagogy of an education. Irish literature is a bit like good college lectures—both are undererrated but vital. Perhaps it is not inappropriate to note that Mahaffey, a wit of the Trinity College, could not in his own words. He is a good example of a woman who could not possibly be mistaken for anything but an expression of opinion. For example, why couldn't I believe we were sitting there, playing cards in front of the President—alert! I said (I couldn't believe he was worried about it)

But I don't think I'm mistaken in saying that we met with problems years with regard to the administration in the future.

I think I must admit that the hockey games where President Enteman will rise in the bleachers and shout as in a cheer, and we'll all about 'Willard—Willard, Willard—...I hope he doesn't mind! I just think it is great that we have such a dynamic and obviously concerned individual at the reins of the university.

The proctors' roommates help, sure. They help all the cute, impenetrable freshmen in their sneaky designs for excitement. Hey guys, thanks for the help, Bill and Mike! sprawl say "Modesty is the best policy"...understand, you swollen fatheads?

Sincerely,
Barb Sawbill and Mike Sharon

Dedicated to: the proctors, world over

Chutzpah

To the Editor: Just a few words to commend the Oriental staff on its willingness to take a stand on an important issue the Cohen-Hashay/White senatorial race. Nothing disturbs me more than the creasing acceptance of the notion that neutrality is always a safe policy. Maybe other organizations and bodies of the College will follow your example.

Todd Buchanan '80

LETTERS

Insulted

To the Editor: As a social member of Theta Delta Chi, I am outraged, annoyed, and angered by the ongoing investigation of "discrimination" on the part of the fraternity by the fraternities. As I understand it, a committee headed by Mr. Morris, was set up to determine whether the college should continue to support fraternities, and to determine whether or not such discrimination.

In effect, what the committee is proposing is to force frats like TD into a choice between losing local status or national status.

I believe there is a gross misconception involved here. While women are, in truth, not allowed to join TD, the real reason is not the same reason a one TD is a very strong national- orientation fraternity. Stress should be placed on the word "fraternity"— a community of men who associate for reasons of common interest or pleasure. The ninety or so Bowdoin students who are full members of Theta Delta Chi are not discriminating against women in all things, of course. They are simply doing all they can for us while remaining within other official or non-official groups. In the future, we'll believe it or not, we are content—we are not asking for anything outside our portion. College shouldn't outsiders who most likely are ignorant in the affair that we are gaining.

The TD women are not a bunch of malcontents who feel locked down. We do not ask for full recognition by men. During Rush, we tell the freshmen that we are not allowed to have all of them, we do not receive them in the least. Anyone turned off will certainly come to frat through this year! Twenty-one women dropped at TD this semester, and not one dropped at BG, which is quite a coincidence. Better another "discriminatory" frat. For myself, I am often associated with a frat which sticks to its guns rather than surrender its autonomy and individuality. After all, fraternity activities, not merely dorms, cafeteria or social clubs. I think it is fine and dandy that some frats choose to grant women full membership (somewhat of an advantage from away from home in a world where it used to be something they were forced to do. I personally, would not choose to belong to any frat. Fortunately this sort of choice does exist. I choose a house where I have no sexual status at all. I love TD, I do so for the other women who belong there—my "sisters" so to speak. So, the future of the other women who belong there is not an issue.

Sincerely,
Jane Getchell '81

LOGICAL

To the Editor:

I am logical: Bowdoin College cannot support sexism. Therefore, if a fraternity chooses to be sexless, Bowdoin College cannot support the fraternity. This is not to challenge the fraternity's autonomy, but only to point out that if they continue their discriminatory policies, they must be willing to accept the consequences: disassociation from the College and all that this entails.

So what is all the argument about?

Respectfully,
Thomas Sahib '81
Jonathan Bush '81

Great guy

To the Editor: I have just finished reading the October 13th Orient (Parents Weekend) article on President Enteman, and I felt a response was necessary. From the first time I heard about this president, by my reading of the Orient article nicely done, I thought, by James Cavenio just now, I must say I think President Enteman is neat. It really makes me feel good about the world when everything I hear, see, and experience is about a person tells me, "Here is one great guy!" Admittedly, I've never actually met the closest I ever came was when a friend and I were playing gin rummy or some such game in the Middlebury dining room, and in walked the President-elect surrounded by a few students, making me think that he was out to see someone he knew, yet, he was not, he was the President-elect, a student's friend. That's love I think.

Sincerely,
John Gogarty '81

LET'S BE REAL

To the Editor: I think the "modesty of the best policy"...understand, you swollen fatheads?

Sincerely,
Barb Sawbill and Mike Sharon

Community

To the Editor: Gentleman's observations in last week's Orient reemphasized the lamentable fact that Bowdoin students do not participate enough in the Brunswick community. But community awareness most often arises as a result of experience. His comments therefore serve as a point of departure for this letter, and I hope that Bowdoin also recommend, as strongly as possible, that all prospective students take time off before they enter college.

Whether a year, whether more, College outside the con venional academic framework changes a person's perspective. The transitional period between the worlds of high school and college seems an opportune time during which to resolve past and future thinking in a different environment. It was away from Bowdoin unfortunately after two years here already that I discovered learning for myself.

Ask almost anyone who has been away: those who return bring back new ideas and firmer direction. All of what Bowdoin is proud to offer: its personable approach, the high intellectual quality among student body and faculty alike, the benefits of location in Maine all become more valuable.

A sign of the academic malaise

(Continued on Page 4)
Bayer goes to Law School; labels it a big headache
by MARK BAYER
Billed as the most ferocious of Columbia's law professors, the Germanic "Herr" Smitt scanned his reading list this morning by saying, "If Mr. de Gaulle were here today, he'd ask, or perhaps command, me to remove this tome from my virginity. The date? Friday, Friday the thirteenth.
Massachusetts students, accustomed to the subject of major motion pictures and bestselling book, law school has been the goal of many Bowdoin students. Nearly eighty percent of last year's graduates hope to continue their education on a graduate level. Legal study is a favorite. Governor Professor Miller from Harvard's law advisor, often recommends the law school he attended, Columbia, to prospective lawyers.
I took him up on his suggestion.
The popularity of law school is a paradox. Nearly 500,000 attorneys practice in the United States, and contrary to the popular image, most of them are not well off. Competition for admission to American law schools is still intense. The average, yes, "average," Columbia Law School graduate was offered $25,000 to practice in New York last year. There is a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.
"I ask you a question and you give me another question. I probe your mind like a surpise probing a brain. And at the end of the week, here, you'll be able to think like a lawyer." -- The Case
The nature of law school education involves the Socratic case method of teaching. Since the renovation of the century by Dean Christopher Columbus Langdell of the Harvard Law School, the soul rot in hell. A lecture in front of 50 students is unavoidably dull, so the professors rattle on Ultra-right youth group recruits students

by WILMUTRICHET
The same ultra-right political philosophy is now one of the greatest opposition to the nationwide college student strike in 1978. A group of students have not only recognized a motivator to reorganize a chapter of the ultra-right on the campus. As part of a recruitment program, the campus, Fred Habro, and the ultra-right, Peter Fishbey, who is a field organizer for the American Freedom for Youth (A.F.Y.), was on campus earlier this week to promote the organization.
The A.F.Y. was founded in 1969 by the estate of William F. Buckley, Jr. for the purpose of furthering the conservative movement. The spirit of the organization is embodied in the Spen, a statement, a doctrine which identifies the strongest role of the A.F.Y. as being in the promotion of the interests of free enterprise and limited government.

Enteman goes before Boards, suggests change
(Continued from Page 1)
the 1981-82 and 1982-83 budgets, or what we would call broad outlines. These are the budgets that "we'll have a little of leverage over."
Enteman projects that the next twenty or thirty years will be difficult ones for colleges. Citing a statistical study of colleges there was a 28% decline in live births from 1961-1975, the President warned about colleges such as Bowdoin maintaining their quality of life. "We'll get there without tearing the College apart," he maintains. "There are no easy answers, but if you don't get control over yourself, you're going to have crises." With strong leadership and a healthy sense of optimism, the College will continue to rise, rather than fall in the years to come, he predicts.

A home for senior citizens?
An anomaly for the graduating class? Or just another tall story? What is the "Senior Center" anyway? We want an answer.
The Ad Hoc Committee for the Elimination of Confusion in Campus Nomenclature almost speechlessly delivered breathless anticipation the first annual (and only ever) "RENAME THE MIS-NAMED SENIOR CENTER" contest! If you can't spell the good name we are, this is your big chance to do something about it. And if we decide that your name is the name for that building, here's what will happen:
1. We'll fight like hell to see that President Enteman and the student body do all they can to make your name the name of the "Senior Center," and...2. We'll spring into action at a good restaurant for you and your favorite food.

Ulimate Tour & Travel
Come on in and visit us at our bright, new location just two doors from our old office.

Brunswick Tour & Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TEL. 725-5587
Two of the ten members of the nationally acclaimed Pauline Koner Dance Consort dance at one of the several Bowdoin performances this past week. Orient/Shen

Vandals wreak havoc in Center; Otis elevator men come to rescue

(Continued from Page 1)

So, I told him to call the Physical Plant in the morning. I had no idea that someone had wreaked havoc with them. "I had no idea what had happened until the morning, I went up to the fourth floor and the doors were bent off their tracks and there were blood stains. I also noticed that the fire hose was missing. It was apparent that there had been a fight."

"Someone on the sixteenth floor studying heard some screaming on the elevators and heard the ringing when the elevator alarm bells rang."

Members of the maintenance crew at the Center managed to pry open one of the elevators late Tuesday morning. Mechanics from Otis Elevator in Portland, however, had to be called to work on the other one. Several days and a considerable amount of money were required to restore the second one to workable condition. "Four or five years ago," commented one man from Otis, "one of the cars was racked up, but nothing like this. They ripped the wiring, kicked the cab out, and ripped the two lift covers."

The estimate of the cost of repair to the elevators alone to be around $1,000. Each of the two matched firehoes cost $450. Adding the cost of labor, the bill will probably exceed $2,000.

The Senior Center secretary Noma Petroff added that, "Having one elevator wasn't a whole lot of an inconvenience. Having both out was. People were very annoyed about it. Some of the classes didn't even go up to the sixteenth floor."

Residents of the building who were evacuated during a false alarm day had to climb the stairs to return to their rooms.

Some people expressed concern that having a student at the desk during a potentially troublesome time of the evening perhaps does not amount to much as a deterrent to troublemakers as a security guard might. Students have maintained that the desk has shifted since a security manpower cut last year.

Dick Mersereau, Assistant Director of the Senior Center, disagreed. "I think it's something that happened that's very difficult to control. Apparently eight to ten drunk students came in, but that happens all the time."

"We have a free and open campus. If someone decides they're going to destroy something, they're going to destroy it. (The security guard) sits here at the desk ten stories away."

"This is probably the first incident in a long time of real damage. It's depressing that students - drunk or not - will do such things."

Dean of Housing Lois Egasti believed, as did Mersereau, that, "It wouldn't happen whether there were a student or a security guard sitting at the desk. You don't know if someone's trashin' the tenth floor."

"We're going to find out who is responsible. I don't want to charge the entire bill to the Senior Center. Until we know more, we'll be looking into it in individual students."

"I'm irate about this. I'd like to know what the students think about it. I have been in the Senior Center, I'd be outraged," she said.

A faulty smoke detector kept Senior Center residents on the move early this week, as that building's fire alarm was triggered three times in less than 18 hours.

The first of the false alarms came at 7:09 p.m. Monday night, coincidentally almost exactly a week after the Center's planned drill conducted in conjunction with the College's Fire Safety Week.

Building residents and students attending that night's Senior Center seminars gathered in the first floor lobby and vestibule, but few actually left the building. Students were allowed to return to their rooms minutes later, after security personnel had checked the basement area for signs of a fire.

It was later theorized that a faulty laundry-room ventilation system has raised the temperature in the vicinity of the detector to a level sufficient to trigger the alarm.

Brunswick fire department personnel arrived on the scene with one truck at 7:17 p.m., eight minutes after the alarm was originally sounded. The Senior Center's fire alarm system is tied directly to the Brunswick fire station via Bowdoin's Communications Center.

Exec Board muddles much; lengthy debate settles little

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

If at first you don't succeed, try another proposal...

At their regular meeting on Tuesday night, the Student Executive Board accepted their third proposal, this year on concerning the College's hiring and tenure policies. The new minority and women faculty members. Before this Tuesday night's meeting, the Board had twice accepted and twice rescinded proposals dealing with the same issue.

Last Tuesday night's proposal, formulated by Missin nothing in the "friendship clause" added by Julia Leightin '81, passed by a 7-3-1 margin. It reads: "We, the Executive Board, would like to see more blacks and minority faculty members at Bowdoin College to further the goal of diversifying perspectives among the faculty."

The statement was directed at the administration and the Governing Board, but also addressed the student body's concern with the minority issue.

During the open-forum segment of the meeting, one student asked the Board members why they had taken so much time to take a stand and write a definitive proposal. "It is one sitting down with Dean Fuchs. He asks questions you've got," said Geoflhe Goodwin '82. "But we're gathering the same facts and the gathering of some facts, why hasn't the Board sat down and solved the problem with the proposal?"

"You make it sound like the process is very simple," countered a member of the student body and the rate of the appropriating financial aid.

In other business, the Board reviewed a proposed by seven students requesting that smoking be prohibited during the College's move to the upper floor. The petition, the claim is keeping us out of the companies during the meetings. Members of the Board agreed to stop smoking, but added that they will not break to the meetings for those who wish to smoke outside of the room.

Chisholm to give Russwurm talk

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

She is the senior Democratic Congressionalwoman in the U.S. House of Representatives, Secretary of the House Democratic Caucus, Vice Chairwoman of the Congressional Black Caucus, the only woman and the only black to sit on the House Rules Committee. She was recently appointed by President Jimmy Carter, House Speaker Thomas 'Tip' O'Neill, and other national leaders. Author of two books, she is the only black woman ever to be a member of the Presidency.

On Friday, November 17, at 7:30 p.M. in Kizzie Auditorium, Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm will deliver a speech entitled "America's Imperiled Spirit," as part of the John Brown Russwurm Distinguished Lecture series.

According to Assistant Professor John Walter, coordinator of the series, the purpose of Chisholm's lecture is to help improve the relationship between blacks and whites not only at Bowdoin, but in the community at large.

"I think people are less aware of the problems blacks face now than they were in the 1960's. I think it may be time to re-acquaint people with the fact that relations between blacks and whites are not as good as they might be."

"If this is to be a nation of one people, as our flag and our money say, we're going to have to improve."
Molly Hoagland ’80 and Neil Moses ’80 plot their strategy as they prepared to defend fraternities whose policy it is not to allow women as full members. Assistant Professor of History Steven Crow offers his suggestions. OrientShen

Debaters tangle on women’s role double standard. It is saying, here, women, come join us in the community, come be a part of what we can give you, but we only give you so much.” she said.

(Continued from Page 1)

Reading the College’s official policy with regard to fraternities, written in 1963 when race and religion were such volatile issues, Hoagland questioned the difference between sex and race. How can the College dictate one and not the other, she asked.

TI member Neil Moses ’80, a speaker in favor of recognition, said he had heard “no complaints” from the women in his fraternity or from those in the other two. “The girls in the frat are in agreement with the policies. They don’t have any objections… They have the right to vote on social issues. If they want a more political atmosphere, they can go elsewhere.”

“I think the fact that these three frats are the biggest speaks for itself… the women are satisfied… We have a right to preserve autonomy without interference from the College, and pressure from outside.”

In the rebuttal portion of the debate, and in the question period following, the opposing speakers brought up some new arguments.

Lazaroff asked Moses how a fraternity with only social membership for women could justify its existence at a college with a precedent against discrimination.

Moses responded that all fraternities produce discrimination to some extent, since they had only a select number of people during rush. “We recognize special interest groups in the College. Does the Alpha-Am admit any white members? They have a right to their policy. Then we have a right to ours,” he said.

The audience could not help but chuckle at one of Moses’ last remarks. He had to swallow his words when he began with the phrase, “Our women…”

In rebuttal to Hoagland and Moses, Wingood said that the separation of social and political rights is bad. “One who is given only social privileges and are denied political ones, could one day take a position in the back of a bus.” Wingood said.

Wingood and Lazaroff both asked Hoagland why sex equality is not as necessary as equality for minorities. “Racism and sexism cannot be so simply equated.” Hoagland said. “There are blacks who don’t want to be discriminated against. The women we’re talking about don’t feel like they are being discriminated against…”

“Besides, if the situation is so severe, where is the proof that these women are emerging from the College with inferiority complexes?”

(Continued from Page 2)

President’s proposal too rigid mately, the Senior Faculty, the Dean of the College, the President, and finally the Governing Boards.

Normally each level would not override a negative recommendation of a level before. Essentially the proposal requires that a candidate receive unanimous consent from the entire senior faculty before tenure is granted. What this means is, that just one objection could prevent a candidate from getting appointment.

A call for unanimity is absurd in the first place. Entzman’s motives are admirable, but his plan is much too idealistic. He obviously wants to make sure that every possible objection is taken into consideration, before tenure, which could last as long as forty years, is granted. But professional and personal opinion are bound to differ, and indeed they should in a healthy and free academic environment. One objection alone should be no reason to deny a qualified candidate tenure. If one dissenter can not rally substantial support behind his objection, then his argument probably has little warrant.

Unanimity is even more unlikely to happen, given the kind of procedural revisions the President has in mind. He has stated that he does not necessarily want a formal vote from the Senior Faculty after a candidate review meeting. Rather he suggests that each professor write a letter to him or the Dean of Students stating approval or disapproval. Professors who do not write would be considered in support of a candidate. The extreme danger in the proposal lies in the President’s agreement to keep quiet the names of dissenters. “I am willing to ‘take the heat’ if that’s what it means,” he said.

Certainly the “heat” should come out in discussion, not out of covert dismissal in letters. All objections to a candidate should be expressed openly, or not at all. Entzman’s plan presents all kinds of peril for the future of a college committed to academic freedom. Unpleasant though it may be, there is little to prevent conspiracy from mounting in a faction of the faculty — for instance, in a group which opposes the ideology of a tenure candidate. Such a group could conceivably succeed in denying a candidate tenure simply by means of this covert activity.

A policy which promotes such power politics, and poses so many potential hazards naturally provokes criticism. Students should take the cue from the junior faculty who have expressed such strong concern. Now is the time to examine the issues, take a stand, voice an opinion, and of course, develop alternative plans which comply with the educational goals of the College, and with the principles of academic freedom.
Basketball team to be improved, coach maintains predicted on the ability of a team to be competitive. Again, this offense is heavily dependent on speed for effective execution. Each player must be extremely versatile as well. The guards will have to work well inside and the big men will have to show some shooting range in order for Bicknell to get the most out of this type of attack.

(Continued from Page 8)

As a result of last year’s ruling allowing freshmen to participate in varsity athletics, freshmen and sophomores are pushing the veterans harder just to name a few.

BRUNSWICK BARBER SHOP
52 Main St.

BOOK SALE
at Macbeans
Don't miss it
Macbeans
Books & Music
(344 Main St., Brunswick, Maine)

Enjoy the Outdoors
This Fall
"By the Fire"

Travel Notes For Bowdoin Travelers

JUST A REMINDER to call us at Stowe Travel (725-5573), or stop by on our office at 9 Pleasant St. in beautiful downtown Brunswick (across the street from Dunkin Donuts). If you need last minute flight reservations and airline tickets for your Thanksgiving or Christmas. Remember, however, that we’ll be closed tomorrow, Veterans Day, except for the arrival and departure services of Greely and Holmes.

DON’T FORGET that we have Airport Transportation Service to connect with all Delta flights in and out of Portland Jetport. The airport bus will pick you up at Meunon Hill and return you to the campus for the low round-trip fare of only $9.20.

One way fare is just $6.90. Tickets for the Airport bus can be purchased at Stowe Travel. And if there’s ever any problem in the airport bus, you can always call us at 725-5573, or the Airport bus itself at 729-0221.

WE HAVE ALWAYS URGED “Bowdoin travelers” to ask for the “tyred flight reservation card” (one of our specialties at Stowe) listing exactly the dates, flight numbers and times for all reservers for reference to all their advance flight arrangements. And at Stowe, we have always suggested that you have your return flights home, given the originating carrier on that end, your telephone number, etc. should be any reason that the airlines need contact you directly.

For example, Sunday, November 26, (the Sunday after Thanksgiving) is always one of the busiest days of the year for the airport. If you are flying back to Maine, we would especially urge you to reregister your return flight reservations at your earliest possible convenience after arrival home.

It is also important these days to arrive as early as possible for your flight so as to get your seat assignment and be boarded. Remember that airlines like the Stowe after Thanksgiving are even more crowded than ever, planes are often sold out with all these new low air fares and the ever increase in air travel!

AND LAST but not least, remember, we have some new fares on Greyhound whereby your travel dollar takes you even farther. For example, there’s the new on-sale fare of $149.50 anywhere in the country! Greyhound then goes on to say that there’s a new unlimited travel pass at $99.50 for 7 days with all the extensions in flexibility you could want. A 16 day pass also sells for $149.50.

GREYHOUND BUSES for Portland, Boston, New York and all points south and west leave Stowe Travel daily at 7:30 a.m. and at the new time of 8:25 p.m. at night. Travel is coded to a useable and personal experience whether you travel alone or as a group. So always begin your trip with Stowe. We’re as big as a travel agency should be with seven full time travel consultants to help you!

Bowdoin coach Merrill pursues baseball career

(Continued from Page 8)

"I don’t think anyone in the minors doesn’t have aspirations about reaching the major leagues in some capacity," Merrill admitted when asked about his future plans. "For me, that goal is a little closer to reality than it was five years ago, when I was an assistant coach at the University of Maine. I see the light at the end of the tunnel. So I will continue to pursue this endeavor."

Most of us want to do what’s best for the kids," he stated, in describing minor league policy. "The best interest of the kids has to come first. If it doesn’t, we get burned in the end; we end up with unhappy people playing for us."

The West End franchise which Merrill manages is only a 75-mile drive from New York City, but it is a thousand miles away from the New York Yankees. The Barons’ official consists of a principal owner, a general manager, several assistants in the front office, a manager, two coaches, and a trainer. Only one of these positions, general manager, is a full-time, year-round job. Many of the players earn $700 per month, while college stars earn as much as $22,000. The major league minimum is the total attendance at seventy home games this past season was $50,000.

If a major league opportunity does not come along, Merrill is prepared to work in some other area. "I have a college degree I can fall back on," he says, and I am ready to start working with college football, so something might work out in the spring."

When he is not managing the Yankee West Haven farm club, Carl Merrill explains football to players like junior Eric Arvidson, Orient/Shen.

Gridders finish tomorrow with traditional rival

(Continued from Page 8)

And while it had one big breakdown in the line drive to Ion T. Demergy, it did not allow any long passes. Butes was quite strong, though. It was able to move the ball to the Ion. 1st half, and the quarter." The passing attack "showed improvement," of course, "in the way we throw," primarily because of Kinkel's strong showing in relief. The versatile junior has apparently earned the starting assignment against Colby tomorrow.

"A game," Dan Bueker played a good football game," the coach said, "after a tough contest." His blocking was consistently good. John Blomfield once again played strong football game at defensive tackle. Larry Lynton played well in the defensive backfield. And I was impressed with Kinkel's passing and the way he directed the team."

Branding report

Ads for Colby tomorrow. Lents looks for a tough game. Like Bowdoin, Colby sports an average record but is capable of beating anyone on any given day. "They have an extremely strong defense," Lents notes. "They have two different quarterbacks and can run two different kinds of attacks. We must be able to play two different types of defense. Their defense has been the strongest part of their game this year, so we hope to move the ball on them."

Bowdoin and Colby have met on the football field at least once every year since 1892 except for 1941-45. When Bowdoin did not field a team due to the war, the Polar Bears have won 52, lost 29, and tied eight. There have been many big games and thrilling moments throughout the series. This contest, though, will be one of fierce pride, not of immense skill."
Football title hopes tackled

by BILL STUART

Three periods do not a football game make. This statement was vividly illustrated by Bowdoin's 5-1 victory over the Polar Bears Saturday, as they let one poor quarter separate them from their fourth consecutive conference win. Bowdoin's lead in the third quarter allowed Bates to rally for three touchdowns and a 21-14 victory that put the Bobcats at the front of the league standings for the first time in four years.

The defeat left the Polar Bears with a 2-5-1 record and without a shot at a 500 conference or a conference title, goals the team had realized the past two seasons. The outcome also removed Bowdoin's game between Bowdoin and Colby at Whittier Field almost completely. The game will now be played for pride rather than for a conference championship.

The Bobcats' open second half displayed championship-caliber football during the first half with a strong defensive effort and an attack that kept the pressure on the Bobcats' defense. After Greg Zabel put the Bobcats on top with a 27-yard field goal following a strong goal-line stand by the Bears, the Bowdoin defense remained 56 yards on only six plays to take a 3-lead.

The drive was highlighted by Trip Spitzer's 36-yard run and was clipped when fullback Tom Sroda fumbled the ball into the end zone, where tight end Dan Sapers alertly pounced on it for a touchdown. After Himmelrich added the conversion for the visitors.

Bates caught up the football on its 25-yard line in the following series of downs, but the Polor Bears were unable to capitalize. With a first down and goal situation at the Bates 3, the Bears were charged with offensive holding. A Bobcat interference call helped Bowdoin, but the Bears could not score a touchdown. The drive came to an disappointing end when Himmelrich missed a 35-yard field goal.

Defence strong

Late in the half, Bates recovered the ball in Bowdoin's backfield as Bates' defense kept the pressure on the Bobcats' defense during the first half with a strong defensive effort and an attack that kept the pressure on the Bobcats' defense.

Coach Bicknell added the conversion for the visitors.

The Bobcats caught up the football on its 25-yard line in the following series of downs, but the Polar Bears were unable to capitalize. With a first down and goal situation at the Bates 3, the Bears were charged with offensive holding. A Bobcat interference call helped Bowdoin, but the Bears could not score a touchdown. The drive came to an disappointing end when Himmelrich missed a 35-yard field goal.

Bobby Bicknell:

Bowdoin College football coach Bob Bicknell has been named as the new athletic director at the University of Maine at Orono. Bicknell, who has been at Bowdoin for 27 years, will succeed retiring backfield coach Gene Minich, who has served in that position since 1970.

Bicknell led the Polar Bears to a 5-1 conference championship in 1978, the team's first since 1969. He also guided the Bears to a 27-17 victory over Bates in 1977, the school's first victory over Bates in 35 years. Bicknell also coached the Bowdoin basketball team from 1972 to 1975 and was the head basketball coach at Bates from 1967 to 1968.

Teamwork, consistency lead junior booter to 7-1 season

by PETER MADURO

The Polar Bear junior varsity soccer team closed its season last week with a convincing 5-1 victory over Bates. The first half ended with a 1-1 score, but when the second half began, so did the Bowdoin scoring punch. Three quick goals put the game out of reach for the Bobcats and a fourth goal was added just for fun.

The booters' inspired play resulted in an 8-1 season record. They defeated Bridgton Academy, 4-0; Colby, 2-1; Everet Academy, 4-0; Southern Maine Vocational and Technical Institute, 3-2 and 4-0; and Bates, 2-1 and 5-1. The sole defeat was inflicted by Colby, 4-2.

No names are necessary when the success of this team is analyzed:

the word ‘team’ will suffice. From goalmouth to goalmouth (including an incredibly strong bench), it was all team work.

The old saying that players win and coaches take the blame has never been more true than when one sees junior varsity coach Chris Bowman in action. He pulled the strings of the players together in the first few weeks and the players followed his lead to record a season total of 28 goals while surrendering only nine. The offense scored at least twice every game.

In sum, it was a most exciting season for the young booters. Their only regret is that few fans shared it with them.

Postgame Scripts

Big league prospect

by BILL STUART

In the football program, he is listed simply as "Carl Merrill, Offensive Backfield Coach." That description, though accurate, does not begin to tell the story of this former catcher and baseball captain at the University of Maine at Orono. What separates Merrill from the rest of the football staff, and indeed from most other residents of Maine, is the huge gold ring he wears on the finger of his right hand. The ring has a black face with the letters "NY" interwoven and set in diamonds.

If this ring sounds suspiciously like the kind Owner George Steinbrenner ordered for his New York Yankees when they became World Champions last year, you are an astute observer. While Merrill is a part-time gridiron aide at Bowdoin, his primary job is as an assistant to the West Haven Yankees, the Connecticut-based Double-A minor league affiliate of the New York club, two steps from the major leagues.

After graduating from UM-O in 1966, Merrill signed with the Philadelphia Phillies baseball club and played in its minor league system for six years before a knee injury forced him into premature retirement. During the off-seasons, he would switch sports and work as a college football aide. He was an assistant coach at Colby between 1967-69; later, he moved to Bowdoin, coaching the Polar Bears in 1970 and coaching in 1971. His baseball career ended the following year, and he accepted a job at UM-O.

Four years later, Merrill's big break came. Jack Butterfield, his old coach at UM-O, joined the Yankees' front office as director of the minor league system. He invited his former catcher to join the organization as a minor league instructor. Merrill promptly resigned from his alma mater and joined the Yankees, as pitching coach at West Haven in 1977 and as manager in 1978.

Merrill's 1978 team ended up with the best record in the Eastern League, although his Yankees did not win the league title due to an unusual method of selecting the title winner. "You have to develop talent, but you also have to win," he pointed out. "I think teams are at their height at times because they have been successful all year. But you have to have the desire to win as well as the ability to do so. But my role is to decide when to play a game and how to play it."

Merrill's team was successful in 1978. However, there has to be some talent somewhere. He is considered one of the top minor league managers in the country and has been named one of the top three minor league managers in the country by The Sporting News. He has led the Yankees to three straight division titles and one league championship, in 1978.

Although all-time scoring champ Greg Pascolo has graduated, coach Ray Bicknell looks for improvement in the basketball team this year.
Profs hand off hot potato; Student Life to mull sexism

by MICHAEL TARDIFF

As the result of actions taken by both the President of the College and the faculty earlier this week, the Student Life Committee is beginning to explore the question of whether the College should amend its statement on discrimination in the fraternity system.

After a half-hour's worth of discussion at their monthly meeting last Monday, the faculty voted by a nearly unanimous margin to refer to its Student Life committee Professor Kathy Waldron's motion to have the faculty ask the Governing Boards to include sex as one of the grounds on which the College prohibits discrimination in the fraternity system.

Waldron's motion, which she was presenting on behalf of the over fifty members of the BWA, reads as follows:

"Whereas Bowdoin College, a co-educational institution, currently lacks an official policy on sex discrimination in its fraternities, and therefore has no basis for dealing with this problem, be it resolved that the Governing Boards should expand their definitions of fraternity discrimination in the May, 1965, statement of College Policy to include discrimination on the basis of sex. The statement would then read: 'We resist that membership in Bowdoin Fraternities be free of any discrimination based on race, creed, color, or sex..."

(Continued on Page 4)

ED pool plummets, drops by 23%

The Oldest Continuously-Published College Weekly in the United States

NUMBER 9

E. D. pool plummets, drops by 23%

by DIANE MAYER

In 1972, 23% of Bowdoin's Admissions (Office was down to a total of 3,100 applications). As a result, the College's Class of 1976 was the most selective ever in the nation. This fall, however, the vital Early Decision pool, which normally furnishes one-third of the freshman class, suffered a 23% drop from last year's ED total.

Nobodies in Admissions, however, is panicking yet just.

"Any conclusions based solely on the number of Early Decision candidates," says Director of Admissions Bill Mason, "are not valid."

The number of male applicants has declined by 23 percent, and the number of female applicants is down by 24 percent. Overall Early Decision applications have plummeted from a total of 544 in 1977 to 423 this Fall. Noted Mason, "There are a number of theories to account for the drop, but I don't have the answer."

One such theory is that Early Decision is too binding to be an attractive alternative to high school seniors. Mason says "...a tremendous amount of caution among high school students. They are much less willing to jump at things in general. By applying Early Decision, you make a commitment that you will attend if we accept you."

"The baby boom is over. That's what Enelow has been saying."

"It's decreasing population of the college concern for the future," according to interviewee Nicholas Black 79.

Of even greater importance to colleges, however, is the declining percentage of high school students considering college. Fortunately

(Continued on Page 4)

NUMBER OF HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS APPLYING FOR EARLY DECISION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1978</td>
<td>714</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(Continued on Page 4)

INSIDE

Tennessee comes to Maine

- The Williams classic Glass Menagerie inhabits the Experimental Theatre this weekend

- The last of the 200 prints on display at the Walker Art Museum were performed the next evening, Orient/Shen

(Continued on Page 4)

WOMAN SKATERS ORGANIZE FORMAL ICE HOCKEY CLUB

by NANCY ROBERTS

Gray sweatsuits, figures, their posters, helmets and earthen helmets, skate tirelessly up and down the ice at the loud thud of sticks hitting pucks resounds in the Dayton Arena. Female ice hockey players are not a new sight at Bowdoin, but this year marks the advent of a formal club comprised of about twenty-five dedicated women stick-handlers.

"Powder puff" hockey has existed at Bowdoin for the last few years, but this year's club differs in its higher degree of seriousness and organization. Seniors Jeff Johnson, Tim Guen, and Randy Dick, along with assorted other hockey players, have poured their time and expertise as coaches.

Each of the impetus for starting a women's hockey team came from Cloose Sherman '81 who is away this year. But the game is one who got someone fired up last year, notes Carol Brock '79. But Jeff Johnson has taken the club and devoted much time and effort to organizing and coaching.

The College has provided some backing in the form of sticks, pads, helmets, and ice time. But sticks and sweat do not a team make. According to Tim Guen, the women's hockey club is heading toward organization. In line with the current situation, I don't see the justification for picking up another team when the College is considering dropping some junior varsity sports," he says.

Director of Athletics Edmund Coochka emphasized the obstacles which will hinder the attainment of team standing for women's hockey. "It would be very difficult - there are a lot of problems with insurance in games and it would be very expensive to equip them properly. Also, I don't think they're ready for team status."

Now in their second week of practice, the stick-handlers are working on the basics of passing, shooting, and power-skating during their four one-hour practices each week. Says Guen, "The improvement is visible. It's just a matter of getting out there..."

Family members exchange words in The Glass Menagerie in Orient/Shen

(Continued on Page 4)
Revolution

"In perpetrating a revolution, there are two requirements: someone or something to revolt against and someone to actualy show up and do the revolt. The way is casual and both parties may be flexible about time and place but if either faction fails to attend, the whole enterprise is likely to come off badly." - Woody Allen

Within this year's Executive Board, there is certainly enough to revolt against, but perhaps not enough people to actually show up and do the revolting. What is wrong with this year's Board? Four rather important issues have appeared at least four or more times each on the agendas for the eight meetings so far this year. The fact of an item's reappearance on the agenda is not necessarily bad; that the Board has spent time on important issues says that it is dedicated to student concerns.

The time spent, however, has not always been well spent. A motion to ban smoking at Exxon Board meetings appeared three times before the Board this year; no action was taken on the proposal until an independent student petition demanded a decision. An investigation into the future of the Senior Center Program - proposed in early October - has produced report after report from several campus committees, but no definitive statement by the Board. The minority tenure and hiring issue has been kicked around at all but one meeting this year. The Board has also been seeking an adequate expression of the student body's interest in the future of nuclear power since this year's first meeting.

They are not debating the wrong issues. The Board has the responsibility, as expressed in its constitution, to "represent student sentiment." Problems such as the future of the Senior Center Program and the number of minority faculty members directly concern students and should be thoroughly reviewed.

But what is going on? Rather, what is not going on? Someone, as Woody Allen suggested, has to actually show up and do the revolting. Board members have scurried around the campus, sometimes seeking faculty opinion, sometimes collecting committee proposals, sometimes sending two people to gather the same information. Information is there - in a somewhat disorganized fashion - but the Board has not yet taken steps toward making some of their own conclusions or avoiding second-hand news by doing their own digging. Has the Board itself examined solutions to the minority problem at other colleges? Have they attempted to fuse the most workable elements of the several current Senior Center proposals and produce their own?

Enough scurrying. Let's see some positive, creative action.

Pumping Iron II

It has long been held that the nuts shouldn't be allowed to run the nut-house. Although Bowdoin students hardly qualify as "nuts," it is understandable that they are not allowed to make all the decisions on the way this College is run. We are told that the spending of funds for student benefit, however, student opinion should be solicited, and mandates followed when feasible.

Yet the College Athletic Department has consistently turned a deaf ear on pleas for improvements in the weight room facilities. An Orient editorial last February proposed such improvements; it was met with wide-spread approval. A petition was circulated, it was highly subscribed. And yet, the result of these efforts was a new coat of paint for this sadly lacking facility. At a college which prides itself on the excellence of its facilities, this is a sorry exception.

The argument for improvement is not new. The weight room is a facility which is used year-round by Bowdoin's athletes and non-athletes alike. Weight room improvements would also satisfy the "equal expenditure" clause of Title IX, as the room is used by both sexes. But most important, the students, for whose benefit this institution is being run, have mandated the change.

Outrageous

To the Editor:

Dear Dean Fairey,

On Saturday, November 4, we attempted to attend a showing of "Night of the Living Dead" at Kennebec Auditorium. The film was advertised as open to the public at a cost of $2.10

The noise, catscalls, gestures, general disorder and screaming began way before the movie. We had hoped that the noise would subside, so we remained through the first 35 minutes of the film.

However, we were unable to hear the director's dialogue. We were treated to nothing but grunts, groans, and pre-rap. Students did not leave and the noise continued to grow in volume. This film may have been a partial result of the great quantities of beer that were in evidence. We finally left and tried to get our money back; however there was no one to be found outside the theatre.

We are writing this letter simply to state that if a movie at Bowdoin College is open to the public, that the public should never have to endure such childish and outrageous behavior from what we assumed were college-age students.

Sincerely,

Robert Greely
Nancy March
Andrew Greely

Ed. Note: This is a letter recently sent to Dean of Students Woody Fairey by three Brunswick residents.

Brunswick residents

To the Editor:

As a student concerned with the efficient use of funds, I am very interested in the present volume of student concerns that Bowdoin should take on the upper deck at the Commons. I would like to address one major aspect of nuclear energy in the hopes of adding further information to the discussion.

Nuclear power is dangerous as it is now with radiation which can cause death, mutation, radiation sickness, and many forms of cancer. From the mining of the uranium ore (uranium miners experience a substantially higher rate of lung cancer than the general population,) to the final step of waste storage, there are costs to human life so great that they far overshadow the benefits.

The worst problems however, come with that of waste disposal and permanent facilities.

As of yet the United States has not devised a safe method to permanently store radioactive waste emitted by nuclear power in war, and military waste. The California Commission on Energy Research has come to the conclusion that there is no safe method of disposing of (Continued on Page 3)
Tophats, toothpicks, and teaset together in downtown Brunswick

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

You can find an 1873 fire engine, a beaverskin top hat, and gold toothpicks in downtown Brunswick.

Tucked down a side street at the far end of Main Street, the red brick building is within walking distance, but unless you are an especially adventurous student, chances are you have never been inside the Pejepscot Historical Society. Even if you are the type who enjoys gazing at handmade quilts, analyzing old town maps, or fantasizing over old military uniforms, you are missing part of the total Brunswick experience.

"It is a hodge-podge of things," admits Pamela Rogers, who with Ludy Borysenko runs the museum. "But that's all right. Everything here represents local history." Local history means Brunswick, Harpswell, and Topsham. A full 20,000 square feet is occupied by the museum, which is a consolidation of the Androscoggin River Historical Society and the Pejepscot Historical Society.

The museum has more than 30,000 objects, more than 60,000 records, and more than 100,000 maps and plans. At present, the museum's collection contains items from the mid-1700s to the 1980s. The museum is situated on the second floor of a former mill building in the center of town.

The museum features a variety of exhibits, including a large display of local history, a display of local art, and a display of local music. The museum also has a large collection of local history books, including works on local history, local art, and local music.

The museum is open year-round, and it is free to the public. The museum is closed on Mondays and Tuesdays.

The museum is located at 100 Main Street, Brunswick, ME 04011. For more information, call (207) 725-9777.

---

The Bowdoin Orient

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

PAGE THREE

Tophats, toothpicks, and teaset together in downtown Brunswick

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

You can find an 1873 fire engine, a beaverskin top hat, and gold toothpicks in downtown Brunswick.

Tucked down a side street at the far end of Main Street, the red brick building is within walking distance, but unless you are an especially adventurous student, chances are you have never been inside the Pejepscot Historical Society. Even if you are the type who enjoys gazing at handmade quilts, analyzing old town maps, or fantasizing over old military uniforms, you are missing part of the total Brunswick experience.

"It is a hodge-podge of things," admits Pamela Rogers, who with Ludy Borysenko runs the museum. "But that's all right. Everything here represents local history." Local history means Brunswick, Harpswell, and Topsham. A full 20,000 square feet is occupied by the museum, which is a consolidation of the Androscoggin River Historical Society and the Pejepscot Historical Society.

The museum has more than 30,000 objects, more than 60,000 records, and more than 100,000 maps and plans. At present, the museum's collection contains items from the mid-1700s to the 1980s. The museum is situated on the second floor of a former mill building in the center of town.

The museum features a variety of exhibits, including a large display of local history, a display of local art, and a display of local music. The museum also has a large collection of local history books, including works on local history, local art, and local music.

The museum is open year-round, and it is free to the public. The museum is closed on Mondays and Tuesdays.

The museum is located at 100 Main Street, Brunswick, ME 04011. For more information, call (207) 725-9777.
Walker print show spans years from Daumier to Homer and more

by BREHON LAURENT

The current exhibitors in the galleries of the Walker Art Building entitled 500 Years of Printmaking in America is the first in a series of Illustrated Books at Bowdoin College represents a comprehensive selection of Bowdoin's rich collection of prints and illustrated books dating from 1474 to 1978. Included in the show are two smaller exhibitions: one depicting the techniques of printing and the other showing drawings which were made as preliminary studies for prints.

The show, fostered by Katherine Watson, Director of the Museum, who first arrived here a year ago, was curated by Mr. David F. Becker of the Department of Art.

We haven't stopped telling you people about these fabulous efforts. The question is, how do you get them to come?

“Are these pay?” asked Michael Henderson 79, chairman of the Afro-American Society. “We should consider the tenement system as it is related to blacks.”

“The question of tenure,” responded Gottschalk, “is a legitimate issue. When you look at a school, you want to look at tenure to see what changes you'll have to stay on.

Will having more blacks tenured attract more black applicants in the future for faculty positions? “Should we bend the rules a little bit? That I don’t know,” he continued. “You don’t want to get through because you’re black, you want to get through because you’re qualified.

“It’s going to be hard to get the school twenty percent black. It’s going to be hard to get the faculty twenty percent black. We want to get minorities on. The question is, how can we keep the program going?

In a very close 6-5 decision last night that evening, the Board approved the charter of the Bowdoin Men’s Association (BMA), a newly formed group whose proposed charter was introduced last year in a forum for the discussion of college, local, and world issues concerning men, and to encourage men's studies through the expansion and recognition of male achievements.” Membership of the BMA is open to all Bowdoin students male or female.

Why a “Men’s Association”?

Steve Daniels 79, vice chair of the BMA, explained. “We felt this tremendous pressure in our lives. We felt very unrepresented.”

The Illustration of efforts.

The exhibition is without precedent in Bowdoin’s history. Student’s exhibits never before have been exhibited as a group.

Also noteworthy are the many gifts to the College, without which our collection would be much less significant. Many outstanding are the gifts of Miss Susan Dwight Bliss (1896), one of the prints in the show were given by her. Other important gifts by changing faculties, members of the Sloan family, the Homer family, the Haskell and the J. P. Morgan of the 1960’s.

The quantity and quality of this show have all contributed greatly to the College’s collection of prints and drawings.

I was struck first by the layout of the exhibition. Katherine Johnson, the colored panels which create more wall space and at the same time help to break the monotony of a four-walled exhibition, in conjunction with a variety of frame styles, were used in order to alleviate the monochromatic nature of the prints themselves.

The approximately 120 sheets are hung in chronological order.

Because of the different works by the same artist will not appear in groups, rather they will fall in the full-sieve, according to the date. This allows viewers to see the development of artistic skill. The ten illustrated books from the Special Collections of the College Library are exhibited in glass cases.

The earliest work in the show is a colored woodcut. Taken from a bible printed in Nuremberg in 1483 (anonymous artist). The color is bright and full, complementing very well the bold and simplified style of the woodcut it.

Another rarity in the exhibition is Jean de Gourmont’s “The Marriage of St. Catherine” ca. 1506-5. According to Mr. Becker, it is one of the few sheet which exists in the United States he excludes the engraving owning is in a closet (in Boston) as it is missing a portion of the right edge.

The exhibition would not be an complete without Rembrandt’s etching, “St. Jerome in a Dark Chamber” (1642). As Mr. Becker points out in the catalogue, “Rembrandt is represented here by his most contemplative etchings, in which he utilizes his unique ability to depict daylight figures in room.”

The print demands close inspection.

Homer Daumier, one of my favorite printmaker-historia (1830-1881) is well represented in the show.

Also in the exhibition is one of the most famous prints, wood engravings, known as the “Bowdoin.”

The Museum of Art owns nearly a complete edition of these prints, which are illustrated in “The New Yorker.”

His work has been exhibited in close exhibits in some of the European museums this semester.

“Bowdoin” is a spread-out thumbing the historic event, according to the trend toward specialization. People with high degrees can’t find jobs. Now we’re in a period of disillusionment.

The exhibition of printmaking techniques has been thoughtfully arranged.

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students

10% discount on all items in front store.

CARDS AND GIFTS

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE

146 Main street

Telephone 725-4331

Brunswick, Maine 04011

MAXELL CASSETTES

UDXL C-90

Reg. 5.49 ea.

$4.49 ea.

$48.00 Case (12)

manassas, ltd.

212 maine at maine's record resource

Fragile 'Glass' emerges shaken but not shattered

by ALEX STEVENSON

In the direction preceding his script of 'Glass Menagerie', Tennessee Williams states that the "scene of the play is memory and is therefore unrealistic. Memory takes a lot of poetic license. It omits some details, others are exaggerated ... for memory is sealed predominantly in the heart. "Tom Wingate, the character whose monologue opens the play, affirms this idea when he states that "I give you truth in the pleasant disguise of illusion." It is the element of illusion, culminating in nostalgia which distinguishes this example of Williams' plastic theatre, and lacking in Masque and Gown's otherwise fine rendering of the World War II tragedy.

A large part of the difficulty with the M&G production, playing this evening at 9 p.m. tomorrow and Sunday at 8 p.m., is the smallness of the Experimental Theatre in which it is performed. Director John Custer '79, having been unable to secure Picard Theatre, has made intelligent use of limited space. The show is classic deserves more room than it is allowed, however, Glass, though emotionally intense, is not a play which benefits from immediacy, as was implied earlier. Tom Wingate, who sits through seven scenes of proximity to the action runs the risk of becoming heartened to the subtlety of what the playwright intended to convey.

What Glass intends to convey is as fragile as Laura Wingfield's small glass animals. A young woman who is physically and emotionally susceptible herself. Laura, whom Priscilla Squires '79, lives in an apartment in St. L.

Nancy Watkins '81 plays the domineering mother in The Glass Menagerie. Tom Keydel '81 is here the victim of her oratory as Priscilla Squires '79 looks on glassy-eyed. Orient/Shen outs with her mother Amanda (Nancy Watkins '81) and her brother Tom (Tom Keydel '81). Amanda feeds on her own fancy as self-deludingly as does Laura on hers, but the mother's delusions are based upon her former Southern debutante glory rather than upon genuine contrivance. Tom makes the point that she is "a woman of action as well as words." This is true, but only within her confined vision, which takes in little of America's Depression plight of which Tom is so acutely aware. In a desperate attempt to make over Laura in her own image, Amanda gets Tom to recruit a gentleman caller who presents us with "the most realistic character in the play." Coming as he does from the outside world he realistically but not unkindly, dashes Amanda's dreams of courtship as well as the hopes which Laura has perilously allowed herself to construct. Tom, though a member of the younger world, deludes himself with introversion, alcohol, and weak aspirations. As a setting for these dream worlds which ostensibly interact "now and in the past," this production, unfocused in such realistic nearness to the audience, has little chance of evoking the past in anything more than a superficial way. Although set and costumes are faithful '30s trap-pings, thanks to Ray Rutan and Ruth Kocher and Laura Thomas, this rendition might be less overwhelming and more timeless and illusionary were props and sets more spartan and thus more suggestive. Given that I witnessed a dress rehearsal in which all may not have been as intended, it seems that the production could have used more spacing and with greater variation in tone to the end of greater dramatic effect.

Although a bit cluttered, the stage is well-used. The set is arranged and the players are blocked so as to appeal at some time to almost every possible vantage point. Acting was spotty, but with excellent moments. Keydel, the most consistently competent, nicely avoided pomposity while at the same time giving a forceful and natural rendering of the gently ironic and outwardly sardonic Tom. Within the Experimental Theatre's confines, it is easy for a play to become self-deludingly self-deluded, and Watkins was not quite so successful in avoiding that trap.

Having adopted a Southern accent, that might better have done without, she was on occasion more singsong than liltting, while her anger, though not misplaced, was displayed too effusively. Watkins demonstrated her capacity for portraying another aspect of Amanda's character in scene four, when she met Tom's apology with dignity and realism, and "The长约 minutes of the play, she seemed to un- wind and relax in her own role, even in the slightest of lines. Watkins and Keydel, of course, were well supported by Squires, who, as the tender-natured Laura, gave a performance that rivaled that of Squires. Meanwhile, Watkins, Keydel, and Squires, provided some of the evening's most genuinely affecting moments.

Upland, in pursuit of patridge, a hunter seeks game and grace

by JAMES CAVISTON

Why do you want to kill animals? The question comes to mind behind me as I was registering for a hunting license. I turned around to answer, but the question came from a woman who was waiting in line to pay for a tattoo. She was a middle-aged woman with bright green corduroys. This seemed like an odd question to be asked at a Upland's, the very place which has traditionally served the lover of outdoor pursuits.

Five years ago, the twenty-four hour shop was a convenience for the workers who needed some decoys early in the morning or the woodsmen who needed an axe handle late at night. Now it seems the store stays open principally for the benefit of tourists who want to do their Christmas shopping and still make it home to Connecticut before midnight. As for the hunter or woodman of five years ago, once he realizes that most of the birds have been turned into lumps or that the axe handle, made from Swedish ash, costs more than he would spend on a month's heating, he might begin to wonder about the changes in the human condition.

"You eat meat, don't you?" I asked her.

"Yes, just a delicious steak at Gabbiano's," she said.

"Do you think the steer just dropped dead and then the sections suddenly fell out just as the chart shows?"

"Of course not," she retorted. "Don't be smotty, young man. It was killed in a suicide house." I'm doing away with the middle man." I said. "But there's more to it. Hunting gives me a chance to work and know some wild tract. I'm enjoying getting out and finding the game. I prepare it myself and do away with the costs of some of the services which I like to do myself." I left Bean's half angered and half amused. For the privilege of hunting the state charges thirty dollars for the license, but the demands from the middle class more want to make sure my intentions are honorable.

There are a few reasons why I hunt. The license is like exit visa from the civilized and ever-expanding cosmopolitan frame of mind. People who have bumper stickers reading 'Have You Thanked A Green Plant Today?' either live within the confines of urban geometricality, or they rely upon window-sill botany for their only fresh air or have never encountered the natural realm on terms more substantial than a Bambi movie would indicate.

The positive reasons, however, are more important. An afternoon's jaunt in the woods is good exercise both physically and spiritually. Covering two miles or more of varied, wooded terrain while carrying a fourteen pound gun leaves one, late in the evening, exhausted and yet refreshed by immersion in the wilds.

Moreover, during my eight years in northern New England, there has never been such a spectacular fall than this, a rare Indian summer in which the temperatures of the last October weekend topped sixty-five degrees. So far, we have had less than a week of rain in an incredible two months of cool, bright days. This autumn has spared us the monsoons which transform the campus into a lake. But we have also missed the overcast windy days which seem so typical to this pleasant season.

My primary purpose for purchasing a hunter's license, however, is Bignas Umbello Togata, also known as ruffled grouse and more colloquially as 'ptridges.' This bird is New England's finest upland game. Its perpetuation in good numbers, its challenge to the hunter and the Epicurean delight have made the grouse a favorite in this area for over three hundred years. Back in 100's its presence was such that Massachusetts Governor Jonathan Winthrop met with demands from woodsmen that they not have to eat the patridge, or 'heath-hen' as they called it, 'offen in the woods.'

There can be no doubt that the techniques of market hunters along with advancing civilization has reduced the numbers. State regulations prohibit the hunting of grouse until after the young have left the covey and the birds themselves have begun to scatter, but the grouse can take itself above all for its continuing to survive in good numbers. Moreover, today's grouse looks even better when one considers that the present season limit is a fraction of the market hunter's daily bag a century ago. One thing is certain, what distinguishes the patridge above other upland fowl.

(Continued on Page 6)
Epicurean ideals make grouse great game

(Continued from Page 5) it is cunning, courage and intelligence to survive and perpetuate whether faced by an aggressive season of hunting or by the more distal prospect of environmental developments.

What possesses a person to seek out the rural homestead, beg permission to hunt on the property and then struggle through briars, hard brush and an unmanageable terrain? In part, the challenge of this cunning game. Unlike the pheasant, which is easy to spot, tends to fly in straight lines and moves at a slow speed, the grouse crashes through the underbrush at speeds exceeding fifty miles an hour, suddenly turning in any direction and then gliding silently out of sight. In the time it takes to spot the bird, it is already out of range and probably hiding in some inaccessible thicket.

The first encounter with the prairie is both exhilarating and frightening. Before the hunter can even anticipate the bird, he is jolted by the suddenly solemn drumming of the grouse's wings.

In flight, the bird will seek to put an obstacle between the hunter and itself. Fly into the late afternoon sun, or, most courageously will fly directly at the hunter, whose first reaction is to drop the gun and cover his face.

In following the bird after the first flush, a friend advises, "Think like the prairie does." And it is in no way overly-imaginative to assume a high intelligence and cunning. In following the grouse to where it seems to have gone, it is not at all uncommon to hear suddenly the drumming from behind. The grouse is known to wait until the hunter has passed by before making a move. Its brown body is almost indistinguishable from the late autumn leaves or a pine needle-strewn covering.

The variety of its menu, one hundred sixteen different forms of vegetation, makes tracking the bird by its feeding habits difficult. The haphazard affair, a greatly contoured terrain with a small brook or high water table, and being covered by a good bit. After that, the choice between working in an overgrown orchard or a dense pine forest is made on completely arbitrary terms.

The upland game hunter requires little equipment. But what he uses meets a very specific purpose. In choosing the proper gauge shotgun, one should keep in mind that the primary purpose is a clean kill. Twelve and sixteen gauge guns dissipate the more pellets in a wider pattern, making a long shot not something to be taken lightly. Nothing could be less sportsmanship. For these precisely the conditions in which birds are crippled and left to die in shock, starvation or most likely, to be killed without having the benefit of natural defensive coordination, by predators. A twenty-gauge gun with its short range and tight pattern is best for upland game such as grouse. The piece demands that a shot be fired off at a short distance where the hunter is sure of his sighting. Due to the tighter pattern and the fewer pellets, if he misses, there is a better chance of a complete miss than with a twelve or sixteen gauge. Furthermore, the several pounds less of a twenty gauge can be appreciated after one has carried the shotgun for an hour with an afternoon of hunting still ahead.

The best chance for a hit is simply to be prepared. The most common expression in the upland is "I wasn't ready for that one." Actually, the grouse gives itself away with its heavy, almost human footsteps. If one can detach oneself from the distracting drumming, the game is practically in the bag. But this is part of the challenge for this sort of detachment exists almost exclusively in theory.

Although the hunter in the woods is not working in an area without restriction. Game laws in Maine, while tough to enforce, are carried out with severity.

A prairie gunner shares part of his short season with the deer hunter. During the overlapping period, it is unwise to hunt with a dog, in that the animal can be mistaken for a deer. It is indeed ironic that the state regulations on hunting call for more stringent punitive measures for the illegal killing of animals than they do for the accidental killing of humans. Upon hearing the ever-echoing crack of a high-powered rifle, my first reaction is to head back to the road and call it a day.

The season ended Wednesday. All I have to show for my marksmanship is one cleaned bird in the freezer. But I've worked some wild tracts in Cumberland, out in Penobscot and up in Day's Ferry by Merrymeeting Bay, where I've seen trophy bunnies, snakes, weasels and an occasional deer. When I sit down to eat that bird I'm going to have a minute of silence to ruminate about the season past, rub my hands together thinking about the season to come. and then dig in.

Faculty passes responsibility to Student Life

(Continued from Page 1) in which Bowdoin's history as a college exclusively for men may dominate our present," read the memo. It continued, "As the transition continues, we should insist women be welcome as full participating members of academic and extracurricular life at Bowdoin."

"I am personally confident that Bowdoin students will listen to persuasive reasons and arguments. Certainly, our first efforts must be to persuade, not to coerce," it read.

The president also briefly commented on his memo on tenure which was circulated among the faculty last month. "The purpose of that memo was to initiate a discussion which would eventually lead to a resolution of the issue at Bowdoin," he said.

"There are some things in that memo that I would change today...by and by, this is a discussion of us as a faculty. It would be best, if we could keep the political football quiet for a while."
BROSHERS PIZZA
Grand Opening
Try Our Original Greek Salads
Hot Oven Subs
Fresh Homemade Pizza

"Call Ahead"
Your order will be ready when you arrive
725-4366
"There's nothing like Brothers"

STOWE TRAVEL
Visitor Phone 725-5573
9 Pleasant Street, Downtown, Brunwick

Bears finish with 3-5 record after trouncing Mules
(Continued from Page 8) the half stood at 13-3.
Jeff Gerodetsky's pass interception at the Colby 31 early in the second half started the Polar Bears' third touchdown march of the game. Kinkel slamed over the goal line from five yards out, and Himmelrich converted to make the score 20-3. Colby then responded with a seven-pointer of its own, but Bowdoin gained the 17-point advantage moments later with a Tom Struda touchdown. Himmelrich's conversion hiked the Bowdoin margin to 27-10 and closed the day's scoring.

The Bowdoin honor roll for the game had to begin with quarterback Rip Kinkel, who recovered from a hand injury to complete the last five game and play the entire Colby contest. Although he had trouble adjusting to the quarterback position earlier in the season, he played outstanding ball during the last two games. It is all a matter of finding the right receivers, I guess it's experience," he concluded. "Earlier in the season, I was throwing to the deep men. They were open, but a deep pass is difficult to complete. So, I promised myself and Stumpy Merrill offensive backfield coach that I would throw short. I did, and we were much more successful."

Looking back on the 3-5 season (with a 1-1 record in Colby Conference play), Regan admitted a bit of disappointment. "It was a disappointing season in a bit of ways," he said. "At the end of last season, I thought we had a lot of potential. I was looking forward to a real good year. We lost a lot of tough games. We were in every game except the opener against Trinity. Our problem was that we just could not put together sixty minutes of good football."

"Our defensive improvement this year was due mainly to experience," defensive end Scott Braker mentioned. "In reference to the team's surrendering fifty fewer yards per game this season than it did in 1977, "That improvement was due primarily to a few key players, including defensive tackle John Bloomfield and Bob McBride. Drew King and Andy Minch were also key players. Everyone hopes we will continue to improve on defense next year."

Offensive optimism for next year was voiced by Kinkel, who said, "Our backfield will be excellent. We will lose the nucleus of this year's offensive line, but a couple of players on the line will be coming back, and we should be strong there."
Colby routed
Gridders end on high note

by BILL STUART

While the world is changing around us at an alarming rate, some things remain constant through eternity. One of those things, it seems, is a Bowdoin victory over Colby in football. The traditional Maine rivals annually rush to close out their seasons, and the Polar Bears have been able to claim supremacy 19 times in the past 19 games. Last Saturday, the Bears put a damper on another disappointing season for Colby by downsing the Mules, 27-10, and elevating themselves to second place in the Ivy League. Following the Bowdoin-Bates-Bowdoin Conference they have ruled for the past three years.

"Winning that game was very important to us," explained senior co-captain Dave Bennett. "It meant nothing in terms of the championship, but it meant something to the seniors, since it was their last game for Bowdoin, and to the rest of the squad as well. It definitely gave the team a good start for next season."

Aerial strike
After the Mules opened the day's scoring with a 33-yard field goal, the hosts marched 86 yards in 41 seconds to assume the lead. The game would not regain. On a third and a nine on the Polar Bear 48, quarterback Rick Kinkel called for a pass over the middle. "It was a turn pattern," Kinkel explained.

"Their safety was overaggressive and often left the middle open," the pass floated into the hands of receiver Eric Arvidson, making his first start for the Polar Bears, who hauled it in at about the Colby 40 and headed for the end zone. Keyed by a few key blocks and his own good instincts, Arvidson carried the ball across the goal line for a Polar Bear touchdown. Allie Himmelreich's conversion made the score 7-3.

"The play was designed to gain about twelve yards, enough for the first down," Arvidson offered. "I usually catch the ball and get knocked down, I don't have great speed, so I thought I would be tackled from behind. Then, when I was at the five-yard line, I finally realized that I might score."

"I have never been in that situation before," the big end continued. "It was my first go-ahead touchdown in my life."

In high school (Westboro, MA, High School), I caught touchdown passes when we were way ahead or way behind, but I always thought I had caught one in a crucial situation. It was very exciting."

On the following series of downs, Andy Minich recovered a Colby fumble at the visitors' 29. Craig Gardner gained eight yards, then Colby decided to go long. "We called the 144 stretch," Kinkel explained. "There's a fake to the middle and the quarterback just stands there and waits for the far wing to break free."

"When Tim Marotta brought the Colby quarterback off the line, the Bear team yelled, "Look out for the fake!'" Arvidson explained. "I covered all the way, so I had to find another receiver."

Scalpers
That other receiver was sophomore fullback Tom Scipio, a safety valve man. Kinkel found Scipio with a pass just as the Colby Bears were about to win the junior quarterback, Scipio caught the pass around several defenders and crossed the width of the field to the end zone. Himmelreich missed the point-after-touchdown try, and the score at halftime was 14-0.

(Continued on Page 7)

Icemen prepared for title defense

by DANNY MENZ

It's in the air. It always comes along with the cold west and the dark of the night. The players recognize it. They know Bowdoin hockey is right around the corner. The Polar Bears program is looking on track for another championship run, and this year, the seed is sown in the form of a new head coach in Mark McNamara. The Bears, who have been perennial NCAA tournament qualifiers, are looking to exude the same winning ways and same high expectations as in years past.

The Polar Bears opened the season with a 7-1 victory over visiting Colby College, one of their perennial rivals. The win was the first of the year for the Bears, who are gearing up for a tough stretch of games in the upcoming weeks.

Returning All-American stars Bob Devaney (left) and Gerry Ciarcia will lead the Polar Bears in their E.C.A.C. Division II title defense. Orient Gould

---

Final football stats

TEAM STATISTICS

Bowdoin

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>First Downs</th>
<th>123</th>
<th>Opponents</th>
<th>124</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Rushes</td>
<td>409</td>
<td>337</td>
<td>405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rushing Yardage</td>
<td>1465</td>
<td>1325</td>
<td>1391</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Passing Yardage</td>
<td>1125</td>
<td>2306</td>
<td>2394</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Offense</td>
<td>2390</td>
<td>4995</td>
<td>4920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Av. Yds. Per Game</td>
<td>323.8</td>
<td>651.6</td>
<td>648.2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Return Yardage</td>
<td>487</td>
<td>460</td>
<td>460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paces Attempted</td>
<td>156</td>
<td>156</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paces Completed</td>
<td>74</td>
<td>74</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Completion Pct.</td>
<td>47.4</td>
<td>47.4</td>
<td>47.4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Had Intercepted</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punts</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punting Yardage</td>
<td>1525</td>
<td>1525</td>
<td>1525</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punting Average</td>
<td>33.2</td>
<td>33.2</td>
<td>33.2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fumbles</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fumbles Lost</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Penalties</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yards Penalized</td>
<td>281</td>
<td>281</td>
<td>281</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Fullback Tom Scipio, who led the Bears in rushing and scoring during the 1975-76 season, will continue to lead by example as the team prepares for another title defense.

---

Postgame Scripts

A second look

by BILL STUART

Everyone connected with Bowdoin College was pleased to see the Polar Bears end their football season on a high note with Saturday's solid showing against arch-rival Colby. But in terms of the future of the football program here, a defeat would have undoubtedly been more beneficial.

The effect of the victory was to relieve some of the disappointment the season brought. It also exudes confidence for next year by implying that the program is on its way back and will be on solid footing for next year. Nothing, however, could be further from the truth.

The football program here is not in good shape. The team has displayed mediocrity for so long that a 5-0 season is now considered successful. A CBB Colby-Bates-Bowdoin Conference championship team would have made the most of it, but even then, the team exudes the same winning ways and same high expectations as in years past.

The Colby Bears opened the season with a 7-1 victory over visiting Colby College, one of their perennial rivals. The win was the first of the year for the Bears, who are gearing up for a tough stretch of games in the upcoming weeks.

Returning All-American stars Bob Devaney (left) and Gerry Ciarcia will lead the Polar Bears in their E.C.A.C. Division II title defense. Orient Gould

---

(Continued on Page 7)
Preparing for the long flight, brothers of the Chi Psi Lodge build trenched, fall-out shelters, and underground housing for surface to surface missiles as a counter-offensive against the expected attack of the Fairies. (Photo/BWA Reconnaissance)

Fast-talking Willy Enteman moonlights to make ends meet

By day, he's Willard Finley Enteman, president of the oldest institution of higher learning in the state of Maine, expounding the virtues of free will, intellectualism, and tenure reform. By night, he's fast-talking Willy Finley, the newest used car dealer in the State, giving his pitch on baseball, hot dogs, apple pie and Chevrolet.

Enteman takes great pride in his latest venture: "Willy Finley's Chevrolet is no run of the mill used car lot, you know. We guarantee the highest standard quality. In fact we're even cutting down on the size of our lot, because we accept nothing but the best."

By the same token, the President stresses that his 'car lot does not sell to just anybody. 'All the senior salesmen must unanimously consent to a buyer before a sale can be made,' he said. Enteman is also considering a "customer preference" system which gives priority to customers who have been around for a while.

Sources close to the President say a number of college professors have already taken test drives, but few can realistically hope for the opportunity to actually possess one of Willy's wagons.

Although Enteman admits his standards are rigid, he warned, "Don't take my ideas as final. I'm open to suggestions."

Ace salesman Willy Enteman bags another sale. As the top salesman in the Brunswick area, Bill has acquired a reputation for reliability and honesty. During the day, Bill works as an administrator at a local institution for higher learning.
THE ORIENT
FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1978

In memoriam

The puzzling suicides at the Senior Center left us wondering. Many of us lost good friends, lovers and people who owed us money.

Guru Mersereau always had the best attitude towards life. Even if your law boards were in the double digits he would say, "Hey, Harvard still wants you!" But when he began to sing "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" at a recent vocational skills meeting, we began to wonder.

What is it that possessed so many people, with such young, bright minds, to seek such a dismal end by jumping from the tower. Especially those who lived on the third floor and had to jump several times before they died.

Is life really so bad? Come on. You tell me. Why struggle through four highly competitive years if a better job isn't going to make you any happier?

Way that extra effort into your Ec problem sets, if grades don't make you a better person. Why even get up in the morning if it's all a pile of crap?

Actually, now that I think about it...Hey, hold that elevator.

Good for nothing

Now that fraternities have been successfully pushed out of the College, the editors would like to draw attention to another faction on campus that is causing trouble, namely assistant professors.

These lowly, uncurable, good-for-nothings, have been organizing behind our backs for more pay, fewer classes and the construction of a utopian residential development, complete with health-spa out at Coleman Farm. It is time to put a stop to their ever increasing academic minuteness, their bathroom bad-mouthing of senior faculty and their constant quips about overdue papers.

We are at a loss for an answer. We are hoping that the President will restrict all hiring within departments to faculty who already have tenure. If this doesn't work, we are going to call upon the Executive Board to examine the graduate schools that certified these professors. At present, we are faced by a serious problem. No matter what we do, assistant faculty will always have the last laugh.

Endangered

In keeping with our pro-ecological stance, the Orient would like to address an important environmental issue, the devastation of the forests. At this time of year, people flock into the woods with axes, chain saws and specially-trained beavers, raping elms, oaks, and pines so that houses might be heated during the winter.

Certainly no one would ask mankind to freeze to death, but if an alternate source of energy is not found, soon trees will become an endangered species. If heating is the problem, then why not look to a more viable source of energy, abundant in the air and all around: the little particles that make up us.

What we're speaking about is atoms. Atoms are easily converted into energy. Furthermore, they don't smell up the room the way smoke from a wood-burning stove does.

When you get right down to it, finding an alternate energy source is as easy as picking your nose. Split atoms, not wood.

DEAR ORIENT

Dear Orient,

I have something terrible to confess. I didn't really shoot that polar bear. My faithful dog keeper Spook did. I was back at the iglo nursing an awful hang-over.

Regrettably yours,
Donald B. MacMillan '88

Dear Mad,

And taking advantage of the noble savage's widows, doubt, you imperialist pig. You Bowdoin grads, you're all the same.

Dear Geez,

It's nice to be back in England. I feel like a boy again. Since I arrived, I've been playing some rugby, doing some research work on Cromwell and having a good time at the pubs. You'd love it here. In Britain, anyone over fifteen can drink.

Sorry to hear that the sports program was cancelled, but Bill Enteman knows what's right for the College, even if it means a little shaking up. Keep up the work, tough guy, you've done more in five weeks that I could do in that many years.

I wish you all well, hope to see you soon,
As Always,
Roger

Ed Note: Roger who?

Dear Orient,

With Rene Richards' awaited arrival not far off, the question of sex preference, that is to say, what sex you would like to be, comes to mind. Whether a man wants to be a woman or a woman should have no bearing on the opportunities available to him. But there is more to it.

A few years ago, I found myself in a dilemma. I realized that I was a woman trapped in a man's body, and that there was an incredible, undiscovered void left unfulfilled in my life. I rushed to Sweden for a sex change operation. While under the gas, I had a prophetic dream. The woman trapped inside of me wasn't a woman at all, but a transvestite. I woke up, yelling to the doctor to stop, but it was too late.

Now, having finished my first semester at Bowdoin, I realize, while men changed to woman, and women to men here have ample opportunity, there is little opportunity here for neutrals to live a normal life. There are no appropriate bathrooms, no locker rooms and no meetings of the Bowdoin Neuter Association. Furthermore, at registration, they enrolled me as a freshtman. Nothing is more dehumanizing than the label "thing." Does the College think that just because we are sexless that we are not human, that we cannot share sorrow and joy, that we can't cross-dress as well as any hockey player or preppie chick? I and others like myself have withstood this humiliation long enough. To preclude the present policy of discrimination, I am going to knock down the double pillars in front of the Visual Arts Center and then fill in the passageway through the VAC itself.

Now I'm mad. Name held upon request.

Dear Thing,

You don't have the balls.
P.S. If people knew how little sex there is here at Bowdoin, they would think we all a bunch of neutrals.

Governor of the State of Maine's Observance of National Hunter's Week Seminar: Monday night at 7:30 in the Daggett Lounge. "Survival in the Fall Mid-Term." This introduction session of the conference will feature several mini-lectures brought together in conjunction with the Council for High Learning and the Department of Inland Fisheries and Wildlife. Topics in Monday night's seminar will include "Making the Final Extension Last Few Days," How to Bag the Elusive Incomparable". Brown-Nosing the Grizzly Senior Faculty" and "Reading Week on Ten Cups of Coffee a Day."

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

STEW HOUSE
FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 maine st. brunswick, maine 722-8334
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

Fri., Dec. 1
Sat., Dec. 2
ANDO ANDERSON
Wed., Dec. 6
Thurs., Dec. 7
AISHA
Fri., Dec. 8
Sat., Dec. 9
ANDREA RAY & FRIENDS

Paid by the MOC (Move Our Center) Committee, 1978
Leotarded Execs to dance school's problems away

By an overwhelming 10-2 majority vote at last night's hastily-called meeting, the Executive Board jumped towards a new format for next semester's Board. When meetings resume in January, Bowdoin's Execs will don leotards and chalk faces to become the country's first known college student government to legislate via interpretive dance.

Several American schools of secondary education have already taken the leap into the "Council to Choreography" movement and have met with unwavering failure. A representative from one of the maverick high schools commented, "We had nothing to lose — nothing else seemed to work. But it was too much work. Besides, it felt silly."

Bowdoin's Execs discussed the silliness problem and decided that nothing could be sillier than their present proceedings. "For all the talking we do," noted Board member Jung-un Woo, "we'd might as well be prancing around on stage."

There are several reasons for the change. The close-fitting leotards, one Exec suspected, would stimulate more interest in Exec meetings. Also, under the new format, all Board members would be forced to remain constantly informed on agenda topics. "Otherwise," claimed Chair Nureyev Zirins, "the whole thing screws up."

Their first practice session followed last night's meeting. Other than occasional gulps of disgust from bungling Jim Anstead and Mikhail Walker, most of those present seemed to enjoy themselves. "This is just such a meaningful process," commented Terri "Ginger" Roberts. "When I'm up there dancing, I'm expressing everything I feel about not just tenure reform, Senior Center programs, and nuclear energy, but also about myself and how good I look in a leotard."

"It decreases electricity usage and discourages nuclear proliferation," added Todd Buchanan.

Substituting interpretive dance for meaningful verbal exchange, the Executive Board once again proves you can do a day's work while lying on your back. (Photo/Lobotomy Ward, Bridgewater Home for the Criminally Insane)

FOR SALE

Welcome Home Music

15% OFF! 20% OFF!

Oh What The Hell! 75% OFF!

Address All Inquiries to 111 1/2 Maine St. — 729-8512
OFFER VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW

NEW RELEASE SPECIAL
EMERSON'S FAKE EMBALMER
"Surfs Up"

(E.L. & P. — "Love Beach")

798 List $4.99 manassas, ltd.

212 Maine st.

"maine's record resource"

HOW FARES YOUR TRIP?

By CLINT HAGAN

Dear Bowdoin travelers,

In this special issue of the "numerous Orient", I am reprasing slightly and quoting in part, a new song of the travel industry call "All These Fares." You can say that it is "our Christmas present" to you.

Last May, as reported in that "Bowdoin Sun" interview, I joined 250 US travel agents on a familiarization tour of Nashville, Tenn., where the song was first performed at a social event by two of my airline friends who had actually written the words and music. Since that time the song has been recorded, and has sold over 1,500 copies.

What's so great about the song? Well, it's something I'm sure you can relate to if you have tried to make round-trip flight reservations for Christmas. I have paraphrased the wording slightly, and ask you to imagine that you are now calling Stowe Travel for fare information for your Christmas flights:

"Stowe Travel, May I help you?"

"Yeah! I want to know about that cheap fare I heard on the radio!"

"Which cheap fare?"

"There's more than one, you know!"

"Well, sir, there are several discount fares."

"Sorry, I'm sorry."

"All these fares."

"Well, I've seen every fare man. Written every fare, man. I know all these fares, man. You know it isn't that easy, man. Sometimes I just don't care, man. Just listen to all these fares."

"10, 20, 30, 40, 50, Fabulous 50, Round-Trip, One-way, 7-30 day, Saturday Only, Thursday Anytime, B Class, Y Class. No Class, No Class. Listen in all these fares."

"Now, which fare did you want, sir?"

"Girl, there's a bunch of 'em, ain't there?"

"There's quite a few."

"Well, would you mind running 'em by me again?"

"Okay, I'll run through them real fast for you."

"Now, can I make you a reservation?"

"I already know you aren't going to."

"Ah, I believe I'd just think on it. And then — I'll call you back."

"I'm getting tired — of all these changing fares."

“Social intercourse

ONE DAY IN SILLS HALL

Guy: Hi, haven't I seen you in my English class?

Girl: Maybe you should be fun to talk to our Victorian literature with Girl: No, I don't think you have.

Guy: I hope no one sees me talking to this greg Guy: My name is Dudley. Would you like to go to the poetry lecture

Girl: But maybe he'd like to listen to my new Beethoven album afterwards Girl: Sorry, but I think I'll be busy all day Friday.

Guy: He's probably a Zete

Guy: Thanks, anyway.

How come I can't make it with girls!

ONE DAY IN AN ELEVATOR

Guy: You look like a girl in my Sac class.

Girl: Not that I know. I haven't been there in three months

Guy: Funny, you look like a hockey player.

I hope he doesn't hear the elevator door down

Guy: What are you doing after the big game on Saturday night?

Talk about big game. I'd like to stick around in the bushes with her for awhile

Guy: I have to study for an hourly that's coming up in three weeks.

He probably thinks all hourly is what you're afraid with when you show up at the Greece on midnight and it closes at one

Guy: Thanks, anyway.

She's probably frigid.

ONE EVENING AT AN UNUSUAL FRATERNITY HOUSE

Guy: 1 haven't met you before?

Girl: He looks like a guy I met in Provincetown last summer

Guy: 2 I don't think so.

Jesus Christ, I hope not

Guy: 1 Are you sure you're not in my Greek sculpture seminar?

I just love Greek sculpture. It's so explicit

Guy: 2 I'm sure. Now would you mind showing me the way out here.

I'm going to call the police in a second

Guy: 1 Come on over here. I'll show you the back door.

Why is he so unfriendly?

Guy: 2 I'll find it myself.

Give a guy that an inch and he'll take half a foot

ONE DAY AT THE ORIENT OFFICE

Girl: Excuse me, is this the Orient office?

Wow, this place is cool

Guy: Why, as a matter of fact it is.

She's the prettiest girl on campus

Girl: Are you one of the Orient editors?

They're all so good-looking

Guy: Yeah, would you like to go out on Friday night?

I'm so irresistible

Girl: Sure

This has to be the most exciting day of my life.

Minority tenure has been a big issue this semester because the College is trying to beef up its wanting Wasp image. Here Mrs. Phippo consoles Director of Afro-American Studies John C. Walter who had just been told he'll be losing his job so that the College can hire a scout to peruse New England prep schools for prospective students.
Men's association

Lecher series announced

The recent chartering of the Bowdoin Men's Association was greeted with a ripple of support by its founding members, accompanied by a corresponding wave of skepticism by students who question the sincerity of the organization. C. Alan Schroeder '79, the BMA's chairman, puts their fears to rest. He explains, "For those people who think we are serious, we are. The rest must remember that Joyce Kilmer, the talented male poet, was in his declining years of age, minus James Joyce (who, of course, was also a man)."

The BMA, in an attempt to continue this inspired, fond metaphor, will introduce itself to the College with a "big splash" this year. In addition to its Adam B. Hubbard Memorial Film Program and weekly luncheon meetings, the BMA is planning, according to a high-level, inside source, a "busy schedule of interesting and informative events." The Glen E. Perry Distinctive Lecher Series boasts a long list of interesting and informative tentative titles, including: "Crabs are not Cruciansce." "Should a gentleman offer a Tiparillo to a lady. The insidious moral dilemma?" "India: Gandhi: despot or pushy broad?"

And special guest lecture next January will feature "My Wife. I Think I'll Keep Them" by Dr. Willard Enteman, former president of the College.

A daring and unprecedented experiment will be the establishment of a tattoo parlor at the VAC. According to a BMA spokesman, the surprising amount of interest in this art form among men is attributed to "an increased awareness of our bodies and its use as a means of expressing ourselves." Alan Schroeder hastens to add that "of course, the facility will be open to women members as well."

Finally, the BMA will publish a monthly newsletter, "The Bag," which will help to fulfill the organization's purpose by "addressing all issues and recognizing male achievement." At the College, special feature of "The Bag" will be the designation of "Member of the Month." The person so honored will receive the symbolic Eleventh Inch Award for Outstanding Accomplishments. It has not been determined when this month's issue will appear. Reliable sources have denied the existence of the rumor that Terry Roberts would serve on the editorial staff of the periodical.

The success of the organization, as predicted by its members, "lies in the defense and the goallenders. We have to find a way to keep the goals out of the guys up front."

Rene Richards to talk on the perils of being a nerd

At this week's performance of the Do-or-Dais Theater, the singsularity of the performance and the finality of the art form was emphasizes by a 44 magnesium caliber bullet. The bic ball-point pen in her girdle still wrote afterwards. (Photo/illustration of Sam)

Dancer shot in the act;

College recoils at impact

In a controversial performance which triggered stunned reactions from College dance aficionados as well as those less in touch with reports from the current modern dance scene, not to mention the Brunswick police, a beautiful young member of the Do-or-dais Dance Troupe was glanced to the stage during a performance at Kress Auditorium last night.

Her face still contorted in pain, the member of the troupe who artfully recoiled, then fell to the ground in the midst of a pirouette, explained to this horrified reporter only minutes after that "It's only a surface wound...ouch, ouch...Do-or-dais would never shoot to kill; that wouldn't be at all pleasing aesthetically, you know."

Refusing to acknowledge that leader of the troupe Nicholas P. Do-or-dais, standing off-stage and taking pot-shots at his dancers with a 44 magnesium, might be out of his head, or even a bit tu-to. Emp P. Thy, the afflicted young Oriental dancer, could not say enough in praise of her mentor (later heard stumping about behind-stage, uttering terms commands in a guttural German accent). "He's done so much for the art form, you know." Thy moaned. "In addition to bombarding the audience with a variety of color, light, sound, and kinky costumes, he bombards us with bullitas. When you work for him, you can feel the warmth...the love...he's always giving. It makes you want to do things right the first time, you know."

Thinly Veiled, Director of Dance at Bowdoin, was also in sympathy with what the troupe endeavored to do in the brief but hard-hitting evening of dance. "They're just so far ahead of everyone else in the field," Veiled pushed. "Why, someone told me recently that Do-or-dais is in front of the avant-garde...imagine! That I especially appreciate the way that Nick has been able to buck the abstract expressionist trend which is so prevalent these days, but so far, if I pass you, I will not."

The man who is Do-or-dais has given us something closer to home, someone the man on the street can look at and say..."Yeh...he's talking to me!"

Future Do-or-dais performances, according to the troupe's director, include plans for a drunken brawl onstage and dueling ballerinas with sabreets.

Bowdoin's recent decision to eliminate intercollegiate athletics has left the College's men without jobs, but none of those affected seems particularly worried about the prospects of employment in another area.

Rene Richards to talk on the perils of being a nerd

Bowed-in Richards, who was formerly a man and is now one of the top twenty female tennis players in the United States, will be speaking about the problems of being a woman as part of the Library Basin: Bathroom Lecture Series. The topic of her speech will be "Coping with Your Nerdsness."

"Nerds are discriminated against everywhere," Rene said. "And there are so many loopholes in the law that the problem might never be solved." To illustrate, she pointed to her own experiences as a man. "The upperclassmen at my college never let me at any fraternities because I was a nerd." There were other ramifications as well, which unmitigatedly led to her generation change operation. "No matter how hard I tried to fit in, I could not fit in with any girls, so I figured if you can't beat 'em, join 'em."

In spite of the sex change, the problem of discrimination still exists for her. After finishing a recent match in New York City, her doubles partner, Vian Gouralais, invited her to go to Studio 54. Rene, however, was kept at the door of the famous discotheque by a bouncer who said, "Sorry, honey, we don't allow nerds in here."

Governor of the State of Maine's Observance of National Hunter's Week Seminar: Tuesday night, Proper Camouflage. This conference will emphasize the importance of obscuring, keeping out of professors' sight at this time of year when the trees are bare and students with overhead papers are easily spotted by their last gait and downcast eyes. Interestingly enough, the converse is true for teachers who have yet to hand back first assignments.

Rene Richards demonstrates that it takes more than a good backhand to be a nerd of stel- lar stature.

Sid Watson, the Bowdoin hockey coach, has already offered a job to someone from the College. "It seems only appropriate," he stated, "that a successful hockey coach would be asked to become assistant director of the Peary-MacMillan Arctic Museum."

"I plan to fish with former Red Sox great Ted Williams," said cashiered football coach Jim Lentz. "He fly-fishes in Canada all summer, and I will assist him by tying flies on the spot to suit the particular tastes of the fish that I am contemplating at several long-term positions also. The New York Giants feel I would be an excellent coordinator as the deposited Bob Gibson. Heck, I could have called the humble play be sent in which turned around a recent game. Also, I have been offered a position as sports editor of the Bowdoin Sun."

Phil Soule will not longer have a wrestling program at Bowdoin, but he and basketball mentor Ray Rickelli will be busier for the next couple of years. "We have laid the groundwork for an activist cause," Soule stated. "We will not stop fighting until we realize our goals."

"There is an abolitionist movement. We want to rid the world of one of its worst curses: pimente in green olives."

Although the coaches are going their separate ways, they plan a reunion in five years.

President Willard F. Enteman today announced that the Board of Trustees has decided to cancel the athletics program. Enteman cited a reason for the discussion. "The sports program here is a myth, just like sex at Bowdoin. Plans for most of the facilities are yet unknown. The athletic offices, however, will be turned into "The Bowdoin Motor Court Inn." For reservations call 725-8731."
Students gathered in the Daggett Lounge to hear the lecture "How to Say No to a Rapist." See story, page 5, Orient/Yong

Zirinis resigns Board Chair, cites restraint as reasons

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

In a brief, unexpected announcement made at the last night's meeting, Basil Zirinis '80 resigned from his post as chair of the Executive Board.

"I felt that I was making a contribution outside of the meetings," he explained, pointing to his attendance at the recent Governing Board convention and at several administration meetings this year. "But I can't contribute during the meetings now."

The Board's chair serves primarily as a mediator during meetings. He cannot participate in ongoing debate and must leave the chair if he wishes to discuss to contributions.

"I felt like I was contributing less last year as just a regular member," Zirinis said. "I don't think I'd do as good a job as I'd like to...I can do more as just a member. Also, I've had five courses this semester. Next semester I don't think I'll have the time."

It's been a difficult semester. It Zeta Psi vote: women will gain, frat could lose

by DIANE MAYER

Last Sunday evening Zeta Psi struck the first major blow for the equality of women in the Bowdoin fraternity system. By a majority of 71%, Zeta Psi voted to allow women to hold all major local offices, and defeated a motion that would have set quotas on the number of women bid at the fraternity.

Up until one week ago, Zeta Psi was one of four Bowdoin fraternities in which women were not full members. Along with Psi Upsilon, Kappa Delta, and Alpha Chi Omega (which are not member fraternities), Zeta Psi was the last to hold equality. The accepted proposal creates (Continued on Page 4)

Discrimination referendum suffers narrow defeat in first student test

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

The first referendum vote in recent years unearthed some interesting results. After the last night's meeting, it became obvious that the issue of sexism in College fraternities would not be solved even more clearly defined by a student referendum.

The referendum showed almost 50% of the voters opposed to the resolution as stated and 46% in favor of it. Seventy percent of those who have mailing addresses at either the Senior Center of the Maine BMA attended to vote.

Some confusion surrounded the referendum question, especially concerning the wording of the resolution. The text was further aggravated due to an emergency session of the Executive Board last Friday night at which Jenny Lyons '80 requested that an additional one be taken on to the resolution. The sentence read:

"...The fraternities would be given up until next year..." required changes.

A poll of students, triggered by late-Wednesday night action by several members of the College, revealed that most students felt the resolution should be eliminated. Proclamers pointing that the student body actually had was all new people — only two from last year's Board and only one of those two could give opinions. We'd better turn the clock to the Board around next semester. We haven't been the best Executive Board at this school...

Zirinis' announcement was followed by a phone discussion concerning when to elect the new chair. They set next Tuesday as the date for the election.

BMA holds first meeting, debate policy, fraternity

by ROBERT DELSOMNE

Alan Schroeder '79, president of the newly-founded Bowdoin Men's Association (BMA), opened its first official meeting last Monday with a policy statement. "As you know," he said, "we have no present policy on anything. We're going to let people here decide what to do.

Twenty-five men and fifteen women gathered at the luncheon meeting in the Hutchinson Room of the Senior Center to hear Schroeder and others explain the purpose of the men's association. "Our focus is on men's roles," Schroeder emphasized. "We're trying to look at things from a man's perspective."

After his opening remarks, Schroeder gave the floor to Steve Dunsky '79, vice president of the organization. "There has been a lot of misconception about what BMA does," Dunsky began. "It is not for the Gay-Straight Alliance nor is it anti-BWA. We don't think women's rights should be ignored."

In trying to set the tone for BMA, Dunsky referred to the rape lecture which was given in the Senior Center Sunday evening. "One of the things that women, in preventing rapes, are often called upon to crush the rapist's testicles. I would like to say that BMA obviously recognizes this need. We also feel that this shouldn't be done unnecessarily."

The meeting struck a more serious note when Dunsky discussed upcoming BMA events. He explained that the BMA would be sponsoring a movie, "The Seven Year Itch," which was shown last night and would also be publishing a monthly circular.

The BMA encountered a major stumbling block last week when it clashed with the Student Activities Fee Committee (SAF). The men's association requested $955, of which it intended to use $750 for lectures, $200 for movies, $25 for feeding lecturers, and $10 for office supplies. SAF granted the pilot organization $10 for office supplies. Said Dunsky: "Since we don't have an office, we'll have to find some alternative use for the $10."

Much of the meeting, however, focused on the question of whether or not the College should recognize fraternities that discriminate against women. Of major concern was the student assembly referendum question, which was voted on by the student body yesterday. Basil Zirinis '80, who was the top reference, which urged the Governing Board to

(Continued on Page 4)

On the eve of vacation

The College never looks so good when you're about to leave. The Orient staff wishes you the best for the holiday season.
THE ORIENT
FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1978

Do tell

Back in September, former Executive Board chair Peter Richardson predicted that this would be a "transition year" for Bowdoin's student government. Here in December, we agree without hesitating that Peter was quite right in his assessment. For in less than three months' time, the Executive Board has succeeded in administering the coup de grace to the student government animal first wounded last spring. And with the beast's spirit departed whatever faint hope remained that the students at this College would have an opportunity to affect in some noticeable way the decisions being made all about them.

The replacement of the Student Assembly with whatever we are expected to call the present "system" marked the transition from a controversial and sometimes-effective representative body to a muddling, confused and pathetically ill-informed jumble of neophyte bureaucrats. These fifteen have occupied themselves primarily with explaining away their inaction: "We need more information" has been the Board's all-purpose excuse.

Apparantly, the Executive Board sees itself as the channel through which the spontaneously-generated and self-sustaining "student opinion" shall by and of itself seek to flow, ultimately inundating the faculty in its meeting-room. But there shall be no such baptism, because the present Executive Board is far more inefficient and less representative than any student government group at Bowdoin in the past ten years. Even the cumbersome Student Council, with its absurdly large membership and unwieldy quorum, accomplished more in a week than this Board has in three months.

Not since October 24th have minutes of any description been posted for those of us on the "outside" to read, save the one-day appearance of a page's worth of "Notes and Commentary" on a meeting held before vacation changes made in the dates of "regular" Board meetings have gone unannounced, and if agendia to any meeting in the past two months were posted at all, they were posted at some location unbeknownst to nine-and-a-half out of ten Bowdoin students.

What we are left with, in effect, is not "student," but "secret" government.

Wordless

In an unpublicized "special" meeting last Friday night, the Executive Board heard Jenny Lyons of the BWA suggest a modification to the proposal originally supported by the Association, a change affording the fraternities up to five years to "adjust" to the business of treating women as people and not playthings. Also present at that meeting was Neil Moses, a recognized spokesman for those opposing the proposed changes. Opponents of the amendment were not invited, not, we must assume, welcome.

The Executive Board adopted the amendment, and it was that modified question which was voted on yesterday. But the consequences of the addition served to point out the most serious danger of an opinion-by-reference system: if the question is not worded carefully, the opinion obtained is, for all intents, worthless. How should the person who favors immediate change in discriminatory policies have voted?

The point is this: by making decisions, by formulating referenda behind closed doors with limited input and information, the Executive Board furthers not the cause of effective transmision of student opinion but instead emphasizes once more to the members of the faculty that, as former Bowdoin president K.C.M. Sills is reputed to have remarked, "Student opinion is always interesting, often informative, but never decisive." Given the state of affairs the students face, we would add five words to Casey's comment: "or worthy of serious consideration."

OPINION
On frat sexism

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

Fraternal affairs, Executive Board affairs—many things affect student life over the course of a year, but few could dispute that there is an inevitable issue this semester, the issue of whether or not fraternities will be allowed to discriminate on the grounds of sex. Although the topic has already generated a great deal of tension and controversy, I believe many students failed to look at the matter objectively and hence have missed much of the evidence.

First of all, if the college community can be expected to take any stand, it must look to national action. The law already says public institutions may not discriminate on the basis of race, religion, or sex. Although the College is considered a private institution, it accepts federal funds, and thus also falls under this category. Against the law for the College to discriminate and any action which it ultimately takes should be considered in this light.

Fratelities, however, are exempted this rule in a special clause which recognizes their status as an all-male organization. But the College interfere in fraternity policies.

Everyone must admit that present there is a dynamic, successful social relationship between frats and the College. Frats provide dining facilities, bathrooms, and social and extra-curricular activities. In turn, the College provides an economical method to feed fraternity members through Centralized Dining Service, and it provides the annual presence of fraternity participants without which the fraternity would not even exist.

There are several myths concerning this relationship. However, these myths are usually associated with sexist policies—TD, Beta, and Chi Psi—and the more books, the more additional burden on the College would involve only about the most serious problem. The College could take another one hundred people into their dining facilities, and according to Dean of Students Wendy Fairy, "if the College continues as it is now, construction of a new dormitory plus dining facilities can be expected to be reasonably near future. In that case, fraternity dining facilities will not be needed. And while student social life is important, it is not reasonable to assume that school policy—if justified in the minds of the faculty, this fictional power over social life. Objectively, the fraternities need the College more than the College needs the fraternities.

Don't forget that the College has taken a stand against fraterenities in the past. In 1962, a statement was made that the fraternities saying discrimination on the basis of race would not be tolerated. "It is not consistent with the high ideals of good faith, honesty and straightforwardness which the College should cherish, for a national fraternity to influence or force its local chapter to adopt, follow, or obstruct in any way the policies of the institution where it is located." At that time, the policy was bar discrimination on the basis of sex; in light of affirmative action legislation, it is the policy to bar discrimination on the basis of sex.

In any case, the College should change its policies. If it is economical, the College should allow it. If it might easily transfer its policy to the fraternities in view of the close association between the two institutions. And there are good indications that this will be the attitude of the faculty when the matter is put to a vote in January. Why haven't fraternities changed their policies before now?

The usual answer, which we have heard before, that they are not economically feasible for fraternities to break with their national association, as they must do if they are obliged to admit women as full members. But examine the advantages of belonging to a national organization. It provides a national name which allows one to recognize people in different areas as "brothers." It provides an occasional national convention. It provides some scholarship money.

Contrary to many opinions, it does not support the fraternity financially. Each house deposits its fees instead on a House Corporation, a group of Bowdoin alumni who own and run the Corporation.

(Continued on Page 6)
Merchant strikes stage barrier; concerted effort saves skin

by ALEX STEVENSON

Like its protagonist Anthony, this production of The Merchant of Venice, performed last week in Kresge Auditorium, seemed to be off the stage for some time. However, with the help of both director Elliot '81 and Amalia Vidas production would have done well to temper their self-absorption with greater spontaneous vigor.

As implied above, however, Merchant did give nearly as much as the audience was willing to take. All by all the promise of a production whose potential could hardly have been fully realized. Director Elliot deserves points for bravery in undertaking a play with limited human, physical, and moral potential. The students who made the most of all the appearance of human beings. Elliot offered a good deal more than the front row ended up being - a much more comfortable Shakespearean experience. It is not easy, and difficulties in interpretation did add a little of Merchant's speaking cast at one point or another.

Characterizations thus ranged from unambiguously likeable to the latter flaw which permitted Elliot, as Shylock, from low to the highest success. Shakespeare makes it hard for us to feel sorry for his few in any case, but Elliot's unrelenting ranting and excessively energetic movements made the villain come off so much more as an emotional mess than he was intended to be. Misdirection was perhaps the most common fault, however. In the few humorous potential in their roles as, respectively, the Prince of Arragon, Antonio's friend, Gobbo, and Shylock, the audience was not pleasantly surprised by the few comic relief that managed to creep into the main action. By revealing judiciously in their humorous antics, and above all, two characters revealed their humanity, and while such comedy would have been misplaced in the few characters, such believability would not have been inappropriate.

overcoming the tendency to overact or to use an inappropriate tone of voice, Merchant of Venice is perhaps not the best choice for in the first place. The play is not easy, and difficulties in interpretation did add a little of Merchant's speaking cast at one point or another.

Characterizations thus ranged from unambiguously likeable to the latter flaw which permitted Elliot, as Shylock, from low to the highest success. Shakespeare makes it hard for us to feel sorry for his few in any case, but Elliot's unrelenting ranting and excessively energetic movements made the villain come off so much more as an emotional mess than he was intended to be. Misdirection was perhaps the most common fault, however. In the few humorous potential in their roles as, respectively, the Prince of Arragon, Antonio's friend, Gobbo, and Shylock, the audience was not pleasantly surprised by the few comic relief that managed to creep into the main action. By revealing judiciously in their humorous antics, and above all, two characters revealed their humanity, and while such comedy would have been misplaced in the few characters, such believability would not have been inappropriate.

overcoming the tendency to overact or to use an inappropriate tone of voice, Merchant of Venice is perhaps not the best choice for in the first place. The play is not easy, and difficulties in interpretation did add a little of Merchant's speaking cast at one point or another.

Characterizations thus ranged from unambiguously likeable to the latter flaw which permitted Elliot, as Shylock, from low to the highest success. Shakespeare makes it hard for us to feel sorry for his few in any case, but Elliot's unrelenting ranting and excessively energetic movements made the villain come off so much more as an emotional mess than he was intended to be. Misdirection was perhaps the most common fault, however. In the few humorous potential in their roles as, respectively, the Prince of Arragon, Antonio's friend, Gobbo, and Shylock, the audience was not pleasantly surprised by the few comic relief that managed to creep into the main action. By revealing judiciously in their humorous antics, and above all, two characters revealed their humanity, and while such comedy would have been misplaced in the few characters, such believability would not have been inappropriate.

overcoming the tendency to overact or to use an inappropriate tone of voice, Merchant of Venice is perhaps not the best choice for in the first place. The play is not easy, and difficulties in interpretation did add a little of Merchant's speaking cast at one point or another.

Characterizations thus ranged from unambiguously likeable to the latter flaw which permitted Elliot, as Shylock, from low to the highest success. Shakespeare makes it hard for us to feel sorry for his few in any case, but Elliot's unrelenting ranting and excessively energetic movements made the villain come off so much more as an emotional mess than he was intended to be. Misdirection was perhaps the most common fault, however. In the few humorous potential in their roles as, respectively, the Prince of Arragon, Antonio's friend, Gobbo, and Shylock, the audience was not pleasantly surprised by the few comic relief that managed to creep into the main action. By revealing judiciously in their humorous antics, and above all, two characters revealed their humanity, and while such comedy would have been misplaced in the few characters, such believability would not have been inappropriate.

overcoming the tendency to overact or to use an inappropriate tone of voice, Merchant of Venice is perhaps not the best choice for in the first place. The play is not easy, and difficulties in interpretation did add a little of Merchant's speaking cast at one point or another.

Characterizations thus ranged from unambiguously likeable to the latter flaw which permitted Elliot, as Shylock, from low to the highest success. Shakespeare makes it hard for us to feel sorry for his few in any case, but Elliot's unrelenting ranting and excessively energetic movements made the villain come off so much more as an emotional mess than he was intended to be. Misdirection was perhaps the most common fault, however. In the few humorous potential in their roles as, respectively, the Prince of Arragon, Antonio's friend, Gobbo, and Shylock, the audience was not pleasantly surprised by the few comic relief that managed to creep into the main action. By revealing judiciously in their humorous antics, and above all, two characters revealed their humanity, and while such comedy would have been misplaced in the few characters, such believability would not have been inappropriate.
Marathon effort

Students run for peace of mind

by DAVID M. STONE

"He jogged each day. Just for the fun of it. Three miles in roughly 27 minutes. And as he ran, he'd dream about what he'd read that day. For instance, when Frank Shorter won the Fukuoka marathon, John imagined it was he who won it. In 1971. And now the Japanese would honor him." He'd even hear their speeches, though — because they were in Japanese — he could merely pick out reiterations of his name: John Fastest.

There are a lot of John Fastes at Bowdoin this year — up and down Maine Street, across Longfellow, around Pickard Field, and back to the gym. Some go faster, some further, but the majority belong to the "three mile in roughly 27 minutes" group. They go out every day, work up a sweat, burn off some energy, and return to their routine.

Not everyone will win the Fukuoka marathon, or even place. They may have dreams of glory, but not more than a few. What then, has fueled the running craze at Bowdoin, despite the extracurricular offerings? According to a multitude of students to hit the road instead of the books in the afternoon?

"Positive addiction," answers Barrett Fisher, a veggie runs a day. "I got into it to lose weight and just to exercise, but I got interested in the psychological and mental aspects of it, and just couldn't stop. Running is an addiction, but for once it's a good one."

Fisher stressed that the psychological benefits from running are as great or greater than the physical benefits. "I'm running to get my mind off of studying. It refreshes it. It gives me time by myself. It also gives me a sense of accomplishment."

The junior also pointed out the benefits to studying. "Running, guards against mental and physical staleness. I think better when I'm in a faster state of mind. I feel better physically, and that reflects mentally," he said.

Alex Stevenson '79 also started running to lose weight ten years ago. From there he progressed to high school cross-country, and this year ran for the Bowdoin cross-country team. But his running season does not end with the track.

In explaining why he runs, Stevenson points out that "staying in shape is only part of the reason. It is a habit — a psychological as well as physical habit. If I don't run, I have a lot of excess energy, and it's hard to concentrate on studying."

For him, the psychological effects of running only become noticeable when he runs longer distances. "Not until after five or more miles do I start to experience the psychological benefits. Only after I run a long distance do the benefits stay with me."

Scott Palen '70 also stressed that the benefits of running are largely psychological. "I like to go for an easy run by myself and I have ten-thousand things on my mind and want to sort them out. Running makes it easier to think. It makes it easier to come to conclusions," he said.

Back up the opinions of these runners is a University of Wisconsin study. A team of researchers there enrolled a group of depressed patients in a running therapy program. The group ran three times a week for at least 60 minutes each time. The exercise reduced patients' depression.

Thus, burning off calories and getting in shape are for many, merely by-products of running; hence the benefits from the psychological benefits it provides. For many Bowdoin students, running represents a needed break from the daily mental grind.

---

BMA discusses future events, finds it difficult spending $10

(Continued from Page 1)

(Continued from Page 17)

The Executive Board insisted that passage of a charter would work to endanger the existence of the fraternity. "One-third of all men and one-fifth of all women on this campus belong to the fraternities in question," he said. "Those three fraternities provide a lot of social life at this College, which is pretty bad as it is. The will be cutting down the options at this College if frats become disassociated," Zirinis concluded.

Others present at the meeting were distressed at the wording of the referendum. Michael Tardiff '79 explained, "We're being put in a position where we have to vote yes or no to a question when it is not clear what yes or no mean." Tardiff was referring to the fact that the referendum appeared to be addressing several distinct and pressing problems in the form of one confusing question.

After Zirinis motion was finally defeated by a vote of 22-11, Dunskey suggested that the meeting be ended. "I'm afraid that maybe in ten minutes late to class," he said. The next meeting of the BMA will take place early next semester.

---

Zete allows women to hold office amidst cries of delight and dismay

Losing weight, mental refreshment and just staying in shape are the reasons why so many people are donning running shoes and hitting the trail. Oriens/Yong

(Continued from Page 17)

Zete members who vehemently oppose the recently passed resolution. Tom George '70 explained, "There is a minority of us to whom the national means a lot. The house has been moving away from the national. We've broken bylaws, mostly pertaining to the position of women in the house. If the national takes away the charter, the house will cease to exist."

Another spokesman for the opposition, Kevin Smith '70, noted, "It's not really a far anymore in the strict sense. I find little brotherhood there."

Theoretically, the issue is women holding office in the house. The issue is to us holding full equality in a fraternity where fraternities mean a male organization. We're not chauvinistic. This is not a question of discrimination," declared Carl Wessen '70.

Smith added, "It's a mistake letting girls into a fraternity and still calling it a fraternity. . . . A simple solution would be to start sororities."

Speaking on the defect of the bidding quota, Bruce Shibbs '79 commented, "There is now no way to stop the influx of women. With women taking the fraternity it would be somewhat of a sorority. There is a lot of meaning to a national fraternity."
SNAFU revises rock 'n roll to rave reviews

by Holly Henke

SNAFU, the latest rock and roll band to hit Bowdoin, will play tomorrow night in the Senior Center for a free concert sponsored by the Student Union Committee.

Situating Normal All Fouled Up, to put it politely, features Tracy Smith '80, senior, lead vocalist, Ron Pastore '80, bass guitar, and Scott Mills '79, drums.

The four-man group which met with widespread popularity after their first concert is likely to be influential in the music business later this year. Their recent high profile has led some members of the audience to suggest that the group is more popular than the Rolling Stones and that its success is due to its ability to appeal to a younger audience.

Heavy metal and punk rock style combinations are the norm for SNAFU, and the group's popularity is largely due to its ability to attract a wider audience. The group's sound is characterized by electric guitars and powerful vocals, creating a distinct sound that sets them apart from other rock bands.

Smith, a member of Delta Sigma fraternity, began his college career at Bowdoin with a desire to play music. He eventually discovered SNAFU and decided to join the group. Since then, he has been a driving force in the band's success and has contributed significantly to its growth.

Faculty to hear, discuss two SC Council reports

by Michael Tardiff

The stage is set for what may very well be the most dramatic and controversial battle among the various campus constituencies over whether or not Senior Center-sponsored large courses should continue to be offered at Bowdoin. Next Monday the Student Council and minority reports of the Senior Center Council, and then began discussing the proposals.

The majority report essentially provides for the retention of the Senior Center Seminar Program as it is currently constituted; only the name and membership of the committee would be affected by any changes.

The minority report, written by Professor Daniel Roselle, and entitled "Suggestions for the Future of the Senior Center Program and the Disposition of the Instructional Resources New Tied Up In," urges that the College spend the money it allocates to the present program to hire more faculty members, and that courses of an experimental nature be given more administrative support.

The report recommends that a committee to administer small departmental structure.

According to the majority report, which was written by Senior Center Council member and professor John Turner, the Senior Center has offered a total of 115 seminars and small courses since 1971. The program, says the report, have encouraged student exploration of "foreign areas of inquiry, allowed experimentation on the part of Bowdoin faculty members and made it possible for staff members and other members of the surrounding community to teach at Bowdoin."

"The vast majority of these courses and seminars have been successful...Faculty members are anxious to be teaching seminars next semester and student opinion is overwhelmingly in favor of the continuation of the program."

It continues, "It is the view of the Senior Center Council that the flexibility and opportunity for innovation that such a program provides makes it an essential part of the Bowdoin curriculum and that it should continue."

The report recommends that a committee to administer small (Continued on Page 6)
Profs to discuss future of Senior Center seminars courses and seminars in the tradition of the Senior Center Seminars be established, that the committee have a chairman who shall be freed from all other committee assignments, and that no more than ten adjacent faculty (with an each teaching one course) be hired in any one academic year.

(Continued from Page 5)

Professor Rossides' report contends that the Seminars cost between $75,000 and $100,000 to administer in 1977-78. It implies that the College could, for that amount of money, hire 5 un-tenured or 4 tenured faculty members.

The minority report suggests alternate uses for the resources presently applied toward the Senior Center Program, including:

- developing an improved range of courses offered on the Second and Third Worlds;
- developing new preprofessional courses, for example public administration or pre-architectural;
- creating a group of "general education" courses suitable for introducing students to subjects outside to their majors.

Rossides recommends that control of all courses be retained by the Curriculum and Educational Policy Committee of the faculty and that adjunct faculty be authorized to teach at the College. The adjuncts would teach special-interest courses, under the auspices of presently-existing departments.

The

SIDE DOOR LOUNGE

Enjoy the outdoors indoors "By the fire"

Dec. 8 & 9 - Michael Cross Dec. 15 & 16 - Shady Deal
Saturday-Sunday 11:30 a.m.-12:30 a.m.
Next to 22 Lincoln Restaurant

Tontine Mall, Brunswick 729-4462

Our famous
CHAMOIS CLOTH
SHIRTS Only 12.99

Sizes 14 1/2 to 18 in.

chamois, slate blue, red, rust, dk green, 12.99
Talls & sizes 18 & 19 in.

chamois 14.99

Apple Bakers... Honey Pots... Flowers in Glass... Coffee Mugs... Oil Lamps... Stained Glass and More. Lots of unique things for people...

Tontine Mall, Brunswick

Monday-Friday till 9 — Saturday till 5

729-1301

Sincerely,

Matthew Tasley '82
Hockey season opens with rout of Boston State

(Continued from Page 8)

scoring were Andy Minich, Gerry Carelia, Paul Devine, Ben Macellos and Mike Collins. The Bears unveiled a month and a half worth of pent up energy in the opener. Even after being instructed not to score, it was 12:3, opportunities arose where it was almost impossible to

The team travels to Storrs tonight to play the University of Connecticut and will face St. Anselm's away next Tuesday for the final pre-seesion break game.

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
144 Maine st. Brunswick, Maine 04011

A pile-up in front of Harvard Goalie John Hynes caused tempers to flare Wednesday, resulting in three penalties. (Times Record Photo/Dave Bourque)

STUFF YOUR STOCKINGS HERE

THE SKI STALL
The Tontine Mall
Maine St., Brunswick
Open Mon.-Fri., 'til 9 p.m.
and Sundays 12-4 p.m.

The wonderful Christmas Book Issue of

The New York Times

Book Review

Last year, Macbeans and the New York Times mailed copies of the Christmas Book issue to our list of 1,000 plus. That idea was to be expanded to the whole country this year, and bookshops from coast to coast had signed up. But the New York newspaper strike changed all that!

So we got 200 copies of the best book "catalog" of 1978 and your copy awaits — with Macbeans compliments — at 134 Maine Street in Brunswick.

Stop in soon.

Thanks, Randy Brad

Macbeans Books & Music

Call "Stowe" Travel for Holiday Flights

DEAR BOWDOIN TRAVELERS:

As I write this Christmas letter, snow is falling steadily outside Stowe Travel's windows. Never mind that the calendar says that winter doesn't officially begin until Dec. 21, it's here — and now!

And as usual, Stowe Travel Ready to help you all with your last minute travel plans for over the holidays whether it be by jet for that Christmas flight home, to Florida or San Juan, with Sarah Nadelhedder, Dave Peterson and all the rest of Bowno's smooth, gliding swimming team) to Hawaii as with Peter Steinbreuck (lucky him), or Bune Voli to Norway, Glen Soder to Switzerland and others to their special places in Europe.

There are many of you who have already made plans with us for Bowdin Bermuda College Weeks in 1979, and that will be the subject of our first newsletter to you after the long Christmas-New Year's vacation. We have learned that Bowdin students have always been particularly fond of the spring College Weeks in Bermuda!

Reid rebuilding squash team with young, dedicated crew to. Harvard is number three in the country, and Yale and Trinity have always been strong. What we did get was some good playing time. Besides the Colby match last Wednesday, the team will meet Amherst and Yale before vacation, both of which will be played at Amherst.

(Continued from Page 8)

Women strong

The women, led by sophomores Karinne Tong, should maintain their continued improvement this year. Reid says the women "promise to have their best year ever," Reid is coach for both the men's and women's team. As the men do, they have some really fine players that are going to do well. The team lost its first match, 5-2, against Harvard last weekend, but none of the women made a strong showing. "A couple of them are returning for their second season on varsity, which will help move the team ahead," Coach Reid declared. Coach Sally LePage, who is also involved with the team, expressed the same opinion: "They promise to be good this year," They, too, have a long season, although they play fewer matches than the men. Both teams will finish up at the Nationals at West Point on March 2-4.

Played in a small indoor court, squash is fast-moving, tough, and demanding. Spectators will realize it's not an easy game. Exciting to watch, full of quick and powerful moves and skills, squash is both a player and spectator sport. The home matches should be well worth taking a look at; even though it's played in a tiny space, the action of the game is too good to be missed, especially as the team progresses, both this year and in the future.

FOR GUYS & GALS!

Plain or Cable

Famous

100% Orlon Acrylic Machine Washable Machine Dryable
20 colors to choose from

WINUK Crew Neck SWEATERS
$13.98 — $14.98
Also Available
"For the Tall Fellow"
Long Sizes $16.98

Men's Wear

McDUFF
Teen Wear

90 Maine St., Brunswick
VISA & Master Charge Welcome
Open Daily 9-5; Fri. Evenings til 8:00

THE BOWDOIN STEAK HOUSE

FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT

115 Maine st, Brunswick, Maine 725-2344
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

Dec. 13 & 14
PETER GALLWAY REVUE

Dec. 15 & 16
CRAIG & DAVE
Men hoosiers surprise early; women reel off three victories

by GEOFF WORRELL

Bowdoin basketball is no longer struggling to be competitive; it is there. The hoosiers rambled to a 2-1 record which includes two victories that earned them a tournament title last weekend. The Bears lost to Colby last Wednesday, however, puts their league opportunities in perspective.

The season opener against New England College at the Farmington tournament was not much of a contest. The Bears trounced the New England squad 96-49. The point distribution was good. Mark Krallian 79, Stuart Hutchins 81, and Eric Trenkman 92 led the scoring for the Bears each hitting twelve points from the field.

Crimson dominant

Harvard ices Bears, 6-4

by DANNY MENCZ

Coming off a 15-3 opening game win over Boston State, the Bowdoin Polar Bears had things put in proper perspective with a 6-4 loss to Division I Harvard. Wednesday night’s game against the Crimson was close, point-wise, but the Bears were outshot and outplayed. A lot of credit for keeping the game as tight as it was goes to goalie Bob Menjes, who kicked out 41 shots, 21 in the first period.

Bowdoin scored first; on a shot from the point by Mark Rahibut at 2:03 in the first period. Harvard answered four minutes later, but Bowdoin jumped ahead again when Mike Carman put a rebound of a Roger Elliott shot past Harvard goaltender John Hynes.

Penguins continued to cruise around, and the Bears were outshot 1-3, 2-4, and 4-2, but with 1:39 remaining in a man advantage situation.

Coming back for the final period the Polar Bears still couldn’t find the net and it was the Crimson who tallied first in the period, on a short-handed goal by Hughes, completing his hat trick and putting Bowdoin in the hole, 5-2. But freshman Ron Marcellus got one back on a tip-in off a Paul Howard pass to narrow the margin to 5-3. Unfortunately, Harvard replied 40 seconds later when defenseman Alan Litchfield put a shot in from the point to regain the third goal margin.

Women win three

Bowdoin’s women’s basketball squad is proving worth as well. The women hoosiers have played three games and are undefeated. The Bears’ first victory against the Harvard Junior Varsity gave the team the chance to experiment with different types of defenses. The 65-59 score indicates that not much didn’t function. Their second contest was a virtual cake walk as the women’s hoosiers defeated the Crimson 100-28.

The third game against St. Joseph’s proved to be a little troublesome regardless of what the score may indicate. “We didn’t play as well as a team as we did in the first two games and we cracked a little under pressure,” commented sophomore Jessica Birdsell.

Postgame Scripts

Giant hopeful

by BILL STUART

It’s not often that Bowdoin athletes make their mark in professional athletics, but Dick Levitt ’76 plans to do something about that next year. Levitt, a mammoth offensive tackle, was signed by the Raiders out of Bowdoin. He made it to the final cut with the Super bowl champions to be then worked out with the New York Giants and was articulated for the Giants’ final two games in 1976.

In 1977, he impressed the Giants with his long snapping ability as a center on the special teams. “The coaches were encouraging,” Levitt explained. “They praised me on my special teams work, but told me had to get down the field quickly and assist on tackles. So, during an exhibition game with the Saints in the New Orleans Superdome, I got pumped up and charged down the field. I was in mid-air when the ball-carrier changed directions, so I changed my body direction in the air and then came down wrong.” The result was a left knee injury that required surgery and kept him out of the line-up for the entire year.

He didn’t last as long during the 1976 season. In a scrimmage with the Jets, his legs were pinned by two defensive linemen and one of his own mates, and the result was a severe ligament injury. “At the time of the second operation, the doctor told me that he had done five hundred ligament operations and had never seen one worse. So I felt my career was done,” Levitt relates.

So, Levitt, who was the national champion in the shotput as a 365-pound undergraduate, returned to Maine to coach high school ball at Waterville. “When the cast came off,” he said, “the knee felt great. I have been running on it and doing stuff I couldn’t do after the first operation. I have even been skating, which I couldn’t do last year.”

This progress has encouraged Levitt to give football another try. He explains, “I know I can play somewhere. I watch games on television and see guys I outplayed on pro rosters and I am convinced I can play. I don’t know if I will be playing in the N.F.L. or in Canada next year, but I guarantee that under the right circumstances, I will be playing.”

Young squash squad opens with close victory at Colby

by MARK HOSBEIN

Coach Ed Reid summed up Wednesday’s 6-4 win over the Maine College of Art over Colby on the eve of the event by declaring, “We’re going up to Colby with what might call a cautious optimism. We haven’t lost a match to them in nine years, and we aren’t planning on losing this time; what I can say is that it’s going to be closer than usual.”

The match proved Reid to be a prophet, as the squash captured the contest by a 5-4 margin with victory in the final round.

Rebuilding projects

Squash, the regroup sport most students play at least once in their four years here, is working hard this season to rebuild its team sport. Viewed by Coach Reid as “a building year,” this season’s roster of the Harvard team is made up of players that are “young, interesting and learning the game, and have real potential for performance.”

The return of one letterman and one student from the team, most of which were filled by players who had not had much experience on the varsity level, are capable of building a team with dominance within the foreseeable future. A freshman, Dustin Lockwood, will hold the number one spot this year, ensuring strength for coming seasons as well as a good effort in the present one. “The only way a team can be built,” said Reid, “is through a lot of playing, and that’s what we did last Saturday.”

The schedule is not a rigorous one, but with 10 matches and two tournaments within a three month period, the team will get ample chances to get in some good games. Some of this year’s opponents are Amherst, Yale, MIT, Trinity, Hamilton, Williams and Wesleyan, in addition to the CBB circuit. Prior to November break, many of the team members plan on going on a four-school scrimmage tour, which included Harvard J.V., Yale, Trinity, and Wesleyan. “We didn’t do too well,” explained Reid, “but we weren’t expecting...”
Doubtful Security seizures lead to controversy

by ROBERT DESIMONE and RAYMOND A. SWAN

Reports have been filtering around campus all week that Bowdoin Security has removed various signs, flags, and marijuana paraphernalia from students’ rooms, with some speculation that it was part of a long-term effort to "purge Bowdoin students." It had mushroomed into a full-scale controversy.

It began with Security's intention to prevent the possible seizure of marijuana plants from a fraternity house. "I was notified that there were marijuana plants at a fraternity house," one student wrote.

"We went over to the fraternity and found the door wide open. I thought to myself, 'Let's get this stuff out of here,' which we did." We simply wanted to protect the students involved. There hadn't been a policy set on matters like this until I met last week with Mr. Libby, College Business and Dean Fairey (Dean of Students).

Joy's meeting with Libby and Fairey was prompted by a series of security-related events other than the Psi U incident which also took place over vacation. While students were away, Joy's men and women routinely inspected all dorms and fraternities to insure that pipes had not frozen and that heating and sprinkling systems were trouble free. During the course of those inspections, Security Officers retrieved stolen College property and non-College property which had been reported stolen to Security. Explained Joy about the latter instance: "If we know of an incident where people call in and say they've had signs taken from them — my suggestion to them is 'Wait instead of reporting it to the Police Department. We'll try to get it back to you.'" For instance, Bates College called up about a missing plaque last fall. I told my Security Officers to pick it up if they saw it during their rounds. Over vacation, one of the men spotted it in Coleman Hall. He brought it in.

"I said to them (Security personnel): 'Give me a list of what you've seen and I'll decide what to take.' Some of the things were just doing their job. He also said: 'someone has to teach these kids that they can't steal things and get away with it.' The discussions ended and we didn't agree.

"After work the next night, I went into the Security Office (Mr. Joy's office) to fill out my time sheet. On top of the folder that my time sheet was on was a piece of paper with a list of things taken out of rooms in 3 different dorms. I looked at the list and thought that this was proof that they were taking things.

"I took the list and photocopied it and put it back. I photocopied it because St. Pierre insisted that the Dean's Office was fully aware that this was taking place. The way I saw the whole situation — Security was doing their job as authorized by the Administration and my concern was that the students didn't know it was going on."

I spoke with Lois Egasti and Dean Fairey the next morning. They were aware that stolen material was recovered from students' rooms, but they were not aware of the procedure involved... They didn't know the full extent of what was happening.

(Continued on Page 5)

---

Frozen pipe bursts, floods Center

by MICHAEL TARDIFF

The normally-uneventful Friday night shift at the Senior Center Information desk turned into a hectic and wet three hours for monitor Lucia Sedwick '79 last week. As gallons of water poured from a burst sprinkler pipe and flooded the building's lobby area and a basement storage area, the flooding, caused when freezing water cracked and burst at least two joints in a fire sprinkler pipe, heavily damaged ceiling tiles in the lobby and lobby areas of the Senior Center. Water which drained through heating ducts and into the basement soaked supplies in a small storage closet and necessitated the turning off of several washing machines and dryers for a period of about three hours.

According to witnesses, water had been dripping from the vicinity of a sprinkler head just inside a door leading to the lower elevator area since about 8 p.m. that night. When the leak, first attributed to melting snow, became larger at approximately 10:30 p.m., Senior Center intern Lynne Harrigan '79 called Physical Plant. One minute later, water began pouring from the ceiling at a fast rate, and Harrigan called Bowdoin Security's special emergency extension.

Harrigan and Sedwick, along with passersby Marty BFord and Vladimir Drozdoff, both members of the Class of '79, quickly moved most of the lobby area furniture and rugs to a television area beyond the elevator shafts, thereby preventing major water damage.

When Physical Plant personnel responded and turned off the water, the resulting low pressure triggered the building's fire alarm system, causing the Brunswick Fire Department to respond approximately five minutes later. The firemen used squeegees and portable vacuums to remove most of the approximately one inch of water from the first floor, as Harrigan and Sedwick told Center residents who had responded to the alarm and were trying to leave the building took their shoes off to keep their rooms, so as not to hamper the cleanup.

Most of the water had been cleaned up by 12:30 a.m. Nine of the 22 plumbers had finished replacing the broken joint a half hour later. When the water was turned on, however, the pressure burst yet another joint and the lobby was flooded again. The branch of the system suspected as the cause was then capped off so that the fire alarm could be reset.

---

Last rays of setting 'Sun' mark start of Exec session

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

In an uncharacteristic decision, the Executive Board voted to revoke the charter of the Bowdoin Sun during its first session of the new semester. In addition, the Board relaxed the amendment at the sparsely attended Student Senate meeting, and Hart and Board hall bills will increase once again next year.

Several factors prompted the Board's decision on the Sun. Explaining the Board's reason for making the move, newly elected Chairwoman Amy Homans '81 stated, "The paper has changed too many times under one charter without amendment, and it lost its direction." According to her, when the Sun first made its appearance last fall, "it didn't reflect the original purpose stated in the charter."

The Sun's apparent organizational and managerial failures were reflected by its direfulness in responding to a charter review, as well as in the quality of the charter that was presented. The process in which Chairwoman Homans expressed personal dissatisfaction. Spring semester editor Rupert Wood '79, who represented the Sun, responded to the concerns of both organization and interest posed by Mike Carman '80 and Basil Zirinis '80. "Interest to produce the magazine was not there at the meeting we held to organize our second issue. No one turned up, so we did not feel it incumbent to produce the second issue." (Continued on Page 6)

---

Frozen pipe bursts, floods Center

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

In an uncharacteristic decision, the Executive Board voted to revoke the charter of the Bowdoin Sun during its first session of the new semester. In addition, the Board relaxed the amendment at the sparsely attended Student Senate meeting, and Hart and Board hall bills will increase once again next year.

Several factors prompted the Board's decision on the Sun. Explaining the Board's reason for making the move, newly elected Chairwoman Amy Homans '81 stated, "The paper has changed too many times under one charter without amendment, and it lost its direction." According to her, when the Sun first made its appearance last fall, "it didn't reflect the original purpose stated in the charter."

The Sun's apparent organizational and managerial failures were reflected by its direfulness in responding to a charter review, as well as in the quality of the charter that was presented. The process in which Chairwoman Homans expressed personal dissatisfaction. Spring semester editor Rupert Wood '79, who represented the Sun, responded to the concerns of both organization and interest posed by Mike Carman '80 and Basil Zirinis '80. "Interest to produce the magazine was not there at the meeting we held to organize our second issue. No one turned up, so we did not feel it incumbent to produce the second issue." (Continued on Page 6)
The hallmark of the seventies is an attitude of new conservatism. New because it does not represent the conservative, currently, historically conservative group but rather that which recently changed from the middle of the road to the right. Conservative because the willingness to hold on to the same old scale is replaced by a compulsory "to hold one's own."

This is not necessarily bad. Tax reform legislation indicates an interest in scrutinizing revenue-raising policies. By definition one cannot participate in government. But the new conservatism is not entirely good either. Government is not business. If all decisions were reached using criteria of dollars and cents, our society would truly be amoral. But we can be prudent without being stingy.

Here at the College, there are immediate problems in separating the many levels of conservatism. We have traditions and we take pressingly to the notion that a dedication to learning and superior academics are such. Yet even the pure strain of conservatism has been overshadowed by the recent hybrid. This concept relies on misinformation, or the misinterpretation of facts, and the use of personal prejudice in correspondence to further confuse the issue under the pretense of a rational, unbiased approach to the problem. Furthermore, the use of such information, and the totally unnecessary inclusion of Beta's name clarifies nothing and enlightens no one as to what issues are really at stake. It should be mentioned that the evening before the publication of the Orient, Beta was informed in a letter of the personal letter, but was promised by the editor that the letter's name would not be used. It is even more tragic, however, that the decision to discontinue confidential information and to use the name of Beta will undoubtedly threaten the informal relationship of Beta with the national, a situation already very tense. Not only will this column jeopardize the beta-national bonds, but I feel such a gross misuse of information considerably, if not totally destroy what trust Beta, or any other fraternity has put in the administration and the Beta Committee. I have no idea how the Orient obtained this document, but I do know the information was entrusted to the Committee only after much effort and the necessary steps frats face in dealing with this issue.

Although this specific incident concerns only Beta, unfortunately such an emotional and confused response to the problem of sex bias within the fraternities is symptomatic of the way in which they are run. The various sides of the controversy are not clear-cut, but rather are overlapping and complex.

It is much easier for us, however, to be upset by the issues and emotions of the present controversy in such a simplistic way. Furthermore, it is misleading to present the problem of fraternities as such, and then rely on a sensationalistic appeal and misuse of information to confuse the issue and turn up emotions. The more people insist on such a concept, the more they misrepresent the smaller, but equally important aspects of the situation faced by the fraternities. Only by taking a slow, careful, open-minded approach can the problem be more satisfactorily and work for each fraternity involved. Beta, T.D., and Chi Psi are very important to us, and I hope each one in time will solve the problem in their own way, without the necessity of creating false and unqualified individuals or groups.

To the editors of the Orient may have been attempting to clarify the issues and enlighten their readers, as true journalism should, they have succeeded instead in creating more confusion and further complications for those involved. It is truly unfortunate that the College and the Hitchcock can discover no other way to approach the issue than to rely on the Orient. The Orient runs on misinformation and the unauthorized use of personal information. This information undermines any progress made this semester towards the improvement of women's role in Bowdoin fraternities.
Bogey before he met Lauren Bacall and learned how to whistle.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK:

“We’re not finished yet.” Rupert Wood, following the unanimous decision to rename the charter of the Boudoin Sun.

It rained on BOR’s parade by LAURA HITCHCOCK

"Gettin’ strong now."

It was Welcome Back time for 91.1 FM Brunswick radio Sunday and Bowdoin On Radio, WROR, was going strong after a semester’s absence from the air. There was to be a parade, and lots of special broadcasts. The theme from "Rocky" was just one of many inspirational tunes played that hopeful Sunday afternoon.

Now, three days later it was over.

"Now we’re ten watts of pure nothing," senior Mike Sharon said Tuesday. "There were two transmitters responsible for the ten watts of pure power. Sunday, the first transmitter started acting funny, spattering the signals, so we changed to the old transmitter today. That transmitter cracked.

Simply stated, no more BOR for awhile. Not until the transmitters are fixed, with a luck a delay no longer than a few days, according to Sharon, who along with Michael Tariff ’79, runs the station.

Preparation included the training and testing of 60 new DJs, and a lot of planning also, the two managers had to arrange for a transfer from ten to 100 watts of power, a change which will occur in the near future. For the power, a new antenna will be mounted on top of the Center, Sharon says. He hopes that BOR will get space on the top floor of the Center and thus save "quite a bit of money which otherwise must be spent running a cable from the Center to the Mouton Unit, where the station is located.

But just when the station seemed ready to start in the morning, station manager Bill Berk ’79 resigned from his post. Berk didn’t have enough time to devote to the station.

College recognizes South African problem by HOLLY HENKE

Bowdoin’s South African Advisory Committee to the President will host a college community Thursday, February 18 to hear Assistant Professor of Economics Lawrence to discuss college policies on investments in South Africa. He will be on the floor to ask questions, air opinions, or present recommendations about the College should take in regard to its $19,157,000 investment in companies doing business in that country, a sum which represents about 28 percent of Bowdoin’s total invested assets. The college is in General Motors, IBM, and Caterpillar Tractors, among others, and it appears to be the biggest in investors in the area. The remaining 21 percent is divided among fifteen other companies which operate in South Africa.

The recombeen committee coordinated by Dean Paul Nyhus was organized last fall of two representatives each, from the students, faculty, alumni, Board of Overseers, and Board of Trustees.

The Harvard report avoids coming out with a uniform policy on the investments and instead urges the committee to meet in the library. Try attending the discussion group and have your Bory on your TV screen.

The Harvard report avoids coming out with a uniform policy on the investments and instead urges the committee to meet in the library. Try attending the discussion group and have your Bory on your TV screen.

It has been said that by now the student in the real world, it is a good idea to be prepared for the real world. This is to be expected because college life is full of pressures and frustrates the student in an exam a week from now, or a paper due tomorrow, or a lab this afternoon. The pressure is real, and sometimes even knowledge of the ‘real’ world.

It has been said that this is what happens when you come to Bowdoin. That is a cop-out. Why are you here in the first place, where are your parents? Do you just read, if not to become educated? And what is education if it does not include the ability to analyze, so one can act intelligently? If you cannot do you expect to learn to act intelligently if you never take any action. That is not just about your classes, but about everything.

LETTERS

Dear Editor,

Complaining has become a fashion in the world today. This is to be expected because college life is full of pressures and frustrates the student in an exam a week from now, or a paper due tomorrow, or a lab this afternoon. The pressure is real, and sometimes even knowledge of the ‘real’ world.

It has been said that this is what happens when you come to Bowdoin. That is a cop-out. Why are you here in the first place, where are your parents? Do you just read, if not to become educated? And what is education if it does not include the ability to analyze, so one can act intelligently? If you cannot do you expect to learn to act intelligently if you never take any action. That is not just about your classes, but about everything.

It has been said that no one has any time to do anything except worry about what’s wrong with the world. Funny. I don’t know anyone who doesn’t have enough problems of their own. People tell me that they don’t know anything about South Africa and so they can’t speak. Why don’t they know? There was an excellent lecture by a Bowdoin professor during the week. He spoke about Bowdoin’s investments in South Africa, I have attempted numerous conversations to get how others feel about this subject. The response overall has been disappointing to say the least.

It has been said that Bowdoin is not the real world; instead it is a great idea to be prepared for the real world. This is to be expected because college life is full of pressures and frustrates the student in an exam a week from now, or a paper due tomorrow, or a lab this afternoon. The pressure is real, and sometimes even knowledge of the ‘real’ world.

It has been said that this is what happens when you come to Bowdoin. That is a cop-out. Why are you here in the first place, where are your parents? Do you just read, if not to become educated? And what is education if it does not include the ability to analyze, so one can act intelligently? If you cannot do you expect to learn to act intelligently if you never take any action. That is not just about your classes, but about everything.

The Harvard report avoids coming out with a uniform policy on the investments and instead urges the committee to meet in the library. Try attending the discussion group and have your Bory on your TV screen.
Mixed reactions greet BMA press conference as Schroeder-Dunsky duo entertains, informs, and outrages library audience. Orient/Zeke

BMA men meet the press:

"Women have stronghelth" by NANCY ROBERTS

On a quiet Tuesday night in Hawthorne Longellow Library, early semester students and socialites were shocked to learn that a "dangerous and instrument" exists. Approximately fifty students stood agast as Chairman of the BMA, Alan Schroeder 79 and Vice Chairman Steve Dunsky 79 held an informal and impromptu press conference on the first floor of the library in order to inform their listeners that women are achieving too many positions of control at Bowdoin.

According to Schroeder, "Men have a stronghelth on student government," he cited the gender of the Chair and Vice Chair of the Executive Board, and the student representatives to the Blanket Tax and Sex Grievance Committees as evidence of this deplorable situation. Dunsky noted that there were two openings on the Sex Grievance Committee in the fall, and that he and Vladimir Dronoff 79, the only two applicants, were interviewed and rejected for these positions. Their rejection was attributed to "women applicants," according to Dunsky who maintained gravely, "I think it's a shame to lose such talent." He added, "It's a shame to lose such talent to the student body." Schroeder relayed the reasons given by the Committee for the rejection as a lack of seriousness on the part of Dunsky, and Dronoff's belief that women are not oppressed at Bowdoin.

Inflation

The political arena is not the only facet of life at Bowdoin which is being infilterated by women, according to the two BMA officers. They point out that several courses in the recent college curriculum have had women as the subject matter. Movies and lectures have also been female-oriented, noted Dunsky, who referred to the recent BMA Film Society (BFS) movie "Three Women," and the "How To Say No to a Rapist" lecture of last semester. Dunsky notes what he is calling "the new wave" of BFS. Schroeder expressed concern that in the near future the BMA may become a "Patriotic" movement or a "Chemistry for Women," or "Women in Mathematics." Schroeder also has concerns about the future of BFS. He expressed concern that the BFS may become a "Patriotic" movement or a "Chemistry for Women," or "Women in Mathematics." Schroeder also has concerns about the future of BFS. He expressed concern that the BFS may become a "Patriotic" movement or a "Chemistry for Women," or "Women in Mathematics." Schroeder also has concerns about the future of BFS. He expressed concern that the BFS may become a "Patriotic" movement or a "Chemistry for Women," or "Women in Mathematics." Schroeder also has concerns about the future of BFS. He expressed concern that the BFS may become a "Patriotic" movement or a "Chemistry for Women," or "Women in Mathematics."
Security action brings reform in rules

(Continued from Page 1)

I left the ball in their court.”

Shortly thereafter, Joy received a call from Mr. Libby’s office requesting a meeting to discuss Security policy. Libby and Fairey were particularly concerned about the marijuana pipes and bongs which Security had retrieved from students’ rooms.

“We found the marijuana— we felt that we’d better get pipes—too,” explained Joy about Security’s actions. “Once you use a pipe for marijuana, it becomes contraband. Again, we were just trying to protect the students.”

“We all agreed it was pernicious and that we should ‘take the pipes back’, said Joy about his meeting with Libby and Fairey. “I had the officers return the pipes. I don’t think anybody was upset. It think it was a good opportunity to set up a policy.”

Dean Fairey described the new policy: “After some discussion, we agreed that personal property of students should not be touched ever. Property which might belong to the town, to the College, or McDonald’s, and which is owned by the owner, should not be taken from a student’s room.

“I should be notified…” I would then call in the occupants of the room to talk with them.”

BRUNSWICK BARBER SHOP
Ben and Wally’s Sampson’s Parking Lot 125 Main St.

PREScriptions — Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.
- Cards and Gifts -
ALLEN’S DRUG STORE
140 Main-Brant Telephone 759-6911

TURTLENECKS
100% Cotton 20 Colors Available
598

“Quality Clothing At Moderate Prices”

MC DUFFS
90 Main St. Brunswick

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
FRI. JAN. 26, 1979

THE temporary eclipse of the ‘Sun’

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

In April of 1977, a small but enthusiastic group of Bowdoin students and faculty organized a campus-wide health, happiness, and successful circulation for their newly-born baby, the Blue Sun. In January of 1979, a solitary editor sat before an eleven person Executive Board and saw another twelve-twisted infant lose its chart.

What happened?

The Bowdoin Sun, an organization which its current edition Ravich Wood called “a forum for people who want to write about things that simply aren’t covered in the Quill or the Orient,” has indeed fallen upon troubles — of a most disastrous and unnecessary Executive Board decision to revoke the Sun’s charter has in theory — if not in practice — put the Sun out of business.

The original Sun of two years past proclaimed in its first charter that the goal of producing a ‘quality, newsweekly journal’ which would serve the entire college community by attempting to ‘explain and investigate issues of concern to students at Bowdoin of campus, local, and national interest’. Membership was open to all members of the College community. An editor, the ‘chief administrative officer,’ would be elected in May. The Sun would publish in fall.

The Sun’s first editor, Michael Tardiff ’79, quoted the Sun: “The new babies are often hard to handle. In late September of the Sun’s first semester, Tardiff resigned, claiming that, ‘Each person who worked on the paper has arrived at a private conception of alternative journalism to which he or she feels the Sun should subscribe. It has become increasingly evident to me that the expectations which I hold for the paper are not my expectations. But neither is it a case of me against them; they are fragmented and without common interest beyond a desire to publish a weekly’…"

Debbie Heller ’80 replaced Tardiff as editor and oversaw the production of what was the first semester last year. She explained that after the first part of the fall, she stopped going to steal another sign.

Perhaps the stickiest situation of all concerned what one frat member called Security’s ‘intervention’ into his house. A member of another fraternity, Neil Moses ’79 (former President of the Student Government) told The Sun: ‘It’s a fair house and is like any kind of domestic house. We appreciate that Security comes in and checks fire extinguishers and things like that, but they feel that they have the right not to come in and take anything.’

Opening on February 2nd, the Walker Art Museum is a photographic exhibit of works done by Neill Moby-Nagy. Moby-Nagy’s works featuring experimental photographic techniques are displayed in the galleries of the Claremont Colleges, Claremont, California and are included in EDO Comprehensive Exhibition Services, Los Angeles and California. The exhibition is called “Photographic Works of Los Angeles Moby-Nagy” and will include seventy works and will hang in the museum’s Temporary Exhibition Gallery until March 18.

During a preview of this exhibition, a concert entitled “Moby-Nagy Night” will be held on February 1. The concert will take place in the Walker Art Museum’s Temporary Exhibition Gallery at 8:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The concert will feature literature ministry sound effects by Philip Corrigan, Professor Music, at Bowdoin, the Bowdoin faculty, Loui Ichiyonagi, and Edward Vanyo from Bowdoin College. The concert will consist of the music integrated with a series of slides which will illustrate some of Moby-Nagy’s works.

Wood: “I don’t think what they did was give us a vote of no confidence. In fact, the Sun has evolved and moved it into the general gap that exists. It’s now a more general, current-affairs type of thing.

His goal and the goal of the yet unchastened staff: “To prove that there is interest on the campus in a magazine which can be well-produced and a real asset to Bowdoin.

He hopes to appear before the Board at their next meeting with yet another charter. “If we’re not accepted next week,” he told the staff on Wednesday, “can’t be doing your stuff. If we don’t succeed with the Board next week we will petition the campus.”

Pogue examines apartheid’s effects

by STEVEN RAPKIN

The first talk of the Albert C. Boothby, Sr. Memorial Lecture Series was given Tuesday evening by guest speaker Professor Charles H. P. Henry, Director for the Center for Black Studies at Denison University in Ohio, Henry spoke on the topic of “Institutional Policy in Urban America” before a large, appreciative audience in the John Brown Room of the Am-Center.

The main problem today, more than ever before, says Henry, is the need for such terms as “interrogation” and “segregation” as clearly defined as they have been in apartheid’s need for such defining would serve at least as a basis for more pertinent and productive legislation, policies that would ameliorate the existing racial problems. “Changing social objectives” and “value positions/values conflicts” also pose problems for these domestic policies, says Professor Henry.

The next lecture in this series is scheduled for next month in the Daggett Lounge of the Senior Center, and will feature Dr. Frank G. Coleman, Chairman of the Department of African/Afro-American Studies at the State University of New York. Dr. Pogue will be speaking on the topic of the impact of apartheid on blacks in South Africa.
Faulty equipment delays radio station's gala rebirth

(Continued from Page 3)
Sharon said, and when he took on the lesser position of news director, Sharon and Tardiff took total control of BOB.

Finally, the station was ready to go, despite freezing rain which cancelled any hope for the planned parade by the Precision Marching Band. The first day of broadcast was successful.

"Through the magic of radio, we had our own parade," Sharon said. "We described it play by play, complete with sound effects, a police escort, and 300 marching freshies, all with instruments they made themselves. It went swimmingly."

In addition, there were reports from reporter Bill Stuart, '80 direct from a Lea jet speeding him to the Superbowl, live interviews from the first floor of the Moulton Union, and lots of welcome back music. With three numbers to dial, extensions 210 and 710, and 725-5008, the station received every 90 seconds, Tardiff reported.

In the future, the station has a full schedule. Sharon and Tardiff expect to have a number of public service programs, such as the talk with College President Bill Eteman and Admissions Director Bill Mason ("The Bill and Bill Show."). There will be numerous sports specials, a reading of Twain and other humorists by graduate Terry Bryant '76, a classical dinner hour, and blocks of music designed to suit every taste. According to Sharon, there are also plans to put speakers in the Union dining room.

True, BOB has few experienced DJs this semester, not enough wait, and no programs right now. But the station will be back soon, stronger than ever before. That's pure power for you.

This Sunday the Afro-American Society's Black Art Festival begins its week-long program with a lecture by Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Chairman of the department of African and Afro-American Studies at the State University of New York at Albany. Dr. Pogue's topic will be "Southern Africa: Implications for People of African Descent." The lecture will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Daggett Lounge in the Senior Center.

Wood fails to ignite student interest

(Continued from Page 1)
issue."

Affirming the belief that the necessary input for Sun publication exists, Wood mentioned, "Interest was lost at the end of the semester. We didn't realize the importance of considering the support of individuals to supply the articles and the interest."

The Sun also met with mixed criticism and commendations from those who were present, particularly concerning the Sun's relationship to the Quill and the Orient, and its proposed intention of serving as a complement to both. Terry Roberts '80, particularly, leveled the charge against the Sun, claiming, "A campus of this size does not need, and cannot afford the presence of the Sun."

In the face of such objections, however, were strong words of support for the Sun. Said one member of the audience, "most of the organizations on campus are small, and do not cater to more than a small portion of the community. The Sun has a place and needs a chance to get off the ground. All the clubs have trouble with organization, but that should not mean that the experiment is over - a charter can't be nixing anything, it contributes to life."

Abruptly, Board Communications Coordinator Jim Areson '81, motoned for a three minute quorum, after which the final decision to revoke the charter was announced. The vote to revoke was ten in favor, none opposed, and one abstention.

Wood responded to the board's decision by saying, "We're not finished yet. I do not take the vote to mean a statement of no confidence.

The Sun now faces the task of resubmitting a new charter that will reflect the new intentions of the magazine which many people, including Homans, Evans, and Michael Tardiff '79 feel have altered since the original charter was approved.

In other Board business Vice Chairwoman Wanda Fleming '82 reported two decisions arrived at during the winter meetings of the Board of Trustees. First, Classics Professor Nate Dane, Economics Professor Paul Darling, Mathematics Professor Robert Chitim, and English Professor Lawrence Hall were granted retirement extensions from age 65 to age 75. Secondly, the figures for the 1979-80 school will be: $5,100 per year for tuition and $1,105 per year for board. The total increased $500, while profits of $6,000 were placed in the reserve.

On the investment issue, Dr. Frank G. Pogue, chairman of Afro-American Affairs and State University of New York, Albany, who will speak Sunday evening on "Southern Africa: Implications for People of African Descent," agreed to participate in the discussion.

A folder has been placed on reserve in the library under the heading "discussion group" for students who wish to consult committee materials, before this informal gathering, or the open committee meeting coming up.

Are South African profits needed?

(Continued from Page 3) The ways in which the investing institutions hope to affect change within South Africa include strategies outlined in the Sullivan Principles, a monumental proposal designed by Reverend Sullivan, a member of the Board of General Motors.

Already over 100 American companies have attempted to work for these principles which call for desegregation in working facilities, equal employment practices, equal pay for equal work, better training programs and other far reaching goals.

Like the other schools, "Bowdoin is trying to determine how it can achieve the most impact on this very special problem," said Dean Nyhus.

"Our proportion of investments is not immense. We have to realize that most companies are not going to throw up their hands at anything we do," he said.

Working within a coalition of New England schools is one line of strategy the committee is considering, precisely because Bowdoin is one of many institutions and one of many colleges in an universities.

Student committee members Steve Pollack '80 and Margarette McNeely '81 urge students to continue in the open meeting, to talk with them directly.

The Afro-American Center will host an informal discussion this Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. for students and faculty who would like to share and exchange views.

Congratulations

But Will You Remember Us?

DELTA • AMERICAN • UNITED • TWA
(and all connecting flights)

Airlines Reservations and Ticket Center

we feature all new low cost budget air fares for those who can plan (30 days) ahead or That emergency home or job interview flights and spring vacations

Yes: WE ARE PLANNING BOWDOIN BERMUDA WEEK TRAVEL, FLORIDA TRIPS ETC. DURING BOWDOIN SPRING VACATION WEEKS IN '79.

Stowe Travel Agency

9 Pleasant St. - INTOWN BRUNSWICK Visit or Phone 725-5573 Reservations - Tickets - Airlines - Steamships Goals too scarce as skaters see defeats continue

(Continued from Page 8)

Jan. 19 — Portland, ME. — The State of Maine Holiday Hockey Classic. In this Division II tournament Bowdoin once again ended up losing both its games, this time to state-rivals Colby and U. Maine. The Polar Bears had perhaps their worst performance of the season in their first round loss to Colby, 7-5. The favored Bears played better in the consolation game against UMO, but the puck didn't bounce their way and they ended up on the short side again, 6-4.

Jan. 16 — Boston, MA. — The one bright spot in the otherwise dismal vacation games was this 4-2 triumph over Division I Northeastern University. Northeastern had just beaten defending National Champions Boston University a week earlier, and the Wildcats were supposed to be hot. But the Bears came out flying and went ahead 2-1 in the first two and one-half minutes of the game. When Northeastern tied it in the third period, Bowdoin fought back hard. The Polar Bears regained the lead on a Steve McNeil tally off the rebound of a shot by Mark Pietra.

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chili Sauce
Cremacakes — Bruno Seltzer
HOT DOG STAND

SHET
LAND
SWET
SALE at
THE SKI
STALL

Valentine Assortments now on display

Tontine Mall, Brunswick
725-4482

BROTHERS PIZZA
Try Our Original Greek Salads
Hot Oven Subs
Fresh Homemade Pizza
"Call Ahead"
Your order will be ready when you arrive 725-4366
"There's nothing like Brothers"
90 Pleasant St., Brunswick have you checked it out?

MACBEANS
USED RECORD SECTION
always 1,500 or more to choose from.
low as 25¢, none higher than $5/disc.
all guaranteed playable.
POPULAR / FOLK / JAZZ / C&W / BACKGROUND / CLASSICAL / SHOWS etc. and, you can trade in your old LP's. maximum 10 at a time. macbeans reserves the right to pick & choose.
check it out!

Macbeans
Books & Music
134 Maine St., Brunswick, Maine 04011

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26, 1979

The Bowdoin Orient

PAGE SEVEN

Men swimmers disappoint; Women remain undefeated

by HARRIS WEINER

Disappointing losses to Springfield and Tufts by scores of 64-49 and 70-43 have failed to discourage the dedicated members of Charlie Butt's men's varsity swim team whose single victory to date came against Tufts on December 11th. Both Springfield and Tufts "tapped" for their Bowdoin meets, a technique which involves the easing of workouts for a week prior to a key meet in order to achieve peak performances; a luxury which the Bowdoin schedule does not allow until late in the season. Bowdoin strongly contested both meets, according to Coach Butt who stated that, "We swam good meets but did not swim outstandingly. We were touched out in three races and were hurt by an injury to diver Steve Santangelo and by the absence of any natural sprinters on the team." He indicated that there is a great deal of potential in the team, noting freshmen swimmers Curt Hutchinson, an outstanding butterfly/individual medley swimmer, and Bruce Boland, a versatile freestyler, Lee Philbrick, a strong breaststroker, and Diver Chris Beesing, who has been placing consistently.

Senior All-Americans Brian Connolly, Bob Pellegrino, and Jeff Cherry are all swimming ahead of the times which they posted last year at this date. Connolly holds several pool records in the 100 yard breaststroke, Pellegrino has monopolized first place finishes in the 200 yard breaststroke since the outset of his college career, and Cherry dominates the middle distance freestyle events. Supporting this nucleus of talented seniors are sophomores Dave Schal, a consistently strong performer in the 1000 yard freestyle, breaststroker Duff Peterson, and the balder Peter Lynch, the squad's backstroke specialist. An experienced crew of juniors includes butterfly/Bob Naylor, who qualified for last year's nationals, Bob Hoedemaker who competes in the 100 yard backstroke and two of the relay events. Charlie Nyman, an individual medley swimmer, and Mark Nelson, a freestyler who, according to Butt has improved tremendously. Anchoring the team is senior butterfly and breaststroker Steve Rorke, who exerts strong leadership, complementing co-captains Connolly and Pellegrino who led the squad through what Coach Butt considered an extremely productive two weeks of very intensive double sessions during Christmas break in Puerto Rico.

Bob Pellegrino is confident that this year's men's varsity swim team is potentially one of Bowdoin's strongest. "I think we'll beat both Tufts and Williams in the New England's when we next swim well. We'll get them back when it counts. Men's swimming has never won the New England's and this year we're really pointing toward that meet because we have a shot at it."

It's never too early to start making plans for spring break or even this summer—drop by our office today!

CANTERBURY
Midwinter SALE
Ski Jackets, Down Vests, Chamois Shirts, Suits, Pants & Sweaters
SAVE 20% to 50%

The Canterbury Shops
Cool's Corner: Mon.-Fri. 10-8:45, Sat. 10-5:30
Downtown: Mon.-Sat. 9-11:30
Use Your Canterbury Charge, Master Charge or VISA
Winning season?

Hoopster offense explodes

by GEOFF WORRELL

Since Christmas vacation, the Bowdoin College Varsity Basketball team has amassed an impressive 4-1 record, making its season two games better than respectable at 6-4. The hoopsters, by performing surprisingly well virtually promised to better their 7-12 record of last year and are promising to break .500 for only the second time in nine years.

"It was the perfect way to come off the break," commented Coach Ray Bicknell. The Bears came back to Bowdoin on January 13 to play an exhibition game against the French National Team. It proved to be no contest as the Bowdoin squad walked off the court at the final buzzer with a 63-50 victory.

Thomas College proved to be tougher competition for the Bears. The game was tied with three seconds showing on the clock and a Thomas player was on the line, shooting a one and one. In a classic hero or goat situation, the Thomas player proved to be the goat and the Bowdoin hoopsters the heroes as the shot fell short of the rim and the Bears pulled out the game in overtime, 76-75.

Bowdoin's only loss since the Christmas break came against Wesleyter Tech. "We couldn't handle the press," explained Bicknell. The press was applied by WPI in the second half and made the Bears' offense fall three points short as WPI defeated Bowdoin 71-69.

Massachusetts Institute of Technology was the next team on the Bears' six game homestand. Bowdoin held a seven point lead at the end of the first half. MIT came out strong in the second half and tied the score. The lead see-sawed back and forth until the teams were shown on the scoreboard. The Bears' hoopsters riddled off eight unanswered points and with thirty one seconds left on the clock.

It would seem to most observers that the game was over with Bowdoin thirty-one seconds away from victory but the following series of events made victory an uncertainty. Mike McCormick, the Bears' 6'0" sophomore guard, had just fouled out of the game. He was replaced by freshman guard Tim Trenkman. MIT applied the pressure to the Bears by putting on their full court press. Following an MIT score, Bowdoin was trying to deal with the press, the very tactic that costs the Bears the game against WPI.

The ball came in bounds to Trenkman who couldn't find an open teammate. He tried to call a time-out but, according to the rules, no time-out can be called in a team's own end of the court after the ball has been inbounded. The referee did not respect Trenkman's plea and at that point Trenkman found an open man across the half court, Bowdoin had broken the press.

It wasn't the pressure that made the victory tenous; instead, it was the time-out called by Coach Bicknell after the press had been broken. After a basket, a player taking the ball out of bounds can run the expanse of the court to try and get the ball in play. After a time-out, however, a player in-bounds the ball must wait. When Bowdoin went to inbound the ball after its time-out, MIT did not guard the player inbounding, converting the game into a virtual five on four contest. Bowdoin threw the ball out of bounds and the Engineers had a second wind, a second win that they could not take advantage of, as every point scored by MIT was answered by Bowdoin. The Bears won the game 69-59.

The Bates game last Tuesday was the most spectacular Bowdoin victory. Bowdoin came off the bench strong with twelve minutes of play that earned the Bears an eleven-point lead. Seven minutes later, however, Bates had offered the Bears a battle of a game in reply to the Bears' fire. The Bowdoin hoopsters answered with a second half of impressive basketball that gave them the victory over Bates, 66-56.

"The team is young. We have more fire and desire than we had last year but we lack the experience," said Bicknell. "We're winning the close games we didn't win last year," adds Bicknell. "The Bowdoin hoopsters. Winning is based on the mental attitude of the Bears' ongoing quest for a .500 season or better.

Maine, Merrimack trip icemen as Bear scoring woes continue

by DANNY MENZ

"We just can't buy a goal," So remarked Coach John Nord and so it was. Out of Bowdoin's last 82 shots, the Black Bears were able to put only 13 inside the net. The games ended in a 2-2 tie.

Bowdoin's shot attempt was one of the many that rained down against the net. Bowdoin's goalie, Tim Trenkman, stuffed U. Conn. 3-0. It was a semi-outdoor rink, and due to its very low temperature change most of the game was played in a heavy fog. Still, Billy Provener saw it well enough to keep it out of the net.

Dec. 13 - Manchester, N.H. - Bowdoin downed St. Anselms 5-4 in overtime. This game saw Bowdoin lose a 2-0 lead, fall behind 3-2, and go ahead again 6-3, only to have the game tied up and sent into overtime. Mike Carman scored the game winner five minutes into 'sudden death' and Roger Elms scored that trick. 30 and 31 - Hanover, N.H. - The first annual Auld Lang Syne Classic. In the first round of this Division I tournament, Bowdoin lost to Dartmouth 7-1. Bowdoin was handed three goals by Boston College in the consolation game, 8-5.

Postgame Scripts

Promising pupil

by BILL STUART

"I was very excited about the prospect of returning to Dayton Arena and going up against a man whom I respect and admire," relates first-year Merrimack hockey coach Bruce Parker, a former defensive for Sid Watson's Polar Bears. "I have coached high school teams in this rink and played in alumni games here since I graduated, but this is my first year as a coach in the collegiate ranks."

After leaving Bowdoin in 1963, Parker went on to coach high school hockey. After several years with a private school, he won the Eastern Massachusetts Division II title at Acton High School and developed a strong program at Methuen High School.

"I was a very intelligent kid, academically as well as athletically," Watson notes. "His skills were not as good as those of some other players, but he had an ability to make the right plays in a very difficult situation. He worked hard, though, and I think this motivation to become a better player has made him a better coach." "A lot of what I want my kids to do comes from what I learned under Sid," Parker admits. "He keeps his poise. He has a sufficient amount of patience to be a really good coach, as his record indicates. I like to think I’m in sort of the same mold — calm and cool, keeping my poise.

"No one was more qualified than Bruce Parker for the job at Merrimack," Watson says. "I think they made a good decision."

In the view of Polar Bear faithful, the decision may have been too good.
Governing Board cuts enrollment hikes tuition

by MICHAEL BARAFF

The Board has decided to reduce the over two feet of snow which fell on Brunswick and caused the closing of many highways and the Portland airport, the Governing Boards of the College held their semi-annual meetings and made official:

- a $500 tuition hike for the 1978-80 academic year,
- a $5 increase in board charges for next year,
- a 7% raise in faculty and staff compensation.

A reduction in the size of the student body by ten, to 1,200.

- appropriations for over $46,000 of capital expenditures.

The Boards also granted tenure to professor of art Larry D. Latchmann, promoting him to the rank of associate professor effective September 1, 1980. And a resolution by President Willard Enteman that over $337,000 in previously unspent capital surplus and project overspends be approved after the fact, so as to enable the Board of Administration to make a clean slate.

Approved by the Policy Committee of the Governing Boards in its meeting last December was a request that the administration and faculty "present a plan for reducing the size of the faculty" by May, 1979. The size of the faculty had been kept constant since the College began to accept women as students in 1971.

The Boards completed their business in a unusually short period of time, with the Trustees spending only one hour and twenty minutes to dispose of the seventeen votes before them, and the Overseers taking just over two hours to complete their business.

The seven-percent increase in faculty compensation was the maximum allowed under the voluntary guidelines detailed by President, last month.

(Continued on Page 2)

College asked to divest South Africa holdings

by HOLLY HENKE

Bowdoin students were called on to demand the complete and immediate divestiture of all college investments in South Africa Sunday night, by visiting lecturer Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Chairman of Afro-American Studies at the State University of New York, Albany.

"I call on you to exercise your moral responsibility," Pogue told an audience of 400 students listening to his talk, "Southern Africa: Implications for People of African Descent."

"Bowdoin, like many other colleges, plays a very key role in the legitimization of oppression in South Africa," he said, citing the approximate 27 percent of total college investments Bowdoin has in racist South Africa.

"I don't believe students at Bowdoin or Bowdoin College can oppose systemic oppression and support U.S. businesses at the same time," said Pogue, after an explanation that companies like Ford, Xerox, Kodak, Standard and others are required to uphold South African laws which prohibit blacks from holding skilled jobs, forming labor unions, or using the same dining and restroom facilities as white workers.

For Bowdoin to invest in businesses which support a country in which "education for blacks is not only segregated - but grossly inferior to that given whites," is contradictory, Pogue said.

"The amount of money the government spends on education per head comes out to $351 for every white student and $20 for every black student... As class for blacks might have 100 to 500 students and be held in open air, turnover - as beginning is free for whites, black parents must pay to have their children educated."

"The American business community has the upper hand if any of improving the situation for blacks, by remaining in the country, according to Pogue. "American businesses like capitalism. They're talking about making money. They're not there to dictate. They're there to support and carry out. They don't pay the same wages for the same work - they separate the facilities. They're not about institutionalizing. They're about maintaining the status quo."

"We've got to call upon the Board of Administration to give us an example of Polaard and First National Bank, which no longer do business in the country," Pogue said.

(Continued on Page 2)

Afro-Am rededicated in honor of Russwurm

by GEORFF WORRIEL

One hundred and fifty-four years ago, what was formerly the Afro-American College served as a bastion place for the students on the way to freedom in Canada via the "underground railroad." One hundred and fifty-two years ago Bowdoin graduated its first black student, John Brown Russwurm. In commemoration of these two events, the Afro-American Society, commented Afro-American Chairman Michael Henderson. "It is an historical and cultural part of the College. The dedication formalizes the recognition of the rich history of this house."

Built in 1823, the house was originally owned by Bowdoin faculty members and was used to house the faculty until 1961. The building was later adapted to house college offices but with the construction of the science building was no longer needed. The building remained vacant until its reopening as the Bowdoin College Afro-American Center in 1976 during the College's recognition of Martin Luther King Day.

The keynote speakers at the dedication were College President Willard F. Enteman and his immediate predecessor Dr. Roger Howell. Dr. Howell was presented with a plague by the Afro-American Society honoring him for his "consistent commitment to the effort in behalf of black students at Bowdoin."

President Enteman said this dedication should be a time of rededication and reaffirm the proposition that a program in Black Studies can be made an integral part of the educational life of a college committed to academic excellence.

"Colleges and universities across the country started Afro-American Societies at the time of their civil rights struggle in order to keep up with others," Dr. Enteman continued. The first test was whether such programs should be started at all. The next test, the sustaining and substantiating one, is whether the commitment is really there when the publicity is gone."

Former President Howell, principal speaker at the exercises, recalled that the Afro-American Center "was born as a part of the process of growing concern at Bowdoin about the responsibilities of the College to address and attack, in the finest traditions of liberal education, the indignities, the discriminatory practices, so that the deprivation forced on the black people of this nation by a white-dominated society."

Ninety-five move board bills to Center to escape food fights and social scene

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Guess who's coming to dinner? Would you believe 95 people?

Close to one hundred new faces have appeared in the Senior Center dining room since the beginning of the second semester, each with a varying degree of frequency according to their meal plans. During this second semester, the Senior Center kitchen will cater to 199 full board bill holders and 229 partial boarders. The large turnout according to Carl Szymanski, Director of Centralized Dining Service, is not unusual. Many students change board bills once or perhaps not several times during the year, and a large percentage of turnover of the semester is common.

Students returning from exchange courses come almost 20 percent of the new wave. The next largest group comes from the Union.

Former Union diner Elizabeth Keohane '81 explained, "I live here (at the Center) and hadn't eaten here before. The salad bar at lunchtime was a big thing and I guess it was just to try it out. I didn't know a lot of the people that eat at the Union, and I didn't know anything more here."

"It was simple," added fellow Union emigrant Kevin McCann '80, "I was eating at the Union for the past two and a half years. It's mostly freshmen and sophomores over there now, so I figured I was about time I met some people in my own class.

Many fraternity members have also switched to the Center for several different reasons. Debra Ayles '80, one of eight Beta members to switch their board bills, said, "I was just bored with Beta. I didn't want to stay there the whole semester."

Her desire for a change of scene seems to be the most common denominator among those who moved their bills. Lisa Rosen '81 changed her bill after talking with Krauss Epallon because, "I had eaten there for three semesters and it was really hyper there. I was like dodging food fights and that kind of atmosphere. Whenever I ate at the Union of the Center, I could sit around and enjoy supper."

A few fraternities members switched bills to the Center this semester. Does this prosecute a trend among the houses or are the ones that come over from Zeta Psi exchanges the kind of like they're doing. The others weren't so it's the same as them. My group was going to be here last semester anyway, so it doesn't really hurt the house."
Past and present presidents lead

Am ceremonies

(Continued from Page 1)
diminished." Howell went on to say, "Bowdoin is not a college; its stature depends in great part on that. But it is vital that its selectivity be a selectivity of ability, promise and potential, and not a selectivity of cash, class, or connection."

Professor Howell completed his remarks by saying that "we cannot afford to be seduced by the fainthearted, or the despondent...our vision, as John Brown Russwurm was, must be to the future. We will walk on — and we will walk on together — and Bowdoin will be the better college for it."

He went on to name their center after Russellwurm began last year when the Afro-American Society went before the Board of Trustees, Bowdoin's Boards of Trustees and Boards of Overseers. The Afro-American Society, one of the first two black students to obtain a bachelor's degree from an American college.

Russwurm was the co-editor of the United States, Freedom's Journal, one year after he graduated from Bowdoin. He was an influential student in the South, but Whose Pollard, who went on to found Bowdoin in 1829 to be awarded an A.M. degree on the merits of his achievements.

Later that year, Russwurm moved to America where he joined the Liberia colony. Russwurm had made his presence felt before the establishment of the Afro-American Society in Liberia. He was named the first black governor of the Liberian colony, in Liberia and retained that position until his death in 1850.

Asa Russwurm, the dedication marks the beginning of the Afro-American Center's Festival. See The orient for the dedication and subsequent arts festival lecture, and Carl Weis, a member of the Afro-American Society, newt, to their obvious functions but as a tribute to the Bowdoin College history of assisting black people.

Concurrent to the Bowdoin College faculty's participation in the dedication, the College's acceptance of a black student at a time when blacks were not considered people, Harriet Beecher Stowe, the wife of a Bowdoin faculty member, was writing the classic abolitionist novel Uncle Tom's Cabin here in Brunswick. The Afro-American Society events are a salute to the Bowdoin College and Brunswick community's leadership in the abolition of slavery.

Divestment plans appear unlikely as committee sets open meeting

by HOLLY HENK

A call for divestment of all College holdings in South Africa by Dr. Frank Pogue earlier this week comes at a time when Bowdoin's South African Advisory Committee has been looking into the matter.

"It is unlikely that the Committee will decide to divest," said John Turner, Professor of Romance Languages, and a member of the advisory group.

Commenting on Dr. Pogue's demand, he said: "It would be wrong to take a terribly strong stand when we're not sure what would be gained by it. And right now it's not at all clear what the College community thinks," he said.

If we were to divest I suppose we would feel morally superior for a while. But the economic effect would be nil. Our own small investment would have no financial impact," said Turner.

As for going further than the actual companies, to pressure the federal government to take a stand against investments in that country, Turner does not believe Bowdoin has much political clout in Washington.

Economics Professor Peter Gottschalk said he would like to see the College divest, but does not believe it will happen. Working from within, the companies as stock holders calling for change, seems to be the most popular stance within the Committee right now, according to student representative Marguerite McNeely '81.

"When divestment gets raised it gets shoved off very easily. It makes some of them feel very uncomfortable. Immediately they will go on and talk and talk about stock holder pressure," McNeely said, describing some of the Committee members.

"There's the argument that if you have no stock in the company, there's not even the limited power to influence," Turner explained. "I'm sure we'll finish up arguing at least for that."

Commenting on Dr. Pogue's demand, he said: "It would be wrong to take a terribly strong stand when we're not sure what would be gained by it. And right now it's not at all clear what the College community thinks," he said.

Dr. Frank G. Pogue calls for divestment of all College holdings in South Africa, although seasoned observers find the prospect unlikely. Orient/Gould

Pogue calls for action

(Continued from Page 1)

Eastman Kodak, a company in which Bowdoin holds stock, recently took over the bulk of Polaroid's business in the country, an operation which includes the publishing of photographs for the ID passes each South African citizen must carry, documents which Pogue says can be "a pass to freedom or oppression," depending on racial origin.

Divestment, as Pogue sees it, is not a mere refusal to be associated with a racist regime. Divestment, explains Pogue, "is a play to place on U.S. pressure." Bowdoin's Duke said, "we're not doing this because we care about South Africa; we're doing this because it's in our best interest."

When asked whether such pressure to pull out completely might do more harm than good to suffering blacks, given the resulting economic situation, Pogue said: "Blacks may very well lose jobs in the short run, but South African and European companies have got to understand that if we commit ourselves to the economic system, they're supporting the political system too."

In an effort to help students learn more about the investment issue to prepare for the open meeting, an informational session has been scheduled for Monday, October 19 at 3:30 in the Terrace Center. Student committee member McNeely and Pollack, as well as other informed people will brief students on the facts and basic terms of argument (pro and con)

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK:

"The BMA would like to announce for the first time anywhere the adoption of our policy for a constitutional monarchy. We feel that the student government can only be run effectively if it is run in a totalitarian way. We would like to see a student King who is invested with all the powers of the students and who is able to make decisions in an orderly way, unafected by all the usual riff-raff that attends the political process." Steve Dunsky speaking on behalf of the Bowdoin Men's Association during a live broadcast on WBOR.

Dr. Asa S. Knowles, O.B., Chancellor of Northeastern University, receives Bowdoin College's most distinctive contribution award. The honor, the Bowdoin Prize from Bowdoin President William F. Dunsky, is awarded once every five years to a Bowdoin alumnus or faculty member who has made "the most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor." Dr. Knowles is a member of Bowdoin's Class of 1908.
Todd trades books for bombs, returns home to fight wargasm

Rocky Flats, Colorado, April 29, 1978 — A group of 500 led by Daniel Ellsberg and J. Plumb at the Rocky Flats Nuclear power plant today to protest the production of nuclear weapons.

Todd Buchanan was there.

Rocky Flats, May 1, 1978 — Ellsberg and 125 other protesters up camp on railroad tracks leading to the plant. Stewards and terrorists and food provided by supporters, members of this Rocky Flats Truth Force pledged to keep shut down the plant for the next 28 days. They called for a one month moratorium on the plant’s production of plutonium “triggers.” the nuclear explosive component of atomic bomb.

Todd Buchanan was among them.

Rocky Flats, May 6, 1978 — Charged with “criminal trespass” and 100 others were arrested, ending a six day demonstration in rain and snow.

Todd Buchanan was one of them.

In Rocky Flats, May 1978 — In a jury trial, unusual for a misdemeanor, the group of defendants were found guilty.

Todd Buchanan was convicted.

Upon holiday vacation, 1978 — “The anti-nuclear group appeared in federal court to receive the sentences of three months unemployment probation.” When the judge asked if anyone had anything to say, Buchanan asked the judge to sign an order for nuclear disarmament.

Where’s Todd now? Bowdoin’s own victory in the battle for work for disarmament. Crushing glass part-time in a recycling facility near his home in Bowdoin, Colorado, Buchanan earns enough to support himself, and spends the rest of his time working for the cause.

“We’re organizing a convoluted project, going door to door to get neighborhoods organized...” Todd said.

“No, that’s not going to get us anywhere.” Buchanan said.

“I’m sort of playing the role of the educator,” he said, explaining his efforts to appear before high school social studies classes and various church groups.

Concerning his sentence, Buchanan is not worried. “I’m not worried unless he gets into trouble in the next six months.” Buchanan said and dawdled on answering yes or no when asked whether he planned to participate in anymore demonstrations, but he did say, “I don’t plan to be arrested... That was something that had to be done to jar attention, but once we’ve got people’s attention we’ve got to come up with some other alternative,” he said.

In the meantime, he and the other convicts made plans to appeal their convictions on the grounds that the emission of radiation from the nuclear plant was “a significant danger that had to be stopped somehow... putting ourselves on the tracks would be a lesser danger, lesser evil.” Buchanan said.

The Rocky Flats incident occurred two weeks prior to Buchanan going on leave from Bowdoin last spring. It was the fall before, though, during his first semester here, as a sophomore exchange from Amherst, that Buchanan met the man who helped turn his energy conservation beliefs into a personal crusade against nuclear power. Buchanan attended an anti-nuclear protest at the activist Samuel Lovjev, the man who blew up the transformers at utility towers in Massachusetts, in 1974, and then turned himself in. Making the act was the only available alternative for him to protest seriously nuclear power. Lovjev’s induction, however, was thrown out of court because of a mere technicality, and he got off scot free.

Buchanan was so affected by the anti-nuclear talk, and Lovjev’s own personal commitment to that

(Continued on Page 8)

This is Todd before he became non-violent. Now he carries the ball for disarmament.

On Saturday, February 3, Bowdoin hosted a day-long symposium entitled “Women, Power, and Social Change.” Sponsored by the Committee on Women, the program will address such issues as “Women in Cuba,” “Impediments to Career Development in Women,” and “Feminism and Ecology.”

Guest lecturers for the symposium include two social scientists and an environmental engineer from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (UMASS-Amherst). The afternoon session of the symposium will feature two psychoanalysts from the Boston area. Each session will be followed by an audience/panel discussion.

As the name suggests, the one-day symposium, the B.W.A., B.U.S., and Afro-Am hope to present a seminar for students in the field of film, lectures, workshops and theatre performances focusing on human struggles. The symposium is co-sponsored by the United States, the Maine Indian Land Claims Case, and the film “Women, Power, and Social Change.”

Full funding for the social change symposium has been pledged by the B.W.A., Afro-Am and S.U.D. On February 1, members of the sponsoring organizations will petition the S.A.F.C. for the remaining monies.

Expanded E-board considers a new Sun on the horizon

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

Five members of the Executive Board inaugurated their terms of office Tuesday evening in a meeting which featured the submission of a new charter to the Bowdoin Sun. The Board, with newly-elected representatives Robert DeSimone ’80, Am DeVinney ’81, Debbe Jenson ’80, Eric Steege ’79, and Kathy Williamson ’81, completed a full agenda which included reconsideration of the recent nomination of the Hon. Page 3

The Bowdoin Orient Page Three

On Saturday, February 3, Bowdoin hosted a day-long symposium entitled “Women, Power, and Social Change.” Sponsored by the Committee on Women, the program will address such issues as “Women in Cuba,” “Impediments to Career Development in Women,” and “Feminism and Ecology.”

Guest lecturers for the symposium include two social scientists and an environmental engineer from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst (UMASS-Amherst). The afternoon session of the symposium will feature two psychoanalysts from the Boston area. Each presentation will be followed by an audience/panel discussion.

As the name suggests, the one-day symposium, the B.W.A., B.U.S., and Afro-Am hope to present a seminar for students in the field of film, lectures, workshops and theatre performances focusing on human struggles. The symposium is co-sponsored by the United States, the Maine Indian Land Claims Case, and the film “Women, Power, and Social Change.”

Full funding for the social change symposium has been pledged by the B.W.A., Afro-Am and S.U.D. On February 1, members of the sponsoring organizations will petition the S.A.F.C. for the remaining monies.

Expanding E-board considers a new Sun on the horizon

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

Five members of the Executive Board inaugurated their terms of office Tuesday evening in a meeting which featured the submission of a new charter to the Bowdoin Sun. The Board, with newly-elected representatives Robert DeSimone ’80, Am DeVinney ’81, Debbe Jenson ’80, Eric Steege ’79, and Kathy Williamson ’81, completed a full agenda which included reconsideration of the recent nomination of the Hon.

The Bowdoin Orient Page Three

Europe is nice, but gee, it’s good to be home

by NANCY ROBERTS

As the season in the pines becomes submerged in snow and the campaign to bring the pineapple into academic circles diminishes the student body seems to be becoming lethargic and critical of the weather, other, such as the student body itself.

Students who have recently returned from studying away last semester are able to offer a different and for the most part refreshing positive perspective.

Representatives from Vladd and Peace Corps will be on campus this Monday and Tuesday. Interested students should meet with Mary Nish and Carol Clisel Monday 9 a.m. in Conference Room B on the second floor of the Moulton Union. Seniors who desire private interviews should register at Catey Lambe’s office, extension 336.

Monday night at 7 p.m. in the Lancaster Lounge Nash and Clisel will show the movie “The Toughest Job You’ll Ever Love” which describes the lives of three Peace Corps workers in Nepal, Ecuador, and Western Africa.

Special experience Ford Ames ’80, who had in
THE ORIENT
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1979

Do Something!

Isn't it about time students on this campus cared about something? Isn't it about time that they educate themselves on the issues and exercise their rights to freedom of speech?

The Senior Center Seminars were killed without a battle. Tuition hikes of over $500 barely raised an eyebrow. Is the issue of College investments in South Africa destined, like everything else, not to become an issue at Bowdoin? On campuses across the country from Harvard to Berkeley, students have made their voices heard. They have assembled, petitioned and demonstrated until they were taken seriously. They have tried to do something.

Don't just go to the Open Meeting next Thursday. Go and speak out!

Animus Regis

The recent suggestion made by the BMA to create a king hits upon, common sense. While the idea of a monarch might seem absurd, the justification for it is perfectly sound.

A king's acts are expedient, his authority supreme, his word the law.

Compare this with own elective representation. It is so bogged down with superfluous factors and tedious procedure that the whole system has become incredibly ineffective.

It has been said that contemporary western societies see democracy as the only good form of government. This is truly ironic because democracy as we know it has become unacceptable. Our process has degenerated into a machine for the repression of strong individual spirit, a production line for factions, and a painfully but timely reminder that we need not maintain a system that does not work.

Long live the king!

New Direction

Article 3 of the Constitution of the Student Government at Bowdoin College spells out the specific responsibilities of the Executive Board. In short, the Board is empowered to represent student sentiment to Administration, Faculty, and Alumni; oversee all chartered student organizations; allocate student government funds; appoint student representatives to Faculty and Governing Boards Committees; supervise elections of student representatives to the Governing Boards; and supervise elections of the Senior Class Officers.

This year, the Executive Board has gone far beyond these bounds. Although it is given the authority to take action on any issue it deems necessary, the Board has turned itself into a force by extending itself far beyond reasonable bounds.

As one example of overstepping its bounds, the Board voted last semester on anti-nuclear proposals. Even when it did act within reasonable bounds, such as in the minority hiring situation, the Board proved indecisive; the five different votes on that issue illustrate the inconsistency of the Board's sentiment.

Student government can be effective and beneficial if kept in perspective. The Constitution provides reasonable participation for the Executive Board in campus affairs. However, by involving itself far beyond these reasonable bounds, the Board has lost the respect of those it represents. Without respect and confidence, the Board cannot effectively assume any responsibilities.

The Executive Board should begin to rebuild its reputation among the members of the college community by realistically approaching only those issues it was intended to address. Then, and only then, might it begin to perform the function it was designed to perform for the Bowdoin College student body.

LETTERS

Appalling

To the Editor:

2:00 a.m. Monday evening: one member of the apartment, sleeping, is awakened, working on a paper in a second story room, while the other two members are sleeping. She was aware of noise and men's voices shouting from the parking lot behind the apartment, but ignored it until it became obvious that something were wrong. She then opened the door and looked out. It was 2:00 a.m. When she realized it was a matter of seconds, someone outside attempted to open the bedroom door.3

It is Appalling that the explanation given by the police for the incident was that they were looking for a man who had fled from the apartment. It is Appalling that the police have been so unprofessional.

Outraged

To the Editor:

As a woman and an athlete, I was outraged by the neglect of the Orient to cover women's sports in last week's issue. In my view, coverage of women's sports at Bowdoin has always been poor, but to ignore them completely is unacceptable. Admittedly, there was a mention of the women's swim team in a headline, but why did the article that followed it fail to say a single word about them? Any athlete on a team, a woman being no exception, works hard and deserves a little recognition now and then. Women have been at Bowdoin since 1970, so if you are going to call your paper a college newspaper, then cover all of the college, not just part of it.

Sincerely,

Mary Lou Biggs '81

Irked

To the Editor:

Traditionally the Afro-American Society has had its annual Black Arts Festival celebration. Additionally, the Bowdoin Orient has promoted the event. This year however, the

Sincerely,

Mary Lou Biggs '81

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

Member United States Student Press Association

"The College exercises no control over the content of the student writings contained herein and neither is the administration, nor the faculty assume any responsibility for the views expressed herein."

James Caviston
Editor-in-Chief
Raymond A. Swan
Executive Editor

Holly Hinke
Laurie Hitchcock

Nancy Roberts, Anne Marie Murphy
Features Editors

Fred leister
Business Manager

Geoff Warrall
Sports Editor

Kris Kesting
Advertising Manager

Bowdoin Publishing Company

BOWDOIN COLLEGE

CONTRIBUTORS
Angela Barchas L.L. Buon, Donny Durgin, Greg Pillau, Gary Prue, Mark Shepherd, Matt Smith, Jeanine Wassink, Nancy West, Dave O'Connor, John Bier, Mike Twilley, Harris Wasser, Eric Zalc.

Published weekly when classes are held during the Fall and Spring Semesters by the students of Bowdoin College. Address editorial communications to the Editor and business and subscription communications to the ORIENT, 179 College St., Brunswick, Maine 04011.

The ORIENT reserves the right to edit any and all articles and subscriptions are non-refundable.

Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me. 04011. The ORIENT reserves the right to edit any and all articles and subscriptions are non-refundable. Second class postage paid at Brunswick, Me. 04011. Subscriptions are 85.00 (eighty-five dollars) yearly.

Inventiveness and curiosity highlight photograph exhibit

by BREHON LAURENT

The enemy of photography is the convention, the fixed rules of how to do it. The salvation of photography comes from the experiment. The experimenter has no preconceived idea about photography.

-Laszlo Moholy-Nagy, Vision in Motion (1947)

The inventiveness and artistic curiosity of Laszlo Moholy-Nagy, one of the prominent artists of the 1920s, is evident in the travelling exhibition of photographs, abstract forms developed on light-sensitive paper, and photographs from the collection of William Larson, entitled Photographs of Moholy-Nagy, now on display in the Walker Art Building.

The exhibition, which originated at the galleries of the Claremont Colleges in California, consists primarily of photographs. Also included in the show are a number of photographs taken by the artist. Most of the works date from the 1920s, although some were executed in the late 1930s. Unfortunately, nearly one-half of the pieces are unidentified.

There are very few significant collections of Moholy-Nagy photographs in the United States. One other private collection is known. The Museum of Modern Art has a small collection and the International Museum of Photography at the George Eastman House owns a group of photographs.

Moholy-Nagy achieves a series of unique, abstract patterns using the photographic process to turn black to white through the juxtaposition of flat objects in space in his photographs. In his photographs Moholy-Nagy demonstrates a fresh novelty of vantage point. He considered the plane of eye level to be static and constrictive. He chose instead, a variety of other vantage points, still relying heavily on the fundamentals of light and pattern.

Laszlo Moholy-Nagy was born in 1895. He had very little formal training in the arts as a young man. He was not until 1920 that he moved to Berlin following World War I that he began drawing and painting (1921).

At that time in Berlin, the... (Continued on Page 9)
Something for everyone as cold,
Ice fishing, a pleasant combination of sour mash and easy conversation

by JAMES CAVISTON

Anyone who has ever driven on the now obsolete Route 1 through the heart of Yarmouth during the winter months has probably noticed a peculiarity on the Royal River. Staked across the front waters of the estuary are the little houses which attest to the Maine sportman’s favorite winter pursuit—ice fishing.

Inside the house, a trough runs from one end to the other. Heated by small woodstoves, oil burners and a quart of locally distilled mash, the fisherman lets down about eight lines, each one spreading into two hooks. Most fish are caught on the going tide.

Ice-fishing requires only a license, the necessary tackle, and warm clothes or a shelter. The most valuable item on the lake, however, is not something that can be purchased through the local catalogue, patience, the stamina to sustain long conversations and silence and the fundamental critical ability to realize when fishbite has set in.

The reward however is whatever fish runs. Here in the coastal area and in Southern Maine the catch consists of smelt, tommyrods and pickerel.

Not all ice fishermen have houses! Many anglers prefer to auger, that is to drill holes in the surface, marking each line with a flag which is stricken by the striking of the bait. According to ice fishing aficionado Abraham Parker, “When the flag goes down first check to see if the water level is moving. If it’s apparent that a fish has taken your baits, lay the reel down on the ice and take off enough line so the fish can run out if he wants. Then just try to get the hook in the line with a quick jerk.”

Unfortunately the flag goes down for other reasons. Sometimes the wind will blow them over or a school of smelt will nibble at the bail. Both occurrences will create the effect of a strike. The trick is to tend the line. As the broad lake surface full of such flags and these problems occur you develop a greater appreciation for the taste of fish.

Not all ice-fishing expeditions necessarily get hands-on experience. Ann Dunlap, Assistant Director of Admissions, recalled how her family in New Hampshire enjoys the sport. “My brother and father would set the lines up by the lake, and then come inside and watch them from the porch.”

The general ice fishing conditions have been good this season. Late December and early January saw-sub-zero temperatures and whip-frost winds have made safe ice. Furthermore the scant rain fall this autumn has lowered the water level causing the food to be concentrated in one area. As a consequence the fish are confined to a few places.

The lower water level however presents potential dangers. In shallow areas there is no support for the ice. While on the subject of the sport’s pitfalls, fishing near the periphery of islands should be avoided. At these locations, the ebbing of the tides creates extremely fragile, unstable shelf-like ice formations. They are trouble.

Concerning the spots on the Royal River, the folks who usually put out their houses have paused this season. At the Spring Street Grocery Store the fishermen gather, inadvertently bringing up the subject. Clarence Grover commented, “They dredged the river. It takes away the food. For two or three years afterwards the fishing is poor. This year we’ve had nothing.”

Joe Redshaw just left his house in his backyard. Says he can’t catch any less than three if he will put the houses on the river.

This little chain pickerel couldn’t elude the proverbial Old Man on the Sea in a grueling battle between man and nature. Orient/O’Connor

Cross-country: easy and impulsive

by PAMELA B. GRAY

The cross-country revolution had finally hit the US in the early 70’s. The increased interest in physical fitness, especially jogging, has turned to the winter sport of cross-country skiing. As the skier must depend on his stride and thrust to support his body, cross-country skiing is the most physically taxing type of skiing. Also, in the late 60’s and early 70’s a new material was invented for the ski-fiberglass. This makes the equipment much lighter and thus easier to manage.

This sport has also become popular because it is relatively inexpensive. “Once you buy the equipment, there are really no extra costs,” says Holly Porter ’80. “You can go anywhere and don’t have to fight the crowds as in downhill.”

Although new in America, the Scandinavians were using the ski for practical purposes, rather than sport, as early as 1600. In 1521, Swedish patriot Gustavus Vasa skied from Salem to Morian to meet and lead his countrymen in their fight for freedom against the Danes. Now every year the Swedes hold their famed Vasaloppet race to honor the hero. In 1716, the first ski-equipped troops were organized in Norway.

The Norwegians were probably the first to introduce cross-country to the central and western parts of the United States around 1850. The earliest ski races in this country took place in the mining areas of the Sierra Nevada’s, during the gold rush. To relieve boredom, the miners held races in which the winner received “gold dust and glory.”

Cross-country equipment consists of three basic pieces; skis, poles and boots. The skis are narrower and lighter than downhill skis. Originally made of wood, they are now also formed of plastic. The new plastic standard for the ski length still holds; stand up on the floor and reach up with your hand. The top of the ski should come to your wrist.

There are two kinds of skis—waxable and waxless. The waxable kind are traditional and involve more work than the waxless. It takes time to wax, cook, and then ski.

There are different waxes for different skin conditions. Hard wax is used for snow that is newly fallen and Klister (soft) is for snow that has melted or refrozen. Most brands of wax are color-keyed and follow a definite sequence, from cold to warm for air temperature: special green, green, blue, purple, yellow, and red. Some skiers like to use a combination of colors to get the best traction for the conditions.

The waxless skis are those that don’t require waxing in order to be able to grip the snow. This is achieved either through Mohair strips on the bottom, or by using machine-buffed bases with fish-scales. Although this saves time and some extra cost, they cannot change to accommodate snow conditions. They are the same everytime you ski. Therefore they are not as effective as the waxable ones.

The poles are typically longer and lighter than downhill. They help the skier keep his balance and are used to push him along on the level and in climbing. (The poles are the right height when standing they fit comfortably under your armpits.)

The boots are very light and are made to fit the binding. The most important think about a boot is that it fits. A loose boot will cause many blisters. The bindings have a toe piece and the heel is left free to propel the skier along.

Cross-country is enjoyable because it can be impulsive. You don’t have to plan anything or drive out to a ski area. Anytime of the day or night, just put on your skis and go to any field, woods or even on some roads. It can be an individual sport or a group thing.

Each skier has his own preference as to when, where, and why he likes to cross-country ski.

“Like to ski first thing in the morning and between classes,” states Scott Patton ‘80. “Newcomer to the sport, Charlie Agell ‘81, is enthusiastic about it. ‘I’ve only done it a few times because of the weather, but it’s a riot!’ Others find that their favorite time is late at night when the moon’s out, with a winiskin.”

Anyone can cross-country if they want, no lessons are really needed. If you have thought of trying it, but didn’t want to buy the equipment and find you didn’t like it, there’s another way. You can sign out everything you will need through the athletic department. Because after all, “who says, it’s good fire.” (Ron Pastors ‘80)

Audrey Gup ’80 demonstrates the art of waxing cross-country determined by temperature and snow texture. Orient/Swan white months descend on Maine
Hunter to hiker, snowshoes help in the winter

by MATT HOWE

If the snow has been too deep for you to get out and check your bear traps, perhaps you should look into a pair of snowshoes. Even if this has not been a problem, you might find snowshoeing an excellent way to make the most of Maine's abundant winter resources.

Introduced to Europeans by the American Indians, snowshoes have long been worn by fur traders and hunters, but recently snowshoeing has become a popular form of winter recreation. Although the sport has not reached the scale of its closest counterpart, cross-country skiing, it holds some advantages over skiing which should be considered.

In deep, loosely packed snow, cross-country skis are close to useless, while snowshoes enable one to cruise atop the surface with limited effort. Snowshoes provide better balance for those carrying heavy loads, and are generally a safer mode of transportation. In addition, they are more durable, do not require waxing, and are warmer because substantial winter fashion may be worn rather than the modest ski boot.

Snowshoes consist of a light-weight wooden frame interlaced with rawhide or neoprene, a synthetic, rubberized substance. Their construction is based on the simple principle that the distribution of one's weight over a larger area than the soles of the feet prevent one from sinking below the surface of the snow.

According to Kevin Carley of L.L. Bean, Inc., there are two basic types of snowshoes, the Bear Paw and the Pickerel. The Bear Paw's "short and fat" design accommodates travel through thick brush. It is somewhat camouflaged, and Kevin states, "When in open country, the long and narrow Pickerel model is preferred because you can get a more natural stride."

An important aspect of a snowshoe is whether rawhide or neoprene is used to form its mesh. Neoprene is the typical skate age substitute which lasts longer and does not require upkeep, but rawhide has a definite plus in terms of aesthetics. It's best for those who like to be down to earth and want to look like the otes the Indians wore. Kevin notes, "The same taste of rawhide attracts small animals and camper sometimes awaken to find their snowshoes have been chewed on during the night."

As for technique, it's as simple as walking, except one's feet must be kept farther apart. Leather straps secure the front of the foot, so that bending is as free as the swing of a lever. The boot is lifted, the heel is raised and the leg is dragged along as the leg moves forward.

"It's easy," claims Laura Raymonds '81, an experienced snowshoer. "Just remember not to lift your feet too high, because the snowshoes are quite heavy and you'll wear yourself out needlessly. She advises that ski poles come in handy on long hikes for working up hills and maintaining balance. Laura adds, "Going down hills is great because if you fall down, just sit back on the snowshoes and ride 'em."

There are precautions one should take. The modified walk is initially stressful to the hips, therefore one should be conditioned before journey too far. A dislocated hip is not rare among those who have pressed their luck. It is important to beware of areas such as riverbanks and underbrush where the snow is shallow. You shouldn't take. The modified walk is initially stressful to your hips, therefore one should be conditioned before you journey too far. A dislocated hip is not rare among those who have pressed their luck. It is important to beware of areas such as riverbanks and underbrush where the snow is shallow.

From left to right, Kathleen Mendes, age 10 from Lisbon Falls; Heidi Sprowd, age 10 from Pemaquid, Maine; and Rochelle Clark, age 11 from Lewiston dance to the music at Daytona. Orient/DeSimone

An advanced clinic in cross country skiing will be held at the Mast Landing Sanctuary in Freeport on Sunday, February 4th at 1:00 p.m. The clinic is for skiers who want simple experience to approximately one year's experience and will be conducted by the cross country ski specialists from the Snow Shed.

Instruction will include proper waxing, step turns, telemark turns, double poling, and the diagonal stride. If you wish to try different equipment, rentals will be available for the afternoon. The trails of the Sanctuary, which include naturalSteve, and the course, also be available for use after the clinic.

There are a limited number of openings for the clinic and the cost will be four dollars for members of the Maine Audubon Society and five dollars for non-members. Pre-registration is necessary. Call either the Mast Landing Sanctuary (207-465-7585) or June LaCombe (751-2530).
(Continued from Page 4)

Arts Festival was not covered in last week's issue. I cannot stress the importance of the Arts Festival. I emphasize its informational and educational value to a community with little exposure to Black history and culture. A great deal of time, effort, and money went into the Festival. At the last minute, the college decided not to go through with the event, and its commitment to inform the college community. Promotion should be given to this event as if it were an afterthought. I am disappointed in a journalism style of coverage and I seriously feel that you owe the Afro-American Society an apology.

Sincerely, Terri Young '81

Willard

To the Editor:

During the last months its fuelling spirit and congeniality have brought fame to Hyde hall and its occupants. In the minds of those who live in Hyde it is becoming famous for something quite unorthodox and a little disconcerting. I am perhaps to favorable publicity or even to Hyde's unparalleled fraternities, rats by the hundreds have moved into Hyde and are plastering the walls and piling up their furniture in their home. From the fourth floor to the basement rats and mice have populated the halls, their dormitories and rooms and several individuals have been within a hair's breath of the bed bugs and the phosphorous dust. Vermiform infest even Hyde's new lounge, the Student Center aptly named by far back as last semester when Ann Chapin, of occupant of No. 18 Hyde, awoke at 2 a.m. on Sunday morning, January 28, to see a small rat on her pillow trying to build a nest in her hair. "I was afraid that someone was trying to get my hair," said Ann. "When I awoke I felt something tugging at my hair. I turned around to look and there was a small rat. Terrified, I froze, watching the hideous creature scurry back into a hole through a hole in my wall, just don't know what to do. It's a bit unnerving." A foreign resident commented: "I don't mind when they just sit there on the floor but when they crawl onto the bed and start nesting in my hair that is when I think action should be taken.

Residents hope that an increased awareness of the problem will help rats to eliminate it before they are forced to take measures into our own hands. We send up a plea to the entire student body to help scour the halls of Hyde and rid ourselves of these troublesome pests permanently.

Anxiously, Jeffrey M. Barnes '80

Gov board hikes tuition $500

(Continued from Page 1)

President Esteman last year announced the need for all new capital expenditures in order to permit the Physical Plant departments to complete the next two-year backlog of projects already approved but not completed. The appropriated covered a number of projects that were deemed to be of immediate importance and include the completion of the renovation of the Senior Center living quarters and lounges, the installation of smoke alarm systems in Appleton, Maine, and Chestnut Hill, the painting and repair of the exterior of Baxter Hall, and a network of cables for the Bethel Point Research Station.

The reduction in the size of the student body this fall was approved by the Policy Committee last December in response to the complaints of the board of trustees that it would aid in the relief of overcrowding in the dormitories and make possible the establishment of lounges in some student residences.

The after-the-fact approval gives us variances in the actual expenditures and cost overruns covered projects ranging back as far as the mid-sixties, including renovations to Gibson Hall, Panter Hall, 30 College Street, Pickard Field House, Kellogg House (presently the Alpha Delta fraternity house), Hathorne, Longfellows, Hall and 16 Cleaveland Street, among others.

Wendy K. Boggs

Brunswick Tour & Travel

On the Hill by Brunswick College - 216 MAINE ST, BRUNSWICK - TEL: 725-5587

It's never too early to start making plans for spring break or even this summer - drop by our office today!

Brunswick Tour & Travel

Nordica Ski Boots - 20%-45% off
Rossignol SM was $230 now $184

All Rossignol Freestyle Skis 20% off
Yamaha EX $199
Yamaha Paramount Custom 20% off
Also selected skis by Ollin, K2, Kastle on Sale
Men's & Women's Ski Cothes

Up to 50% off

Ski Sweaters

Up to 30% off

All Stretch Pants

30% off

AT THE TONTINE MALL

BRUNSWICK

NORTHEAST TRADING CO.

SPECIALIZING IN

GOVT. SURPLUS WINTER AND FASHION

CRAZE WEAR

725-6332

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

FRIDAY, FEB. 2, 1979

EXS board contemplates rush problem and prepares for busy semester ahead

(Continued from Page 5) to see the Sun return but if there is no support for it, I cannot vote for the charter.

The Sun was the only organization which the Board approved. Dierdre Leber '81, James Malean '81, and Tina Bunka '80 appeared at the January 23 Board meeting to request a charter to establish the Inter-Fraternity Monumenal Concerns Organization (I.F.M.C.O.). This past Tuesday, announcing their approval on behalf of the Board that the existing charter for the Bowdoin Energy and Resource Group (B.E.R.G.) had been revoked, the three decided to accept Terry Roberts' suggestion to establish its re-existence under the B.E.R.G. charter, because it expressed similar purposes to the proposed I.F.M.C.O. charter.

With the minor scandal surrounding Bowdoin Security in the wake of their confiscation of property from fraternity houses and dormitories over winter break (Orb/Jan. 28, 1979), Terry Roberts proposed that the Executive Board inquire into Security's responsibilities in the matter.

Explained Roberts, "If the fraternity needs Security for the maintenance of the building, do they give up the right to privacy? If so, what does it entitle Security to?"

In response, Communications Coordinator Jim Aronoff '81 volunteered to inquire into a sensitive proposal.

No-Nuke Todd quits college for cause

(Continued from Page 3) went up to his room that night to check the college handbook: "I wanted to see how much of a refund I could get if I quit school the next day ... but somehow I thought I would continue."

Since that time Buchanan has become well known around campus for his " Think before you turn this on " signs which covered every single light switch in college buildings, for his constant calls for No-Nuke meetings, for his newspaper recycling efforts, and more recently for his proposals and petitions for disarmament while serving as a member of the student Executive Board.

"I was very intense about everything he did, but it was always with an appropriate sense of humor," said Kevin Klamm '79, a former roommate of Buchanan's. "He was a fearless rugby player, unbelievably gauty. Once when the team was getting up for a game exercising and in the middle of the field there was this huge mustache. What does Todd do but take a running leap into the puddle face first, and emerge screaming, 'I just did things like that.'" Klamm said.

"He was a nut, but such an easy going guy, you couldn't help but love him," said Buchanan's roommate of last semester, Bill Stuart '80. Stuart endured a semester without heat, clothes, or dryhead lights.

Buchanan insisted that the study two by Bourne research, light as a conclusion. Buchanan of a small lamp in order to conserve as much light as possible.

"Paper, too, was to be conserved at all costs. "He used to pick up the Bowdoin Thymes and write on the back of that," Stuart recalled. "Sometimes he'd be sitting at the typewriter, and he'd say I don't like this paragraph." Then he'd take out that liquid stuff and cover over a whole paragraph with it."

Since he had no alarm clock of his own, Buchanan sometimes borrowed Stuart's electric one. "Before he went to bed, he would plug it in and set it -- and then when he got up he would unplug it again so it was only using electricity from about midnight to 7 a.m."

"Living with him wasn't all that bad ... once in a while I'd catch hell for leaving an extra light on, but personally wise he was tremendous," Stewart recalled.

SPECIALIZING IN

GOVT. SURPLUS WINTER AND FASHION CRAZE WEAR

725-6332
Festival celebrates black culture

by GEOFF WORRELL

"And Mmein lies the tragedy of the age: Not that men are poor — all men know something of poverty — not that men are wicked — who is good? — not that men are ignorant — what is truth? Nay, but that men know so little of men."

— W.E.B. DuBois

This DuBois quotation is displayed at the beginning of George Norman's Black Odyssey exhibit and sums up not only the purpose of that exhibit but also the premise which the Black Arts Festival attempts to change.

The Black Arts Festival, a week-long celebration of the contributions blacks have made to American culture and world culture, started on Monday with the three-day Black Odyssey exhibit. "This is more than just a black exhibit," commented George Norman. "I have tried to make it a human exhibit as well. Those that come and see Black Odyssey will be able to share in a human experience."

The exhibit, however, was not well attended. Those that did see the exhibit were astonished at the facts that it presented. Among black personalities and their accomplishments that were displayed in the exhibit were: much to the surprise of all observers, Ludwig van Beethoven, Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, the first physician to successfully perform open heart surgery, Hannah, the Carthagian general, and many others.

"The reaction to the Beethoven exhibit shows that both blacks and whites were brainwashed into believing that blacks had no history," explained Norman. "As the old adage says, however, truth crushed to earth shall rise again." The problem lies in history, explains Norman. "Most books mention that we were here but few mention that we contributed."

On Wednesday, the festival continued its exploration of black contributions to culture with an open house at the Afro-American Center, which featured a film entitled Can You Hear Me. The film focused on the misconceptions that black children have of their world. The film's message was that black children do not think highly of themselves because, even at such an early age, the attitudes that society holds towards blacks infects blacks self-dignity.

Thursday's events added even more variety to the treatment of black culture. A soul food dinner was given at the Moujon Union giving students a taste of black culture. The menu consisted of barbecued spare ribs, turnip greens, macaroni and cheese, cornbread, potato salad, and sweet potato pie for dessert.

Today's schedule began at 3:30 p.m., with a lecture given by Dr. Ronald Smith, an ex-Bowdoin professor of music who is presently the assistant director of music at Indiana State University. Smith's talk analyzed the different aspect of culture represented in Ghanian music.

The lecture by Dr. Smith is followed at 8:00 p.m. by a play written by Alice Childress entitled "Wine in the Wilderness," being given in the Pickerd Theater.

Tomorrow will mark the end of the Black Arts Festival's week-long salute to the contributions of black culture to world culture. WBOR, the student radio station, will be presenting a day-long exhibit entitled "Expressions in Black Music." This mixture of music and commentary will cover a wide range of black music ranging from Ghanian music to funk and jazz.

Prez Rose leads senior raffle to give away prizes

(Continued from page five)

Pleased. Although that means fewer dances for the campus, the senior class plans to sponsor other events for the college community, including an outing to the Tired Legger's Inn at the Brunswick Golf Course, and a "Faculty Roast" to be held in the Senior Center dining room, he said.

The prizes, which are provided through the courtesy of Stowe Travel and the Ski Stall, will be given away on February 28, at the planning for the hockey team. Raffle tickets will be available at the College and also at Stowe Travel and the Ski Stall.

Rose acknowledges the skepticism of students concerning the success of the project, but he has a solution. "Tell people to buy tickets just this time so we can make enough money," and we'll get off their backs forever.

(Continued from Page 5)

movements of Constructivism and Dadaism were emerging, calling for prompt changes in the prevailing bourgeois and obsolete attitudes toward the arts.

Concurrently, Moholy began experimenting with different media and materials. He became increasingly concerned with representation. His work began to elicit both social and psychological response from his viewers. He stood out from other Constructivists because he avoided the use of strong satire used by some of his colleagues in the movement.

Moholy and his wife Lucia moved to Weimar in 1923. There he began teaching at the Bauhaus, headed by Walter Gropius. Eventually he was appointed head of the metal workshop.

Beginning photography in 1922, Moholy's first works consisted of photograms or light sensitive images made without the use of camera. Oddly, he had no interest in the "fine print," and did little, if any, of his own darkroom work.

Instead Lucia Moholy handled the technical manipulation, and continued to do so through 1926.

Moholy-Nagy moved to Chicago in 1927 with his second wife. After a futile attempt to establish "The New Bauhaus: American School of Design," "The School of Design in Chicago," was started in 1939 by Moholy and many of the New Bauhaus faculty. Moholy headed this school until his death from leukemia in 1946. Throughout this time the school enjoyed a faculty of eminent photographers.

In nearly all of the photograms much attention has been given to the transparency and play of light on abstract object.

In one of my favorite books, "The A.M. Photogram," Al Moholy has been very careful to articulate and to intensify the light, creating certain areas of high contrast which offer the transparencies of some of the forms. Two of the early sepia prints suggest the landscape in conjunction with suspended geometric forms.

The photographs in the exhibition prove the extent to which Moholy-Nagy used the camera as a tool for vision. All are extremely well composed taking marked advantage of varying vantage points. The influence that he has had on many photographers is quite obvious.

The exhibition has been very well installed. The minimal use of wall color and the reliance on sepia pews to compliment the few sepia prints successfully prevents distraction from the pictures and allows for better viewing of the prints.

Photographs of Moholy-Nagy displayed at Walker Art

For Your Squash & Racquetball Needs

Do You Wear Contact Lenses?

Drapeau's has the most complete line of contact lens care products available in Brunswick.

Whether you wear hard or soft lenses, you'll find all you need to care for them: saline solutions, daily cleaners, lens lubricants, wetting solutions, disinfecting units, lens carrying cases.

Come see us today.

Drapeau's Pharmacy
The Old-fashioned Drugstore with Modern Day Know-How 60 Maine Street
Brunswick
729-5851

Racquetball Courts
Are Now Open

College Student Racquetball Memberships

$25

Come Over and Visit Our New 2nd Floor Cocktail Lounge, Restaurant and Viewing Area

Brunswick Tennis and Racquetball
100 Harpswell Road
729-8433
Hoopsters suffer first defeat after seven victories

(Continued from Page 12)

makes Jess and Carrie so good," points out Merseher, but Dito did also play guard, with a 15-point average per game this season. She enjoyed her best day against Gordon with 20 points. She is part of the freshman contingent on the team that will carry the type of ball being played now on to the future. Jill Pingree, '82, and sophomores Mary Kate Devaney and Nina Williams are the leading forwards, rotating the positions among the three strong players. Other team members are Leslie White, Lee Cattanach, Joanne Woodson, and co-captain Nancy Norman, who is sidelined with a sprained ankle.

What makes women's basketball unique are the elements that these players have made the game special. Coach Merseher tried to pinpoint this: "It's the combination of intangibles that are not only invaluable to winning, but necessary when discussing a great group of athletes such as these. It's the things that can't be practiced, that can only be instinctual; it's those things that make our team special, reaching the point of sophistication and achievement that brings us beyond winning, to the point where playing becomes and is important part of the game."

The Babson defense stopped him here, but Ron Marcellus scored two goals and assisted on two others. (Times Record photo/Dave Bourque)

Ice Bears hope to rebound against division II rivals

(Continued from Page 12) "I just think that we're making progress as far as putting the puck in the cage. That's the big thing. We've got a good confidence in what we're doing. Against some of the teams we've played we haven't performed very well, but in others we've had opportunities and never cashed in on them. So, I think it's just a combination of everything. We've got to work ourselves out of it," offered Watson.

"We have to be a little hungrier offensively," Watson concedes, "which means around the cage, and we were against Babson. We worked hard and we scored a lot, which is important. Defensively, we have to challenge people coming out of the corner, we have to challenge people on the point who have the puck, and play the game, just be as tough physically as you can be within reason."

"We have a lot of areas we have to work on," admits senior Billy McNamara, who has been sidelined the past few games with a pulled stomach muscle, "We've been pretty inconsistent so far. We're strong one minute, and the next minute we're not. That's probably our major weakness right now. We're capable of working effectively in every zone."

The loss to Division I UNH will not effect the Bears standings. The real pressure comes on the road trip as they face Division II teams Williams tonight and Holy Cross tomorrow afternoon. They return to take on their arch-rivals the Colby Mules on Monday at Waterville.

"I think that the attitude right now is we have to take this two weekend and the one on Monday and just take it one game at a time, every game one at a time," says McNamara, "and that way we shouldn't have to make the playoffs. The possibility of qualifying is definitely still there."

"I still think we're in the middle of the road," says Watson in analyzing Division II teams. "We've only got the four losses and I think everyone in the division has got at least three losses. So, at this point, I don't think it's the end of the road."

The Babson defense stopped him here, but Ron Marcellus scored two goals and assisted on two others. (Times Record photo/Dave Bourque)

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place
Tel. 725-5573
Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop. Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

TRAVEL IN 1979

BY CLINT HAGAN

Vice Pres. - Slow Travel
9 Pleasant Street
Tel. 725-5573

THIS BEING, 1979, the Year of the Sheep (this year on the lunar calendar) means that April is likely to be 18 days longer than usual, and with the approaching season of ton to Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis/St. Paul, south to Philadelphia and Washington, and on April 25 east to Europe!

Sample Discount
During February and March, airlines like American have big Super Saver discounts, with easier restrictions than ever before. For example, you can save 50% or 65% on any American Airlines flight in the U.S. And on nighttime city flights, you can save 45% or 55% (Remember the savings are greater Monday through Thursday than on Fridays through Sunday).

Ups and Downs
Just make round-trip reservations and buy tickets at least 14 days in advance. Then return home as early as the first Sunday after departure, or stay as long as 60 days! AND THEN American also has the new companion fare where two people can travel together. We leave for Mar. 31, when you pay regular

We welcome Home Music... Immerse yourself

QUIZ
Q: If You Had To Say Where There Is To Say About Welcome Home Music What Would It Be?
Discover the answer at 111 State St.
Hours 10-5, Tuesday thru Saturday 729-8512

Ice Bears hope to rebound against division II rivals Skiing team overcomes obstacles, performs well in first two meets

by JOHN SHAW

Plagued by bad weather, which forced cancellation of the team's first meet of the season, the Bowdoin men's ski team placed well in its first actual meet before hosting its only tournament of the season last weekend at Sunday River. In the first of three meets at Norwich University, the Polar Bears placed fourth in a field of eight teams.

Co-captain Fred Barnes sums up the team by pointing to a "loss in quality but a gain in depth." Without the services of last year's top three performers, coach Brooks Stoddard has relied on a younger and intense team from Sugarloaf to amass what Barnes views as "the best conditioned squad in recent years."

Inexperience

Last Friday, the Alpine team placed a disappointing eighth. Dan Hayes, a sophomore whom Barnes described as "the team's best in the Alpine events," fell in the giant slalom, eliminating himself from contention. Out of the first five racers competing, Hayes placed nineteenth. Charlie Randall ended up twenty-first, and Jordan Van Vast finished twenty-fourth.

In the slalom, Hayes tell again, but returned with "a show of brilliance," in Barnes' view. Hayes finished sixth in his second run, but his combined time was not good enough. Gil Eaton, a freshman who has shown potential to be a legitimate threat in downhill events, also fell, after placing eleventh in his first run.

Although the skiing team has potential to perform well, Stoddard admits, "With Fred Barnes and Dan Hayes not being able to put a couple of runs together, both in giant slalom and the slalom. So it was all up to the Nor'Easter," and the Nordic team, which came through in splendid style, being third in the jumping out of identical teams and then second in the cross country out of nine teams.

The third place in the jumping was largely the result of co-captain Hol Rass' performance. The senior scored to a fifth-place finish in a field of fifty skiers. Van Vast, sedan Barnes, "has more potential than anyone in the jumping event," placed tenth.

Cross country proved to be the strongest facet of the Bowdoin team, finishing an impressive second behind Johnson State, Bass who completed the first-place minute course in fifth place, was the overall champion in the Nordic events. Jeff Gwynne, a freshman who has been skiing well, came in sixth, followed by Steve Miere in tenth place and Jim Marmillan in the fourteenth position.

The strong showing in the Nordic events elevated Bowdoin to a fifth-place finish behind Norwich, Johnson State, Lyndon State, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The other Maine entry, Colby, placed eighth. "I was pleased that they came through, and these next couple of weeks will tell," Stoddard relates, "but I think that that was a pretty darn good performance considering that we really did not perform up to our potential in the Alpine."

"Part of that too could have been because we were running the meet ourselves," the coach continued, "That's a new thing for Bowdoin in the last four years. This year we hope to host the meet and mix it up in another way, and the logistics and everything were worked out by myself, the athletic department, and the co-captains, which takes your concentration away from the meet a little bit if you're worrying about who's got this and who's paid their money and that kind of stuff."

Despite positive support from the College and the valuable services of Stoddard, who captained the skiing team during his undergraduate days at Williams and coached here while a member of the faculty (1961-72), Bowdoin's ski team has been basically handled by several problems. The most obvious obstacle is Bowdoin's location. By taking advantage of adequate local facilities and College facilities, though, the problem is minimized.

"The lack of immediate facilities is not a great drawback," says Stoddard. "We are developing in the cross country facilities in Coleman Farm and Pickard Field. It puts us right in the heart of the ski area, and that's all very strong ski contingents." The major advantage to Bowdoin's location, he emphasizes, comes when competing with Johnson State, Lyndon State, and others that are near quality facilities and places a great emphasis on skiing.

An effort made to alleviate this problem this year was a vacation training camp at Sugarloaf, explains Stoddard. "Over Christmas, we were there for ten days, which was fantastic. Sugarloaf is kind of the heart of Maine and Bowdoin. There are so many Bowdoin people connected with Sugarloaf's boys, we made it on that in terms of a training place about as well as some of the schools like Williams and Dartmouth. We have their huts up there. Through the generosity of Bowdoin skiing alumni, I think we have been able to do quite well."

"They don't come to Bowdoin to ski," Barnes says in reference to prospective skiers. Recruiting is basically nonexistent, which is unfortunate, due to the fact the Bowdoin skiers must start out good because they have little chance to improve when they get here."
After Icing Babson  Bears down by Wildcats

by DANNY MENZ

Babson followed up their loss to Colby College hockey witnessed two routs, 5-1 and 3-1, past week at Dartmouth Arena. The Babson's were 2/3 to 1/3 the last Babson's turn to get hot behind them. 20 3/3 to 1/3 to 11 1/3 to the University of New Hampshire.

Against Babson, it looked as if the bears were something. They had skated exceptionally well in the four games prior. But Babson only one victory to show for it.

then Mark Petts seconds later on a slapshot past the blue line. Babson only managed 4 shots on net the entire period. In the final game, Babson led the victory with another goal by Chad Roy. One by one, Boubey's, three goals by Dan McNeil. The first goal led to the Babson's 1/3, and one by Dan "Killer" McNeil. The second and third goals took the lead with 4:30 left in the game and 20 minutes remaining. The Bears down the stretch with the shot out, his first for the season.

On Monday, the win moved to 4/5. The University of New Hampshire scored first on a 5-3 man advantage in the first period. Babson collected on its first power play opportunity to even the score then the 2/3 the puck out of the corner and passed it neatly to Merritt in front, put it by the goaltender. When Babson received another man-up situation a minute later, it looked as if the Bears might go ahead, but a shot on their own end allowed UNH to tie the game and they went on to win the game 5-3.

In the second period, the close game became a blowout. As Babson struggled on both plays, their opponents, Merritt and Harry Provencher, split the net with a few minutes remaining. Merritt left the ice halfway through the game, the score was still close with UNH leading 3-1. But Provencher, with little chance to warm up, allowed UNH to score a power-play goal within 12 seconds. Less than half a minute later, the Bears were on the power play and the game had all the makings of a runaway. As the period ended, UNH got a point to play sending Bowdoin off the ice with a 6-1 deficit. So the game was lost.

Although the Polar Bears came out fighting in the third period, it was the Wildcats who scored first.

USM bursts hoosters' bubble sets women back for first time

by MARK HOSBEN

The burner in the game, bringing Bowdoin's only remaining undefeated team to its first loss. The disappointment showed all on the players' faces as the bowdoin team felt just short against the University of Southern Maine 54-50.

The players had worked hard during the entire game, as hard in the five minutes of overtime, brought which brought them just two baskets short of victory, as in the first five minutes of regulation, when they assumed a 2-2 advantage. Coach Clark, Hoss's remarks that "we're up for every game" proved true, as the women played the game to the last foul shot, and the last point of the season.

The determination and dedication was evident from Nancy Brimmer's twenty-one point effort. Brimmer, along with Mary Kate Devaney's rebounding, from the floor leadership of Jessica Birdahl, Carole Nederman, and Dotti DiDuro; and from the determination and energy that made the spectators wish that the saying "It's not whether you win or lose but how you play the game" could be translated into a tangible reward that could have reversed the tough defeat.

While one thing remained consistent through this winter sports season, a number of things have happened that not even the best prognosticator would have forecasted at the beginning of the schedule.

The constant, of course, has been Dick Mersereau's outstanding women's basketball team. Although he lost half of last year's roster, Mersereau led the team to seven consecutive victories with a win over the University of Southern Maine earlier this week.

The hockey team, picked by one leading newspaper before the season to top Division II again this year, sports only a 3/10 record in the division and a losing mark overall. No one took Coach Sid Watson seriously when he said that Division II would be much stronger and tougher this year, but he proved to be correct.

The prospects for a winning basketball season appear to be bright. Even though he has enjoyed only three winning seasons in sixteen tries and has a career record below .500, Coach Fgy Bicknell has turned this year's team into a winner.

Whether this thing may change in the next few weeks as the teams concentrate on divisional and conference games, the season has nevertheless proved to be quite different thus far.

Leverage's Line: Last week, Babson predicted both basketball games and both hockey contests correctly, but due to human error his predictions did not appear in the Orient. This week, he feels that both the Colby and the Poly Newsletter poll the Ivy League. Although Colby beat Bowdoin in the earlier in the season and the conference favorite, Roland also feels that Sid Watson's skaters will return to their winning ways. This line on the three hockey contests: Babson over Williams, 5-4; the Holy Cross Crusaders stopped, 5-3; and the Colby Mules (Poly Bear players in the State of Maine Tournament last month) nip by a 5-4 margin.

Postgame Scripts

University Season

by BILL STORSE

While one thing has remained consistent through this winter sports season, a number of things have happened that not even the best prognosticator would have forecasted at the beginning of the schedule.

The constant, of course, has been Dick Mersereau's outstanding women's basketball team. Although he lost half of last year's roster, Mersereau led the team to seven consecutive victories with a win over the University of Southern Maine earlier this week.

The hockey team, picked by one leading newspaper before the season to top Division II again this year, sports only a 3/10 record in the division and a losing mark overall. No one took Coach Sid Watson seriously when he said that Division II would be much stronger and tougher this year, but he proved to be correct.

The prospects for a winning basketball season appear to be bright. Even though he has enjoyed only three winning seasons in sixteen tries and has a career record below .500, Coach Fgy Bicknell has turned this year's team into a winner.

Whether this thing may change in the next few weeks as the teams concentrate on divisional and conference games, the season has nevertheless proved to be quite different thus far.

Leverage's Line: Last week, Babson predicted both basketball games and both hockey contests correctly, but due to human error his predictions did not appear in the Orient. This week, he feels that both the Colby and the Poly Newsletter poll the Ivy League. Although Colby beat Bowdoin in the earlier in the season and the conference favorite, Roland also feels that Sid Watson's skaters will return to their winning ways. This line on the three hockey contests: Babson over Williams, 5-4; the Holy Cross Crusaders stopped, 5-3; and the Colby Mules (Poly Bear players in the State of Maine Tournament last month) nip by a 5-4 margin.

Dottie DiDrieco goes up for a jumper against Gordon. (Times Record photo/Dave Bourque)

Center Roger Elliott, who leads the Polar Bears in scoring with 20 points, had a 13-point game in the Babson zone last Saturday. (Times Record photo/Dave Bourque)

Women swimmers now 3-1; men even mark at Williams

by HARRIS WEINER

One of the big surprises on the Bowdoin sports scene this year is that of the women's varsity swim team which was undefeated in three meets until losing to Williams on January 14th. Coach Lynn Buddha's women's program has swelled in size to thirty participants, undoubtedly the key reason for the 72-41 triumph over the Ephs. A factor contributing to the team's success this season.

Captains Linda McGarri and Julie Spector have been hampered by injuries and illness but fresh new faces have added a new dimension to the team. Each has been instrumental in the team's success.

The men's team evened its record at 2-2 with a 72-41 victory at Williams. Freshman Kirk Hutchinson paced the Bears with a winner's time of 22.8 in the 200 medley. Overall we should place high and should finish just behind Williams.

Also winning their events for the visitors were co-captain Brian Connolly (1000 freestyle), freshman Chris Madsen (100 backstroke), Sophomore Peter Lynch (200 backstroke), former Sam Sokolovski (500 freestyle), and co-captain Bob Pellegrino (200 breaststroke). The 400 medley relay team of Lynch, Pellegrino, Steve Rude, and Bob Hoedemaker also placed first for the Bears.

Women swimmers now 3-1; men even mark at Williams

by HARRIS WEINER

One of the big surprises on the Bowdoin sports scene this year is that of the women's varsity swim team which was undefeated in three meets until losing to Williams on January 14th. Coach Lynn Buddha's women's program has swelled in size to thirty participants, undoubtedly the key reason for the 72-41 triumph over the Ephs. A factor contributing to the team's success this season.

Captains Linda McGarri and Julie Spector have been hampered by injuries and illness but fresh new faces have added a new dimension to the team. Each has been instrumental in the team's success.

The men's team evened its record at 2-2 with a 72-41 victory at Williams. Freshman Kirk Hutchinson paced the Bears with a winner's time of 22.8 in the 200 medley. Overall we should place high and should finish just behind Williams.

Also winning their events for the visitors were co-captain Brian Connolly (1000 freestyle), freshman Chris Madsen (100 backstroke), Sophomore Peter Lynch (200 backstroke), former Sam Sokolovski (500 freestyle), and co-captain Bob Pellegrino (200 breaststroke). The 400 medley relay team of Lynch, Pellegrino, Steve Rude, and Bob Hoedemaker also placed first for the Bears.
Phi Beta Kappa elect six new seniors to honorary frat

by NANCY ROBERTS

The Bowdoin College chapter of Phi Beta Kappa has announced yesterday that six additional members of the Class of 1979 have been elected to the national honorary fraternity for the recognition and promotion of scholarship.

Professor Richard E. Morgan, the chapter’s Secretary-Treasurer, said the new members were nominated as a result of their sustained superior intellectual performance.

Six other seniors were previously elected to Phi Beta Kappa after completing their junior year at Bowdoin. They are John A. Cunningham, Bangor, Me.; John F. Greene, Jr., College Point, N.Y.; Lynne A. Harrigan, Mayfield, Ohio; Scott T. Ransom, Woodland Hills, Calif.; John W. Sawyer, Groham, Me.; and H. Andrew Tingley, Chey Chane, Md.

District Attorney criticizes College policy on stolen items

by ROBERT DESIMON

The Bowdoin College Security controversy was fueled this week when Cumberland County district attorney Henry N. Berry, III accused Bowdoin College officials of fostering a poliy which reportedly allows students found with stolen goods in their rooms to escape the consequences that a high school dropout might face in a similar situation.

According to a front-page story which appeared last Monday in the Portland Press Herald, Berry said, "Being a Bowdoin student should not confer a grant of immunity from responsibility for one's criminal acts." Berry went on to say that Bowdoin should establish a policy of reporting these crimes to the police instead of kicking them under the rug in exchange for restitution.

Portland Press Herald Staff Writer Clark T. Irwin, Jr. further quoted Berry as stating that "the real evil lies in the lesson the reported policy teaches - that a high school dropout from a low income neighborhood of Portland" would be given no breaks if discovered in possession of stolen property, but his chronologically contemporaries, who can afford to pay $7000 a year for college costs would have a chance to escape punishment if he discreetly returns the loot.

Berry's remarks prompted a series of rebuttals from Bowdoin College officials. According to the Press Herald, Dean of the College of Paul Nyhus said, "We're quite prepared to agree that the laws of the state of Maine apply on the campus. We told Mr. Berry a year ago that this was our policy. We have no interest in protecting students who have stolen goods.

(Continued on Page 9)

The executive committee of the Bowdoin Corporation has appointed the following new officers:

Alan W. Oliner, Jr., a former member of the Board of Trustees and current member of the Board of Governors, has been elected to serve asBowdoin's first Chairman of the Board of Governors. He will serve in this position for one year.

Richard W. Fitpatrick, a Trustee of Bowdoin College, has been elected to serve as Bowdoin's first President of the Board of Governors. He will serve in this position for one year.

Excerpts from the announcement:

"The Board of Trustees of Bowdoin College is pleased to announce the appointment of Alan W. Oliner, Jr., a former member of the Board of Trustees and current member of the Board of Governors, to serve as Bowdoin's first Chairman of the Board of Governors. He will serve in this position for one year.

"The Board of Trustees of Bowdoin College is pleased to announce the appointment of Richard W. Fitpatrick, a Trustee of Bowdoin College, to serve as Bowdoin's first President of the Board of Governors. He will serve in this position for one year.

(Continued on Page 2)
Hijacker and student fly from L.A. to New York
by MATT HOWE

Life at Bowdoin always seems so distant from the bright-lights, big-city atmosphere of which we read and hear through the mass media that we seldom give them a second glance. However, on January 27 when millions of Americans tuned to the six o’clock news were hearing about the skyjacking of a 747 in route from Los Angeles to New York, who but our own Michael Ruder ’79 was seated within a few rows of spectators at the tabernacle. Ironically, and perhaps for the better, Michi and her 12th fellowship companion, who has been quite successful in enhancing their awareness. "The flight was uncertain. Nobody had any idea what had happened until we had been on the ground (Kennedy Airport for two hours)," explains Michi.

As the story goes, nine minutes into the flight, 40 year old Irene McKinney sent a note to the Captain claiming she carried explosives and demanded she be let off free. She did not direct the flight off course. She demanded that she be flown to a plane that would not land. Since there were no other planes in site, began to wonder why they would be so willing to give in if the threat was there. It was then she told herself, "I bet there’s something fishy on the airplane." Upon finally realizing the circumstances, she comments, "I began to chuckle because I believe this was actually happening—it was such a calm hijacking."

Surprisingly, as word of their true predication spread, the calm mood changed. Many passengers, including Dean Martin Jr., folk singer Theodore Bikel, and legendary Sam Jaffe, gathered in the front of the plane while an FBI agent negotiated with Mrs. McKinney in the rear.

BMA officials Allan Schroeder and Steve Dusky confer with Executive board member Terry Roberts. Orient/Craven

BMA officials Allan Schroeder and Steve Dusky confer with Executive board member Terry Roberts. Orient/Craven

The Bowdoin Sun was granted a new lease on life as the Executive Board finally passed acceptance on the magazine’s new charter. The Sun submitted a petition of well over two hundred signatures to indicate the student support which the Board deemed necessary at its previous meeting. The motion to accept the charter was passed quickly.

The Board heard a report given by Steven Pollak, ’79, one of two student representatives to the President’s Advisory Committee Investigating Bowdoin Investments in South Africa. According to Pollak, the Committee, which was formed by President Emeri last semester, was "mainly concerned with the concept of the campus community."

In response the Board passed a double motion to request President Emeri to remove two members or to add two members from the present Committee to strike the intended balance, and to make the committee more effective with more frequent meetings. The motion passed by a vote of nine in favor, none opposed, with six abstentions.

The Board also unanimously voted to give the student votes to the committee for a formal charter.

Women discuss feminism and contemporary society
by ANGELA BARRANO

"Women bear all the costs of being private, not public beings," stated Joan Tronto in the keynote address of the "Women, Power, and Social Change" Symposium this past Saturday. Tronto spoke instead of the scheduled lecturer, Jean Elshtain who was unable to attend. Addressing an audience of about 100, the discussion of "Feminism and the Public/Private Splits," Tronto called for a change in our perceptions of the public and private spheres.

According to Tronto, the ultimate question for women today is that of self-definition. In Tronto’s estimation, this question must be solved within a public/political context, rather than as a political/personal issue. Thus Tronto believes that "a theory of feminism must be a political theory rather than another kind of theory.

Gerrie Casey, an anthropologist from the University of Massachusetts next discussed "Women in Cuba." Examining the Cuban model, Ms. Casey saw two clear messages for women in the United States. First, "It is absolutely necessary for women to enter the work force," stated Casey. "Women have work to do, to establish permanently their position in the work force."

Periods of high female employment in the U.S., as during World War Two, have been of a temporary nature, observed Casey.

Greater Participation

Casey’s second criterion for women’s greater participation in society is their inclusion in the armed forces. Casey believes that if women succeed in establishing a stronghold in defense and the work force, "then myths about women and male behavior may be reduced, but a material basis exists for disturbing these myths."

A careful examination of Cuban labor statistics reveals that some progress has been made in firmly establishing women in the work force. Casey noted that in 1956, 17% of all Cuban women were in the work force, many employed as prostitutes or domestics. By 1973, 25% of all Cuban women had been employed in the work force, many employed as nurses. Casey noted that the factors being taken into account of the 25% of women who were employed in managerial positions. Also, 25% of union officials are women. Further, the same percentage of women existing in the working population.

Cuban Macho Image

Cuban women seeking equality face the formidable barrier of countering the Latin male "macho" image. Recounting one amusing episode, Ms. Casey told of a young male Cuban who realized that his revolutionary duties included helping with household chores. However, this young man could not do without his "macho" image, so he bought clothes to dry in daylight, because the neighbors would laugh at him. He reconciled the problem by hanging out the clothes at night.

"Phallic technology"

Pat Hynes, a graduate student in Environmental Engineering at Massachusetts, next confronted the topic "Ecology and Feminism." In modern times, Hynes claims that women’s "mythic" role as creative scientist and inventor has been subordinated to the male’s destructive role.

Hynes characterized modern technology as "an extension of the male body" and sees the post-world war II periods as spanning "phallic technology." Hynes concluded by making an analogy between the sexual act and the male use of science.”Science must be understood in a sexual context in the same way that nature is understood in a sexual context.”

(Continued on Page 8)
Eleven days make a wild Quebec carnival

by DOUG HENRY

With the advent of another long Maine Winter, many Bowdoin students are searching for new and exciting modes of social disentanglement. Winters Weekend will offer relief for some, but this brief sojourn on the Bowdoin campus is not a long enough respite from the intense academic pressures of this esteemed institution. There is only one answer to this problem; you must make a pilgrimage to the famous Quebec Winter Carnival.

As the Bowdoin student is internationally renowned for his drinking prowess, the "Carnaval de Quebec" is the perfect home away from home. The historic City of Quebec is the setting for this "Mardi Gras of the North" that features ice sculptures, hockey games, lumberjack contests, parades, and countless other events. But the people are the most exciting attraction at the Carnival which runs from the first to the eleventh of February. To put it quite bluntly, the "whole city is in a drunken stupor for eleven straight days. If you enjoy drinking, eating, dancing, in the streets, meeting new people, and being utterly oblivious, then the Carnival is the place for you.

Quebec City is only five hours north of Bowdoin, so it is easily in reach of the average student with a car. Approximately twenty Bowdoin students made the trek to Quebec last weekend, and none returned. Lodged with what they found. The partying in Quebec is so intense, it makes a Bowdoin campus-wide look like a Victorian tea party.

An explanation of a typical day in Quebec will show what to expect from this "Joyeux Carnaval". You wake up about eight o'clock to the sounds of several thousand French-Canadians blowing plastic horns for no apparent reason; when you suddenly realize you have the worst hangover of your life. At noon, you wake up again and stumble into the stuffy streets of Old Quebec with no perceivable purpose or direction. You try to remember what you did the night before.

Feeling slightly famished, you search for a cheap place to eat your first meal of the day. A companion asks the waitress in a quaint restaurant for beer and bread utilizing rusty high school French and pointing to the menu. She returns several minutes later with beer and something that looks like perk meatloaf. This is what your friend has ordered for you because he is willing to eat it although he has no idea why.

It is now time to visit an event; so, your friends don't think you are disappointed in the ice sculpture contest in interesting for fifteen minutes, but it is too cold and too expensive to stay long. Inevitably, you need to visit a bar to warm up. Since your money is almost gone, you order a beer and some cheese with several French-Canadians in the inebriate liquor store so you can stay warm in the streets that night.

After stopping in hotels and meeting people for several hours, a disco scene appears. You dance and drink for several more hours in a place that seems to play "Y.M.C.A.", "Freak out", and "Instant Replay" in a cyclical fashion. The disco is hot, so the music seems to be working well. You feel cool off. As you stumble into the in- toxicating masses, you notice a drunk sliding down the sidewalk on his back and yelling "bonjour" at passersby. A young lady off their feet. Then it suddenly dawned on you that this "dream" was from Bowdoin. Suddenly, more Bowdoin people emerge from the shadows. Reunited with familiar faces, your group drinks and dances in an outdoor disco until 3 a.m. It is now time to sleep and avoid the inevitable hangover and plastic horn revell of the next morning.

It is possible to spend great sums of money in Quebec if you are not careful. Some hotel rooms are available in the city, but they are expensive. The ice palace in Quebec City is lighted at the start of every winter carnival.

Stoves prove their worth in Brunswick as more people stay warm with wood

by ANDY SCHILLING

Split wood — not atoms, is what many people seem to be thinking these days. Last winter's heavy snows and the rising cost of gas and electricity have led many people to buy wood burning stoves for alter- native heating. The business is booming.

Why do stoves still sell when gas and electric heat are available and wood burning systems cost to keep warm? The cost of heating is less if one can supply its own source of fuel. People are more independent of the gas and oil companies, and many people feel that burning wood is a more natural and resource, unlike oil and gas.

Wood is an easily attainable commodity that is used efficiently and is renewable. Wood burns completely and is easy to maintain. When using your own wood, the smoke is much cleaner to burn than coal. If you are looking for a new stove, look in a wood burning system.

The weekend's happenings

Thursday, February 8 — Snow Sculpturing, Theme: The Faculty, Prizes: 1st place — $100, 2nd place — $50, 3rd place — $25, 9:30 a.m. Bonfire at Pickard Field, Hot Chocolate & Kegs, while supplies last.

Friday, February 9 — Snow Sculpturing continues 5:00-6:00 p.m., Winter Dinner — Senior Center, and the Allusion $0.00 p.m. The Astonishing Neal, Hypnotist, & Parapsychologist, Richard Theater — Free Admission.

Saturday, February 10 — 2:00 p.m. — Judging of Snow Sculptu- rures begins, 3:00-8:00 p.m. Hot Chocolate/Union cookies/Fireセット/ Senior Center, 4:00 p.m. Hockey vs. Amherst, Winter Home Parties, 8:00 p.m. Winter Party & Dance, Senior Center — free admission, SeaHawks vs. Dartmouth.

Sunday, February 11 — 12:30 p.m. — The Ski Team & SUC sponsor a cross country ski race — starting at Pickard Field — Refreshments will be served, 3:00 p.m. — Senior own, Center Senior Dining Room $5.00

The weekend's happenings

The weekend's happenings

The weekend's happenings

Saturday, February 10 — 2:00 p.m. — Judging of Snow Sculptu- rures begins, 3:00-8:00 p.m. Hot Chocolate/Union cookies/Fireセット/ Senior Center, 4:00 p.m. Hockey vs. Amherst, Winter Home Parties, 8:00 p.m. Winter Party & Dance, Senior Center — free admission, SeaHawks vs. Dartmouth.

Sunday, February 11 — 12:30 p.m. — The Ski Team & SUC sponsor a cross country ski race — starting at Pickard Field — Refreshments will be served, 3:00 p.m. — Senior own, Center Senior Dining Room $5.00

The weekend's happenings

The weekend's happenings

Saturday, February 10 — 2:00 p.m. — Judging of Snow Sculptu- rures begins, 3:00-8:00 p.m. Hot Chocolate/Union cookies/Fireセット/ Senior Center, 4:00 p.m. Hockey vs. Amherst, Winter Home Parties, 8:00 p.m. Winter Party & Dance, Senior Center — free admission, SeaHawks vs. Dartmouth.

Sunday, February 11 — 12:30 p.m. — The Ski Team & SUC sponsor a cross country ski race — starting at Pickard Field — Refreshments will be served, 3:00 p.m. — Senior own, Center Senior Dining Room $5.00

The weekend's happenings

Saturday, February 10 — 2:00 p.m. — Judging of Snow Sculptu- rures begins, 3:00-8:00 p.m. Hot Chocolate/Union cookies/Fireセット/ Senior Center, 4:00 p.m. Hockey vs. Amherst, Winter Home Parties, 8:00 p.m. Winter Party & Dance, Senior Center — free admission, SeaHawks vs. Dartmouth.

Sunday, February 11 — 12:30 p.m. — The Ski Team & SUC sponsor a cross country ski race — starting at Pickard Field — Refreshments will be served, 3:00 p.m. — Senior own, Center Senior Dining Room $5.00
Idiocy

It is easy to say that the deplorable incident which occurred last Monday night following the Bowdoin-Colby hockey game took place because of the lack of sufficient police or Colby security forces. This, however, is a copout. Surely, it is safe to assume that two supposedly intelligent students would have enough maturity not to beat on each other because of a hockey game.

Winters Weekend is once again upon us, complete with another snow scupturing contest, hockey game, dance, movies, parties, and formal dinners. The long, bleak stretch from January to March is broken for all, too short, weekend.

Winters is a time that no one should miss, no matter what academic pitfalls loom large in the near future. Stay out of the library this weekend! Forget about your history paper! Forget about the lab that’s due this Monday!

The fraternities and Student Union Committee have provided us with an Activitiess and entertainment to last us a good long while. Let’s not let it go to waste by “tooling” in our rooms all weekend. Play in the snow, sculpturing for an afternoon! Or go all out in the cross country race. Cheer for the hockey team till you can’t speak! Get Hypnotized in Pickard Theater! Party like a fiend! Go nuts! Throw a fit! Do it all! Just don’t let Winters pass you by!

Legends Regem

Enthusiasm for a constitutional monarchy was made evident at Tuesday night’s Board meeting when the petition calling for a king was signed in the time it took to carry the document from the Mouton Union threshold to the Lancaster Lounge.

The question now arises how the monarch should be selected. The current notion of a general election is unacceptable. It means a beholding king. Furthermore, an appointed monarch by the Executive Board promises to perpetuate the same buffoonishness that a monarch intends to banish for once and for all.

Proper criteria also becomes a problem. Trial by force discriminates against a possible queen. Moreover, since the monarch will be counseled by a private court, intelligence is not necessary for the job.

It seems only appropriate that a person should make his or her claim to the throne by proving a rightful title as a descendant from the oldest Bowdoin lineage. Thus, the monarch is created by a true divine process. Once this has been done, then we can move on to the long-neglected affairs of the realm and crown.

For the record

Cumberland County District Attorney Henry N. Berry III’s inflammatory remarks, which appeared in the Portland Press Herald and the Boston Globe) surprised many people here. Berry asserted that a poor kid from Portland caught violating the law would be given a raw deal as compared to his Bowdoin contemporary, who would get off scott-free. The DA reasons that the seven thousand dollar price tag pays for the privilege of immunity as well as education. In speaking such, he expresses a logic singular to himself.

The DA assumes that everyone who attends the College can afford $7,000. If Berry had stopped to look at the facts, he might have realized that not every kid who dons a Bowdoin sweatshirt is such a rich preppy from Massachusetts who looks cross-eyed at anyone who is not in the fifty percent tax bracket.

Forced, over one-third of the students who matriculated at Bowdoin this past year received financial aid. Furthermore, the average award totals over four thousand dollars.

Finally, Berry’s interpretation of the College security practices was quite imaginative. Heorck a simpanance of town and gown jurisdiction and twisted it into a sensational story. Perhaps the one parallel between his version of the story and ours is the statement which ran in the Press Herald headline, “Bowdoin students not above the law,” a notion which the DA is probably just learning and one which we have never doubted.

LETTERS

Peep-show

To the Editor:

More appalling than the thought of three drunken students looking into women’s welfare in a college apartment, is the fact that the men of Kappa Sigma fraternity actually line up at the windows to watch men in the bathroom. While attending last weekend’s campus-wide party at Kappa Sigma, it became quite clear to us that members of this fraternity use the pretense of a party to attain the cheap thrills of a peep show from the five women’s bathroom window. This sort of perverse behavior may not be common to all members of Kappa Sigma, however, the mere fact that this situation exists at all is testament to the juvenile attitude which, unfortunately, is at times apparent at Bowdoin College. Perhaps Kappa Sigma ought to entitle their next party –

“And You Thought The Topeka Fair Was Fun?”

Sincerely,

Nora C. Glancy ’79
Joseph S. Taylor ’79

Myopic

To the Editor:

Regarding the recent discussions of College’s indirect investments in South Africa: one has merely to step back from the day-to-day to see that this banner is not entirely objective. In light of this recent election of Pieter Botha, heightened public attention is being focused on the problems of the area, especially the plight of racial discrimination and human injustice. The Bowdoin South African Investment Committee, riding the crest of public concern, is running the risk of hasty decision. The myopic focus on the controversy blinds the genuine attention given to other countries whose records on human rights make the regime of figures of Prime Minister John Vorster pale in comparison. Three examples come immediately to mind – the military junta of Augusto Pinochet in Chile, Ferdinand Marcos’ martial law in the Philippines, and the Park regime of South Korea. This should not be construed as Reaganesque, nor does it expiate South Africa. Rather, it is to point out that, should the College investment portfolio be thrown open to public scrutiny, perhaps a general re-evaluation of all foreign investments is in order.

Daniel G. Lannon
Willis F. Lyford

Social skating

To the Editor:

Your idea of presenting the variety of winter activities is a great start. We do our utmost to make the most of it.

I was surprised and pleased that so much information could be obtained about the Skating Club in such a short time. However, there are a couple of points that either were not clearly presented or were missed in the rush.

My remark about the hockey player who could hardly stand was an illustration of the need for basic instruction. The basics are the same for all skaters, and Laurie and Matty are well able to help anyone individually or even in a group.

With an increase in ability there is an increase in enjoyment.

At the present time there are no Bowdoin students in the Skating Club. Some have belonged in previous years, one even serving as President one year. Members of the Bowdoin community are welcome to join. However, since we rent the ice from the arena, guests must help share that cost.

I should have asked your reporter to include a statement on the importance of adequate skates. They should fit snugly and provide adequate support. Weak ankles really mean poorly fitted skates. The cheapest skates do not have adequate support built into the boot. Do not try to stuff the boot with heavy socks either. A figure skater should have a thin nylon stocking; and a hockey skater would probably want only a medium-weight sock.

Social skating is a great carry-over activity. I urge the undergraduates to take advantage of this. No need to be a pro, I am willing to assist as much as I can.

Sincerely,

Eiley G. LaCasse
At the invitation of the Orient, William D. Shipman, Professor of Political Science, has offered his opinion on Bowdoin's investments in South Africa.

The issue of Bowdoin's investments in companies doing business in South Africa is a difficult one in part because our lives and work here on campus are no longer insulated from the reality of discrimination and oppression practiced in South Africa. Is the conflict between "us" and "them" in the American multinational firms and our own policies? There is a remote possibility the companies and banks may seek to do their own if they foresee greater risk in future investment, but that would surely be a blow to global anti-apartheid investors, Bowdoin's own holdings of these investment securities are minuscule. Even if all colleges and universities adopted a policy insisting on withdrawal (a likely occurrence), they would not in most cases be able to muster majority votes to force the issue. This inability to carry a majority vote is not well understood by the companies themselves and by the investment community, if not the campus. The companies' strategy thus appears to be one of pressuring existing educational institutions that (a) things are getting better, and (b) we all have a capacity to work for progress through the companies we support. If I am correct in thinking that educational and perhaps church-related institutions will not be in a position to help change company policies, then the only resolution of the underlying issue seems to be for Bowdoin to divest itself of shares in such companies. This is not to say the College cannot work in the public sphere to try to change foreign policy to promote withdrawal... The BOWDOIN is influenced by ethical and religious institutions is apt to carry more weight where votes against dollar interests are being counted. But to think that ownership of a limited amount of stock in companies that engage in the doing of business in and with South Africa can be effective in changing company policy is simply naive. Furthermore, if there were any doubts about the determination of most business leaders, the function of their lawyers is to keep "their" colleges in the fold and to prevent actions which might interfere with corporate management or (even lower stock prices), those doubts should be reviewed by viewing the composition of "college-wide" committees set up to study the issue.

Ombudsman cites reasons for conservatism

by PETER STEINBREUCK

Have you ever stopped to ask yourself what you want from college? Chances are it was no more a conscious choice on your part than it was when you were in high school. But when pushed for a reason, you might truthfully say "survive, perhaps to become a doctor." If, or when you're probing, in telling yourself you might say "I want to develop my breadth of understanding about the world." If we know this, though, you probably will then conclude that a college education is required for "survival" or success — i.e. earn a good living. Well, according to a national survey, a majority of the nation's college students cited liberatory ambitions as "key reason" for going to college. That fact should not be too surprising, yet answers to the same question ten years ago revealed a much lower percentage of college student's would agree. In 1962, Shils and the analyst of student attitudes, is only one of the many indications that college age America are becoming politically more conservative, more materialistic, and more conventionalized. Some authorities go further to suggest that many values held by young people today represent a swing back to the 1950's. However, it is perhaps a misnomer that many observers have labeled this apparent trend a breed of "neo-conservatism." For it belies a more subtle value system which is expressed as an attitude of stand-offishness and self-interest. As one student puts it, "I think of myself as a conservative was heard to say, "I don't believe in any other position...I'm an economics major and I dress conservatively." Indeed, one necessity of so many political-social philosophy is at least a modest degree of social consciousness and sense of responsibility. But this crucial policy on fraternity membership. Briefly, the statement would then read: "We insist that membership in Bowdoin fraternities be free of any discrimination based on race, creed, color, or sex." The report went to the faculty for a vote just a few weeks ago, and the governing boards will also be considering the matter. Now, if this restructuring is approved by the governing boards, and the issue is for the college (i.e., that fraternities must grant full membership status to females, then full college support and services for those houses whose national policies prohibit full membership status for females will be withdrawn; and gentlemen, we have now seen the demise of the fraternity system in which each of us so fondly participated. Any fraternity forced to abide by the college's ruling would have to sever its prestigiously and traditional national affiliation with the national governing bodies, and its leadership, if the organization to lose its support and services, would die. It would be a skeletal remnant of its former self, merely a convenient eating out of our present without formal structure. It happened at: Williams. We must take action now to ensure that it doesn't happen. Here is what I propose: February, 1979. William M. (Marky) Roberts Representative, Bowdoin Club of Rhode Island RESOLUTION FROM THE BOWDOIN ALUMNI COUNCIL TO THE GOVERNING BOARDS: Whereas the Greek-letter fraternities at Bowdoin have been and vital part of college life since 1941; and whereas these ancient and honorable institutions have of late come under unjustified and scurrilous attack from college pressure groups and individuals for their membership policies regarding female students; be it resolved that the Bowdoin Alumni Council be on record as vehemently opposing any such policy regarding membership prior to pledging, and the option was theirs: to join or not to join. Let me reiterate how strongly the Dean of Students feels on this issue from minutes of our October 1978 meeting: "The dean...is exercising pressure on the administration to insist that all fraternities grant full privileges to its female social members." Insisting on what grounds? What's the point of the word? Perhaps a more in-depth perspective and knowledge of the facts is of immediate and serious concern. So we must enter the main controversy of the matter. We must take action now to ensure that it doesn't happen. Here is what I propose: February, 1979. William M. (Marky) Roberts Representative, Bowdoin Club of Rhode Island RESOLUTION FROM THE BOWDOIN ALUMNI COUNCIL TO THE GOVERNING BOARDS: Whereas the Greek-letter fraternities at Bowdoin have been an integral and vital part of college life since 1941; and whereas these ancient and honorable institutions have of late come under unjustified and scurrilous attack from college pressure groups and individuals for their membership policies regarding female students, be it resolved that the Bowdoin Alumni Council be on record as vehemently opposing any such policy regarding membership prior to pledging, and the option was theirs: to join or not to join. Let me reiterate how strongly the Dean of Students feels on this issue from minutes of our October 1978 meeting: "The dean...
Bowdoin’s athletic goal: Exercise

by BILL STUART

Higher education faces difficult times in the near future. The baby boom is over, the cost of living is escalating, the government is increasingly regulating the activity of colleges, and capital expenditures are being delayed because of an unstable market, uncertainty over enrollment patterns, and increased utility costs.

Athletic programs are not immune from these other pressures that are making it increasingly difficult for colleges to stick to their long-held philosophies of education. The future of athletics here at Bowdoin shares in this uncertainty. In addition to monetary pressures and governmental regulation, the athletic department faces other potential barriers to hurdle: a physical plant that is becoming less satisfactory in some aspects, admissions decisions that will potentially affect the balance of intercollegiate athletics, and a conference affiliation that restricts gate receipts by limiting the number of games in which Bowdoin teams can compete each season.

Management praised

At the moment, as I look at the College," President Bill Enteman mentions, “athletics is not one of those areas of dominant problems to which I must focus most of my direct and immediate attention.”

This situation stems largely from a well-managed Athletic Department, according to Dean Paul Nyhus, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Athletics. “The budget has not increased (except for inflation) in several years, and yet we have added an entire range of programs for women.”

To bolster its offerings to accommodate women’s wishes, and an increase in cost, the department has undertaken a number of money-saving measures. "Mr. Coombs had managed well with the same resources that he had in 1967-70," Nyhus continues. “We have saved money by having the men travel in less luxurious style, by avoiding overnights whenever possible, by bringing box lunches on trips or by stopping at inexpensive fast-food chains rather than at fancy and expensive restaurants, and by trying more joint scheduling — scheduling two teams, like basketball and hockey, to play the same school on the same date — so that bus fares can be reduced.”

Athletic Director Ed Coombs is quick to mention, though, that his cost-cutting measures were not a result of the introduction of women’s programs. The cuts were made to eliminate waste and would have been made whether or not women’s programs had been initiated.

Sex blind effect

Admissions is another area that directly affects the future of intercollegiate athletics at Bowdoin. In January of last year, the Governing Boards approved a “sex-blind” admissions policy that instructs the Admissions Office to disregard sex as a criteria for admission. Previously, the College had almost the same percentage of each sex as the percentage of what sex that applied to the College as a whole, in most cases, 45% of the applicants were female, 55% of those admitted were female. The Class of 1982 was first class to be selected under this new policy.

Equal opportunity

The major point of controversy in the sex-blind policy is the “sex-blind” petformula. By this formula, HEO/HEW insists that merit-based admissions policies of all athletic teams, including those of Bowdoin, must be equal opportunity for all sex participants. By this formula, the College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Student Affairs, and the College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Advisors. The College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Administration.

A new policy

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare’s recent Title IX policy interpretation has already created a stir in athletic departments in colleges and universities across the country. If the policy remains as it is now written, it may soon drastically change the scope and direction of athletic programs across the country.

Equity measures

The major point of controversy in the new rule concerns the “sex-blind” admissions policy. By this formula, HEO/HEW insists that merit-based admissions policies of all athletic teams, including those of Bowdoin, must be equal opportunity for all sex participants. By this formula, the College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Student Affairs, and the College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Advisors. The College has hired an equal number of women and men in the Board of Administration.

Sargent Gymnasium and Curtis Pool have served the College well for over half a century.

Not only are women’s facilities and uniforms equal to men’s, but women’s teams have fared better than men’s in several sports.

Showers unequal

Sally Enteman, coach of the Women’s tennis team, offers a similar opinion to Coombs: “This is an area where women and men are not equal in the shower facilities at Pickard Field; the women’s showers are much better than the men’s! Ohio State, all we use the same fields and courts, we now have a training room, and the College has two trainers. We could use another coach in the women’s tennis program; we’ve had to steal Bay Bicknell from the men to coach women’s tennis.”

The last point illustrates the depth of Bowdoin’s commitment to women’s sports prior to the interpretation declared that schools must provide “equal opportunities” for women and men to accommodate their interests and abilities. At interest increased in women’s soccer, the result was the establishment of a women’s team in the fall of 1977. When some women became interested in hockey, they wanted to eliminate the men’s play and decided they would like to participate in the sport competitively also. Hockey was offered for women on a club level.

Important contribution

The women’s sports teams have performed well at Bowdoin. During its first season in 1977 (as a junior-varsity level team), the women’s soccer team compiled a 1-1-1 record, tops among Bowdoin sports that season. The field hockey team won the state title the same year. This year, women’s tennis sported the best winning percentage during the fall season, and the women’s basketball squad owns this season’s most enviable record so far at 8-1.

Thus, the College need not alter its philosophy or strategy drastically to comply with the new interpretation. Bowdoin is already, in the words of tennis and squash coach Ed Reid, “the paradigmatic example of the ideal program.”

NEWSCAG

Bowdoin’s membership in the New England Small College Athletic Conference (NEASCAC) was a source of controversy on campus last year, when a combination of NEASCAC statute and a Bowdoin decision denied the hockey and lacrosse teams the chance to compete in post-season competition. The situation was particularly regrettable in hockey, because Bowdoin won the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) Division III title and watched the team defeated in the ECAC Final, Merrimack, win the nation’s first Division III hockey championship by a 12-2 margin over Lake Forest (IL) College.

"Personally, I wish we had the "chance to go,"" admits hockey coach Sid Watson. "It was the chance of a lifetime. To be denied it was too tough on the kids playing."

In his book Sports In America, award-winning author James A. Michener points to NEASCAC as a perfect example of a conference to which others will look for guidance in the future. He notes that the Conference is making sound decisions that keep athletes in perspective with the member institutions’ commitment to academics.

These sentiments are shared by most of the administrators and faculty, and by the students themselves, according to Sidney Enteman. "I don’t think it would show a dramatic impact," the President notes. "I think that since the College is close to 50-50 in sex distribution already, sex-blind admissions will have only a marginal impact. The decrease in entering classes will be significant, but maintaining the same level of commitment to women’s athletics will continue."

Although not required to compete in the sport, every student was invited to swim before he could graduate from Bowdoin until recently.
Restraint and remain competitive

Dean Nyhus sees a growing interest among students in hiking, mountain climbing, and feels the College might want to move in this direction.

that Bowdoin evolved; it did not join it. I don't think any small college will be an athletic power. For the women's program, NESCAC is great. The women are allowed to play three seasons, because there is no overlap of seasons. This is important for today's female athlete, who has not specialized in athletics as much as a man has. There shouldn't be an overwhelming stress on the athletes, and there isn't with NESCAC. I will admit that it's a little bit better for the men, but the women do not have this problem the way the men do. Because we have state tournaments and invitations in most of our sports. I am definitely in favor of NESCAC.

Regarding the number of hockey games Bowdoin plays in comparison to a typical Ivy League schedule, Watson argues that a larger schedule (by and large) NESCAC's limit does not seem to bother the Ivy League schools. They seem to remain pretty good academically.

Ivy schools bothered

The athletic philosophy at the Ivy League schools does affect differentiate for a sense season concludes without NESCAC and schedule limitations, the player at Harvard, and to catch up to be limited.

Facility review

In terms of the available facilities at Bowdoin, students are very fortunate. Merrill Gym contains a basketball court and eleven squash courts, as well as modern locker room facilities. Sargent Gym has a fine second basketball court that is also used for wrestling. Curtin Field is more than adequate. The playing fields are numerous and of the highest quality. The outdoor track facility would be envied by a school much larger than Bowdoin. Dayton Arena is comparable to as built during the past ten years, in a fine hockey field. They offer these quality facilities which compare favorably with other colleges. Some students have seen the facility at Colby and have seen the blueprints for Bates' new addition to its athletic complex somehow feel short-changed.

This feeling stems mainly from the condition of the weight room not free for classes. The only real time available is during the morning. There are a lot of kids interested, and there are a lot of kids who don't see that's going on in the department.

The last problem puzzles Nyhus. For she claims that the offerings are well publicized. "Class descriptions are published in the student handbook. Lists are posted in the gym. Beginning of each semester, offerings are announced in the Bowdoin Thymes, and the athletic office has a complete list of offerings it will provide over the phone. But still, some students do not know what classes are being offered."

"I would like to see the vast, and I emphasize vast, major of Bowdoin students at some point in their undergraduate careers engage themselves in recreational activity." Enteman comments. "Our coaches are extraordinarily good people and their facilities. I would like to see the students actively involved in doing something with their lives and bodies while they are here and have the facilities. I am pleased that such a large proportion of the student body participates in intercollegiate athletics."

What assurance does the college take to involve a greater percentage of its students in organized physical activity and instruction?

No credit

"I don't believe in the old physical education activity education credit. Enteman emphasizes, "even though it did get all students involved in an activity. I am opposed to offering courses for credit. I don't believe in confusing academic credit with physical education credit. I believe that a liberal arts college you don't give credit for physical education, and I don't hear anyone advocate a plan which would include credit for physical education. If we offered a degree in physical education, perhaps the possibility would get more attention."

Nyhus adds, "There are a couple of areas toward which we can move. First, there is outdoor hiking, and mountaineering which seems to be a growing interest in that sort of activity. Second, there are sports like cross country skiing that are excellent sports for occasional participation or competition."

Although few students take advantage of class instruction, the coaches point out that Bowdoin's facilities are used as much as any other college's by students who work out on their own in such activities as basketball, jogging, and squash.

The future for the athletic program at Bowdoin appears to be bright. Sound management and membership in a conference that believes that joint restraint, and not lavish spending, is the most effective method of balancing competition, and a program that continues to attract talented scholar-sports people bright days ahead. Not all teams will win championships. Usually, but the program as a whole will remain competitive. After all, isn't a continuing competitive program the best type to further the development and growth of the student?"
Hijack victim relates tale

(Continued from Page 2)

hysteria. "The crew did a stellar job. They were just fantastic. They had us ready for it by the time we learned it was a hijacking."

She notes that much of her alarm during the last few hours was due to her having noticed that Mrs. McKinsey had been reading Suicide Cult, about the Jonestown massacre. She connected the two and was reluctantly contemplating that this was "Jim Jones" final game plan.

As for her opinion of air travel, Michal claims not to have lost faith in its safety. "The chances of being hijacked are a million to one." She adds, "I won't be afraid of doing much of anything for a while. I think that all of us on the plane feel somewhere, somewhere is looking out for us."

Mical has had many sleepless nights since her adventure. "I was really blitzed out," she says. The trauma has been hard to shake. She is still trying to get her mind back into the Bowdoin routine.

So you thought hijackings only happened to faraway people in faraway places? Well here she is, folks. Michal Ruder, one in a million.

Divestments discussed

(Continued from Page 1)

Overseers on the ten member group made up of pairs of Overseers, Trustees, Alumni Council representatives, faculty and students, said: "My problem with that is that it doesn't seem like a viable voice in corporate management."

Trobe said he does not foresee any "serious economic loss" if Bowdoin were to divest and reinvest its stocks "selectively and over a reasonable period of time," but he stated that shareholder pressure on companies as a more effective means of change.

Economics Professor Peter Gottschalk, faculty member of the group, and staunch advocate for divestment, said his answer to shareholder pressure is "to sell all but one stock. That way you can still go to the stockholder meetings to exert pressure...That one stock is a little immoral, but it's worth the effort," Gottschalk said.

Deidre Leber '81 asked the Committee if the Sullivan Principles were worth supporting given that "a company in the country has to obey the laws of that country." Sullivan guidelines include desegregation of facilities, skilled jobs for blacks, and other actions against South African laws.

Professor David Vail asked the Committee with an alternative plan for the problem in South Africa. Without saying whether he was for or against divestment, Vail said: "It seems to me that if you take a negative stand on Apartheid, you've got to take a positive stand with forces struggling for liberation in South Africa."

---

Women, power, and social change discussed

(Continued from Page 2)

break the spirit of nature; modern science is the technological rape of Mother Earth," stated Hynes. Female Aggression

Hynes' lecture was followed by heated discussion. One member of the audience made the following comment: "Why label destructive technologies male? There are nurturing males as well as female destructors."

The afternoon session of the symposium enjoyed a chance of tone with an inward look at the psychology of women. Jackie Zilbch-Fried, a Boston psychoanalyst, pointed to the handling of female aggressive tendencies as central to the issue of female power. Zilbch-Fried quoted from experiment results which showed that "nurturing," non-aggressive roles are encouraged in infant females.

This subordination of female aggression may cause problems for women in later life, stated the psychoanalyst. In her own professional experience, Zilbch-Fried has encountered powerful women who became frightened when faced with conflict situations.

Following her colleague Zilbch-Fried, psychoanalyst Malark Notman spoke on "Impediments to Career Development in Women."

Notman began on a light note by observing that all the portraits in Daggett Lounge are of men, except for one "cracked" primitive statue entitled "Mother and child." Notman made a connection with Hynes' earlier phallic theme by asking whether anyone had noticed the position of the Bowdoin polar bear on napkins used for the occasion.

Notman called for a re-examination of psychological theory concerning women saying, "If a woman can be seen in relation to what men have done she will not be seen as merely different, but as weaker." Notman believes that we must look at female development separately from that of the male. Notman linked some women's difficulties in "leadership effectiveness" to "discrepancies between current expectations for women and former ones." As Notman stated, "we know that relationships are more important for women than for men. This may be partly socialization, but the problem still exists. Women are very vulnerable to the opinion of others." Notman has found that this professional/private conflict may find ultimate expression in the mental breakdown of women faced with success.

The "Women, Power and Social Change" Symposium is part of semester-long series of events entitled "Struggle and Change." Jointly sponsored by the B.W.A., Anti-Am., S.U.C., the S.A.P.C., and the Government and Economic Department, the program will include a variety of films, lectures and theatre performances.

NOTICE TO BOWDOIN FACULTY:
The Red Cross asks that you go easy on homework this coming week so that you and your students can get a lot of sleep and be healthy for the Winter Blood Drive on Thursday, Feb. 19, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Moulton Union.

NOTICE TO BOWDOIN STUDENTS:
Show the above to your professors. Stay healthy and DONATE BLOOD next Thursday.

DOWNTOWN PLAZA
COIFFURES
278 Maine St., Brunswick 725-8853

not only takes pride in its Precision Cutting Lamp Cuts Permimg

Also:
Facials Ear Piercing Manicure Arching

Men
Women are all welcome

Kids

Good Fri.-Sat. 8:30-5:00
Walk-In Service

Guaranteed Airfare, Guaranteed Reservations—what's that you get from computerized telecabling, direct from all major airlines to Brunswick Tour & Travel.

Brunswick Tour & Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TELL 725-5587

Brunswick Tour & Travel

COIFFURES
278 Maine St., Brunswick 725-8853

DOWNTOWN PLAZA

takes pride in its

Precision Cutting Lamp Cuts Perming

Also:
Facials Ear Piercing Manicure Arching

Open Mon.-Sat. 8:30-5:00
Walk-In Service

Guaranteed Airfare, Guaranteed Reservations—what's that you get from computerized telecabling, direct from all major airlines to Brunswick Tour & Travel.

Brunswick Tour & Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TELL 725-5587

Hijack victim relates tale

(Continued from Page 2)

hysteria. "The crew did a stellar job. They were just fantastic. They had us ready for it by the time we learned it was a hijacking."

She notes that much of her alarm during the last few hours was due to her having noticed that Mrs. McKinsey had been reading Suicide Cult, about the Jonestown massacre. She connected the two and was reluctantly contemplating that this was "Jim Jones" final game plan.

As for her opinion of air travel, Michal claims not to have lost faith in its safety. "The chances of being hijacked are a million to one." She adds, "I won't be afraid of doing much of anything for a while. I think that all of us on the plane feel somewhere, somewhere is looking out for us."

Mical has had many sleepless nights since her adventure. "I was really blitzed out," she says. The trauma has been hard to shake. She is still trying to get her mind back into the Bowdoin routine.

So you thought hijackings only happened to faraway people in faraway places? Well here she is, folks. Michal Ruder, one in a million.

Divestments discussed

(Continued from Page 1)

Overseers on the ten member group made up of pairs of Overseers, Trustees, Alumni Council representatives, faculty and students, said: "My problem with that is that it doesn't seem like a viable voice in corporate management."

Trobe said he does not foresee any "serious economic loss" if Bowdoin were to divest and reinvest its stocks "selectively and over a reasonable period of time," but he stated that shareholder pressure on companies as a more effective means of change.

Economics Professor Peter Gottschalk, faculty member of the group, and staunch advocate for divestment, said his answer to shareholder pressure is "to sell all but one stock. That way you can still go to the stockholder meetings to exert pressure...That one stock is a little immoral, but it's worth the effort," Gottschalk said.

Deidre Leber '81 asked the Committee if the Sullivan Principles were worth supporting given that "a company in the country has to obey the laws of that country." Sullivan guidelines include desegregation of facilities, skilled jobs for blacks, and other actions against South African law.

Professor David Vail asked the Committee with an alternative plan for the problem in South Africa. Without saying whether he was for or against divestment, Vail said: "It seems to me that if you take a negative stand on Apartheid, you've got to take a positive stand with forces struggling for liberation in South Africa."

OLD BOOKS
Used books bought and sold
506 Maine St.
(Upstairs over Nickels)
Brunswick, Maine 04011
Tel. 725-4524
Mon-Sat. 9:30-5:30, Sun. 10-5:30,
CLOSED ON THURS. SUN.

"RAFFLE BERMUDA"
With the Jocks Class of '79!

Grand Prize — 6 Days in Bermuda
With Arrangements by Stowe Travel

Second Prize
Rossignol Ski
Competition Skis
(Packed value at $465)

Norica
Competition Boots
(vCourtesy of the Ski Stall

Third Prize
$50 in Cash!

Tickets available from Clint Hagan at Stowe Travel, The Ski Stall and the Bowdoin College Moulton Union Information desk. Steve Rose '79, class president; and Greg Kerr '79, vice president, illustrious and hardworking leaders of the junior class, are in charge of arrangements for the contest, proceeds of which will go to Senior Class Week activities before graduation. Raffle tickets are $1.00 each or a package of 6 for $5.00. Drawings will be made on February 28, so get your ticket now — Let's make this the biggest and most successful raffle ever!

Stowe Travel
9 Pleasant Street
Downtown Brunswick
"Serving Bowdoin College Faculty and Students since 1956"
Some fact and fiction about James Bond

by BOB PALPLOW

Bullet holes flash across a screen to the staccato pulse of an accompanying music... One hole enlarges to become the viewer's eye and travels across the entire screen. He draws his Walther PPK, spoon, and fires. To thousands of filmgoers the memory of excitement, female pulchritude, megastar and musical styles, and special effects that will occupy their thoughts for the next two hours. It means James Bond, the suave, hedonistic secret agent (with the 50's haircut that looks good even in the 70's) and his adventure.

Without a doubt, Commander Bond's story is one of the most successful series of films ever made. The ten movies have brought wealth and fame to producers Saltman and Broccoli and especially, Sean Connery, the epitome of the public's conception of Bond. The BMA Film Festival provides an opportunity to examine Bondian lore for two reasons. Bond at Bowdoin defines the film as an art form... The World, which has written a rotten job of editing the BMA's intent to "provide a forum for movies and the development of critical thinking and male achievement" (Orient, Jan. 29) seems fully realized in Bond's mako image. He gambles hard, lives dangerously, and is not above seducing women to obtain certain ends. Bond of the novels differs in many respects from Pinewood Studios' version of Ian Fleming's spy, 007 is not cultured in the books, and the movies embellish the tongue-in-cheek aspects running throughout Fleming's works. Apparently, Saltman and Broccoli did not want Bond to appear with physical defects, making him less than the "pinata of perfection." Thus, the characteristics right to the black comma of hair on the forehead are gone. Only the "rather cruel mouth" found in print remains leonine in Connery and Lazenby. Fleming himself would have preferred seeing Bond portrayed by the like of David Niven, Richard Burton, or James Mason. Ironically, David Niven actually did appear as James Bond — in the 007 spoop, Casino Royale.

James Bond does have a basis in fact. As William Stevenson chronicled in his book, A Man Called Intrepid, Fleming drew upon his involvement with British classified information during WW II for his creation. He attended a spy training school similar to S.P.E.C.T.R.E. Island, on view in From Russia With Love. The Bond story is a series of actual agents, experiences, and operations from Fleming's piecemeal intelligence. These adventures are summarized, of course, especially in the movies. However, it is not hard to locate in the present world organizations the like of S.P.E.C.T.R.E. (Special Executive for Counterintelligence, Torture, and Ritual Killing). SMERSH, an organ of the KGB whose duties derive from the meaning of its name (Spisni Smert — Death to Spies) was in actual existence, as of 1956. Bond also can be approached as being a minor social phenomenon.

In Diamonds Are Forever... He loves his work, but is the man the film procee at games and love?

DA. College talk policy

(Continued From Page 1)

Dean of Students Wendy P. S. P. Bond: "I'm not sure what our policy is on this... Orient that student thieves should escape punishment simply by returning the lost items. In an attempt to resolve the controversy, Peter Wechsler, College Counsel, Tom Libby, Associate Treasurer and Business Manager of the College, and Dean P. Bond met with J. M. E. J. on Wednesday. Explained Libby: "Two... the morning after the midterm, "We felt it important to sit down and clear the air."

"It was a good frank open discussion. Out of it comes a few questions we've got to resolve. One is the college's relationship with the community. We've also got to look at security's responsibilities. We just haven't gotten to the stage... Of course the administration... have all gotten caught up in some direction out of this whole thing..."

Dean P. Bond explained that "Collaborative decision with the local law... remains that we are obligated to report... . We are, however, concerned not to violate a student's right to privacy. A student who is asked to leave campus. We are, however, concerned not to violate a student's right to privacy. A student who is asked to leave campus..."

On the morning after the midterm, Tom Libby reiterated P. Bond's concern for student's privacy. "Some people thought that there was some kind of witch hunt going on but I'm sure that's not the case. There's been no... never been a conscious effort to snoop in student's rooms. If that has gone on, I don't know about it. I'd be appalled." Dionne Warwick says: "Get your blood into circulation."

Call Red Cross now for a blood donor appointment.

YOU'RE INVITED TO LONDON

A part of the British and American popular culture that has been given significant attention by the film industry is 007, the suave and sophisticated secret agent known as James Bond. The character of James Bond is one of the most popular and enduring figures in modern popular culture. His success can be attributed to a number of factors, including his popularity as a book character in Ian Fleming's espionage novels, his film adaptation in the 1960s, and his continued presence in the media through television shows, video games, and other forms of entertainment. Despite the many adaptations of the character, the core elements of the Bond persona remain constant: a skilled and stylish agent who operates outside the law to protect the world from various threats. The character's modernity, sophistication, and danger have made him a enduring symbol of style and cool in popular culture. However, the character also raises questions about the representation of power and authority, as well as the impact of popular culture on society. This project aims to examine the Bond character in depth and explore the ways in which he has been interpreted by different audiences and contexts. Through an analysis of various adaptations of the character, this project seeks to shed light on the ongoing relevance of the Bond persona as a cultural artifact and its implications for our understanding of popular culture.
Other names in the game

Mermen, maids continue to win
by JOHN SHAW

Coming off a decisive victory over Williams, the men’s swimming team defeated the University of Connecticut for the first time in ten years Saturday at Curtis Pool. “We had to have a few surprises come through for us,” reflects Coach Charlie Butti, citing freshman Leighton Philbrick’s second-place finish in the fifty-meter freestyle and Kirk Butchinson’s victory in the two-hundred meter butterfly as the sort of upsets needed. “The crucial victory, however, was Jeff Berry’s win in the two-hundred fifty meter freestyle,” Butti says.

Repeating their performance at Williams, the Polar Bears took the first two positions in the diving; Steve Santangelo finished first followed by freshman Chris Benninger. “They both demonstrated real pressure diving,” Butti exclaims. “If either Chris or Steve had blown one dive it could have made a big difference.”

“I was especially pleased with David Schuler’s performance. “Butti continues,” and Steve Rozek is coming along really well.” Schuler came in third in the one-thousand meter freestyle and Rozek led the relay team to a first-place finish in the medley.

Women Impress

Though badly defeated by the University of Maine-Orono, the women’s team pleased Butti with its performance a week Wednesday. In the course of the meet the women set seven college records. “Merrimack has the strongest women’s team in New England,” Butti notes, “and to swim that well against that kind of competition was remarkable.”

Last Saturday, the women faced Colby in what proved to be a mild workout. “They are just a club team,” Butti admits. “We swam well but took it easy on them.”

Women lose

Wednesday, the women dropped a meet at the University of New Hampshire also. The Bears were completely dominated by the Division I Wildcats. “It was not a very good meet,” reflects co-captain Julie Specter. “Nobody broke any records. We were pretty tired today.

Women b-ballers win and cancel
by BILL STUART

The women’s basketball team received a taste of both the usual and the unusual this past week. The usual was another victory, a 54-42 home triumph against Husson. The unusual was the cancellation of a game at Merrimack Wednesday.

“Merrimack’s coach called Colby the other day,” said Dick Mercureau, the team’s coach, “and asked that its game at Colby this Saturday be cancelled. She said they were down to six players and the motivation was down, and it wasn’t worth going all the way to Colby.”

“Colby’s coach called me and asked me if I had heard the story, and I said no. Apparently Merrimack didn’t want to go to Colby, but didn’t mind having us travel there. I thought it foolish to play a game against a team that was down to six players and had a motivation problem, especially under these circumstances. So, I called Merrimack and cancelled the game.”

“We have no desire to play Merrimack in the future. We’ll be looking for a new opponent in the greater Boston area.”

Not mentally ready

Saturday, the Bears looked sluggish in the first half, as they could manage only a 23-23 intermission lead against a less talented team. “Against a scrappy team like Husson, your timing is crucial,” Butti offers. “Merrimack’s coach explained, “You can inadvertently begin to play their game. In the first half, we were not as mentally ready as we had to be.”

The Polar Bears asserted themselves in the second half, though with good outside shooting from Carrie Niederman and tough performances underneath, Bowdoin ran off a 23-10 spell during the first 15 minutes of the second half to see the victory. Mary Kate Devaney paced Bowdoin’s scoring attack with 13 points. Niederman, Leslie White, and Debbie D’Ors each contributed eight points, while Nancy Brinkman scored six points and grabbed eleven rebounds.

Last Saturday, the men’s swimming team defeated the University of Connecticut for the first time in a decade. The women also did well this past week, though they lost to the University of Maine, “the strongest women’s team in New England.”

Mules comeback only to bear one-upmanship

(Continued from Page 12)

21 after the first, in the exchange Bowdoin lost Bobby Devaney to a knee injury.

In the second period, Bowdoin upped its lead to 4-1 with Howard getting his first varsity goal and Brown sticking in a loose puck on a power play. The Bears were short a man for nearly four straight but goalie Rob Menzie kept them in.

The battle continued in the third as Kevin Brown added another to the Bowdoin tally. The Mules fought back with two power play goals a minute apart making the score 5-3 P-Bears. The Mules did not stop there as they added still two more to even the score at five. Goalie Bob Menzie made his presence felt once again by kicking a Colby shot heading under the crossbar away from being the deciding goal. Regulation time ran out and the contest went into sudden death overtime.

The Mules could manage a mere one shot on net during the overtime period. The goal that clinched the Bears’ revenge came at 5:30 as a rebound off of a Howard shot was deflected in by an unwary Collins. When asked how he felt scoring the game-winner, Collins said, “Good; quite, unusual.”

Mall, Brunswick, Maine 04011

134 Maine St., Brunswick, Maine 04011

All Comers Mixed Doubles Tennis Tournament
Feb. 17 and 18

BRUNSWICK TENNIS AND RACQUETBALL
100 Harpswell Rd.
729-8433

CANTERBURY

Extra Special Value
Down Vests Filled with 80% Down 20% Feather
Zips, Snapfront
2 Way Pocket

Only $28.00

The Canterbury Shops
Cooks Corner. Mon.-Fri. 10-8:45, Sat. 10-5:30
Downtown, Mon.-Sat. 9-11:30
Use Your Canterbury Charge, Master Charge or VISA

McDuff's

90 Maine St.
Beverages — Snacks — Gifts
VISA and Master Charge Welcome

Apple Bakers ... Honey Pots ... Flowers in Glass ... Coffee Mugs ... Oil Lamps ... Stained Glass ... and More.
Unique things for unique people...

Apple Tree II, Tontine Mall, Brunswick
Monday-Saturday — 10-5

The BOWDOIN ORIENT
FRI, FEB. 9, 1979
Trackmen take on Lowell and Colby

(Continued from Page 12) jump to date, and narrowly missed his last before 89. Nonetheless, his jump of 6'6" establishes a new Bowdoin record. "My approach was terrible," mumbled the disconsolate Phi. "If my approach had been good I would have cleared 6'8".

The only other Polar Bear to finish higher than fourth was pole vaulter Scott Sampson who tied for second with two others at 13 feet. Sampson's best effort this season has been 13'6" which is good enough to qualify for the Easterns.

"We may not have the depth like before," commented Hoffman, "but we have a lot of guys that have qualified for the Easterns and several more who should qualify this weekend up at Colby. We also have seven men who have already met the required standards for the New England's."

Nonetheless, for mumbled vaulters finish would "My...". The varsity men's basketball team scored ten points in the final fifteen minutes of play in a narrow 64-61 loss to Colby at the Merrill Gymnasium on Wednesday. Clutch shooters Mark Kralian and Mike McCormick fouled out of the game in the final two minutes, crippling the Bears' offensive thrust in the home stretch.

With less than two minutes remaining in the game and Colby trailing by three, Gene Clerkin came off of the bench and hit a twenty-five foot jumper from the corner. Colby's McGee answered with two of his own. The ball was turned over several times without a score until Dave Powers tipped in a rebound off of an Eric Trenkmann jumper with one and a half minutes remaining.

At 1:23, Colby's Belanger turned the ball over midcourt. Trenkmann was fouled seconds later, missed a crucial one-and-one try and the Mules grabbed the rebound with one minute and two seconds remaining. Higgins committed a costly foul seconds later and the Colby foul shooter was able to convert one of his two tries increasing the Mule lead to two.

The ball changed hands but the totals stayed virtually the same as Bowdoin suffered its second defeat to the hands of Colby this year.

The first half of action was marked by deliberate execution and high percentage shooting. While bowdoin rose for Bay Ricknell, shuffling spectators towards Mike McCormick, Stu Hutchins, and Gene Clerkin, along with freshman ballhandler Eric Trenkmann, Colby concentrated on its inside game. Mule frontcourt men were kept at bay throughout the first half.

The lead alternated throughout the first three fourths of the game until Colby gained the upper hand behind the inside shooting of Mcgie. Both teams began running a tempo better suited to Colby's style. Bowdoin's passing became sluggish and the team's shooting percentage dropped drastically.

Coach Bicknell stated, "We didn't shoot well when we had the opportunity. After Kralian and McCormick fouled out, no one was anxious to take the shot." Bicknell also pointed out that each of the team's four leading scorers was approximately four points below his average.

The loss to Colby broke a five game winning streak for the hoostoppers. Before the Colby thriller, the Bears had defeated MIT, Gordon, Bates, Southern Maine, and St. Francis.

are CONTACT LENSES for you?
Dr. Roger L. Brigullin, Optometrist with an office adjacent to the Bowdoin campus offers Bowdoin students, faculty and campus a comprehensive eye examination and complete contact lens diagnostic fitting session for $25. You will have an opportunity to wear hard or soft lenses in my office and participate in an appraisal as to your potential to be a successful wearer. You are under no further obligations.

If we decide contact lenses are for you, additional fees are as follows:
Hard $175 Flexable $210 Soft $220
Office hours by appointment Tuesday, Thursday, Friday 9-5
Thursday evenings
309 Maine St., Brunswick Telephone 725-4650

THE BOWDOIN
STEAK HOUSE
FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 Maine st. Brunswick, Maine 725-8314
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

Fri., Feb. 16 & Sat., Feb. 18 Jim Peiffer

Prescriptions
Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.
- Cards & Gifts -
ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine Street Brunswick, Maine 04011
Telephone 725-4331

MIDSEASON SALE

Nordica Ski Boots 20-45% off
Rossignol SM
Was $230 now $184

All Rossignol Freestyle Skis 20% off
Yamaha EX $199
Yamaha Custom 20% off
Also selected Skis by Olin, K2,
Kastle on Sale
Men's & Women's Ski Cothes
up to 50% off

Ski Sweaters
up to 30% off
All Stretch Pants
30% off

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT PAGE ELEVEN

Streak ends for b-ballers

by HARRIS WEINER
and RICK ANICETQ
The varsity men's basketball team scored ten points in the final fifteen minutes of play in a narrow 64-61 loss to Colby at the Merrill Gymnasium on Wednesday. Clutch shooters Mark Kralian and Mike McCormick fouled out of the game in the final two minutes, crippling the Bears' offensive thrust in the home stretch.

With less than two minutes remaining in the game and Colby trailing by three, Gene Clerkin came off of the bench and hit a twenty-five foot jumper from the corner. Colby's McGee answered with two of his own. The ball was turned over several times without a score until Dave Powers tipped in a rebound off of an Eric Trenkmann jumper with one and a half minutes remaining.

At 1:23, Colby's Belanger turned the ball over midcourt. Trenkmann was fouled seconds later, missed a crucial one-and-one try and the Mules grabbed the rebound with one minute and two seconds remaining. Higgins committed a costly foul seconds later and the Colby foul shooter was able to convert one of his two tries increasing the Mule lead to two.

The ball changed hands but the totals stayed virtually the same as Bowdoin suffered its second defeat to the hands of Colby this year.

The first half of action was marked by deliberate execution and high percentage shooting. While bowdoin rose for Bay Ricknell, shuffling spectators towards Mike McCormick, Stu Hutchins, and Gene Clerkin, along with freshman ballhandler Eric Trenkmann, Colby concentrated on its inside game. Mule frontcourt men were kept at bay throughout the first half.

The lead alternated throughout the first three fourths of the game until Colby gained the upper hand behind the inside shooting of Mcgie. Both teams began running a tempo better suited to Colby's style. Bowdoin's passing became sluggish and the team's shooting percentage dropped drastically.

Coach Bicknell stated, "We didn't shoot well when we had the opportunity. After Kralian and McCormick fouled out, no one was anxious to take the shot." Bicknell also pointed out that each of the team's four leading scorers was approximately four points below his average.

The loss to Colby broke a five game winning streak for the hoostoppers. Before the Colby thriller, the Bears had defeated MIT, Gordon, Bates, Southern Maine, and St. Francis.
The "Rock 'n' Roll" goalie Rob Menzies makes yet another save against the frustrated Colby Mules. Orient/Stuart

Icemen edge Colby for third consecutive win

by DANNY MENZ

"It's kind of unusual for this season, but it feels good." That's what winning co-captain Dan McNeil had to say about defeating Tom Cross and the Bears last Tuesday, November 30. It was the third consecutive victory for the Icemen, the first against the Bears in 14 years.

The Bears took the road early last Friday morning. It took most of the first period for the Bears to come to life and beat the Icemen. On top of that, the tri-captains came on the road within four seconds of each other.

The Bears took the road early last Friday morning. It took most of the first period for the Bears to come to life and beat the Icemen. On top of that, the tri-captains came on the road within four seconds of each other.

The big Payback

Monday night was a different story. Bowdoin's icemen were looking to revenge their 7-5 defeat earlier this season to Colby. It was Steve McNeil breaking the ice with a goal followed by Corcoran who beat the goalie as well. Colby rebounded and added a score of its own to make the score 1-1 after the first period.

Once again, the Icemen scored first to open the third period scoring. Thirty seconds later, Marcellus picked up his second goal of the afternoon making the final score 2-1 in favor of the Bears.

The scoring for the game continued until the end as Bowdoin's Paul "Malicious Moe" Howard and a Williams player both got game misconducts one right behind the other.

Icemen Dominate

The next afternoon, the Bears took on Holy Cross in Worcester. Once again, the Bears opened the scoring for the Bears putting them in front 1-0 only thirty-five seconds into the first period. John Corcoran was next on the list of Bowdoin scorers making his contribution thirteen minutes into the first assisted by Mike Collins. Holy Cross answered back with a goal thirty-one seconds later but the Bears added a second goal in the first period concluded by Brian McNeil assisted by his brother Dave and Timmy McNamara.

In the second period, the Bears added three more to their score on goals from Rabiha, Mike Carmen, on a short handed effort, and Elliot.

The Crusaders bounced back in the final stanza with a quick goal but Corcoran put the icing on the cake as he banked the puck off the post and into the Crusader net ending the contest at 7-3.

Squashmenn stand at 2-7, gain experience for future

by BILL STUART

"It's going to take awhile," admits coach Ed Reid, "but they show promise for next season." These sentiments describe not only Wednesday's 9-0 loss to Tufts, but also the tough rebuilding year experienced by this year's men's squash team.

"We're just getting experience for next year," Reid continues. "Not many people are playing over their heads. We're going to go to Dartmouth Saturday to play Dartmouth and Stony Brook. The whole rest of the season is dim, dim. That's what I said at the beginning of the year, and it's about the same now."

"It looks like they'll have a good team next year," he notes optimistically. "We've got Curin Craven, Bobby Harwood, Hugh Wiley, Bobby Blanks, Paul Douglas, and Ron Carroll, and they're all coming up rapidly. They just began the game in the fall, so it's going to take a while, but they show promise for next year.

For the record, the defeat dropped the team's season mark to 2-7. The second victory was an 81-0 trouncing of Babson Saturday. Dunbar Lockwood, Bill Anderson, Bill Young, Tony Palmer, Wayne Brown, Ed Rice, Eric Stone, and Jamie Harper all won for the Bears.

The women experienced a 4-4 week, bringing their mark to 7-5. In two of the defeats, Karinez Tong posted the Bears' only victory.

The squad dropped a 5-3 decision to Tufts Wednesday.

The Polar Bears received victories in the third, fifth, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth matches, but these triumphs did not count in the final score. Bowdoin's two points were earned by Andy Todaro and Sandy Westman.

"I was pleased with Andy's performance," Reid said of his three-year captain. "She beat the number one girl down there."

"We'll play Exeter and then participate in the round-robin at Smith. We play Trinity, Smith, and Penn there. We should beat Smith. I don't have any idea how we're going to do against Penn. We might beat Penn."

Individuals excel

Track tops

by RAYMOND A. SWAN

Despite the loss of five key performers to graduation, Coach Sabatanski's indoor track team has run well this winter, compiling a 3-3-1 dual meet record.

The graduation of dashmen Rob Mathews and All-American Bill Strang, two milers Bruce Fremer and weightmen Steve "Train" McCabe and Dave Cable, has had an obvious effect on the team's performance.

"We don't have the depth like in past years," said captain Mark Hoffman '80, "but we've had some outstanding individual efforts in recent weeks."

Prior to Christmas break, the Polar Bears split two meets, thumping Tufts 99-36 and then dropping a 186-57 to the Bates Wildcats.

The Tufts meet was never in doubt as the Jumbos would win only two events. The star of the meet for Bowdoin was freshman Kwame Poku who won the long jump, triple jump, and the 40-yard dash. His long jump of 22 7/8" broke a record for Bowdoin freshmen that had stood for over forty years.

The next week Sabe and his men ran into a good Bates squad which was thirsting for revenge after last year's resounding 89-47 Bowdoin victory. The only individual victory came from senior Tom Capasse in the dash, junior Mark Fisher in the 440-yard, and freshman Scott Gerow in the high jump. The two mile relay team, consisting of Rich D'Auteuil, Mark Gregory, Mark Hoffman, and Greg Kerr, was also a winner, coming home with a time of 2:22.4.

Following a month long lay off, the tracksters were back in action in Waterville for the Colby Relays. Although there were many fine performances, only the sprint medley relay team came up with a first. The team of Capasse, freshman Dave Cross, and seniors Fisher and Hoffman completed the mile in 3:35.4.

The team got back to dual meet competition two weeks ago with an impressive win over MIT in Hyde Cage 91-44%. The win was even more satisfying, as the Polar Bears avenged a disappointing outcome the week at the hands of the Engineers last winter.

"Danna" Dan Spears was the big surprise in the weight events. The irrepressible sophomore topped seven people in the 35-pound weight throw with a toss of 50 3/4" which was good for second place. Sabe also placed third in the shot put behind promising freshman Brian Henderson, who took first.

Steve Gerow had an outstanding day as he won both the long and triple jumps and tied for third in the high jump. Gerow's triple jump of 63 1/4" was a personal best. Pierce continued to impress as he won the high jump, clearing 6'3".

Miller Doug Ingersoll and Tom Mitchell continued to do well as they finished first and second with identical times of 23.3. Ingersoll came back to take second in the two mile run.

Fine performances were also turned in the 45-yard high hurdles as junior Scott Paton and freshman Dave Emerson finished one-two to earn Bowdoin right valuable points.

The Bears easily dominated the 440, 600, and 800-yard runs. Shannoc Cook won the 440 in 53.7 while cooking for the final lap. Ken Collar won the 600 and 800 in 2:05.7, in second behind junior. Mike Connor, this year's spring captain, took the 800.

D'Auteuil in third. Hoffman and Gregory completed the Polar Bear dominance of the middle distances with a one-two finish in the 880. Last Saturday, the team traveled once again to Waterville to compete in the annual State Championship Relays. Despite numerous personal bests by the Polar Bear squad, it could only manage a third place finish behind favored University of Maine and Bates. The final score: Maine 71, Bates 50, Bowdoin 38, Colby 21v.

Mark Fisher turned in one of the most noteworthy performances of the day, winning the 400 in a time of 51.0 seconds. Not far behind was Cook in fourth, who ran his best in 51.4 seconds. The only other first for Bowdoin was Tom Capasse's victory in the 60-yard dash.

The Icemen and Hoffman turned in personal bests in their specialties. Connor's 1:14.1 in the 600 was good for seconds while Hoffman's 1:57.0 earned him a third in the 880. Fisher, Cook, Connor, and Hoffman later came back to run a 3:28.8 in the mile relay to finish second behind the University of Maine, the overall winners.

The two mile relay team of George, Jim Harnish, Kerr, and D'Auteuil made their final score in third in 8 minutes, 15 seconds.

Perhaps the best performance of the meet was delivered by Mark Preece's second place finish in the high jump. The lanky Preece, a 6-6 bear who takes off from across the border in Canada, cleared 6' 6", his best

Postgame Scripts

by GEOFF WORRELL

In its short history, the women's athletic program at Bowdoin has proved itself to be the most successful in the nation at Bowdoin. In just four years, women's basketball has amassed an impressive 43-19 record and the field hockey team captured a state championship last January. When one usually refers to a high-powered sports program, one is talking about a program that lives on victories through recruitment practices. As are the NCAA man-made rules, recruiting is not allowed. For the men's sports program at Bowdoin, this rule is more often than not, means weakness in their competitive ability at the NCAA level. The women's program is not only competitive at this level but victorious.

Perhaps the most outstanding quality of the women's athletic program at Bowdoin is the attitude towards competition. For far more prevalent in women's athletics than men's is the idea that competition at the varsity level is only a means to an end. As exemplified by their attitudes both on and off the field, women athletes at Bowdoin fret not over the catalog of their measuring stick. The most significant viewpoint is the rigors of the college workload, a place to have fun, that ingredient of athletics that is underplayed when winning becomes "the only thing."

Levesque's Line: Only a three-point loss to Colby in basketball Wednesday proved the Engineers not as tall as one believed. He feels he's hot, and this week's predictions indicate he believes the Bears are hot too. His bears the Icemen to outscore Trinity, but bow to Colby in basketball. He looks for an 8-1 triumph against Amherst for Sid Watson's Icemen. He says the Ice Bears will then continue their winning ways in upset fashion against Salem, 5-3.
Students’ views on frat sexism heard by alums

by NANCY ROBERTS

Fraternity sexism was the sole topic for discussion at an open session hosted last Friday by the Bowdoin Alumni Council’s Committee on Communications with the Student Body. The session was open to all interested students and was aimed at creating an open forum for students to express their concerns and share their ideas on the topic.

Students raised the issue of fraternity sexism, and dialogue ensued for over an hour on this issue alone as concerned alumni asked questions and offered opinions. Susan Jacobson, 71, chairwoman of the committee, noted that the Student Life Committee had recently issued a report to the Alumni Council stating its view that women be allowed full membership in all fraternities. The report advised that fraternities comply with this recommendation by spring of 1981 when the Student Life Committee will review the situation and perhaps extend the time limit in order to give fraternities more time to adapt.

Terry Roberts, ’80, then described the report andielding a question of which Zeta Psi developed by drawing up a new set of by-laws which separate local and national officers. According to Roberts, “The solution is acceptable to a great majority of Zetes, but the national is giving us the run-around.”

In regard to the national fraternities, Randy Dick, ’79, observed, “The importance of the national is a crucial aspect of the sexism problem which has not been explored thoroughly. Beta Theta Pi’s great number of national full members—they’ll drop us completely if they make a decision. We’re fighting not just the frat system at Bowdoin, but the national frat system.”

Alumni and students discuss the issue of fraternity sexism at an Open Meeting.

Monarchs strike again as execs examine responsibility

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

“I think that the students feel a certain disillusionment with student government. Period. When you consider that you have no power and you have no power in the structure of the school—what we’re doing is consolidating the power into one person’s hands. It is very possible for one person to conscientiously and very responsibly represent student opinion to the faculty.”

—Michael Tardiff ’79

The idea started at a BUS meeting, when some students noticed that there were issues that just weren’t discussed on campus. Says Cindy Neijbes of the Student Union Committee, “It will be a series of programs that will try to supplement the regular ‘Bowdoin education.’ We’ll stress that the political education at Bowdoin is lacking and we’re doing out part to fill that gap,” says Lisa Lord, BWA rep.

The Struggle, change in world are focus for new group

by PAMELA B. GRAY

In an effort to deal with common problems together with more force, the African-American Student Union (AASU), the Bowdoin Union of Students (BUS), and the Bowdoin Women’s Association (BWA) have announced the formation of the Struggle and Change Series Organization. The new group, whose purpose was explained at a press conference Tuesday, will attempt to focus on issues outside of Bowdoin that are of concern to the world but which are not covered by other organizations or the curriculum at Bowdoin.

“Struggle and Change” is a series of programs that will try to supplement the regular Bowdoin education. Says Cindy Neijbes of the BUS, “We can’t stress enough the importance of the idea of having different organizations working together and funding this series.”

Additional funds will come from a variety of sources, including the Gov, department and the Student Union Committee. “It will be a series of programs that will try to supplement the regular ‘Bowdoin education.’”

The only time major issues make an impact on this campus is when they are connected directly with Bowdoin; such as Bowdoin’s involvement in South Africa.”

President William F. Estesman announced today the appointment of Dr. Bernard Bernad, one of the world’s leading cultural anthropologists, as Visiting Professor of Anthropology on the Tallman Foundation at Bowdoin for the 1979-80 academic year.

Professor David R. Keppel, Arding Chair of Bodowin’s Department of Sociology and Anthropology, said Professor Bernad was one of the main forces in establishing cultural anthropology studies in Italy and is generally considered at the top of that field in Europe.

Dr. Bernardi, whose diversified background includes service as an academician and as an African missionary, will be the third Visiting Professor to come to Bodowin on the Tallman Foundation. Like his predecessors, he will teach undergraduates and deliver the traditional series of Tallman Lectures for students and the general public.

Internationally-known lecturer to be Tallman professor next year

President William F. Estesman announced today the appointment of Dr. Bernardi, one of the world’s leading cultural anthropologists, as Visiting Professor of Anthropology on the Tallman Foundation at Bowdoin for the 1979-80 academic year.

Professor David R. Keppel, Arding Chair of Bodowin’s Department of Sociology and Anthropology, said Professor Bernardi was one of the main forces in establishing cultural anthropology studies in Italy and is generally considered at the top of that field in Europe.

Dr. Bernardi, whose diversified background includes service as an academician and as an African missionary, will be the third Visiting Professor to come to Bodowin on the Tallman Foundation. Like his predecessors, he will teach undergraduates and deliver the traditional series of Tallman Lectures for students and the general public.

Born in Bologna, Italy, in 1916, Professor Bernardi earned doctorates in 1946 at the University of Rome, for a study of the African Kiwi Tribe; and in 1952 at the University of Cape Town, South Africa, in African Studies. A third doctorate was awarded by the University of London.

From 1953 to 1959 he served as a Catholic missionary working among the Meru in Kenya. Returning to academic life he was a full Professor of Ethnology at the Gregorian University of Rome from 1966 to 1971.

Dr. Bernardi joined the Cultural Anthropology and Political Sciences staff at the University of Bologna in 1970, and from 1973 to 1978 served as President of the University of Bologna, and was a 1977 guest of the British Academy at Cambridge University’s Department of Anthropology in England.

He has served three terms as a member of the Executive Council of the International African Institute in London. Professor Bernardi is an honorary member of the Italian-African Institute, was elected an Honorary Fellow of the Zoological Society of London, and was a 1977 guest of the British Academy at Cambridge University’s Department of Anthropology in England.
Voting

Eeny meeny miney mo, catch a by the toe.

That as a familiar children’s rhyme is reason enough to give a great deal of thought to next Tuesday’s referendum vote.

The issue of Bowdoin’s investments in racist South Africa deserves much more discussion than the hasty check mark. It deserves research, discussion and debate. Four options will appear on next week’s ballot:

a) to divest all college holdings in companies doing business in South Africa.

b) to divest all stock but one share in each company, in order to maintain a proxy voice at stockholder meetings.

c) to divest by joining with other colleges in pressuring companies to pull out of South Africa.

d) to leave all college investments as they are.

Weber’s choice, it should be an educated one. Read the material on reserve in the College library. Talk to the representatives on the South African Advisory Committee. Discuss the issue at dinner. Think about it.

At an Open Meeting last week the Advisory Committee listened to about a hundred students state their views. Now it is time they heard from the rest of us.

Lugubrious

Bowdoin students failed to take advantage of an opportunity to express their views to the Alumni Board last Friday when an open meeting to discuss student concerns turned into a discussion of fraternity sexism.

The sexism issue is a major point of contention on campus, but it is by no means the only issue. The South African situation and the future of Bowdoin’s investments in that country, tuition increases of a thousand dollars in the past two years, and the cancellation of the Senior Center seminars are illustrations of problems that should be brought to the attention of the Alumni Board. Several times during the meeting, the moderator asked the students if there were any other issues they wished to address, but the discussion did not stray from the sexism theme.

The Alumni Board is in a position to make recommendations that will attract the attention of the Governing Boards and the administration. By dealing with only one topic at a meeting designed to inform alumni of student concerns, students left the alumni with the impression that fraternity sexism is the only issue of concern at Bowdoin.

The alumni depend on student opinion to produce effective statements on campus issues. Their effect will be limited this time around, though, thanks in large part to student neglect of many key issues.

Congratulations

The recent formation of the Struggle and Change Social Action Committee went unrecognized by many, but this new group has laid elaborate plans for an interesting program of events this semester.

The group, which is a combined effort of the Bowdoin Union of Students, the Bowdoin Women’s Association and the Afro-American (with funding from several other organizations as well), is an example of what can be done when organizations decide to pool their energies, ideas, and funds. No one organization alone could have staged the entire series, but together these three groups can present a coherent series of films and lectures on current events of concern to the world.

We extend our best wishes to the new organization. If it can follow through on its plans, it will present a relevant, meaningful experience and demonstrate the importance and impact of cooperation among campus organizations.

Your own backyard

Anyone who has read closely enough to reach the editorial page has probably noticed that this paper has come under attack from almost every social action group on campus. Some charges are imaginative, others are just plain contrived. None hold water.

Consider the case:

It is said that because we are financed by students we are beholden to the whole community and that we have failed to cover pressing topics. The last charge can be categorically denied by realizing how closely we have covered the South African investment debate.

Concerning finances, while we try to be comprehensive, we are not strictly accountable simply because student activity fees partially fund the paper. Student activity fees which pay for part of the paper also pay for Athletic Department expenses, the Student Union Committee and other campus organizations, many of which make no pretense to represent general campus interest.

In terms of publicity, we are not a flyer. The promotion we do offer must be brought to our attention before the proposed event occurs. It is too obvious to say that we are not mindreaders.

Yet the greatest criticism we draw comes from the very groups who failed to publicize their activities beforehand and then accused the paper of not promoting the event afterward. This is truly ludicrous.

Finally, and most disturbing, silent belligerence has festered where open criticism should thrive. Inevitably their attitude will bring about the destruction not the amelioration of the goals we thoughtfully set out to achieve.

The Bowdoin Orient

Guest Column

Indians make their claims

by JIM ROUX ’81

Last Tuesday night the Bowdoin Women’s Association (BWA), Afro-American, and Bowdoin Union of Students (BUSB) presented the film, “So We Shall Stand and Fight,” documentary concerning the Passamaquoddy Indians of Eastern Coastal Maine.

The other week the Kreng Auditorium was packed with the entire series “Sovereignty.”

Mary Griffith of the American Friends Service Committee gave a short slide presentation before and after the film, about the effect of the presently pending Maine Indian claims settlement on the Passamaquoddy reservation.

The film itself consisted mainly of interviews with tribal members, including John Stevens, the tribal governor since 1963 who has almost single-handedly pursued the Passamaquoddy land claims since 1967.

The Passamaquoddy reservation, located in Pleasant Point and populated by nearly 500 Indians, suffers a staggering unemployment rate of 85 percent. Situated in Washington County, one of the lowest per capita income areas in the nation, the Passamaquoddy continue to live a deprived and struggling existence.

The reservations, which is marked with a 90 percent high school drop out rate, inadequate housing, a high infant mortality rate, has made slight gains since 1969 when the film was made, primarily due to Federal HUD grants.

The land claims case itself simply contends that lands were taken illegally from the Penobscot and Passamaquoddy in 1794. In 1970 Congress passed the Indian Trade and Non-Intercourse Act, which specifically states that no public or private land dealings may be made with the Indians unless they gain Congressional approval. Since then, the State of Maine and certain companies have slowly pilfered tribal land without attempting to gain Federal approval, which frequently violates the 1790 Act.

Griffith argued that the Federal government of “ignoring its trust responsibility with the Passamaquoddy.”

President Carter has most recently come up with a $37 million settlement. This gesture would enable the Passamaquoddy to establish a firm economic base and vastly improve their housing and education problems. It is important to realize, however, that the only viable industry in the Washington county area is lumbering and papermaking, endeavors the Indians could possibly be involved in if the paper conglomerates decide to sell land, an unlikely prospect.

Griffith continually pointed out that racism pervades the area. Tensions are tight between local whites and tribal members.

“What the Indians have to gain is the Federal money, and thus an economic base, but what they have to lose is a public good,” Griffith said.

A Federal settlement, unfortunately, would polarize the whites and Indians in the Washington county area.

Whether the State of Maine and the paper companies settle in court or out of court remains to be determined, but it is likely that the so-called and Passamaquoddy population, nearing 6,000, will come into a sizable chunk of Federal money for lands that have been illegally whittled away for centuries. A sense of tribal history is gradually being introduced into the school system, which should serve to resuscitate the Passamaquoddy with a rich and glorious heritage. The Maine Indians are an identity which the state can no longer afford to ignore.

The Bowdoin Orient

Member United Students Student Press Association

“The College reserves no control over the content of the student writings contained herein and neither, the Administration, nor the faculty assume any responsibility for the views expressed by the students.”

James Caviston

Robert Delmonte

Raymond A. Stone

Editor-in-Chief

Managing Editor

Executive Editor

Bill Stuart

American Editor

Holly Henke, Laura Hinrichsen

Nancy Roberts, Anne Marie Murphy

Editors

Journalism

Suffolk Editar

Photography Editor

Slip Knight

Circulation Manager

Business Manager

Advertising Manager

Bowdoin Publishing Company

James Caviston

Jared Steinbrueck

Rachel Files

The Bowdoin Orient (ISSN 0969-1287) is published weekly when classes are held by the Faculty and Student Body of the students of Bowdoin College. Address editorial communications to the Editor and business subscriptions to the Office of the Secretary, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me. 04011. The ORIENT reserves the right to return unsold articles and subscriptions. Second class postage paid at Brunswick, Me. 04011. Subscriptions $5.00 (6 weeks delivery).
Kelly sings and swivels

BFS brings best of Broadway to Bowdoin

by STEVE DUNSKY

Having survived the bleak and blue of the Sapphires' depiction of the South in the musical "Porgy and Bess," the Bowdoin Players have moved forward to the relaxed pace of the Bowdoin Film Society's weekend of feature films.

For many people, even those who do not favor musicals, Singin' in the Rain is an enjoyable spectacle. Because it is a satire of the Hollywood musical, the film turns to its advantage the problem of "stagnancy" that is often attributed to such films. But, with the display of physical abilities and comedic conventions in the legitimate theater, but through the camera's eye they often try the audience's ability to suspend disbelief (especially with the advent of synchronized wide-screen film). Singin' in the Rain succeeds because it accepts the conventions as such, and then allows Gene Kelly and Donald O'Connor to take the foreground and display their virtuosity. The visual innovations of the genre are of course further dismantled in the humorous satire of the Betty Comden-Adolph Green screenplay.

Singin' in the Rain is bracketed by two instructive examples of how these conventions have been manipulated in recent film film. Idaho ST, the archetypal 1930's musical. The cast includes Dick Powell in several roles and Swing and Dance-Man period. Ginger, Rogers, Warner Baxter, and, in her film debut, Baby Keeler. The "problem" of theatricality is neatly sidestepped by having the action in a Broadway theater and building the numbers around an actual stage performance. Although it is one of the most entertaining of this sort, one can not escape the conclusion that the white ventriloquist might be handled more suitably on or around the real forty-second street.

An American in Paris was Gene Kelly's first big success and it remains, which swears his biographers in the film. It won five Academy Awards in 1951, including best picture, cinematography, score, screenplay, and costume. It was this Union that gave Kelly a free reign on the Singin' in the Rain project the following year. In some respects, the film is a stereotyped musical and lyrics by George and Ira Gershwin are excellent; and the sheet music on which Oscar Levant, who not only was a close friend of the Gershwin's but also a virtuoso pianist of Bohemian music in the film, as well as a participant in the action in the form of Singin', and they work almost as well. In the scenes depicting Paris street life the conventions are clearly exposed. The audience readily accepts the stereotypically '40s scenes of Paris they (we quickly guess) never existed, and they would have a hard time if it is. The film fails, however, in the

LETTERS

Voted down

To the Editor,

This is to inform the Orient that the Alumni Council voted down the proposal sponsored by William M. Roberts '43, a representative from the Bowdoin Club of Rhode Island.

This action took place on Saturday, February 10, in the meeting at the Cram Alumni House.

The vote against adopting the resolution (printed in the Orient of Friday, February 9, on page 5) was nearly unanimous.

The Bowdoin Alumni Council, during its discussion of this matter, indicated a strong desire that this emotional issue be resolved in a responsible fashion. The Council indicates a lack of confidence in itself in an adversary position vis-a-vis the college.

The issue will no doubt be raised at the May 25 meeting of the Council on campus and it is certain that action is accountable for the situation of fraternities and women as it continues to develop in the months ahead.

Sincerely,

David F. Huntington Alumni Secretary and ALUMNIUS Editor

White males

To the Editor:

An independent weekly newspaper can present whatever bias it chooses as long as it has a constituency which will subscribe and pay for its production. But the Orient is funded through student activity fees which are collected for its production more than its own particular bias. Your coverage better betrays your own right-wing bias than does interpret campus events.

If there was not enough happenings on campus, your choice of journalists would be understandable. But we believe that those events are not being unreported and we would like that to change. It is significant to note that James R. Stahl, who previewed in this semester's first real and given full coverage in a series of legiti-improve the quality of Bowdoin living.

Andrew Bernstein '77

Unpalatable

To the Editor:

For the sake of consistency, supporters of immediate and unequivocal divestment of College holdings in U.S. corporations which have operations in South Africa should likewise suggest that the U.S. government withhold its heavy financial support to the state of Israel. Israel is one of South Africa's most important and amiable trading partners, and South Africa is Israel's sole supporter on the African continent. Since the October war, Israel has been absent from or voted against aid for South Africa. Let me say, I am not anti-Semitic and I honor the apartheid constructs existing in South Africa; but I find the inconsistencies and hypocrisies of the current issue of divestment unpalatable.

Innumerable examples of similar situations can be found which deserve equal scrutiny on moral grounds. In fact, many of the everyday products each of us can be either directly or indirectly linked to companies doing business in South Africa. What about other U.S. corporations in different parts of the world which have operations in countries with substandard human rights regimes? Should not Bowdoin's investment portfolio be cleansed of them too?

And while we're at it, why not set up a permanent review board to scrutinize all of the College's investment which may be linked to inhumane, immoral or unethical practices?

Of course this would verge on the absurd. But the point is that there must be a limit to the application of moral considerations in the College's investment policy — and it must be applied in a consistent way. It is good and right that we be concerned about in-human rights in South Africa and that Bowdoin, as a responsible institution should act in the responsible manner. However, it

(Continued on Page 6)
Board role re-examined in response to regal requests of that learning. I’ve always believed in a willingness to change. Things tend to get stuck at times.

(Continued from Page 1)

In response to one Board member’s reservations about the “seriousness” of intent of the aspiring monarchists, Michael Tardiff ’79 replied, “I can say I’m as serious as Peter is. The problems that the Board has had in finding leadership — and I point to four different chairpeople in the last four years — and what some people identify as a lack of seriousness. We’ve found it very difficult to believe that you’re serious. We find it difficult to find a reason for you to be taking this on your resumes. The students feel a certain disillusionment with student government because of your fascination with rules and ‘perfect’ systems that produce perfect results.”

After entertaining close to thirty minutes of arguments from pro- and con-monarchy spokesmen, the Exec rejected the petition for the referendum by a 10-1 margin. The debate had not quoted Tardiff, however, because of the vote, Steinbruck commented, “Whether or not you’re for or against the constitutional monarchy, there do seem to be some problems...I think that some relevant questions are raised in this process here...I’m not sure that the complaints I’ve heard around campus have been solved.”

Another half-hour of rapid interchange ensued. Sophomore Board member Jim Aronoff claimed that, “Until people realize the limits and abilities of student government, the problems of student government will still remain.”

John Frumer, ’79, attempting to defend student limits and abilities, explained, “Most people on this campus are relatively responsible, responsible enough so that they look out for themselves, their friends, and their specific interests.”

“I don’t think the Board has any jurisdiction over the things that are really wrong with this campus. Maybe there should be a realization that all the Board can do is review citizens.”

“...What people are trying to do is solve some problems with the Board. People on the Board should not take it on the defensive and so quickly turn down any type of alternative. If it were passed by the students then you would know how the students feel. But it can be passed like this.”

Later in the meeting, the Board decided to open the question of the function of student government on campus to the college community in the form of an open forum meeting, to be held later this month.

With Chairwoman Amy Homann, ’81 casting her tie-breaking vote, the Board also passed a slim 6-4 margin to present to the Investments Committee at their upcoming meeting both a majority and minority report on divestment of South African financial ties. They also will seek campus-wide input on the issue when they present a referendum on the issue next Tuesday. Students may vote where they receive their mail (polar or both). The Union and the Senior Center.

In other business, several Board members are now working on a set of guidelines and suggestions to be presented to the Administration concerning College policy on Security’s functions and responsibilities. They acted in response to the recent controversy surrounding Security’s seizure of a student-possessed contraband.

Infant women’s hockey program gains respect but not victories

by NANCY ROBERTS

When is a 3-1 defeat cause for celebration? When the vanquished is the fledgling Bowdoin women’s hockey team and the victor is the well-established and well-heeled Colby squad. The February 1st game with the Mules proved to be an auspicious beginning for the female P-Bees as it marked their first inter-collegiate contest.

“We surprised everyone,” says Mary McMenamy, ’79, who even complimented Jeff on the team.” Coach Jeff Johnson, ’79, was pleased with the team’s performance, but pointed out that the veteran Colby squad was playing without its top three players. However, Colby presented a formidable challenge for the Bees as their high-powered women’s hockey program has been in existence for about five years and is extremely well-financed. Says Johnson, “In what I understand, they even have some semi scholarships for female hockey players.”

Bowdoin got off to a good start by scoring the first goal of the game at the end of the second period. Claire Haffey, ’82, one of the three experienced freshmen on the team, believes it was a goal which the Bees’ only goal against the Mules.

“They played really well against Colby,” said Johnson. “We came back and smiled for three days.” In regard to Bowdoin’s two subsequent games, Johnson commented, “The games against Harvard (6-1) and Boston College (11-1) were much closer than the score indicated. They didn’t outplay us by that vast a margin.”

Defense is the weak spot of the P-Bees squad which proved to be a detriment in the game against a Harvard team which dominated the Harvard and B.C. games. We’re having the same problem that the most hockey team was having earlier in the season - we’re not putting the puck in the net or getting rebounds. We’re having trouble keeping someone in front of the net.”

Last Friday’s contest with B.C., the team’s first home game, attracted a large and enthusiastic crowd of spectators. The Dayton Arena audience was pleasantly surprised as the Bowdoin team fared well against a B.C. team which boasts six years of playing experience. “A lot of people who came to see the B.C. game were surprised. We weren’t blown away - we skated with them pretty well,” said Johnson. Bowdoin’s only goal was scored by Haffey at the beginning of the third period with an assist from Eve Cornge, ’82.

Goalies Sarah Gates ’79 and Persis Tordhike ’80 expertly defended their territory and drew intermittent applause from an appreciative crowd. Said Claire Haffey, “The goalies did a fantastic job - they haven’t had much experience in stopping slapshots before.”

A conspicuous lack of checking was noted by several spectators at the Dayton Arena. The reason for this is that checking is illegal and constitutes a minor penalty in women’s hockey. Players are allowed to “brush off” or edge an opponent off a play but no open ice body checking is allowed. All other rules are the same as in men’s hockey.

The Polar Bears’ upcoming schedule includes a game at Andover today, and Johnson hopes to arrange contests with both Middlebury and Dartmouth before the women stop playing during the first or second week of March. Transportation is a problem for the team, as they must utilize private cars and pick in for gas and tolls. Club status would alleviate this hardship and may be in the offering for next year if the team is able to garner enough support and enthusiasm from the upcoming freshman class. “It all depends on how many girls want to play again and how many freshmen come up. There is a problem with funding but we’ll probably become an established club next year,” predicts Johnson.

"They’re doing superbly for the amount of participation and practice they’ve had,” says ice women Coach Jeff Johnson ’79. (Orient/Stuart)

Prescriptions
Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.
- Cards and Gifts -

ALLEN’S DRUG STORE
148 Maine Street
Brunswick, Maine 04011
Telephone 725-4321

run to our door for savings up to 25%
Save up to 25% on all winter merchandise, see all the new spring and summer items, come in for our door prizes.

"Sporting Goods for All Seasons"
"Herbie" Ross Brown

Gentleman editor discusses work and memories

by ANGELA BARBANO

Students venturing into the upper reaches of Hubbard Hall have mistaken him for the custodian for years. Herbert Ross Brown is not the actual custodian, but rather the former managing editor of The New England Quarterly. Often, the students see him as a familiar face, and they may think, "Is he really the custodian?"

Brown is an American scholar and former editor of The New England Quarterly. He holds a degree in American Studies and has written extensively on the history of American literature.

Brown's work is highly regarded, and he has been acknowledged for his contributions to the field of American Studies. He is known for his in-depth analysis of literary works and his ability to engage with readers on a personal level.

In this article, Brown reflects on his time as editor and shares insights into the world of academic publishing. He discusses the challenges of managing a publication and the importance of maintaining a commitment to quality.

Brown also touches on his own personal journey, sharing stories from his life and the lessons he has learned along the way.

Overall, this article provides a fascinating glimpse into the world of an academic editor and the impact he has had on the field of American Studies.

---

The Bowdoin Orient
(Continued from Page 3) is callow to assume that divestment and withdrawal is the simple answer. What will it achieve? NOTHING — except an erasing of guilt by association. Apartheid will not just go away. The hated pass laws and other acts which serve to legally maintain their racist system of apartheid will continue to be effective.

On principle if nothing else, apparel must end or ultimately American corporations must withdraw. The central question before us though, is how can Bowdoin College be most effective? What part can we take in ameliorating the situation? Certainly it will not be through ivory tower moralizing which tends to be more symbolic than anything, and ignores the practical considerations.

Sincerely,
Peter Steinbreuck ’79

Imperative

Fellow Bowdoin students: I write in full support of the position taken by Professor Shipman, in last week’s Orient, calling for Bowdoin to divest of all stockholdings in companies with branches in South Africa.

Last Thursday evening an open meeting was held with Bowdoin’s South Africa Advisory Committee to the President. The majority of Bowdoin students who spoke at the meeting strongly support divestment as the only alternative.

It is imperative at this point that we, as student members of the Bowdoin community, unite in strong support of a statement calling for divestment. To reiterate the issuance of the Committee on Thursday’s open meeting:

First, the Apartheid regime in South Africa exerts an institutionalized form of racist discrimination and oppression against the black population of that country. The facts are indisputable. The moral argument is clear.

Second, several major U.S. corporations, including IBM and Ford Motor Company, maintain branches in South Africa. Through their economic involvement these corporations support the South African Apartheid government. It is evident through their continued investment in South Africa that the primary concern of these corporations is economic growth, rather than human freedom. Internal reforms to improve the working conditions of black employees of these firms have a miniscule effect on the conditions of the black people, but U.S. firms employ only about 1% of the overall black population. Apartheid remains.

Were these corporations to pull out of South Africa entirely, the resultant economic, political, and moral pressures would probably be substantial enough to destabilize the Apartheid regime and bring positive change. Subsequent to a corporate withdrawal, the U.S. must join other nations to continue to protest and lobby against the apartheid policies of South Africa and exert strong pressure for a liberating change of government. Clearly, the U.S. corporations must pull out of South Africa.

Now, what is Bowdoin’s role and how can we effect the withdrawal of U.S. corporations? Bowdoin maintains a $9 million investment in South Africa. Twenty-seven percent of Bowdoin’s total investment portfolio and close to forty percent of our common stockholdings are invested in U.S. corporations with branches in South Africa. Frankly, Bowdoin’s continued investment in these companies represents indirect economic support of the Apartheid regime.

Based on these facts, how can Bowdoin influence the withdrawal of U.S. firms? We have two alternatives. One, Bowdoin can use its stockholder vote and pressure management to pull out of South Africa. As Mr. Shipman and others have stressed, it is highly unlikely that Bowdoin can effectively pressure for withdrawal. Our present holdings are so small that even if we joined other educational institutions to push for withdrawal, it is improbable we could gather enough votes to bring change.

The second alternative Bowdoin has is to divest of all stockholdings in companies with branches in South Africa. Through divestment Bowdoin would join the U. of Wisconsin, Vassar, and several other small colleges in assuming a leadership role in the growing movement to reexamine and change investment policies toward South Africa. Through divestment, Bowdoin would join other educational institutions committed to similar ideals of individual freedom and free thought. We would exert strong political, economic, and moral pressure on U.S. corporations, the U.S. government, and South Africa.

These pressures would present U.S. corporations with a direct charge to get out of South Africa. Consequently, Bowdoin would continue to lobby and pressure for positive and liberating change against the Apartheid government. Economically, the costs to Bowdoin of divestment are miniscule. According to Ray Tribb, a member of the President’s Advisory Committee, Bowdoin would experience "no serious economic loss." Morally, Bowdoin has no choice but to oppose the South African Apartheid system through divestment.

I am convinced that divestment is the only realistic and ethical alternative open to Bowdoin College if we hope to effect positive change in South Africa. It is time that we, as a liberal arts community dedicated to the ideals of human freedom, dignity, and equality, reevaluate our ideals in practice. As students, it is our moral obligation to be aware of the investment practices of the college, especially with respect to South Africa. We must unite in urging Bowdoin to reexamine and change its economic investments in a racist and oppressive Apartheid regime. We must take a firm stand for divestment.

Hopefully submitted,
Carol A. Belanger ’79
Time trials don't hinder mermaid post-season play

(Continued from Page 6) More than 50 seniors made the cut before post-season competition begins.

Varsity Women's Swimming has also excelled this year sending nine swimmers to the New England at Springfield which started yesterday and continue through tomorrow. For women's swimming, this is the first year that qualifying times were a pre-requisite for participation in this meet.

"We're expecting a better team finish than last year," added Rudy. This improvement rests partly on the shoulders of freshman Anna King who swims breaststroke, s p o t s h o m e S a r a h Nadebohler an all-American last year and Sarah Beard who swims the butterfly and freestyle events respectively, and senior Mary Wardlaw who swims backstroke.

Ball bounces every which way but in as hoopsters drop three

by MARK HOSEBEIN

The reactions to the weekend's games from both Coach Bicknell and the players were ones of disappointment and letdown. The combination of a tough loss against Trinity in overtime and the competition that a "well executed, deliberate" Wesleyan team brought the Bantams two defeats. Friday by one in overtime and by 17 in a 74-57 contest on the following day. The losses were attributed to a slump in which, up till now, has been a good season. Coach Bicknell spoke of the games with some bitterness. "I don't know what there is to say about that kind of series," said Bicknell. "We were humiliated in both games and we shouldn't have been. Trinity was good, but we still should have beaten them. It was one of those games where the score bounces from one team to the next - we get one, they get one, back and forth." The feeling of being pretty well paired with Trinity was reflected in the score, which was 63 apiece at the sound of the regulation buzzer. Bicknell described the overtime sequence.

"They had taken a quick lead when we got a couple of fouls and a three point play. It looked like we had a comeback. It came down to a final set of foul shots that would have tied the game and, with no time left, only one was hit. Things like that shouldn't have happened."

The players expressed the same feelings of regret and confusion. Co-captain Ted Higgins mentioned the low points. "We had some big letdowns. A couple of weak slips in defense and we were down by four or six, putting unneeded pressure on the catch up effort. Those things don't help; it showed our weaknesses." Mark Brizilian, the other Co-captain, was able to keep the game within reach by sinking one on one regulation buzzer, but even he felt that that kind of play shouldn't have been necessary: "We should have just won Friday. The team was down."

The loss cannot be blamed on any one factor, but on a series of deficiencies that hurt the team's play in what should have been a victory. Coming into Saturday's game after the letdown didn't help the team's psyche against Wesleyan. Disappointment and delay of the game caused by Wesleyan's late arrival diminished the team's potential for performance. As Bicknell said "If we had any edge it was gone by the time we got on the floor." The Bear's 57 points against Wesleyan's 74 was not caused by an intentional tactic; it was a breakdown of the defense; a breakdown of, in Bicknell's words, "the hardest working defense in the country." Of course the team didn't agree; all agreed the team again was not coming together. Guard Mike McCormack said "we just didn't execute all that we could have. Early on, we fell back by eight or ten points, and from then on, it just was effort; it was a situation that became too difficult for us."

Skip Knight had the same feelings about the game. "Our rebounding was poor, the defense against the shooting was nonexisting. We were up against a well-disciplined, well-playing team that required us to play outside of our game plan and we just couldn't. Again, indicating a lapse in the season Knight comments, "We're coming off of playing some really good basketball recently."

The Colby game was key, and that loss just hit us. Those last two games, especially the big loss on Saturday, were symbols of what kind of period we're going through - slow and down." When asked whether it would pick up, he believed strongly that there would be a reversal in the trend saying, "We'll definitely have to pick up and finish with good energy. This weekend's road trip needs to be a turning point." On Friday the Colby team will make the 3 and a half hour trip to Norwich Academy and Middlebury, the latter of which is currently putting the upcoming games in perspective. "Norwich should be a chance for us to get in a good win. The Middlebury game is the one that will count most and the final Colby game are the two remaining big contests, but if we can play like we've played a couple times this season, we can have them."

All others agreed, but the test will come tonight against Norwich and in the bid for a real victory in the Middlebury contest tomorrow.

DOWNTOWN PLAZA COIFFURES takes pride in its
Precision Cutting
Lamp Cuts
Perming
Men
Women are all welcome
Kids

"SPECIAL BERMUDA PRIZE"
For You and "One" Other!
Grand Prize — 6 Days in Bermuda
With Arrangements by Stowe Travel

Second Prize
Rossignol SM Competition Skis
(Packaged value at $465)

Notica
Competition Boots
Courtesy of the Ski Stal

Third Prize
$50 in Cash!
Tickets available from Clint Hagan at Stowe Travel, The Ski Stal and the Bowdoin College Moulton Union information desk. Steve Ross '79, senior class president; and Greg Kerr '79, vice president, are in charge of arrangements for the raffle, proceeds of which will go to Senior Class Week activities being planned for the seniors. The raffle tickets are $1.00 each or a package of 6 for $5.00. Drawings will be made on February 28, so get your ticket now.

For Information and flight reservations, home and elsewhere, call us at 725-5573 or stop by our offices at 9 Pleasant St. We'll make your travel planning fun and enjoyable!

Stowe Travel
Tel. 725-5573
9 Pleasant Street
Downtown Brunswick
"Serving Bowdoin College Faculty and Students since 1950"

20% off 22 Lincoln Restaurant
20% off MIDSUMMER SPECIAL
Bring this Coupon in for a 20% discount on any dinner.
Good any Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday Evening thru March 13.
Dine In or Take-Out. Monday thru Saturday 5:30-11:00 p.m.
LUNCH: Monday through Saturday 11:30-2:00

20% off MIDSUMMER SPECIAL
Nordica Ski Boots
20-45% off
Rossignol SM
Was $230 now $184

All Rossignol Freestyle Skis 20% off
Yamaha EX $199
Yamaha Paramount Custom 20% off
Also selected Skis by Olin, K2, Kastle on Sale
Men's & Women's Ski Cothes
up to 50% off

Mid Season sale

All圆形 Picture Book Sale

50% Extraordinary off COVER PRICE

COOKBOOKS: HOW TO COOK OUTDOORS, MYSTERIES - SELF HELP, SPORTS - GAMES & HOBBIES, LEISURE TIME FICTION

Maine Books & Music
110 Main St., Brunswick (207) 725-5101

"The Tontine Mall"
Downtown Brunswick's
725-4400
Open Daily 9:30-9

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT PAGE SEVEN Norwich tonight

Iceman take five straight

by DANNY MENZ

"Some people say we're better than them. I don't know. I haven't seen them play this year," said Coach Sid Watson's comments on Salem State prior to Wednesday night's game in Dayton Arena. Those people know what they were talking about, as Bowdoin beat second place Salem State 7-5 in one of the most exciting games of the Salem scored first, and subsequently upped its lead to 3-1, but the Polar Bears came back with four straight goals to take a 5-3 lead in the third period. The game ended as Bowdoin exchanged a pair of goals, and ended in a flurry with extra shots, four penalties.

The big guns for the Bears were Bobby Devaney and Mark Pletts, each scoring two goals in the contest. Devaney put two beautiful shots past the Salem goalie, and Pletts, in a couple of one on one situations. His first comments after the final buzzer were "I don't know how I missed that last one," in reference to a shot that would have given him the hat trick.

When asked about skating with his brother, he replied, "I like it. Dave and I skated together for two years in high school and we know how each other plays. Timmy Mac and I have also been skating together since the first day of practice so we're used to each other. And Andy is tough." Mac was cited in his first game since being injured at Northeastern on January 22.

Also skating for the first time in a month was defenceman Bill McNamara, arriving on the scene at the right moment as another defenceman Mark Rabior is currently nursing an ankle injury. In addition forward Dave Boucher is still out of action due to a leg injury sustained in last weekend's game against Co-captain Bob Mestres, who had 20 saves against Salem left the game. Boucher was doing well right now, but not having Bouch or Rabior is going to hurt.

The outlook from here? "As long as we keep winning, they'll have to look at us," Coach Watson replied.

"When questioned as to the possibility of another number one seed, Coach Devaney said, "In Salem, we can beat Maine, they'll the ECAC have to do some thinking."

In last Saturday's Winners weekend game against their only Western Maine, Bowdoin won handily, 10-3.

The Bears take their five game win streak on the road this weekend, first against Vermont in games against Norwich. Friday at 6:30 and Middlebury at 9:00.

Bob Devaney rushes past Salem's Steve Goddard to score on a breakaway. The goal gave the Bears a lead they never relinquished. (Orient/Stuart)

'Elite of sports world' travel for their post-season meets

by GEOFF WORRELL

"This is the elite of the Bowdoin athletic world," commented Varsity Track Coach Frank Sabasteanski on the individual sports in general and track in particular. Post-season competition is here and both the Track and Swimming programs are sending plethora of players to the meets.

Men's Track under the tutelage of Sabasteanski has qualified eighteen runners for the Eastern Maine Championships which are taking place today at Tefft. "They all have the potential to score," said Sabasteanski. He added, "The guy with the best chance is D'Auteuil."

Freshman Richard D'Auteuil is ranked second among the runners competing in the 1,000 meter run. Others with outstanding qualifying performances are junior Dave Seward, who took fifth in the 600 meter run, Kwame Poku, who ranked third in the long jump, and Shannon Cook, who ranked fourth among the qualifiers for the 880. "We didn't have as many quality this year," offers Track Captain Mark Hoffman who is ranked fourth among the qualifiers for the 880. "I think we'll do well," he added. "Fifth place would be outstanding considering we're the smallest college there."

Bowdoin will be one of twenty five schools competing in the Easterns.

Heavyweight Dave Seward helped Bowdoin's wrestling team get back on its feet. (Orient/Stuart)

Women's track is also sending a sizeable traveling squad to post-season competition. "We have some problems now, but we have the full-time coach," remarked sophomore runner

State and Palladian.

The other star of the game was the "Blue Line" iso-called because of their practice jerseys, centered by Steve McNeil with brother Timmy, Mac, and Andy Minich alternating at the two wing positions. In the last two games they have been on the ice for seven of Bowdoin's goals and none for the opponents. How come this line has been doing so well?

"We know each other's moves," said Steve McNeil. "We're breaking out of the zone well and our passing is starting to click."

When asked about skating with his brother, he replied, "I like it. Dave and I skated together for two years in high school and we know how each other plays. Timmy Mac and I have also been skating together since the first day of practice so we're used to each other. And Andy is tough." Mac was cited in his first game since being injured at Northeastern on January 22.

Also skating for the first time in a month was defenceman Bill McNamara, arriving on the scene at the right moment as another defenceman Mark Rabior is currently nursing an ankle injury. In addition forward Dave Boucher is still out of action due to a leg injury sustained in last weekend's game against Co-captain Bob Mestres, who had 20 saves against Salem left the game. Boucher was doing well right now, but not having Bouch or Rabior is going to hurt.

The outlook from here? "As long as we keep winning, they'll have to look at us," Coach Watson replied.

"When questioned as to the possibility of another number one seed, Coach Devaney said, "In Salem, we can beat Maine, they'll the ECAC have to do some thinking."

In last Saturday's Winners weekend game against their only Western Maine, Bowdoin won handily, 10-3.

The Bears take their five game win streak on the road this weekend, first against Vermont in games against Norwich. Friday at 6:30 and Middlebury at 9:00.

Bob Devaney rushes past Salem's Steve Goddard to score on a breakaway. The goal gave the Bears a lead they never relinquished. (Orient/Stuart)

'Elite of sports world' travel for their post-season meets

by GEOFF WORRELL

"This is the elite of the Bowdoin athletic world," commented Varsity Track Coach Frank Sabasteanski on the individual sports in general and track in particular. Post-season competition is here and both the Track and Swimming programs are sending plethora of players to the meets.

Men's Track under the tutelage of Sabasteanski has qualified eighteen runners for the Eastern Maine Championships which are taking place today at Tefft. "They all have the potential to score," said Sabasteanski. He added, "The guy with the best chance is D'Auteuil."

Freshman Richard D'Auteuil is ranked second among the runners competing in the 1,000 meter run. Others with outstanding qualifying performances are junior Dave Seward, who took fifth in the 600 meter run, Kwame Poku, who ranked third in the long jump, and Shannon Cook, who ranked fourth among the qualifiers for the 880. "We didn't have as many quality this year," offers Track Captain Mark Hoffman who is ranked fourth among the qualifiers for the 880. "I think we'll do well," he added. "Fifth place would be outstanding considering we're the smallest college there."

Bowdoin will be one of twenty five schools competing in the Easterns.

Women's track is also sending a sizeable traveling squad to post-season competition. "We have some problems now, but we have the full-time coach," remarked sophomore runner

Heavyweight Dave Seward helped Bowdoin's wrestling team get back on its feet. (Orient/Stuart)

The men's swimming team qualified their entire team for the New England Championships which take place at Springield beginning on the first of March and runs through the third. The swimmers are looking forward to qualifying for the Nationals.

"Most people qualify for the Nationals in the New England," said Bob Pellegrino. Men's swimming has already qualified three members of their team. Fresmen Kirk Hutchison qualified for the Nationals in the butterfly event and freshman Chris Benson and senior Steve St. Angelo will be representing the divers. "We should qualify at least six more," offered Pellegrino. The team has two

(Continued on Page 7)
The lack of adequate ventilation facilities in Cleveland Hall labs poses a threat to students. Orient/Shen

Chem laboratory conditions cause for health complaints

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

Ed Sorenson estimates that the organic chemistry lab is 100 by 30 by 10 feet. According to Sorenson, who is lab instructor for the organic chemistry class, three ventilation hoods draw approximately 200 cubic feet of air per minute out of the room. That means it takes almost three hours to completely circulate the air in the lab. Consider the fact that twenty young chemists in the lab every day may have gases streaming from their experiments for most of a three or four-hour session, and it becomes evident there is a ventilation problem. "The effectiveness of the hoods is almost negligible," Sorenson said.

Dave Barbour, Physical Plant Manager, made a study of Cleveland Hall, where the chemistry labs are located, about a month ago. He agrees that ventilation in the hall is a problem. "In the summer you can open the windows, but in winter it's hell."

Neither man believes the situation constitutes a serious health problem for students, but the knowledge that gases not drawn out of the lab properly may be hazardous. Sorenson cites the case of one lab assistant who was mixing reagents when he was overcome by the fumes of a chemical which had not been disposed of correctly. If the ventilation had been working properly, the man would not have passed out.

In addition, Sorenson points out the chemical storeroom as an example of poor ventilation, including a section where "cancer suspect agents" are kept. After a long period in the storeroom, Sorenson said he often feels "pretty down," and said it is uncommon for him to get headaches.

A number of students also have reported headaches in the lab sessions. One girl tells of an incident during an experiment which involved the liberation of acid gases. "Someone dropped a piece of neutral paper pH paper on the floor, and before the end of the lab period, the paper had turned the color indicating the highest level of acidity," she said. "No one did anything to it. It turned color just from the air."

According to Sorenson, twenty to thirty volatile chemicals are kept in the storeroom.

Am says 'no' to whites voting plans forum to begin dialogue

by JAMES CAVISTON

Members of the Afro-American Society voted against white membership at its Thursday night meeting. The motion was defeated by a voice vote of 10 to 1. Sorenson, Chairman of the Afri-Am, issued the following statement:

"The Afro-American Society, after discussion at great length, has decided not to allow membership - which is defined by a vote in the Afro-American Society. That is a vote to allow a vote by whites, nix a vote for participation."

We immediately proceeded to determine ways to greatly enhance participation by non-blacks in the society.

Henderson explained the sentiment behind the vote. "For the whites to have a vote in the Center would mean for them to understand our culture, which we feel may not be true." According to Sorenson, the motion to accept white-voting members was defeated by a "large majority."

"Several members threatened to resign if any whites could join," Adds Henderson.

It's a self-defeating property that this kind of integration is never going to work."

When asked why the meeting was closed to white members of the College, Henderson replied, "because the institution that was making the decision was an all-black institution. To suddenly change the people who were making the decision at that time to have a different institution would be making the decision."

The Afro-Am has planned for an open forum to discuss the outcome of the vote and the reason for the closed meeting. The date for such a forum is, as yet, unknown.

The Afro-Am decided last night to deny non-blacks voting rights, but hopes whites will participate in meetings.

'83 applications in; selection begins

by DIANE MAYER

Friday, April 13 may be an unlucky day for most of the 3131 Bowdoin applicants, as that is the mailing day for Bowdoin acceptances. Thirteeners could be a nervous bunch, but open only to slim 13% of the regular decision applicants expected to attend next fall, the Afro-Am decided last night to deny non-blacks voting rights, but hopes whites will participate in meetings.

Friday, April 13 may be an unlucky day for most of the 3131 Bowdoin applicants, as that is the mailing day for Bowdoin acceptances. Thirteeners could be a nervous bunch, but open only to slim 13% of the regular decision applicants expected to attend next fall. The Afro-Am decided last night to deny non-blacks voting rights, but hopes whites will participate in meetings.

The Afro-Am decided last night to deny non-blacks voting rights, but hopes whites will participate in meetings.

'83 applications in; selection begins

by DIANE MAYER

Friday, April 13 may be an unlucky day for most of the 3131 Bowdoin applicants, as that is the mailing day for Bowdoin acceptances. Thirteeners could be a nervous bunch, but open only to slim 13% of the regular decision applicants expected to attend next fall. The Afro-Am decided last night to deny non-blacks voting rights, but hopes whites will participate in meetings.
Italian lecturer analyzes future of Socialist party

by PAMELA B. GRAY

The Italian Socialist party — its history, policies and future — was discussed Monday evening by Gianfranco Pasquino, in a talk entitled "Third Force and Third Way: The Role of the Italian Socialist Party". Mr. Pasquino is a professor of political science at the University of Bologna, Italy, and a visiting fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, D.C.

The smallest socialist party in southern Europe, the Italian Socialist party represents about one point-six percent of the country's electorate. It is in a frontier party, wedged between the Christian Democrats and the strong Communist party, explains Pasquino. He cites the reasons for the weakness of the party in the '70s as being three main splits in the party since 1945, internal fragmentation of the party (as compared to the "Central Democratic principles" which the Communists rely on for cohesion), and an internal problem (because the Christian Democrats and the Communist party members' identification with ideas instead of with the party, there is a disintegration of organizational potential.

"After 1975 the tide turned towards the left, due to some policies of the Christian Democrats who were never really in power," states Pasquino. However, the Socialist party as a declared socialist party was decided to revamp the party, and younger blood was introduced. In addition the party produced an overall program, the Socialist project. The support of Socialist intellectuals was sought to enlarge

M & G offers sample of modern drama

by TOM KEEVEL

The Masque and Glove one-act presentation of last February 2nd and 3rd was with characters and extremes. The material and style of these productions emerged, being too complex, too simplistic, or too mundane, and the actors seem to decide whether the purpose of theater was to represent reality, or sketch the complexities out of life. The three one-act were "Vine and the Wilderness," by Alice Childress, "The Lesson," by Eugene Ionesco, and "Bea, Frank, Rich, and Joan," by Renée Taylor and John Bologna. Each of the productions were for the most part not only handled by all involved although it should be noted that Len Lage, the most cohesive and effective of the three,

"Vine and the Wilderness," directed by Vivian Siegel '81, and Ken Harvey '80, was presented as a part of Black Culture week and dealt with an artist's representation of the ideal Black women in the group were to discuss the theme of a ghetto during a riot. The production was good, however, the theme was made so obvious as to almost insult the audience. Some of the dialogue seemed more a result of the script rather than the action. Technically the set failed to make the visual statement that it could have and the overall style of the production took on a distinctly conservative slant which didn't help give the production the life that it otherwise might have had.

Notable performances were given by Karen Mills '82, in the role of Tommy, who lived through the riots in the warmth and conviction needed for her role, and Greg Jones '81, in the role of the oldtimer, who created the recognizably ghetto character of the desperate but hot and funny man who stumbles upon other peoples' simple lives.

"Bea, Frank, Rich, and Joan," directed by Melinda Aumaitre '78, was a sit-com involving a "family problem" in which the Mother and Father try to reconcile the marriage of the son and daughter-in-law. The production intentionally assumed a highly stylized simplicity in both action and characterization, and while this technique was first engaging, rendering some very humorous moments through some excellent timing on the part of the actors, humor based on superficial outlines never lasts for very long, and the play succeeded in becoming a main point of discussion. It should be noted, however, that the ending rendered a wonderful moment of reawakened acquaintance in which the Mother and Father take solace in their superficial outlook on life, giving at least for a moment, some meaning to what had otherwise been, meaningless theatrical experience.

The final play, "The Lesson," directed by Eileen Lambert '81, and Greg Stone '82, was an excellent example of Frank de Masi's style of the-absurd for it wove together set, costumes, action, and lighting into a very cohesive expression. On the surface "The Lesson" dealt with a professor who habitually kills his pupils out of frustration in their inability to learn. To go any deeper than the surface is like the play's statement. "Psychology leads to pathology," for play weaves a web of such complexity that it becomes impossible to decipher what the play is actually about. Through its complexity, an emotional tension is created and despite the nonsensical jargon, one's interest in the action remained more or less intact.

The entire cast was superb. Mark Coffin '81, as the professor, gave a high degree of credibility to what was a very difficult role, as did Cam Reynolds '82, in the role of the pupil.

BERG sponsors three-week symposium on energy use

by BETH STANLEY-BROWN

A three-week symposium, sponsored by the Bowdoin Energy Research Group (B.E.R.G), concerning the uses of energy, is scheduled to begin February 27. It will cover a gamut of topics including films and discussions centering around the pros and cons of nuclear power, solar housing, and the government's position on nuclear power. Eminent speakers like Peter Bradford of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission will be present to lead discussions.

B.E.R.G. is a relatively new organization on the Bowdoin campus. Presently, a limited few are addressing energy problems, but they hope the symposium will encourage more to become involved.

Junior Todd Buchanan was the first to seriously confront the issue of energy conservation last semester. His strong concern prompted him to host meetings in the hopes of informing and involving the Bowdoin community. At first, the response to Buchanan's get-togethers was strong. Unfortunately, by the end of the semester, the number interested had dwindled down to three — Deidre Leber '81, Tina Burbank '80, and James MacLean '81.

The foursome's motivation held firm, however, regardless of their size. They drafted a charter to become a campus organization and presented it to the Executive Board. Although it denied the group consent to execute their own charter, the Executive Board suggested integrating their ideas into the year-old, late-organization, B.E.R.G. The group accepted the suggestion and are presently trying to restore life back into B.E.R.G. with the symposium.

The main emphasis of B.E.R.G. is going to be on education, on "activating the student body and making them more aware," stated Deidre Leber. "I know there are people around here concerned about it," she continued. The problem then that plagues the new B.E.R.G. is not a lack of concern, but the unwillingness of many students to commit themselves.

"We're not trying to promote 'no water,'" assured Tina Burbank. They are trying to provide proof that the energy problem effects everyone and will continue to in the future, though. The group said many are not concerned with waste and consumption yet because they do not have to foot the bill.

But some members of the B.E.R.G. are concerned with the uses and abuses of energy, aside from the members of the future, though. The group said many are not concerned with waste and consumption yet because they do not have to foot the bill.

Although it has been described by Physics professor William Hughes as "scientifically very uninteresting," Monday's solar eclipse will be the last total eclipse of the sun visible in North America until 2071. The total eclipse will be viewed in the Northwest around Portland (OR), Helena, and Winnipeg; in Brussinwick, we will observe a 61% eclipse just before 12:30 p.m.

Because the moon's passing between the sun and the earth is in heavy concentrations of sunlight emitted from the other side of the planet, which is not eclipsed, it is important that one not look at the sun during the eclipse. Exposure to the highly intense rays may cause permanent damage in the eye.
Goodbye to Kennebec Fruit Co., town tradition to change hands

by MATT HOWE

Gone are the days when a trip to the market was a favorite family occasion and a significant social interaction. To most, shopping has become a chore. We choose what we want and then purchase it in a relatively impersonal exchange. Nevertheless, in a trip to the Kennebec Fruit Company on Maine Street, there is still a chance to leave a store with a little more than the goods in your bag.

The friendly atmosphere, full of local color, makes it the kind of place one does not want to get to even though shopping elsewhere is more convenient. Joseph Fiori, the owner and manager, has a neighborly rapport with many of his customers.

"How you doin', Joe?"

"Oh, not bad. Can't squawk. Boy it's been cold, though, huh?"

"Uh, it's been a cold, Joe."

Exotic displays of pipes, cigars, and tobacco cans much of the store. Assortments of gadgets are to be found everywhere, plus beer, wine, newspapers, magazines, candy, watches, wallets, canned foods, coffee, and the like.

Unfortunately, the store as we know it is due for a change in the near future. Mr. Fiori and his sister-in-law have plans to sell out and retire. "Old age is creeping up on us," he explains. "Yes, that is the reason, the only thing. We've had good business right along. We'd just like to enjoy the few years we've got left."

In 1985, Mr. Fiori's father opened the store and it has been run by the family ever since. He recollects, "back then it was mostly fruit and candy. Used to make our own peanuts and our own chips. Yup, that was a long time ago." He says of his business, "anything people want we try to get it for them. Sometimes people want what we don't get and we try to get it for them."

"What you got for a jankkef?" asks a customer. "I want a small one."

"I've got a jankkef," he replies, "but it's a big one."

Brunswick will miss Joseph Fiori behind the counter at the Kennebec Fruit Company, and although he cannot be replaced, one hopes the store maintains its flavor. Fiori and his wife have worked for many years. He says, and then adds sternly, "Whoever buys the place, they'll have to work seven long days a week. If they don't do that, they won't be in business for long."

SUC presents mini concert and night club featuring jazz

by KEVIN McCABE

After what appeared to be a very successful Winter's Weekend, the Student Union Committee is proud to announce yet another round of events. The first takes place on Friday. In a return appearance to Bowdoin, flute and guitar players Burton and Tapper will play a mini-concert in Daggett lounge at 9:00 PM. This pair has played before in Papa Goo's coffeehouse. entertaining a packed house for hours, with original material as well as material played by other artists, such as Steely Dan and James Taylor, uniquely arranged. The big event of the weekend takes place on Saturday. Following in the tradition of Catch A Rising Star, a night club will be set up in the Senior Center dining room, for a night of Jazz. The feature artist is a ranking group out of New York: Robert Kraft and the Ivory Coast (in piano keys, not the Country) Orchestra. The band has recently played a successful stay at the Bartram Line as well as other dates at Tramps and Mikella. Playing a unique style of music reminiscent of the 30's and 40's, the group promises to hold the audiences interest with a diverse collection of original numbers. In fact Kraft's prolific songwriting ability combined with the talent of the Ivory Coast has won them a spot in the Kool Jazz festival.

Sharing the bill with Kraft and Ivory Coast will be Ina May Wool. An opening act for such a diverse collection of performers as Janis Ian, Blood, Sweat & Tears and Martin Mull, Ina has been compared to such well known as Maria Muldaur and Emmylou Harris. Ina Mayher played almost every New England club of any merit and sings almost any style of music superbly.

Opening the act will be a Jazz Quarter featuring two talented musicians. With Harold Wingood playing the flute, Derek MacSlewy on the keyboard, Tony Robinson on stand up bass and Peter Maduro on the drums, the group will play mostly intem teaser with a few guest vocalists.

The club itself will have seating for 450 people and a set-up bar selling mixers for $2.50 each. We will also have a two-coin slot machine with Bowdoin-I.D. of course at the Senior Center Desk and the Union Desk anytime after 1:00 PM Friday, bring your own bottle, and lastly, proper attire please.

The Kennebec Fruit Company store has been a Brunswick landmark since 1885.
THE ORIENT
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1979

Gasp

Take a stroll through Clevelend Hall any weekday afternoon and one can see a flurry in the laboratories. Beg-goggled students hang anxiously over steamy experiments, cautiously titrate bases into acids, and mix flashes of colored chemicals. It is ironic to think these students pay upward of $7,000 for the privilege of learning chemistry techniques at Bowdoin College, yet the same school does not provide proper ventilation for their comfort and safety in the laboratories.

According to faculty in the know, the lack of correct ventilation will be somewhat alleviated this summer, and does not represent a serious health hazard. But students report headaches in the lab sessions. They have seen (and smelled) evidence that lab conditions need attention. Faculty and administrators admit as much.

A proposal to build an underground connector between Hubbard Hall and Hawthorne-Lowell Library was shot down last year. The demise of the Senior Center programs liberated additional funds. If extra money is floating around the campus, why isn’t it being used to modernize present school facilities? It has been said that chemists live fewer years than members of other professions because of constant exposure to gases; why should the Bowdoin Experience needlessly contribute to that statistic?

Deja Vu

There was a strange, unpleasant atmosphere in the Senior Center student lounge Wednesday night. While the CBS six o’clock news devoted half of the show to the now week-long acts of military aggression between China and Vietnam a silent, pensive group sat and watched. There were no women or undergraduates watching the broadcast. Only senior males.

It is said that there is little prospect of the draft returning even if the United States did get involved again in Indochina. So we’re safe. But the present situation serves as a bitter reminder that our complacency towards the affairs of the world can only last so long before we are rudely awakened to the responsibilities we have so far chosen to ignore.

Let’s talk

The recent decision made by the Afro-Am to deny white students membership in the society brings to mind the ambivalence of the integration policy and the ambiguity of race relations at the College.

If the purpose of the society is to integrate its members with the community and to educate those outside of a particular culture then a benevolent society would open the doors, not close them. The reason why the Am cannot act benevolently is not hard to understand. Consider the plight of a handful of minority students who come into and confront a new, baffling environment of upper-middle class whites. The need for a collective identity is unquestionable.

At present, the goal of integration and the need for identity are clashing at the Am. Old attitudes which should have been chucked still remain. Thus, the blacks do not communicate. Sadly enough, even if they did, most whites would not listen.

The situation here is not good. The blacks have taken up an unhealthy siege mentality. They face a breed of young whites who have embraced reactionary conservatism.

The first act of reciprocation has been made by the Afro-Am. The upcoming forum will offer the opportunity for blacks and whites to talk. It will not be a pretty situation if the anger that made a private meeting necessary still fosters. But such a meeting offers the chance for the Am and the community to reconcile their differences, or at least to reveal their misunderstandings, something which up until now has virtually been nonexistent.

No way

To the editor:

Apartheid – the system of racist domination and exploitation and neo-slavery in South Africa – is most likely the greatest moral issue facing humanity today.

The question of investments in South Africa has been before the international community for nearly two decades. (July 1958 – JUNE 1979 – TWENTY YEARS!) In 1968, the oppressed people of South Africa and their non-governmental organizations launched a boycott campaign in South Africa and appealed for a world-wide divestment of public and private African goods to show solidarity with them in their struggle against a brutal oppressor. It was in this same year (1968) that the great leader of New Africans, Ojayoyo Kwanke Nkhumla, called upon the African and United Nations to impose economic sanctions against the apartheid regime. Yes, that was twenty years ago.

Western powers and Japan are profiting from apartheid. In spite of all the cries and the pain, the bitterness and the struggles of the Africans, these big powers have failed to maintain profitable and immoral intercourse with the apartheid regime and to build up the monster of racism.

So, where does Bowdoin come in, you might ask. Simple. Bowdoin is one of many American “institutions of higher learning,” which support the apartheid regime in South Africa by holding millions of dollars in corporations with links directly or indirectly – that money goes into supporting the economic system in South Africa. What is wrong with that? Well, it’s very simple. If you give money, as people do put money to the South African government – whether it be a nickel or a billion, what is wrong with that? Well, the system that you are supporting is a system designed to exploit the African to the maximum. The system you are supporting is a system that has taken away the lives of hundreds of Africans. This very system has taken men away from their families. That system has tortured hundreds of Africans. This system has jailed Africans without trial. This system has denied the African freedom of speech and freedom of movement. In short, this system has denied the African freedom to live. Why are we denying them absolute freedom??

Most of us here at Bowdoin are rather sympathetic to the terrible truth about the South African situation. We are going to support the students who have chosen to pursue “the people in charge” to pursue their demand for divestment. Our gang will meet with less opposition.

Such a movement is clearly a moral one. Let’s not even think of partial divestment. Partial divestment is not any better than zero divestment. Why? Because there is no such thing as partial morality. Those of us in the Bowdoin community can go through four years of college, get a Bowdoin degree, and be the good, educated, young leaders of tomorrow. We don’t have to cheat ourselves. That combination will never work. Never.

Ell O. Akabu

Sink or swim

To the Editor:

The recent political upheaval in Iran resulting in the formation of a new government has furnished many of us with spectacular news stories, as well as with some pointed examples of the kind of political conflict which our theoretical studies have made us aware of. As we are concerned with political events in other countries, it is pertinent to discuss whether the events in Iran will affect American foreign policy.

What is happening in Iran today seems to be more akin to a revolution in Iran simply because Iran has a long history of revolution, while America has no such history. As a result, such a development in Iran is more likely to affect American foreign policy than if it were to occur in a country like Italy.

The events in Iran are a reflection of the fact that the United States has been taking a more active role in the Middle East, particularly with regard to Iran. As a result, the United States is more likely to be affected by events in Iran than if they were to occur in a country like Italy, where the United States has not been as active in its foreign policy.

It is clear that the United States is taking a more active role in the Middle East, particularly with regard to Iran. As a result, the United States is more likely to be affected by events in Iran than if they were to occur in a country like Italy, where the United States has not been as active in its foreign policy.

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
Member United States Student Press Association
"The College exercises no control over the content of the student writings contained herein and neither is the administration, nor the faculty assume any responsibility for the views expressed herein.

James Caviston
Editor-in-Chief
Robert DeSILVA
Managing Editor
Raymond A. Swan
Executive Editor
Holly Honke, Laura Hillschak
Bill Stark
American Editor
Natasha Barnes, Anne Marie Murphy
Football Editor
Geoff Worrall
Spokes Editor
Curtis L. Carr
Photography Editor
Jed Lauer, Niall Drohan
Red Chip Editor
Skip Wright
Creative Manager
John Canning
Advertising Manager
Bowdoin Publishing Company
James Caviston
President
Robert DeSILVA
Editor-in-Chief
Robert DeSILVA
Managing Editor
Raymond A. Swan
Executive Editor
Holly Honke, Laura Hillschak
Bill Stark
American Editor
Natasha Barnes, Anne Marie Murphy
Football Editor
Geoff Worrall
Spokes Editor
Curtis L. Carr
Photography Editor
Jed Lauer, Niall Drohan
Red Chip Editor
Skip Wright
Creative Manager
John Canning
Advertising Manager
Bowdoin Publishing Company
Mmmmm
Masticators munch merrily on munificent meal
by RAYMOND A. SWAN and ROBERT DESIMONE

"We're full, but happy," reads one entry in the guestbook of the Pot Luck, located in the Bowdoin Center. Another suggestion that the food is "excellent ... superb." But the most honest and sweetest comment of them all simply quips: "Fatigue!"

These reviews should come as no surprise to Richard and Ann Mosley, who together opened up their quaint, family-style restaurant almost three years ago. With Richard's precolleged culinary philosophy — "Don't go away hungry" — it's no wonder that the Pot Luck is a place to come back to again and again.

And the probability of going away hungry, one may safely assume, is close to nil. On Wednesdays, the evening is smorgasbord, if that word aptly describes the delightful array of soups, vegetables, salads, meats which await even the most discriminating palate. The menu includes such crowd-pleasers as turkey, stuffing, mashed potatoes, casseroles, breads, spare ribs, and macaroni caserole.

The name of the restaurant — Pot Luck — probably serves as the best indication of its menu. "It all depends on what he feels like cooking," explains Linda Foster, who has worked at the restaurant two out of the last three years. For example, she remarks, "We have a great vegetarian following. We also try to keep at least one entree on hand." The menu, indeed, would satisfy the most infatuated trencherman.

Pot Luck is housed in a large, converted barn and the interior decoration reflects the building's rustic past. The dominant feature in the dining room is the eleven-foot-wide dutch oven brick fireplace. The warm emanating from the fire and the fresh rolls stored in the oven prove comforting after coming in from a cold, rainy evening. In fact, the entire decor of Pot Luck exudes a certain warmth and friendliness with its dark brown pane glassing and cushioned farm tools scattered about the walls.

"A lot of people just gave themselves to us," says Linda. "The others we found upstairs when we were cleaning up the place."

In addition to the tools, which include axes, spades, and horse paraphernalia, two large wagon wheels hang from the roof at the entrance to the restaurant. These, along with the low-beamed ceilings, combine to form an atmostphere which can be described as comfortable and comfortable.

Usually a diner can only return home with a doggie bag and investigation after a particularly venturesome gastronomic experience. Pot Luck patrons, however, can leave with something more! The various glass cats, bulls, and whales, which adorn the two large hay windows, are all for sale, should the con- tested eater wish to partake of Pot Luck specialties — which last somewhat longer than the spare ribs.

Aside from the dining room, the Mosley's also have a recently-opened "Top Secret" room reserved for the drink of the same name.

"There are five ounces of booch in one of those," says Richard. "One guy came in and drank ten. I don't know how he walked out the door."

The focal point of the Fogcutter Room is undoubtedly the enor- mously rehashed and assembled which is firmly situated in the middle of the floor. On several of the walls are the recipes for some of Pot Luck's most renowned drinks, including the infamous "Snakenth" (tweak root, vodka, and Triple Sec floating from the top). But the true Epicurean saved the best for last. And even the hedonist would agree at the Pot Luck, the best is last. Cheesecakes, mountainous strawberry shortcakes, tapioca puddings, chocolate creme pies, and blueberry crisps are all the creation of Ann Mosley. For a restaurant that logic states cannot possible be a massive meal, make your next stop the Pot Luck Restaurant, Rue 125, H arpwell Center.

Current art exhibition at Walker illustrates progression of painting
by MELINDA AUMATIRE

The current exhibition from the museum's permanent collection now on exhibition are a representation of the museum's holdings in late 19th and 20th century art. The exhibition is installed in a progressive sequence. There is a base of reference, established by the late neoclassical paintings by such artists as Jacques Louis David and Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres. It is after this neoimpressionist period that art seems to take a right angle. The visual experience of seeing a painting becomes more basic and the sense of the painting becomes more complex.

The European paintings give us a comparison point for the rest of the exhibition, which is composed of works by American artists. A transition piece for the two disciplines is found in Rockwell Kent's "Water Fowl, Monhegan." It is an exercise in color and form. There is a three-dimensional quality to the painting which, in terms of development is ahead in compositional quality that his contemporaries. The subject is an interplay between the colors and forms in the background with those in the foreground. The trees in the foreground, for instance, are painted in rather quick short brush strokes. The technique conveys a certain reality. The trees don't just appear on the picture plane, but sway back and forth in the painting's space and our space.

In contrast, Wooden Soldier, painted by Guy Pène du Bois is a flat monochromatic composition. There is no contrast excepting the soldier's red uniform against the dark background and in opposition to the blue-green of the woman's dress. There is none of the visual stimulation that one comes to expect from this period of art in Europe.

American painting, as a style, had to develop very quickly to keep pace with Europe's contemporary contemporaries. Artists such as Fitzgerald, Gorky, and Sego developed styles of their own but complemented the development of art as a whole. Bold use of color and line, space, coupled with unique interpretation of subject help established American 20th century art.

One of the most interesting pieces in this section of the exhibition is a multi-media work done by Christo, Running Fence. In this piece we see a different approach to art. The work is composed of many different textures. There is the smoothness of pastels, the coarseness of the wire and the flexibility or lack of it of the cloth. There is also writing. This is a sketch, a plan for something. Is this art in the state that it is? Is it finished? What defines finished? Questions which must be asked to redefine art in the twenty century.

There is only one piece or sculpture in the exhibition. The piece is by William Zorach. It is called the Spirit of the Dance. It too poses a number of questions. What is form? How does a truly three dimensional piece compare and contrast with the pseudo-three-dimensionality of painting? This piece poses the most question because it is the most puzzling of the works on display. The hardest question to answer is what would this show. What would this show be without the sculpture. I found that the lack of the sculpture could be rather bland.

Visiting dramatists draw praise
by R. F. VANDERSCHMIDT

When Gluck's Orpheus was first heard by the musical critics, it was described as "a highly successful novelty." Gluck composed this opera in part as a reaction to the over elaborate showpieces of Italian opera which featured extravagant sets, highly ornamented costumes, and music composed with the aim of doing as little as possible with the means at his disposal. Gluck sought to bring musical coherence back to opera by using simple means. Orpheus, which abounds in lyrical melodies, presents airs, choruses, and dances of attractive classical simplicity. The mellifluous aria "I have lost my Eurydice," shows Gluck at his best. The atmosphere is pastoral and pictorial; the music conforms appropriately to the drama and the words. Accompanied recitatives, arias, and choruses are combined into spacious, integrated scenes.

As the opera opens Orpheus is grieving for his wife, Eurydice. Unable to accept her death, he resolves to descend to Hades and retrieve her. Amor, god of Love, allows Orpheus his wish, excepting that Orpheus must not glance at Eurydice until both reach the outer world or she will die.

In Act II Orpheus descends to Hades and charms the furies living by a chorus into allowing him to enter Elysium. Harvard's production finds Orpheus, sung by contralto Gretchen Johnson, in a red lit Hell. The furies surround him, demanding he explain his presence. Orpheus' persuasive songs are accompanied by exquisite harp and pinzaio string music. He is interrupted by interjections from the furies together with the brass. At each interjection the furies step closer to Orpheus, whose steadfast singing finally placates them. The furies mass behind Orpheus and strive toward the audience, thus bringing Orpheus through to heaven. The chorus disbands as it backs off stage, separate members answering each other in song, the instrumental "Dance of the Furies" follows and gathers in intensity as horn calls increase in frequency. A pause signals the closing scene, in which strings play downscale passages.

In Act III the couple are ascending from Hades. Eurydice pleads with Orpheus to glance at her; Orpheus is tortured by his inability to do so. This predication is vividly portrayed as the couple sing emotional recitative in duet, circling the stage with backs toward each other. Orpheus finally defies the gods and looks at Eurydice, who dies. He sings the sectional "I have lost my Eurydice." The god Amor, as well as the audience, was touched at the performance and restored Eurydice a second time. Calzabigi, the libertind, introduced this happy ending into the myth. The production included a final triumphant trio, praising the power of love, between Orpheus, Eurydice, and Amor.

Kevin Murphy, Stage Manager of the Harvard-Hall/Bates Friends of Opera, stated that Tim Muhkerjee, the Musical Director, is primarily responsible for putting this production together. It must be noted that during the fall and performed four (Continued on page 8)
To divest or not to divest? A question worth pondering.

Consider stock selling this way:

Pontius Pilot probably would have.

If Bowdoin College is to act reasonably and logically concerning its investments in South Africa, then it has no other choice but to divest all holdings in companies doing business in the racist country. Divestment is not the answer because it will have some tremendous moral or economic impact on the world, or on the business community, but simply because it is the only real alternative available.

A sizable 25 percent of Bowdoin's investments are in companies operating in South Africa, businesses including General Motors, IBM, Caterpillar Tractors, Dupont and others. Yet the 25 percent amounts to nine million dollars, a sum divided among some eighteen different corporations. The College has about one-and-a-half million dollars invested in IBM, just over a million each in Eastman Kodak, Xerox, Johnson & Johnson, and Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., and under a million in each of the remaining companies, certainly not enough to wield any significant stockholder power in corporate decision making.

It is true that Bowdoin and other similar institutions would lose more, though not much more, if they joined together as a coalition of colleges and universities. Certainly the formation of such a group would be desirable, for indeed there was any hope that something could be done for South African blacks and other non-whites, be one to one in the working conditions of those same people within its business operations? And why should Eastman Kodak, the company which processes the pictures that go on all South Africans' ID passes, the very documents which deny the black man entrance to so many public places, be one to commit itself to desegregation of its workers?

If these companies and others like them were really interested in improving the grievous situation in South Africa, they would pull out of the country altogether - as Polaroid and First National Bank have already done - and cease to support the system which oppresses so many people.

Certainly stockholder campaigns which call for company withdrawal are more to the point than those which call for divestment of the Sullivan Plan. Although the withdrawal of U.S. companies would probably trigger a severe economic crunch and massive unemployment for black workers, the current situation is not much more desirable. And in the long run, the economic and political base of the racist regime would be so weakened that establishment of a new egalitarian government would be a real possibility. Unfortunately the stockholder elite, that is, the group which holds the majority of stocks, are not too keen on the idea of withdrawal. Corporations will do what they want, when they want, without regard to what Bowdoin or any coalition of great investee say. In other words, as a shareholder Bowdoin has no hope of effecting change in South Africa, and in the future the College cannot help change the deplorable situation in South Africa, it will certainly not support it.

Potholm canvasses South Africa.

Orient: Why are American subsidiary companies in South Africa?

Potholm: They turn a 15-20% profit. You can build a company and pay for it in five years. It's a lucrative market. A billion dollars worth of purchasing power. Kodak film is white, black, and white.

Orient: Isn't the attraction mostly for cheap labor?

Potholm: Cheap labor? No question about it. Blacks are paid less than whites in South Africa and less than they would be paid in the United States. But if cheap labor were the only thing you were looking for, you would not put it in South Africa. Lots of other African countries offer cheap labor.

Orient: Then what attracts American subsidiary corporations to South Africa?

Potholm: There's a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, if for no other reason, for apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.

Orient: What exactly are the working conditions in South Africa?

Potholm: There is a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, it's not for the apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.

Orient: Why are American subsidiary companies in South Africa?

Potholm: They turn a 15-20% profit. You can build a company and pay for it in five years. It's a lucrative market. A billion dollars worth of purchasing power. Kodak film is white, black, and white.

Orient: Isn't the attraction mostly for cheap labor?

Potholm: Cheap labor? No question about it. Blacks are paid less than whites in South Africa and less than they would be paid in the United States. But if cheap labor were the only thing you were looking for, you would not put it in South Africa. Lots of other African countries offer cheap labor.

Orient: Then what attracts American subsidiary corporations to South Africa?

Potholm: There's a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, if for no other reason, for apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.

Orient: What exactly are the working conditions in South Africa?

Potholm: There is a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, it's not for the apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.

Orient: Why are American subsidiary companies in South Africa?

Potholm: They turn a 15-20% profit. You can build a company and pay for it in five years. It's a lucrative market. A billion dollars worth of purchasing power. Kodak film is white, black, and white.

Orient: Isn't the attraction mostly for cheap labor?

Potholm: Cheap labor? No question about it. Blacks are paid less than whites in South Africa and less than they would be paid in the United States. But if cheap labor were the only thing you were looking for, you would not put it in South Africa. Lots of other African countries offer cheap labor.

Orient: Then what attracts American subsidiary corporations to South Africa?

Potholm: There's a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, if for no other reason, for apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.

Orient: What exactly are the working conditions in South Africa?

Potholm: There is a very skilled labor force. Also, there's an infrastructure where a lot of products can be easily disseminated. Overall, it's not for the apartheid part of it, it would be a very fast market to be in.
No matter what the exchange rate, blood money carries a dear price

By any stretch of the imagination, the regime in South Africa today is racist and is denying equality to an oppressed minority. As a result, many educational and religious institutions are being pressured to diversify their stock in companies that do business in South Africa. A view of the present world situation, though, should show that such an action would be overreactive and ineffective.

While it is in no way excuses the actions of the South African government, the simple fact that in virtually every country can be cited for supporting repressive or inhumane regimes. The United States government is a vivid example of this fact.

Monday's Boston Globe provides ample evidence. A front-page picture in that edition shows a front page picture that is not a firing squad. The same day these and other former pro-South leaders were executed, the United States government refused to recognize the new Khomenei regime as the de facto government of Iran.

In the same vein, it should be noted that the United States government still supports some of the world's most flagrant violators of human rights, including Turkey and Chile.

Full housecleaning?

If we were to divest our South African holdings, we would also need to decide what to do with the South African shares. The companies would be supporting the position of the United States government with regard to repressive regimes by paying taxes to the U.S. Treasury to support inhuman governments.

Another argument against divestment is that it will accomplish nothing in terms of helping the oppressed in South Africa. If the College were to sell this blue-chip stock, it would be bought immediately by investors seeking high returns, with no effect on the companies involved.

Soul-cleansing

Selling the stock merely to cleanse the College's soul of the situation in South Africa is a poor excuse for the school to divest. The situation will not improve if Bowdoin merely divorces itself from the reality of inequality. The minority in South Africa will not become more equal if the College decided to end its involvement with American firms who do business in the African country.

Beyond this, the act of divestment would go against one of the basic aims of the liberal arts education which Bowdoin and President Estesman seem to treasure so highly. The liberal education should provide its graduates with a sense of ethics and morality, as well as the tools necessary to carefully analyze a situation and come up with a solution that best attacks the problem.

Bowdoin would deny these virtues if it were to divest. By selling its stock, the College would not be considering the future of the minority in South Africa. Even if this action led to the desired result, the removal of these companies from South Africa and the possible collapse of that country's economy — the moral situation would not improve. While the majority would have less in real terms and the minority might gain in relative terms, in real terms the black minority would be worst off than before and would face a stiffer battle for equality.

For Bowdoin College, the only way to wreak effectively strong objections to the inequality in South Africa is to hold stock and help to solve the problem within the companies. By holding stock, the College will have a real interest and thus stand in the issue. Although Bowdoin's voice in these corporations may not be great, it will be greater than if the College owns no stock at all. The College should use this leverage to protest this and other moral outrages practiced by all governments, including our own.

The end, then, is the only way to satisfy its own conscience and set the appropriate example for its graduates.
Iranian political order is not different. When the turmoil began, the country's oil production amounted to 6.57 million barrels a day. A problem occurs because a lack of overall oil production disrupts the entire world oil market. It is predictable that a lack of expected price of oil and other fuel to rise a few pennies per gallon might cause Iran's economy to stall. Those people familiar with basic economic theory know that the quantity of fuel consumed will fall off somewhat if the price rises, the amount of course depending on the possibility of demand for fuel. Yet, I find it difficult to see the typical Bowdoin student who is the owner of a car curtailing his or her gas consumption as a result of slightly higher prices. But much concern was expressed about a $100 tuition increase; it went by almost unnoticed, if there was any. I am not interested in demand for gasoline resulting from Bowdoin students driving less would become unprofitable. But that is not what is at issue here.

More important than student driving habits, however, is the increased sales of individual living units which use more energy per person than an apartment does. Worldwide known reserves of acceptable fuel will not allow us to go on consuming energy at the present rate for much longer. Many people believe that technological improvements will provide us with a solution to our energy needs; furthermore, they do not perceive the scientist as a methodological disciplinarian who should science not be successful in its search for acceptable alternative energy sources.

Orient's role is investigated

(Continued from Page 3)

accurate.

"My conception of a college newspaper," said Prof. Robert Lloyd Reesley '79, "is that newspaper is to inform the students and the faculty about what is going on in the school. They must have a lively interest."

"There's no other place beside the paper where we can read about all the new things, like the Security incidents. Things that students might not otherwise get a hint of, they have a duty to report."

(Continued from Page 1)

kept under the hoods during the lab sessions, but noted that students have to use the chemicals at their lab stations. "As soon as we go and bring them into the air, the chemicals start to evaporate," he said. "After three or four hours in the lab during the day, the air can get pretty foul."

The issue of ventilation in the chemistry building first came before Barbour last year when Professor David Page mentioned the situation. The 27-year-old building was due for a checkup, and when Barbour made his study last month, he discovered that Cleaveland Hall labs were in need of cleaning and maintenance. "Some air flows through the hoods, but not much," he said. "We have to overhaul those labs in the summer when students are out. The fans in these labs are loose, and we would like to change the sizes of some of the pulleys, to make the fans flow better."

Ideally, however, even more renovations are in order, he continued. A room should be installed to handle ventilation, and the system would be maintained by a professional engineer.

Even though the total impact of Iran's oil on U.S. energy consumption may be small, we should respond constructively to this situation. The absence of Iranian oil represents only about 5% of our current import needs which represents 28% of our total oil supply. In 1973, the Arab oil embargo cut off 7.5% of our total oil supply indirectly causing due to actions by our major oil companies long gas lines and heating oil shortages in many sections of the country, particularly the northeast, which is very dependent on foreign oil. The Iranian situation will not have the same impact, though we should definitely expect some shortages to occur. Nevertheless, we should perhaps look at the Iranian situation in a positive manner in the hope that it will provide us with the badly needed impetus to re-evaluate our wasteful consumption. The social awareness that was generated from the Arab oil embargo has to be sustained.

We as educated citizens have the responsibility to become more aware of energy use abuses; We also must become more realistic in determining what the sacrifices we should choose to be obsolete in our ways. The solutions will not be easy one.

But if an entire Bowdoin community should encourage discussion of this pressing yet long-term problem. In my opinion, it is our job to try to conserve energy in small increments by doing such things as turning off any unnecessary lighting, avoiding any unnecessary car trips, avoiding the use of heavy duty demanding appliances between the hours of 4 p.m. and 8 p.m., and lowering thermostat to 20 degrees C (68 degrees F).

Sincerely,
Robert Lloyd Reesley '79

Ivy players give opera production

(Continued from Page 9)

Few hours would suffice for music as a whole. The production was well-rehearsed and ran smoothly. Mr. Mukerjee stated that he had discussed the opera with his colleagues at Harvard-Berkeley Friends of Opera at Pickard on Feb. 17, 1979. The conductor was Tim Nelson, who was also a 27-year-old student. Mr. Mukerjee went on to say that "It was Tracey Linden. The performers are students at Harvard University and its School of Music.

Dr. William F. Enteman, President ofBowdoin College, announced today that the Bath Iron Works Corp. (B&W) and its parent company, Congoleum Corp., have awarded Bowdoin a $40,000 grant to support the College's Hawthorne Longellow Library. The gift is being made in support of a period.

Congoleum President and Chief Executive Officer Byron C. Radaker said the firm is pleased to make a contribution to "help revitalize the facilities in Bowdoin's excellent library and to accommodate a flourishing essential growth."

Kennebec Fruit

The General Store of Brunswick

Hot Dogs — Chili Sauce Creamsicle — Root Beer Seltzer

OLD BOOKS

Unoccupied Buildings
Brunswick, Maine 04011

M.T.W. F 9:00-5:30, Thu. 11:00-5:00

CLOSED ON THURS., SUN.
Life on Jayvees is battle against obscurity

by BILL STUART

Nate Dane attracts more students to a class than they do to a game. Their schedule includes such notables as New Prep, Lawrence and New Hampton. One of their players recently picked up frostbite during a game played outdoors. They are hockey players at Bowdoin, but their junior varsity label carries with it a stigma that does not naturally ignite fans or inspire interest. “The reason they’re with us is in the maturity factor,” relates head coach Jack Leary. “Every level is just a little bit quicker than the last and they have to react a little quicker mentally as opposed to physically, because most of them here can do that. We go out there to win and the kids go out there to prove they are talented players. They take pride in the team they’re on and in their own play.”

The Jayvee program has been in existence for as many years at Bowdoin. “It was here when I came,” relates Sid Watson, varsity coach for the past twenty years. “I suppose it started by forming schools to go with freshmen on the varsity roster,” notes Watson. “In fact, other than Harvard, it was the last.” Thus, the junior varsity program bridged a gap while providing players with experience and work in fundamentals.

“Two years ago, we had twelve players graduate and two others leave, so we lost fourteen players. The next year, we went Division II with only one freshman. That championship team was made up primarily of junior varsity graduates,” Watson continues.

This year’s varsity roster underlines the importance of exposing a player to junior varsity competition before he plays varsity hockey. Only Rob Menzies, Mark Rabihoe, Mike Carman, Mark Pietts, Ron Marcellus, Tim Mc- Namara, and John Corcoran among present varsity players have not seen Jayvee action. “In a typical year,” Watson says, “about 80% of the varsity roster has Jayvee experience.”

Unusual role

Dave McNeil is part of that 80%. He played Jayvee hockey last year and was expected to play there again this year, but he was demoted to the jayvee line during fall workouts. “I wasn’t too happy at first,” he related. “I could be playing on the varsity team. I wasn’t really part of the Jayvee team, I was there to improve my individual skills. Eventually, when I got to know the freshmen, I thought of it like part of the team and played with much more intensity.”

One difference between junior varsity and varsity that McNeil sees is the lack of competitive balance at the lower level. A few games are arranged against other college junior varsity teams, but most of the schedule is played against prep schools. Among opponents, the difference in talent can be great. “A lot of the early Jayvee games were played against prep schools. The team wasn’t prepared mentally for the games. We didn’t get up for the game because we didn’t have to. Against New Hampton and Merrimack, though, our preparation and outlook was similar to a varsity game. I guess the preparation depends on the opponent.”

Another difference between the two levels is the emphasis on learning. The junior varsity team spends much more time on fundamentals. Watson notes, “The junior varsity players need the improvement in skating, shooting, stickhandling, passing and the basic development of the game. We don’t have to have the same breakouts, and the same forecheck moves that we learned on in Jayvee. So, while different coaches have different philosophies, the system will be the same.”

“I don’t think we ever try to change a player’s total style,” says Leary. “A John Reidy is a tough, strong player who isn’t ready to play varsity because he doesn’t play systems well. So, we’re trying to teach him the systems. Jimmy Neuman is a kid who is a great fine player, he’s a good shooter, he’s a good puckhandler, but he again hasn’t had the discipline that varsity players should have.”

Discipline needed

“I think that disciplining the various aspects of the game, and most of it is a discipline into a system, is what most of these players lack to prevent them from moving up. You’re not going to change a player’s talent. You’re going to try to improve on that raw talent. It’s a matter of disciplining them into the system.”

For many of this year’s junior varsity players, the prospects for next year are not too bright. The varsity will graduate only five players: forwards Rob Devany and Andy Viale, defensemen Tom King and Mark Namara, and forward Jim Leary.

The Little Flags Theatre production of Maxine Klein’s "The Furies of Mother Jones" will be performed in Kresge Auditorium on Friday, March 2, at 7:30 p.m., sponsored by the Bowdoin Women’s Association, Afro-American Society and Bowdoin Union of Students with support from the Student Union Committee and the Senior Center.

"The Furies of Mother Jones" is a two-act musical which probes the past and current history and consciousness of working people in America. Maxine Klein is nationally known for her abilities as a director and playwright in combining vivid theatricality with political impact.

The Little Flags performances are part of the series entitled “Struggle and Change.”

Three workshops on acting (10 a.m.), political music (11:30 a.m.) and People’s Culture-Political Theatre (1:30 p.m.) will be offered by members of Little Flags’ Theatre on Saturday, March 3 in Kresge Auditorium. The public is cordially invited.

Tickets for ‘The Furies of Mother Jones’ are on sale at the Moulton Union Info Desk or at the door. Admission is $1.00.

Tom King follows the action against New Prep. The game ended with four goals. The penalty box the Cubs lost the contest and are 3-6 this year, Orient/Stuart.

Tom King, director of admissions at Antioch College, is a graduate of the Orient Union. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Orient Union, and is also active in the Orient Arts Council. He has been involved in the arts for many years, including serving as a member of the Board of Directors of the Orient Union, and the Ohio Arts Council. He has also been involved in the arts as a performer, and has served as a member of the Board of Directors of the Orient Union.
Hoosters
conceede three more

by MARK HOSBEN

Despite the optimism with which the Polar Bears basketball squad looked forward to last weekend, the trip to Vermont brought little joy. They dropped two games, lost their starting forward to a severe ankle injury, and the game in general. It was not the kind of game they had hoped to have. They remain in fourth place, which will provide a challenge the team has yet to face this year.

For the University of Maine, the Polar Bears are up against a team with a 5-1 record, contrasting their 4-4 mark. From the beginning they were dominated by the plays and pressure of the Cadets. It would be another game where catch up was the strategy they were forced to take. This has become a source of pain for the hoosters. Whether coming from behind to win, or just staying behind and losing, the team in its last 10 outings has played high intensity, catch-up basketball, and it takes a lot from them. Coach Bicknell recognizes this weakness. "The more we get to do is put things together for the entire forty minutes of the game. There can't be any of these five minute time lapses where nobody does anything. Hopefully we'll play the whole game; we have to be alert and ready the whole time we're on the court. This beginning looked like the team wasn't ready. Then an even bigger blow that the fact that they were down by 10 points hit the team. Senior forwards Mark Krallan injured his ankle. With a little more than half of the game remaining, they found themselves playing at a double disadvantage. "You can't blame it on Krallan's loss," Coach Bicknell said. "That's just part of being able to play basketball; you have to be able to withstand the injuries." The Bears did. Ed Rogers had some comments. "What we've got to do is win on emotion. At Middlebury, it just wasn't there. We fell way behind, their defense got us. What we have to do is find that medium between the two and use it." Coach Krallan, without the home advantage in a majority of the games, it may just be the longest test the Bears have had this season.

Injuries and attitude will be deciding factor in playoff bid

(Continued from Page 12) on the far post. It just hit off the heel of my stick and went in, meal. To make the trip worse, Steve McNeil, who thought he had in dosing from Friday's meal, turned out to have developed appendicitis requiring surgery last Sunday and is reportedly out for the year.

Yet the highlight of the week was a 7-4 win over Boston College. "The win won't hurt them (BC)," commented Garcia. "But it will definitely help us as far as impressing the ECAC when they make the selections for the playoffs." Also making the victory sweet was the fact that this was the last time Bowdoin will play BC, as they have dropped us from their schedule in the future.

John Corcoran got the initial tally with a breakaway, beating the goalie to the upper corner. Bowdoin went off with a 2-0 lead at the end of the first period. Virtue of Paul Howard's tip-in of a shot by Garcia. In the next stanza, the Bears moved out to a 5-1 lead on goals by Elliott, Timmy McNamara and Mike Collins, but the Eagles made it a 5-4 game, by adding three of their four goals coming on power plays. But in the final period, Bowdoin put one through the goaltender's legs on a breakaway and Elliott lifted a backhander by his left arm to put the game in the victory column for Bowdoin.

THE TOWNE MALL

725-8853

Brunswick Tour & Travel

On the Hill by Bowdoin College

216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK

TEL. 725-5587
Women hoopsters hurt by two losses

by JEFF McCREARY

This week, the Women's Basketball team suffered two tough losses against the University of Maine at Orono and Farmington. Going into this week's two games, the team had a record of 12-4 after beating Babson decisively. Even though the University of Maine at Orono is probably ranked number one in their division, the Polar Bears put up a strong fight in a constant uphill battle. The closest that the women ever came was at halftime when Jill Pingree hit a jumper off a fast break to pull them within one point before going into the locker room with a score of 29-30.

Coach Mersereau felt that the women were psyched and played a very hard game but there was no reason for them to walk away dejected. The final score of the game was 75-61; the top scorer for the Polar Bears was Jill Pingree with 21 points and Dorothy Diros with 14.

Pegree, the starting forward for the Polar Bears, felt that the team on a whole played a very good floor game considering that the whole front line of UMO was between five feet seven inches and six feet five inches tall. This height difference was reflected in rebounds by Wendy Farington of UMO, who had twenty rebounds by herself.

To add to the Women's Basketball woes this week, the team suffered a tough loss in Farmington by a score of 57-54. The women were not completely at full strength as both Nancy Brinkman and Dorothy Diros had not fully recovered from colds.

Women's basketball dropped two this week against Farmington and Orono.

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place Tel. 725-8587 Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop. Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

DOWNEAST HOBBIES & CRAFTS
"Where the individual is our hobby"
CRAFT AND HOBBY SUPPLIES
- Needlework
- Leathercraft
- Quilling
- Stained Glass
- Candle Making
- Macrame
- String Art
- Decoupage
- Beads

TONTINE MALL
Maine Street 725-2519
Brunswick, Maine
9:30-5:30 Friday till
8:30 P.M.

CALL STOWE TRAVEL
FOR FLIGHT TICKETS
Tel. 725-5573

WIN A TRIP TO BERMUDA!!!
Here's your chance to get a tan this spring vacation! Just buy a senior class raffle ticket for $1, or 6 raffle tickets for $5. The contest ends February 28. Raffle also includes a Rossignol SM, competition skis, Nordic competition boots and $50 in cash. See senior class leaders or Clint Hagan at Stowe Travel for your raffle tickets today!

The Travel Agency with you in mind.
H. B. STOWE TRAVEL
9 Pleasant Street Downtown Brunswick
Phone 725-5573 - Clint Hagan is also planning many individual "Bowdoin Bermuda Week" trips during the spring vacation. See him for Bermuda information, reservations and tickets.

Men swimmers post best record with 7-3 show

(Continued from Page 12) the nationals when the team turns in its peak performances of the season at Springfield on the first. But feels that, after tapering and shaving down, Pellegrino, Cherry, Connolly, Sokoloski, and Naylor should all have good chances to make the nationals and that Lynch, Nussbaum, and Philbrick could also qualify if they peak well. Freshman butterflyer Kirk Hutchinson and divers Steve Santangelo and Chris Besinger have already qualified.

One of the best classes in Bowdoin swim team history will be lost to graduation this year. It includes All-Americans Brian Connolly, Bob Pellegrino, and Jeff Cherry, butterflyer Steve Rote, and diver Steve Santangelo, all of whom hold pool records. According to Butt, "The senior class is one of the best swimming classes we've had. They've been great in the water and in leadership, have been loyal and will be sorely missed."

The Orient Dubious Achievement Award this year goes to DKE house for the late entry to the snow sculpture contest. It was a great moment for the unabashed expression of poor taste and puerile regression.

THE BOWDOIN STEAK HOUSE
FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 maine st. brunswick, maine 725-8314
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner

Wed. & Thurs., Feb. 28 & Mar. 1
Craig & Dave
Fri. & Sat., March 2 & 3
Lance Brown

What is your Racquet?

Squash
70° racquets

Racquetball
racquets by Leach
Above racquets in stock at the
Moulton Union Bookstore
Mermen seek to maintain their prowess in N.E.

by HARRIS WEINER

The men's varsity swim team has posted an impressive seven and three record in dual meet competition this season. "It's the best record we've ever had in a couple years," remarked Coach Brian Connolly, who noted that, "times have improved all season and we're pointing toward the New Englands on March first through to the meet.

The squad split its last two meets of the season, defeating a weak MIT and losing to U. Maine, a Division I power.

But we swam well against MIT considering they didn't come after us. It was a good meet for getting ready to taper for the New Englands," remarked Coach Connolly. Outstanding times were turned in by Leigh Philbrick and Bob Pellegrino in the breaststroke and by Dave Schafer in the 1500 meter freestyle during the February 17th meet in which Bowdoin swept first place finishes in all but one event.

"We knew we wouldn't beat Maine but we showed promise during the warm-up," stated Connolly, who felt that the meet "was good preparation for the New Englands."

Butt added that, "Pellegrino, Hutchinson, and Cherry swam well. Connolly's been sick and the rest were tired, Maine was the only team that we lost to this year that was completely out of our class. The other two losses this season were both away meets which could have gone either way.

According to All-American freestyler Jeff Cherry, "The team is going to the New Englands and has a good chance to finish in the top three out of the thirty schools competing. Captain Rob Pellegrino added confidently that, "Times have really been improving. We're beginning to peak and if everyone hits, we'll be tough to beat."

Coach Butt added with a note of caution that Bowdoin, which took a fifth in the New Englands last year, "could place in the top three or could just as easily place sixth or seventh. However, there are so many good teams involved."

The squad is also hoping to qualify several of its members for (Continued on page 11)

The men's swimming team has walked away with its best record in five years, according to Coach Butt, who hopes that the progress will continue.

Orient/Stuart

Stickhandlers trash B.C. bid for home ice in playoff

by DANNY MENZ

Another dismal weekend ended on a bright note last Tuesday night as the Polar Bears won a stunning victory over Division I Boston College. Unfortunately, Bowdoin lost two important Division II Games to Norwalk and Middlebury last weekend which will play a big role when the ECAC determines the seedings for the playoffs.

The road trip to Vermont started out on a bad note with a poor meal prior to Friday's game against Norwalk. In the cold, dimly lit Norwalk rink the Bears went out to a 2-0 lead on tallies by Bobby Devaney and Kevin Brown. But the Cutdets scored five unanswered goals to take a 5-2 victory. Co-captain Gary Garcia blamed the loss on overconfidence and the road. "The long bus ride hurt us, it made us flat. We were expecting to blow them out 10-0, and they were flying. We weren't up for the game the way we should have been."

The next afternoon in an even colder rink at Middlebury, the P-Bears suffered a heart-breaker. Bowdoin opened the scoring with a power play goal by Mike Carman. Middlebury answered quickly with a tally two minutes later. The teams battled through a scoreless second period and late into the third before Roger Elliott broke the tie with a beautiful slapshot from the blue line while the Bears were a man down. It looked as if the squad might beat one of the top teams in Division II West up for the Panthers managed to tie the game with twenty two seconds left off a face-off in the Bowdoin end. Garcia, who took the face-off, later described the goal.

"The two of us on the face-off were both left shots. I was trying to draw the puck to the corner and he was drawing back to the man at the top of the circle. They had pulled their goalie for an extra shooter. We both hit the puck at the same time and it bounced right out to the top of the circle where their guy just took a whack at it. I saw it go into the corner of the net on its side. It was an unbelievable shot. I don't think he could have made it again, it was just luck. The puck had to go through six guys, that's twelve feet!" Goalie Bob Menzies agreed with the screening of the shot, saying he didn't see it until it was too late.

In the overtime it took forty one seconds for Middlebury to get the victory. Riding on the momentum from the tying goal, they quickly put pressure on in the Bowdoin end. "Their man was trying to pass in the last minute, I tried to tip it away from Hagy who was sitting (Continued on page 10)

Cold may have hurt runners' performance, look for better showings in New England's winter track meets

by DUNBAR LOCKWOOD

Last Saturday the Men's Varsity Track team traveled to Tufts to compete in the Eastern Intercollegiate Track and Field Championships. They finished a respectable twelfth out of twenty four schools. "I'm not disappointed at all," said Coach Sabatasseni because "the quality of this team has improved greatly over the years."

Bowdoin sent fifteen runners down to Tufts of whom the standouts were Mark Hoffman, in the 880; Mike Connor in the 440; and Rick D'Aoust in the 1000 meter. They finished third, fourth and fifth in their respective events giving Bowdoin its six points.

With the weather conditions at the Tufts' track may have hurt some of the runners' times but probably didn't hurt many.

Seven competitors from the men's team have qualified for the New England Intercollegiate Track & Field Championship to be held at the University of Connecticut on February 24th and 25th: Tom Capone in the 60 yard dash; Mark Fisher in the 440; Mike Connor in the 880; Mark Hoffman in the 1000; Rick D'Aoust in the 1600; Mark Preece in the high jump, and Kwame Poku in the long jump. Forty three teams will be competing at the New Englands providing extremely tough competition.

"Our New England conference is as high in quality as the ECAC used to be. Teams like Northeastern, Boston University, and UConn are of national caliber. Captain Mark Hoffman commented that the competition at the New Englands "just to place ought to be an achievement. You play all the 'bigger' like R.U. there."

Women Complete

Seven women ran for the New Englands which are to be held at Boston University. Four Bowdoin record holders who qualified are: Karla Kassen in the 65 meters and 300 meters; Mary Poku in the 55 meter hurdles; Margaret McCormick in the 400 meters; and Jone Benoit in the mile and two mile. The other three qualifiers are Beth Bear, Colby College and 400 meters, Helen Pelletier in the relay, and Diana Houghton in the mile. The women's individual events they will run in the 50/220 yard and 440 yard relay. Coach Sabatasseni praised the women's team, "They're all good. None of the ECAC teams could have used to be. Teams like Northeastern, Boston University, and UConn are of national caliber. Captain Mark Hoffman commented that the competition at the New Englands "just to place ought to be an achievement. You play all the 'bigger' like R.U. there."

Women Complete

Seven women ran for the New Englands which are to be held at Boston University. Four Bowdoin record holders who qualified are: Karla Kassen in the 65 meters and 300 meters; Mary Poku in the 55 meter hurdles; Margaret McCormick in the 400 meters; and Jone Benoit in the mile and two mile. The other three qualifiers are Beth Bear, Colby College and 400 meters, Helen Pelletier in the relay, and Diana Houghton in the mile. The women's individual events they will run in the 50/220 yard and 440 yard relay. Coach Sabatasseni praised the women's team, "They're all good. None of the ECAC teams could have used to be. Teams like Northeastern, Boston University, and UConn are of national caliber. Captain Mark Hoffman commented that the competition at the New Englands "just to place ought to be an achievement. You play all the 'bigger' like R.U. there."

The highlight of the year, according to Spector, "was beating Wesleyan by one point, coming down to the wire in the relay." Of the losses, which were to the University of Maine, Middlebury College, and Williams College, the one that was a real letdown was the defeat by William Spector felt the Bears had a good chance of beating.

Next year will find the squad minus Mary Washburn, the top backstroker, co-captain Linda Bennett, and Elizabeth Cernie, all of whom will graduate. Spector will be the team's sole senior. The team will also look for two seniors who opted for a study away program. Regardless, the core of the team will remain fairly stable, supported by what Spector terms "their freshman, sophomore, and junior leaders."

Future outlook

"If we get another freshman like this year's class, we will do great," Spector theorizes. Ruddy sums up the 1979-80 prospects by commenting, "We have one good butterflyer and six good breaststrokers. Our backstroke girls are pretty much average as far as regular admission goes, but they've shown they can win events. A couple of NESCAC can't go out and actually recruit, but we've never had the problem with the girls wanting to come to Bowdoin."

Although there is nothing definite, there is talk about dividing the New Englands into two events. In the late 1970's and early 1980's, the top teams were the late 1970's and early 1980's. The top teams were the Eastern Intercollegiate Track and Field Championships. They finished a respectable twelfth out of twenty four schools. "I'm not disappointed at all," said Coach Sabatasseni because "the quality of this team has improved greatly over the years."

Bowdoin sent fifteen runners down to Tufts of whom the standouts were Mark Hoffman, in the 880; Mike Connor in the 440; and Rick D'Aoust in the 1000 meter. They finished third, fourth and fifth in their respective events giving Bowdoin its six points.

With the weather conditions at the Tufts' track may have hurt some of the runners' times but probably didn't hurt many.

Seven competitors from the men's team have qualified for the New England Intercollegiate Track & Field Championship to be held at the University of Con-
College will not vote on S.A. stock resolutions
by HOLLY HENKE

The Investments Committee of the Governing Boards accepted a recommendation Monday which called for Bowdoin to "abstain from voting on any shareholder resolution concerning South Africa," which might come before the College in the coming year.

President William F. Esteinman presented the proposal at the request of the South African Advisory Committee which two weeks ago approved a motion in a 6-3 vote that Bowdoin should maintain a "neutral stance" during its current investigation of the investment issue.

The Advisory group drew up the proposal after some of its Committee members expressed concern that "Bowdoin might vote with management opposing any shareholder resolution regarding South Africa," according to Paul Nyhan, chairman of the South African Committee.

The Board Investments Committee accepted the advisory body's recommendation "in the context of awaiting the report of the Advisory Committee and whatever instructions may flow from the Governing Boards. The Investment Committee takes this action without making any comments as to what future policy should be," according to President Esteinman's office.

In other business, the South African Committee decided to expand its membership to twelve, (continued on page 6)

Professors William Shipman is a faculty representative on the Governing Boards Investments Committee.

Execs debate Afro-Am vote to exclude white membership

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

Although last week's vote by the Afro-American Society to exclude whites from voting membership was interpreted by some as "a slap in the face" to non-blacks, the Executive Board voted Thursday night to support the Am's action.

The Society was asked to appear before the Exec Board last night to explain the vote taken February 22. There was some question whether or not the Am was operating within the rights allotted to it under guidelines set down for chartered student organizations.

According to Exec chairman Amy Homans '81, charter guidelines stipulate that all funded organizations are to exclude voting members from all of the student body. If the Am did not follow this stipulation, it could lose its charter and all funds designated to it by the College. The Executive Board, however, voted 7 to 6, with 1 abstention to interpret the word "participation" as not including voting privileges, keeping the Am within restricted boundaries.

Opinions among both spectators and board members were divided. "I don't think it's right that kids' money should be used for an organization where they're denied membership," said Basil Zirinis '80. "It's a slap in the face for the Bobcats." Sammie Robinson '75, Assistant Director of Admissions and past member of the Am disagreed, (continued on page 6)

Spoils of senior raffle accrue to Swit (again)

by KIDO PETERS

Half-time: At the Bowdoin Lowell game - Nate Izan's voice crackled over the PA system to announce the winner of the raffle. His voice echoed throughout the stands of Dartmouth arena, resounding off a disinterested audience. The crowd was in shock.

Some thought it a joke, others out loud burst out into laughter. Some just ripped up their stubs and laughed.

Mike Swit, senior and member of Delta Kappa Epsilon house, took first prize for the second time in the senior class raffle this year. First the Davidson, then Bermuda, Shipman was unavailable for comment.

President of the senior class Steve Lizama commented on the surprise outcome, "when I saw the stub, I had a fit." Concerning the raffle's reaction Rose was sold philosophically, "So many people were truly upset. It's a sad commentary - to have so many people you have to worry about."

Rose is not in the least daunted, "We're planning another raffle. The first prize is a trip to Las Vegas - with Mike Swit."

The odds in this incredible two-fold stroke of fortune are one in 151,965. Figure the odds for the ear one were one in 445, for the trip one in 325. Multiply the two figures, what you get is a lot of luck.

According to Swit's roommate Dave Biette, '79, "Mike came home that night - he was in a daze. He just sat down and flipped through National Lampoon for half an hour musing. 'Why did this happen to me? It was wierd'."

Biette recalls Swit's ensuing problems, "The first thing he did was call his girl friend. It took him fifteen minutes to convince her that he had really won."

Then Swit told his roommate, "You know, when you win a raffle, you get a strange sensation through your body."

"I know the feeling," confided Biette, who has just won a trip to Jamaica.

Mike Ross, '82, took second prize which is a ski package. Len Kuehl, '79, won fifty dollars which he plans to use "to pay my phone bill."

Curse you, Mike Swit!

Mass SUC resignations provoke questions

by GEOFF WORRELL

"I have a list here of ten people that should no longer be on the committee," were the opening remarks delivered by Kevin McCabe, Chairman of the Student Union Committee at its Tuesday night meeting. The meeting, which prompted five resignations, raised several questions about the effectiveness of SUC and how the committee could improve itself.

"I was asked to read the list," said McCabe. "I would have preferred not to," he added. Following the reading of the list came the resignations. According to its constitution, SUC members are only allowed to miss two events or meetings without explanation. A third miss is reason for the chairman to drop that person from SUC.

"Everyone and anyone was guilty on the committee," offered Helen Pelletier, one of the five people to resign. "If he (Kevin) wanted to purge the committee, he could have done it more systematically starting from the beginning of the semester," she added.

The whole issue of SUC's effectiveness as a committee came to a head over the night club sponsored by SUC last Saturday. "It always seems as if the same six people are doing most of the work," offered McCabe. He added, "I think it's time that SUC realizes that there is some consequence to not performing your duties."

Five people from SUC were left to clean up last Saturday's musical extravaganza. During the concert, an estimated $500 worth of damage was done to the Senior Center. "People weren't thinking to ask people not to dance on the tables," said Ruth DeGraffenreid, a SUC representative. "There really can be no excuse for the small clean up crew," she added.

Directly following the resignations, a sub-committee was formed to examine and possibly revise the SUC constitution. According to the present guidelines, a person who really wants to work on our committee have to go through a lot of red tape, I think it's about time that all changed," said McCabe.

"I hope as the sub-committee progresses," said McCabe, "we can expand our membership to include the Chaimen of the fraternities and the leaders of major student organizations." The discussion of this possibility and others will be discussed by heads of the major student organizations, the chairman of the Inter-fraternity council and the Executive Board at a later date.

Even with the progress that was made from Tuesday's meeting, there is still some bitterness lingering. "If all came to a head on Tuesday," remarked Pelletier, "and I just felt like I was being attacked.

McCabe, however, feels that the meeting turned out for the better. "I won't say that the people that did resign should have but I think a lot of knowledge will come from it.

He added, "I feel that new sources of membership can be found; in a stipulation, it could be good. It's an idea to be considered of people that are really interested in what kind of entertainment goes on.

SUC meets every Tuesday in the Moulton Union beginning at six o'clock. These meetings are open to the entire campus.
Let us now praise

Kevin Adams’ photography show serves to remind us that extra-curricular interests pursued with competence and enthusiasm are warmly appreciated by the College.

The success of the exhibition takes on additional significance. For those of us who will not be attending graduate school, what we produce here on our own free time may be more meaningful than what occurs in the classroom. For those who will continue with academia, make a habit of going to such exhibitions. The trips will not only provide relief from study but also will develop your taste for the works and talents of others.

Seize the day

As February drifts into March, one notices the extreme lethargy of the Bowdoin student body. Everyone floats from class to class, hardly cracking an expression on their deadpan faces. The Union dining room is quiet in the evenings, with very few animated conversations.

Too often students have the opportunity to travel outside the quad into the ‘real’ or ‘outside’ world. There are things to do and see in the immediate vicinity of Brunswick which could do wonders for the March doldrums. If the late winter-early spring scenery is your ball of wax, then a quick trip to Harpswell with friends who happen to have a car can ease your cares immeasurably. The restaurants and bars in the area or the nightlife of Brunswick (yes, Portland does have a nightlife) can satisfy those with more civilized tastes.

Whatever your wants or desires, they shouldn’t go unattained — do something about it. If you’re unhappy right now, don’t blame it all on Bowdoin. You can satisfy yourself with a minimum of effort.

One reason for this apparent campus coma is the fact that most of us have been here upwards of six weeks, toil ing our brains out, only taking a break to trek over to Dayton Arena. Bow doin...
Student exhibit praised

by BREHON LAURENT

In his exhibition of photographs entitled "Street Photography, Latin America, 1978" located in the basement gallery of the Visual Arts Center, Kevin Adams has very successfully translated into a visual representation a certain inevitable nature of the people and landscape of Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico.

The photographs are a result of three months' travels in Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala and Mexico in the spring of 1978.

It was his intent during these travels, as stated in a brief written introduction to the exhibition, "to be prepared for the right shot -- the one which seemed photographically meaningful."

The photographs can be arbitrarily divided into three broad classes: the portrait, the landscape (including the cityscape) and the figures in the landscape.

One of the strongest portraits is entitled "Las Penitas, Mexico" (see print accompanying this article). Much attention has been given by Adams to the composition of the portrait as well as to the positions of the figures with respect to the direction of the sunlight. The overlap of the two figures creates a form of montage. The brim of the man's Panama hat forms a division between the two faces, each looking in different directions, one in direct sunlight, the other shaded by the panama.

The portraits as a group capture an extraordinary range of facial expressions, from those of difference to those of Quetzaltenango, Guatemalan to those of confidence and ease with which Adams gets are usually reserved to professional work of larger format (5½" x 7½" or 4" x 5"). Equally, if not more commendable, however, is that the essence and power inherent in photographs printed to 6" x 9" are not lost when printed to 11" x 14".

The shot of the busines in the square of Socha, Colombia is one of the most powerful photographs in the exhibition. The bus in the foreground forces the conventions of three dimensional space to be broken down. It is at first glance quite difficult to assign a plane of orientation to the amorphous ground in its relation to the bus and its relation to the ceramic border dividing the street from the garden. The angle from which the shot was taken adds also a dramatic perspective to the photograph.

In the third category, the figures in the landscape, the photographer is able to explore ideas of the landscape and of the portrait concurrently. Another among the best photographs in the show is the shot of the man sitting in a chair facing the street. In Colombia, Adams has very competently captured the "right moment". There, just as another man walks in front of the doorway, thus, there is created a frame within a frame. This motif is found in at least three other photographs in the show, but in none of them does he match the pristine quality of this print.

In his photograph taken in a passageway and two boys, one of whom is frozen in a contrived fashion as he jumps off a slight embankment. Adam's assumes the role of photographer, as the figures take on very diverse-like qualities.

In much of Kevin Adams' photography I am reminded of the work of Henri Cartier-Bresson. Cartier-Bresson also spoke of the "critical moment". For Adams, the "right moment" and many of his photographs deal with this idea.

Overall, the exhibition contains both some of the strongest, freshest and most innovative photographs that I have seen here in the past four years.

The photographs of Kevin Adams bring the spirit of Latin American cultures to Brunswick. The show is considered to be the best student exhibit in years.

Visual effects outclass acting in latest M & G productions

by ALEX STEVENSON

Mass entertainment has made male sex-appeal into a commodity (though it is perhaps just as chaste to say that is the case). Although they aren't so trite that they fail to excite us, the scenes and killings in the movies and on TV are increasingly sensational in efforts to stimulate increasingly numbed sensibilities. Lacking the advantages of video realism, it is a notable achievement when theater can quicken a pulse or raise an eyebrow; even more remarkable is a play which can intelligently as well as physically provoke.

There are few ways to make one think deeply about sex, least effective being moralization. Perhaps the best method of inducing thought, and the quickest route to boredom, is indeed to sexualhumour ad nauseam.

Though both plays were presented with an eye to arousing the audience, the style and tone of the two productions could hardly have been more different. The overall effect in Emperor Jones of a stylized art form enhanced by meticulous and effective blocking and creative use of space, direction Peter Honchauk '80, brings a fluid and distinctive eye for composition to his productions, a style which is noticeable when Emperor is compared with The Libation Bearers, which Honchauk directed in the same Experimental Theatre last spring.

An emphasis on ritual is intrinsic to O'Neill's story of the African chieftain who attempts to subjugate his people by assuming the trappings of Western culture: the story is highly compatible, as was Greek tragedy, with Honchauk's fondness for ritualistic, dance-like movement. Inexorability characterizes Jones' situation before the more subliminal but stronger power of his own native culture. The sure and relentless heating of the tom-tom signals the onslaught of an unstoppable force which will reduce Jones to cowering fear.

Continued on Page 4

LETTERS

Inadequate

To the Editor:

We would like to bring to your attention the fact that the Women's Indoor Track Team is not adequately coached. Coach Sabasteanski is the men's coach and cannot be expected to coach two varsity teams with two different schedules during the same season. As a varsity team for the second year in a row, the Indoor Track should be receiving the same level of coaching as the men. Since the team needs a separate coach who can devote his or her time to their

LETTERS

Politics

To the Editor:

Although admirable, the (letters concerning South Africa (letters) left short of dealing with the real situation and the structures of oppression and political correctness. There can be no separation of politics and morality. Divestment is then a political strategy to end apartheid as well as a moral statement. Although Bowdoin's divestment, in and of itself, may not possess great economic impact, its political significance cannot be underestimated as it was by one Orient editorial.

Discussions at Bowdoin have also tended to view the situation in South Africa as a unique and isolated example of oppression. A more comprehensive understanding of the matter would go beyond these myopic ten-

(Continued on Page 4)
‘Sexual Perversity’ needs spark

(Continued from Page 3)

boiling and weaving to rhythms which are not of his making, unfiltering because they are not human.

Other touches, besides the drumming of David Rovern ‘81, nicely foreshadowed Jones’ forgone dream. The fishnets which hung from the ceiling were, in addition to representing natural foliage, symbols of Jones literal entrapment and veils between the present and his past, which he futilely attempts to destroy. Tyree Jones ‘82, playing Jones, spoke in a loud, unceasing monotone which I at first glanced as unexpressive, but which eventually acquired a spell-binding, incantatory effect as Jones became progressively more mentally deranged. Lighting was unorthodox and very intelligent: yellow beams suggested an appropriately stillling ardity rather than sul-[f]urned warmth by day while the night scenes were made super-natural by the use of blue and green tones.

Special effects are continual movement in Emperor, like the subject of sex in Sexual Per-ver-sity, served to ensure audience attentiveness. More often than not, Manque and Grown productions could produce a tabula rasa on the minds of acting alone, and these two plays were not ex-ception. As far as I could tell, the set was to act informal, to hold realistically delusive conversation was a more specific failing in both plays, though more noticeable in Em-peror. While the later stages of the O’Neill play did not suffer from emotionally charged conversation, initial talk between Jones and Smithers (Tim Walker ’79) did, resulting in a permanent foreshadowing of Jones’ fate.

A comparison with television is apt when one sees Sexual Per-ver-sity; I drew a parallel with a slightly more adult version of Love, American Style. A Neil Simon-like integration of many stories into a semi-coherent, whole, Sexual Perversity, directed and designed by Chris Grant, was a more than acceptable attempt to get a full treatment of sexual issues in television. In Chicago, I noted several implications which are meant to be outrageous and outrageous lines which are really supposed to be probing and subtle in an attempt, I would guess, to raise all kinds of profound questions in the audience’s collective sexual consciousness. After seeing Sexual Perversity, I was best by several rather unprofound questions such as, “Why in Chicago?” some kind of symbolic link between the angular furniture on the set and the skyline of the Windy City, and “Why perform this play?” It is inappropriate to compare Manque and Grown’s latest offering of one-act plays with TV’s sensory overload, but, in their own form of entertainment, the Emperor Jones’, by Eugene O’Neill, and Sexual Perversity in Chicago, by David Mamet use highly concentrated formats to achieve an evening of moderately enter-taining, if undistinguished theatrical fare.

Although the cast (totally Tom Woodward ’90) carried off their parts with a tongue-in-cheek zeal which was at least humorously tasteful, the acting did not add up to anything simple since it required little skill; the words were sensational enough to get chuckles by themselves.

The dialogue in Sexual Per-ver-sity could hardly be less formal but seems to suggest a ritual nature. Sexual Perversity’s dialogue is words—words that can be uttered simply to protect the audience’s integrity.

Professor Daniel W. Armstrong and Mark J. Godat ’79 prepare to run a phase transfer catalyst reaction.

Negatively charged catalyst is positive for Armstrong

Professor Daniel W. Armstrong of Bowdoin’s Chemistry Department has been putting the accent on the negative ... with very positive results.

Dr. Armstrong has been awarded a $10,000 American Chemical Society-Petroleum Research Fund grant for fundamental research in the petroleum industry. Surrounding his work is a phase transfer catalysis (PTC) and Professor Armstrong believes he has discovered the very first negatively charged catalyst. Almost all such reactions in chemistry are done in pure homogeneous solvents, such as water or alcohol.” He said, “Very few are done in mixtures of imcinible (won’t mix) solvents because the different solvents separate just as water and alcohol do that they were the people who best understood their problems and how to solve them; for years they had not been consulted or were otherwise ignored. That is why the programs we have been made by the state about developments on the reservations. Otherwise, the reservation policy of self-determination did conditions on the reservations far from those of the land and housing. Most of the im-

(Continued on Page 5)

PERVORITY needs spark

(Continued from Page 3)

DOSSAGE OF THE WEEK:

“Let’s Lynch Swit!” an unidentified Deke following the Senior class race drawing last Wednesday night.

Sigs edge Faculty, 72-62

Alpha Kappa Sigma used a strong third period to pull away from the Faculty last night to gain a 72-62 decision in White Key basketball competition.

Led by the deadly outside shooting of Harris Weiner, who finished with a game high 29 points, and the inside game of Eric Arvidson and Ben Grant, Kappa Sigma pulled away from a gutsy Faculty team that had managed to stay close through the first half.

The half-hawking of Dick Mersereau and the shooting of Ron Christiansen were the high points for the Faculty who simply couldn’t match the Kappa Sigma muscle underneath.

miscible (won’t mix) solvents because the different solvents separate just as water and alcohol do that they were the people who best understood their problems and how to solve them; for years they had not been consulted or were otherwise ignored. That is why the programs we have been made by the state about developments on the reservations. Otherwise, the reservation policy of self-determination did conditions on the reservations far from those of the land and housing. Most of the im-

(Continued on Page 5)

APRIL 20, 1979

PAGE FOUR

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

FRI, MAR. 2, 1979

LETTERS

(Continued from Page 3)

what? As the case of South Africa illustrates, U.S. involvement at its very beginnings to sheer imperialism and the support of politically and morally corrupt structures of oppression. This intervention is pursued because it is profitable. U.S. corporations and their Western European partners have historically contributed to the development of higher standards of living in so-called less developed World nations. In South Africa, foreign supervised and accelerated industrialization has not, nor is accompanied by a substantial rise in the standard of living for the majority of the population today. Indeed, average wages of Black South Africans has remained below the Poverty Datum Line (PDL) even though the PDL, defined as the minimum income estimated necessary to survive in South Africa, is dif-frentiated by race. That is, according to Apartheid, there is supposed to be less than a 20% difference in income and no rule of conduct such as the Sullivan Principles has led U.S. based corporations to attempt to fund-

(Continued on Page 5)

Get Well Soon

The Orient Staff would like to wish John Cole a speedy recovery so he can finish that story he promised us last week.

(Continued on Page 5)

(Continued on Page 5)
Patching is no panacea for pockmarked campus drive

by MATT HOWE

Bowdoin's heavily traveled central thoroughfare, Campus Drive, is once again a pockmarked road. The winter of 1972-73 was Maine's longest, most severe winter in several years. The weather conditions were so severe that the campus was closed for two days. Despite the precautions taken by the administration to prevent damage to the campus, the road was heavily damaged by the harsh weather. The road was resurfaced several times during the winter, and a new asphalt surface was installed in the spring.

NAACP director to give Russwurm lecture Friday

(BNS) — Benjamin L. Hooks, Executive Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and a member of the Federal Communications Commission, will speak at Bowdoin College March 9.

His address, the third in Bowdoin's 1978-79 series of John Russwurm Distinguished Lectures, will be presented in the Kresge Auditorium of Bowdoin's Visual and Performing Arts Center at 8 p.m.

On a more personal note, Mr. Hooks is perhaps best known for his personal oratory.

A native of Memphis, Tenn., he studied at LeMoyne College there and later at the prestigious Howard University in Washington, D.C., in 1943-44. He received a J.D., degree at the DePaul University College of Law in Chicago in 1948 and has been awarded honorary degrees by Howard, Wilberforce University and Central State University.

Admitted to the Tennessee bar in 1948, Mr. Hooks practiced law in Memphis from 1949 to 1965 and from 1966 to 1972. From 1961 to 1964 he was the Assistant Public Defender in Memphis and from 1966 to 1968 he served as Judge of the Criminal Court of Shelby County.

On Saturday, March 3, at 1:30 p.m., the Bowdoin Ski Team will be sponsoring a Cross-Country Ski Race open to all. Dubbed the "Cold Duck Classic 1979," Cold Duck will be served along the way and the finish will take place at the Pickard Field House of Longfellow. A $1.75 entry fee is required. For further information, contact Bob Bass or Fred Barnes at 725-6566.

Prostrate once, BFI now stands on its own two feet.

Armstrong given grant to pioneer petro-research

(Continued from Page 4) time.

"One of the troubles with PTCs," he stated, "is that all of the known catalysts are positively charged in their active forms. This severely limits the number and types of reactions one can do."

Not any longer. With the new negatively-charged catalyst, a large number of PTC reactions are now possible that previously were impossible," Dr. Armstrong said. Presently he and three student aides are at work testing and framing a pattern process which will be published shortly. Dr. Armstrong's students who are working on the project are seniors Mark Godat, Wayne Brent and Christopher McManus.

One of the papers analyzing the project work, said Dr. Armstrong, carries Godat's name along with his own.

A patent is also being sought, and those papers have been already placed in the hands of the proper authorities in the name of Dr. Armstrong and Bowdoin College.

"We've begun testing several different reactions, before else does," Dr. Armstrong said, noting that secrecy about the specific process is unfortunately necessary, until the patent application is submitted, to insure credit for the discovery.

Dr. Armstrong notes that industry might well profit from this research. "There's a good possibility that we'll come up with a process that's less expensive, less dangerous to use, or who knows, maybe even a whole new product," he said.

THE DEPARTMENT OF RELIGION PRESENTS THREE FILMS ON CARL JUNG:

In Search of Soul 67,000 Dreams
The Mystery that Heals
THURSDAY, 8 MARCH, 4 p.m. KRESGE AUDITORIUM. THE PUBLIC IS CORDIALLY INVITED.
College to abstain in resolutions from South Africa

(Continued from Page 3)
as a result of student and faculty concern expressed at an open meeting last month.

The decision to add one more student faculty member to the ten-man group made up of two Trustees, Overseers, Alumni Council members, Faculty and students was made at the Committee's last meeting, February 16. The action everts the lopsided "campus" as opposed to "outside" representation. Announcement of the two new members' names is expected to come next week.

President Enteman, who, for the group last November, had no intention of misrepresenting any part of the College constituency when he deeded it to Dean Nylon.

The Committee also accepted an invitation from the Struggle and Change Organizing Committee to participate in a panel discussion of the question, "How should Bowdoin respond to apartheid in South Africa?" Four members of the advisory committee and four students from the Bowdoin Women's Association (BWA), the Afro-American Society, and Bowdoin Union of Students (BUS) will address the question Friday, April 20, at 3 p.m. in the Daggett Lounge of the Senior Center.

Professor Malcolm Goldstein, conductor and violinist whose works have been performed throughout North America and Europe, will present an "Evening of Improvisations" in the Daggett Lounge of the Senior Center Sunday night, at 7:30 p.m.

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chili Sauce Creamsicles — Bruno Setzer Hot Dog Stand

The Chemistry of Love
CREATIVE ARTISTRY

3 Diamonds surrounded by intertwining circles of 14k gold, set in 14k white gold. Ring engaged to show detail.

B.H. BOOKER
96 Maine Street, Brunswick

EXECUTIVES react to 'slap in face,' debate with Am
(Continued from Page 1)pointing out that because so few blacks are students at Bowdoin an unregulated flow of whites into the society could detrimentally influence important votes on black issues at the Am. "There are usually about twenty people at a meeting," he explained. "Five more whites are going to make a difference.

Although the vote did support the society's decision, Afro-Am Chairman Michael Henderson '79 was concerned that the action was questioned. "I am very unhappy that so many people can't see beyond the first cold slap on the face," he said.

There have been several reports that support of the society's vote by the College could be illegal, but Dean of Students Wendy Fairley could not be reached for comment and there has been no confirmation of the reports.

This week, the recipient of the Orient's Dubious Achievement Award goes to whoever thought of the color of this semester's campus directory. Perhaps patriotic in any kind a color.

Prescriptions
Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine Street
Brunswick, Maine 04011
Telephone 725-4331

LETTERS

(Continued from Page 4)
A fair settlement seems to me to be everyone's advantage. The state, the federal government and the tribes would be agreeing to a solution. It is litigation and the resulting cloud on titles of up to half the state during litigation that could cause ill feelings and economic hardships.

Malady
To the Editor:
In the last several months it has come to our attention that a strange malady has invaded the Bowdoin student body. In addition to the usual complaints about a dearth of social activity, men are heard to say that Bowdoin women are "disinterested in men" and consequently either worthless or snobs. On the female front, men are described as equally disinterested... or worse. At the same time, two interesting developments have come up. One is the arrival the "thunder" (a new term apparently inappropriate) of a group called the Bowdoin Men's Association, given to playing with phallic symbols and absurd rhetoric. The other is the lastest "Playboy Club" in an exhibition of scantly-clad male forms, attempting to further the equality of women and men, but ultimately resulting in minery of one of the least admirable rituals of traditionally mal behavior.

What do these recent developments mean? Admittedly, the winters are cold in Maine, but...
Reid takes twelve to Nat's for the thrill of being there

(Continued from Page 8)
the season progressed, as demonstrated by our three matches with Colby." In their first contest against their state rival, the Bears defeated Colby, 5-4. The Mules reversed the tables with a 5-4 victory of their own, then saw Bowdoin run away with a 7-2 victory in the rubber match.

Going to the Men's Nationals at West Point will be Bill Anderson,
Bob Young, Tony Palmer, Wayne Brent and Hugh Wiley. "I'm not expecting anyone to win down there," Reid predicts. "I'm bringing six players because it's a tremendous experience and more of a reward than an attempt to capture any medals. Just the chance to play against different colleges and almost 180 men is worth the trip."

In looking back on the season,
Reid states that he "was happy with how many new kids started playing and not in terms of wins and losses."

Reid also echoes LaPointe's sentiments in saying, "the difficulty is that the upcoming freshmen have very little experience.
I have to start from scratch, and although their improvement is considerable it is difficult to produce results when the kids spend all summer working out a squash racket." I'm definitely looking for a better record and again the key factor will be the amount of ex-poure of the incoming freshmen," he says in analyzing next year's prospects.

Laurie Mish skates her last home game for the Polar Bears. Levesque says the ice-men are not finished yet as he predicts a victory over Salem
State.

Tracksters better themselves
by DUNBAR LOCKWOOD
Several personal bests and new Bowdoin records marked the Women's track performances at the New England Track and Field
Championships held at Boston University last Saturday. "The girls all bettered their times except for Beth Finders who had been away on vacation," said Lynn Rudy, the women's outdoor track coach.

Karla Krausser reached the semi finals in the 50 meters. She ran it in 7.4, a new Bowdoin record, but had been placed in a fast heat and so did not qualify for the finals. Krausser's time for the finals, however, was faster than those of the 5th and 6th place finishers in the finals. She also reached the semi finals in the 200 meters.

Joan Benoit had the stellar performance of the meet finishing first in both the mile and two mile run. In the former, she set a new Bowdoin record. Benoit also qualified for the Easterns to be held at Princeton.

Diane Houghton ran a personal best in the 800 meters. The 4 x 200 meter relay team, composed of Finders, Houghton, Pelletier and McCormick, came in 8th place and set a new Bowdoin record. The same team, with the substitution of Houghton for Krausser, also finished 6th in the mile relay.
Also competing were Mary Leu
Higgins in the 55 meter hurdles and Beth Finders in the 400 meters.

Karla Krausser commented on the meet: "One thing that bothered me was that the people qualifying for the finals by their time got their time in a heat. It's now fair to qualify by time."

Joan Benoit, ranked 1st in the United States in recent track and field News magazine, said, "the meet was well worth it. There were a lot of personal bests." When asked about the Easterns she replied, "I don't know what to expect there.
It'll certainly be more competitive." With the exception of Benoit and McCormick, who will tavel to Princeton, the women have finished their indoor season.

"Just being in the meet is pretty good," said men's coach Sabanac, summing up the results of Bowdoin's competitors at the New England's last Saturday and Sunday.

Freshman Mark Preece was the only athlete from Bowdoin to place. For a new Bowdoin record Preece high jumped 6'7" and tied for fourth place giving Bowdoin three points. He narrowly missed his 6'9" attempt. Mark Fisher also had a fine performance reaching the semi finals, of the 440. With his best open time, Fisher missed the finals by one tenths of a second.
Other Bowdoin competitors were Mike Conner in the 400 and Rick
D'Auteuil in the 880.

Brunswick Tour &
Travel

On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK
TEL. 725-5587

Brunswick Tour &
Travel

STEAK HOUSE
FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 MAIN ST., BRUNSWICK, MAINE 725-9384
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner
and Sundays for brunch 12:30

Wed. & Thurs., Mar. 7th & 8th
Bombay Bicycle Band
Fri. & Sat., Mar. 9th & 10th
Dandurand & Kleeman

SALE

Tentine Mall
9 Pleasant Street
Downtown Brunswick
725-5573
Women defeat USM

by DAN FERRANTE

"The home court advantage is worth two points and no more," said Coach Merresseau after avenging the loss suffered to University of Southern Maine earlier in the season. It was one of the girls' third only losses and the winningest team on the Bowdoin campus containing to roll after a 54-50 win over USM.

Last time they met Bowdoin fell in overtime 54-56. Merresseau attributed the loss to a number of factors but mainly that he did not substitute enough. "The women were fired by the time we reached overtime," he remarked. "I didn't substitute enough and it hurt us." The coach also predicted that a win over USM would take, rebounds for the record and overall a healthy team. His prophecy came true as the women held on to a two-point lead for the better part of the last two minutes of play to win the game.

The first half saw saw both teams get a little bit sloppy, Nancy Brinkman led with twelve points as the teams retained 27-25. Bowdoin, at the end of the first half of play. The game remained close throughout, while both teams changed from zone presses to man defenses to keep the pressure on. The story of the second half was all Jill Pinigre and Nancy Brinkman who primarily pulled the team together in the final minutes. Pinigre hit a foul shot with 1:17 left to play to make the score 47-45. USM put a quick breakaway lay-up plus a foul shot to bring the score to 19-48 but Brinkman led the game with a ten foot jump shot to reach the final score of 51-49. This was with 1:21 left to play amazingly enough and the Brinkman-Pinigre combination kept the ball alive of the offensive boards for three plays in a row to kill the clock.

The win was a big one and should the team second in the upcoming state tournament. Before that, however, the team will participate in a nine-team tournament on Saturday. The tournament will include Smith, Williams, Amherst, Bates, Connecticut College, Mt. Holyoke, Union, and Wesleyan. Three teams will play in a round-robin competition, making up each division.

Women and men squash travel to post season play

by JOHN SHAW

The women's squash team ended regular season play with a record of thirteen victories and eight losses. The Lady Bears finished at tenth in the nation. "It was a good season," admits assistant coach though, which accounts for our having the potential to be stronger. We should have beaten Dart- keep them to lose, who won. .

Representing Bowdoin in the Women's Nationals held at Western University will be Karine Tong, Margaret White, and the outstanding Andrea Todaro, whom coach Ed Reid describes as being able to compete with the best of his men players. According to LaPointe, their chances lie with the luck of the draw. "There are eighteen A teams competing in the Nationals, and you can already pretty much predict that Princeton will capture the first, second, and third with Yale, Trinity, Williams, and Harvard pulling behind."

LaPointe projects that "as far as next year goes we will be hurt by the graduation of our three seniors, but with Bozzano and Linda Boggs we did have a great freshman turnout this year, though we are actually one of our squad of fifteen girls this year, eight more than ever before. If we keep them working, they're bound to improve."

Salem again

Iceman travel to play-off

by DANNY MENZ

Bowdoin enters the playoffs tomorrow night as the last unbeaten team and a final regular season defeat to Lowell last Wednesday 7-4. On Thursday night the Vikes seeded the Bears 5th meaning they will take on 4th ranked Salem State this weekend. In the first round Bowdoin beat the Vikings in the regular season 7-0 up here.

The loss to Lowell can be attributed to one line and one defense pair. The Chief's starting five accounted for all seven goals. Bowdoin got one a spot from Dave Boucher, Ron Marcellus, Kevin Brown and Bob Devany. The score after the first period was tied 2-2, but the last skating Lowell team outscored the Bears 3-1 in the second period to take a lead they didn't relinquish.

Monday night was another rough game against Colby with 38 minutes in penalties called. The Pollies held lead an 8-0 lead on two goals by Mike Carman and one from Brown, only to have the stuttering Bowdoin fight back to 3-2. Paul "Hill" Devin scored Bowdoin's fourth goal, which went to be the winner as Colby tallied one more with 22 seconds left after they had pulled their goalies for an extra skater.

Last Saturday's rout over Hamilton may have been helped by the long road trip the Competition had to take out to Maine. It's an eight hour drive from Clinton, New York and they had to play Colby Monday night. But Bowdoin was also still flying from their victory over Boston College. In the contest the Bears got two tallies aside from Roger Elliott, Devany and Marcellus and one each from Mike Collins, Mark Rabito and Mark Pletts.

Looking at the injuries, the P-Bears are an ailing club. The list includes Boucher (indefinite), Pletts (probable), Devaney (probable, Steve McNeil appendix operation (doubtful),

Grapplers finish strong youth hope for future

by CHRIS BENSINGER

"Not only do we have to get emotionally psyched up to contend against your opponent," comments senior and captain Tom Tanks Gamper, "but you have to be the winner in constant combat with the scale in order to make it."

"This exemplifies the struggle but progressing. 1978-79 wrestling season that ended last weekend at the New England Championships. Stunning victory performances by sophomores Erin Votolato and Emmett Lynne gave the Polar Bears 6% points overall. Two detrimental injuries to "Gampe" and Dave Seward hurt the team's chances of showing further prowess. But one week earlier, the team placed 5th in the Northern New England Championships. Place we were supposed to be the winner as Colby tallied one more with 22 seconds left after they had pulled their goalies for an extra skater.

Last Saturday's rout over Hamilton may have been helped by the long road trip the Competition had to take out to Maine. It's an eight hour drive from Clinton, New York and they had to play Colby Monday night. But Bowdoin was also still flying from their victory over Boston College. In the contest the Bears got two tallies aside from Roger Elliott, Devany and Marcellus and one each from Mike Collins, Mark Rabito and Mark Pletts.

Looking at the injuries, the P-Bears are an ailing club. The list includes Boucher (indefinite), Pletts (probable), Devaney (probable, Steve McNeil appendix operation (doubtful),

Grapplers finish strong youth hope for future

by CHRIS BENSINGER

"Not only do we have to get emotionally psyched up to contend against your opponent," comments senior and captain Tom Tanks Gamper, "but you have to be the winner in constant combat with the scale in order to make it."

"This exemplifies the struggle but progressing. 1978-79 wrestling season that ended last weekend at the New England Championships. Stunning victory performances by sophomores Erin Votolato and Emmett Lynne gave the Polar Bears 6% points overall. Two detrimental injuries to "Gampe" and Dave Seward hurt the team's chances of showing further prowess. But one week earlier, the team placed 5th in the Northern New England Championships. Place we were supposed to be the winner as Colby tallied one more with 22 seconds left after they had pulled their goalies for an extra skater.

Last Saturday's rout over Hamilton may have been helped by the long road trip the Competition had to take out to Maine. It's an eight hour drive from Clinton, New York and they had to play Colby Monday night. But Bowdoin was also still flying from their victory over Boston College. In the contest the Bears got two tallies aside from Roger Elliott, Devany and Marcellus and one each from Mike Collins, Mark Rabito and Mark Pletts.

Looking at the injuries, the P-Bears are an ailing club. The list includes Boucher (indefinite), Pletts (probable), Devaney (probable, Steve McNeil appendix operation (doubtful),
Who will supply the furniture? Afro-Am president Michael Henderson says it's the College's responsibility. Orient/Zeta

New Furniture at Afro-Am? Society decides, says Nyhus

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

To be or not be, that is the question concerning the Afro-American Society's furniture.

According to Am chairman Michael Henderson '78, the society is in desperate need of new furniture for its center. "The furniture is old and shabby," he said. "Our cleaning lady fell through one of the couches one time when she was standing on it. We need soft chairs in the library. -- all we have are tenny, hard, wood chairs."

"A newspaper came to take pictures of the Am when we had our dedication, and we had to go out and buy new curtains because the old ones were so torn and dirty, they were beyond cleaning."

Henderson added that he would like to have new furniture before Benjamin Bock from the NAACP comes to speak at the College, under the sponsorship of the Am.

Estimated cost of new furniture, according to the chairman, would run from $2,500 for quality similar to what was originally bought, to $1,400 for slightly poorer quality, to $700 for repainting of the present furniture.

There are several problems, however, in obtaining any amount of money for the project immediately. Ordinarily budgetary process stipulates that money requests be submitted in the late summer or early fall, and if

(Continued on Page 2)

BOPO results

Poll examines frat sexism

by JOEL LAFLUR

The Bowdoin Opinion Polling Organization (BOPO) this week released the results of its latest poll: a study of student attitudes toward fraternity sexism, the role of women in Bowdoin fraternities, and the possibility of sororities at Bowdoin. A total of 102 students, chosen randomly by the computer, responded. The computer was used to tabulate the results and also to cross-tabulate, that is, to examine the responses of specific groups such as female fraternity members versus female independents. The results of the poll were discussed and analyzed at a BOPO meeting Tuesday night.

Slightly over one-half of the students polled responded that they thought Bowdoin fraternities discriminate on the basis of sex. Fifty percent of the female fraternity members and 79 percent of the female independents polled thought that Bowdoin fraternities do discriminate on the basis of sex. On the issue of women's status in Bowdoin fraternities, the opinion that women ought to be full national members was held by only 19 percent of male fraternity members, compared to 28 percent of female fraternity members, 47 percent of male independents and 56 percent of the female independents polled.

That women ought to be full local members was the response of nearly one-half of all fraternity members and about one-third of all independents polled. Twenty-nine percent of male fraternity members responded that women ought to be social members, a view shared by only 12 percent of all women and 16 percent of the independent men polled. Although there was no large response by any group that women ought not to be members in Bowdoin fraternities, it is worth noting that nearly one-third of the male fraternity members polled think that women ought not to be more than social members in fraternities. One-third is a significant minority, and it is from this group that the greatest opposition to a change of women's status in all fraternities may be expected to come.

Sororities explored

The possibility of having sororities on the Bowdoin campus as an alternative to co-ed fraternities has been suggested. About one

(Continued on Page 5)

AT A GLANCE: HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE LATEST BOPO POLL

What should the status of women be in Bowdoin fraternities?

- Full national members: 33.3%
- Full local members: 34.3%
- Social members: 16.7%
- Not members at all: 4.9%

Do you see sororities as a viable alternative to the co-ed fraternities at Bowdoin?

- Yes: 26.5%
- No: 64.7%
- No opinion: 8.8%

Rate the performance of the Dean of Students' office...

- Excellent: 2.9%
- Very good: 4.9%
- Good: 26.5%
- Fair: 33.3%
- Poor: 30.4%

Zeta Psi officers foresee possible dissolution

by ANGELA BARBANO

For 112 years the Zeta Psi fraternity has played an active role in the Bowdoin College community. In a matter of months, the embattled fraternity may be forced to close its doors.

Local vs. National

For the past five years, Zeta Psi women have been able to vote in house meetings, and hold all offices but national ones. Since last semester, Zete has been operating under a system which allows women to hold all house positions at the local level. Under this system, women are elected to local positions (as opposed to national positions), while the male members elect a second set of representatives to act for them in national matters.

Last Thursday, Robert Cohen '81, president of Zete, received a resolution from the national which reduced the status of women to social members. Cohen himself was shocked by the national's reply to their membership inquiry, saying: "No one really expected the National to come down so hard."

"Robert Cohen interpreted the resolution as a "mandate" from the national. In other words, the National's resolution is not subject to a vote by Bowdoin Zetes, and takes effect immediately.

Before the resolution was received, three women held official positions at Zete. They were Teresa Chisholm '82, Marie Buckley '80, and Stephanie Lynn '82. Now that the National has reaffirmed its all-male membership, these women have, in effect, been removed from office. Cohen does not know when the Zete national leadership first became aware of the fact that women were voting and holding office at the Lambda Zete. However, he emphasized, the national never gave its explicit approval to such a digression from the fraternity's constitution.

At a house meeting last Sunday night, a majority of Zete's voted to reject their national's mandate. It should be noted, however, that this was merely a sentiment vote, not an official vote. At this time, a majority position paper, authored by Erik Steele '79, was read to the membership. The paper outlined some reasons for Zete's non-compliance with their national. Robert Cohen cautioned that "Erik Steele may not speak for everyone's views," but agreed that, "basically, he speaks for the house."

Position paper

In this position paper, Steele voiced the hope that "the National Executive Committee will recognize five factors which make out the Bowdoin Zete's situation unique. In summary form, these factors are: 1) Bowdoin's female population has reached almost 50%, 2) Women have been voting members and officers of Zete for five years. When the present members of Zete joined the house, they were "led to believe that the National Executive Committee knew of these changes and accepted them." Bowdoin has no sororities, and therefore has no organized fraternal/social organization for women. 3) A large majority of the house members and the National members, in particular, favor equal status for women," and 4) Bowdoin's administration is moving to equalize the position of women in the local chapters.

The future of Zeta Psi fraternity is a question mark. Orient/Zeta

(Continued on Page 2)
Zetes ponder next move after National mandate

(Continued from Page 1)

According to Robert Cohen, Zete's intent on rejecting the National's mandate was not to bring immediate disaffiliation with the National. Rather, the majority of Zetes see their rejection of the mandate as a tactical move. As Cohen stated, "The desire is not to destroy the house, but to create a certain amount of deterioration in the National's resolutions may be a tactic for compromise." Some Zetes would like to see a mediator brought in.

Whether the National will be willing to compromise remains doubtful. The tone of the National resolution was very blunt and conciliatory. Monday night Cohen spoke with the Executive Secretary of the National and recently read him Steele's position paper. At that time, the Secretary would not comment on whether or not a sentiment for compromise existed with the Executive Committee.

This Sunday, March 11, the Executive Secretary of the Zete National, and the Secretary and Treasurer of the House Corporation will hold a meeting with both male and female Zetes. Cohen expects that at that time, the national representatives will see that Zete will not move completely with the mandate and move to suspend the Charter. If the Charter is suspended, the next step will be to bring the matter before the Zete National Convention in September for possible revocation. If the Lambs Charter is revoked, the house will be closed by the Corporation and the Board of Elders.

Cohen's most immediate concern is to resolve the local/national dispute as soon as possible, so that housing decisions may be made for next year. Cohen has also stated that in the face of the uncertainties raised by present local/national dispute, no one would be willing to live at Zete next year. One alternative does present itself for Zetes with current membership in the National's mandate if their numbers are in the neighborhood of ten. Cohen has said that it would lend financial assurance to the local Zete's existence. A smaller number would be financially unattainable.

Cohen also states that Zete has already lost from between ten to fifteen members, at least partly because of this issue.

In the estimation of many Zetes, the frat debate initiated by the Bowdoin Student Association was the "catalyst" which led ultimately to the showdown between the local and national organization. Before Thanksgiving vacation, a team of four male Zetes, including several former house presidents, met to propose how the position of women in the Executive Committee in which four modifications to the membership proposal were suggested. By some, this reply was taken as the "go-ahead" from the National. Three of the members were sustained on acceptance, fourth, dealing with the male-to-female ratio, was rejected flat out. This founding out the number of women dropping at Zete not exceed the ratio of women-to-men in the total college.

Bowdoin Zetes did make some move to the National by saying that they would agree to that ratio of the sexes, but noted that there was no way to assure that same ratio would eventually drop at Zete. Chris Pappas '81, vice-president of Zete, commented on the uncomfortable position in which this would place Zete, "We might have to turn someone away after they'd already been bid, in order to reach the quota."

Carefree Zetes munch out. But how long can it last? Orient/Zetes

'Thugs' assault students

by GEOFF WORRELL

There were two assaults and one case of vandalism perpetrated against students by Brunswick town youths last Saturday.

"I was walking down Boody Street and I saw four guys halfway down the road to Chi Psi," said one male student. "One of them asked me for a match. I stuck both my hands out at each side. I got wasted. I thought they were Brunswick town kids but when I first saw them. One guy hit me in the face and I pushed him in the snow. After that, the other three guys jumped on me. I don't know how long they hit me for."

The student was kicked in the face and head, with two black eyes, had both lips lacerated, and suffered headaches for two days. "I didn't report it," he added. "I don't think security could have done anything."

A similar incident occurred to Bill Flachner outside of the Brunswick apartments. "I was coming back from the Visual Arts Center at about 10:45 p.m. when I heard someone running up behind me. Four guys knocked me down and kicked me in my head, neck, shoulders, and ribs," she said.

The students also told the officers that Zetes were the boys who threw rocks through the windows at 14 Cleveland Street. "It was about 4:30 a.m. and we were having a party," offered Grace Willett. "Rocks and pieces of tar started hitting the front window. The rocks broke the front two windows. One rock went through both the storm window and the regular one."

"Most of the trouble Bowdoin has with town youths," offered one Brunswick Police Department Sergeant, "are larcenies, stolen bicycles and things like that. It all depends what kind of mood those things are in."

According to Cohen, the Zete House Elders, and the House Corporation, which is made up of former Bowdoin Zetes, stand firmly behind the National. Tom George '80, summed up the national/house corporation sentiment in the following way: "They would rather see no house existing than a social club existing within the context of the organization."

Contributing to the house corporation's alignment with the National is the belief that the administration is not united in its attempts to create full fraternity equality between the sexes. As Cohen commented, "The House Corporation doesn't really feel that the Governing Boards will compromise to fulfill the sex stipulation." Because of the proposed 2-year non-compliance period, Cohen believes that Zetes believe the house corporation feel they can afford to wait to make membership adjustments.

Reactions to the national mandate have been mixed. If anything, the letter from the national has served to further polarize factions already existing in the house.

Jean Daley '80 expressed the view that "Personally, I believe I have a right to be a full local member."

New type of frat

Chris Crocoll is the self-proclaimed spokesman for a "small" minority of Zetes who are considering dropping completely out of the organization. Crocoll's group is contemplating the formation of a new sort of fraternity. "We might take our jocks and go elsewhere, where someone isn't making the rules. If we can't get along without the building, then we don't belong here," said Crocoll.

At the opposite extreme lies what could be termed a "pro-national" minority. This minority numbers anywhere from seven to twelve members. Kevin Smith '80 feels that within the house, the pro-nationals are "being made to feel like villains." According to Carl Westervelt '80, this "exclusion" is unjustified. As Westervelt stated, "We took an opposite position from the majority. Maybe we created a faction in the house. But we didn't initiate the change which caused the national's hard line to come down on us."

Tom George, another member of the pro-nationals, does not buy the majority's argument that to reject the mandate will provide the Lambda Zete Chapter with a "villain" or "bad guy" to attack. George sees it, "We have only two alternatives: either accept the mandate and lose a house, or reject it and lose the house."

Asking these pro-nationals to express their commitment to the national organization immediately touches on the realm of the emotional. As George stated, "If I did lose my right to have a house under the national guidelines, I would feel resentful. Westervelt found himself somewhat at a loss when asked to describe his commitment to the Zete National: "The organization means something to me. It may not be important to other people. It may be hokey — but I feel a real attachment to the organization."

Kevin Smith expressed one advantage of belonging to the Zete National. "By having a national organization, I can go out of Bowdoin to other horizons and meet the best minds. An organization nationally extends my potential relationships outside of Bowdoin." Kevin Smith seems to sum up the rather sober mood at Zete these days: "The issue has gone so far I don't think that Zete will ever be the same."

New furniture a matter of decisions

(Continued from Page 1)

granted, delivered the year following the request.

The administration has pointed out that there is a discretionary fund of approximately $1200 available to the society from alumni and friends of the Am. Henderson says it is nonrenewable and must be kept intact so it can be used to start Am fund raising projects.

Other avenues of action have also proved to be dead ends to the society. When a group from the Am found that 30 College Street contained a large amount of unused furniture, Dean of the College Paul Nyhus and President Enteman told the group that plans had already been made for the furniture. Identifying this as the college's unwillingness to aid the society, Henderson further claims that the College has a budget surplus which the administration refuses to allocate. "We found out there's money left over this fiscal year from the budget, much more than we need, but they say they're saving it for emergencies."

In response, Dean Nyhus explained that the administration has tied the budget surplus to other projects. "Part of the budget, including money for capital projects, faculty and staff salaries, and student financial aid, has already been formally and legally voted open," he said.

Technically, the remaining money had been budgeted for next year, but in fact it was decided where it would go last fall. The Governing Boards recently reviewed a figure for expenditures for this academic year, and there was a clear understanding that there are any changes in the budget then and the formal voting, it would be toward a smaller, not larger, amount.

In terms of the non-renewable discretionary fund, Nyhus said President Enteman is willing to approve if for the purchase of furniture. "The fund may be used for any purchase," said Nyhus. "We are members of the Afro-Ame don't want to use it for furniture," he added. Pointing out that the only other option is to go through regular budgetary processes, which would take about two years.

"They have to make a decision on their own," he said. "We want a planned budget. We can't just lurch from one emergency to another."

These are two reasons why the Afro-Ame feels it needs new furniture, Orient/Zetes
Skills of skating Polar Bear may lead mascot into ice show

The next few weeks will be tense ones for Bowdoin College’s ice skating Polar Bear mascot, Laurie Mish. They would be tense ones for anyone who had the opportunity to skate for the internationally-famed Holiday on Ice show. The pert and personable native of Stamford, Conn., is awaiting word from Fritz Dietle, a New Jersey ice arena promoter who doubles as a talent scout for the skating show. Laurie auditioned for him late last year and expects to learn her fate when Mr. Dietle returns shortly from a European trip.

"He told me that he’s never recommended anyone who was turned down for the show," said Laurie, adding that he would personally hand his recommendation and picture of her to show officials during his March trip. A close friend from her high school, whose skated with the show for a year, gave Laurie the idea initially. Her tryout was a brick wall at which was asked to do every jump and spin she knew. "I think what he was mostly interested in seeing was if I looked comfortable and secure on the ice," she said.

Laurie, who is in her last year at Bowdoin, believes the experience she has gained from competing about the ice in a Polar Bear costume, to the delight of fans at intermissions of home hockey contests, will also weigh favorably in her bid to join the professional skating tour. A picture of Laurie in the costume accompanied her recommendation.

At Bowdoin’s last home game this season, against Lowell, Laurie was honored for her four years as skating mascot.

In a brief ceremony between the first and second periods, she received a gift and congratulations from Bowdoin President Willard F. Estesman, Sr. Estesman noted her song performance was accorded an ovation as she skated headlines "to everyone who could see her.

"Skating without the bear’s head in costume hadn’t even been a deliberate action before," Laurie remembers with a laugh.

"When I started doing this as a freshman I was afraid at first. The first suit the school had was really difficult for me to maneuver around in. It had a football helmet tucked inside the neck, and whether thing fit snugly. Sometimes the head would be going one way and the helmet another," she said.

"In that particular suit I looked out through the mouth of the head and I had to use a prop to try to hold the whole thing in place," she added.

Further problems included the weight of the suit ("I weighed 10 pounds but felt like 50") and her own diminutive stature. "The body of the suit is designed for a person six feet tall," said the 5'2" Laurie, who weighs about 110 pounds. The skater rolled up the move to the lower ankles, and allowed the rest of the material to "drop down naturally."

Calamities were bound to befell her, and they did.

After the funny stories all lending skates and her head fell off. The football helmet and everything just flew right off and I skated without it. The crowd thought that was really funny. Another time the little cap I wore under the football helmet came down over my eyes and I couldn’t see. Then I couldn’t skate. That’s just really unnerving, particularly with the Zambooli ice-making machine going up and down the ice around me," she recalled.

Along with the funny memories, Laurie has a few serious ones. "I got to skate at "St. Anne Square Garden at a game" had there "no," she said.

(Continued on Page 9)

---

Imporved BOR wants more watts on the air

By JAN CROSBY

After being off the air for a full semester, WBOR is making a dynamic comeback this semester, airing 17 hours a day, seven days a week. As Mike Sharon ’79, station manager in charge of programming, views the station’s present performance, "In the four years that I’ve seen WBOR, it is now quite different. I really believe there has been a dramatic change for the better." Though the college may be back on the air, stronger than ever, this could be only temporary. Unless WBOR takes the necessary action, it may be forced off the air by January 1, 1980, due to a new Federal Communications Commission ruling.

In an effort to clear the crowded educational band found between 88 and 92 megahertz, the FCC wants to eliminate the over 500 ten-watt stations operating with Class D licenses which it issued after 1953. As one of these stations, WBOR must choose one of the given options if it wishes to remain on the air.

Among the available options are a change from the present non-commercial, educational station to the commercial portion of the FM band, or staying with the present frequency. If the station chooses the latter option, it must agree to accept interference from any other station and to vacate that frequency if another group applies for it.

Though some alternatives are more feasible than others, the station managers of WBOR, Mike Sharon ’79 and Mike Tardiff ’79, feel the best solution is to increase transmitting power to at least 100 watts, converting to minimum Class A facilities. This option, they feel, is the only one which insures stable operation in the future.

At present, the station runs on a budget of $5,700 a year which is almost entirely funded by the Student Activities Fund. Though the station currently has sufficient funds, it expects to scrape $8,000 out of its current budget.

While the station’s proposals are investigated and debated, the management and staff are working to improve the quality of the station’s programming. "Though not broadcasting last semester, the station was still operating, collecting funds for the studio’s personnel and improving the personnel department.

Sharon remarks of himself and Tardiff, "Together we took much of the weight on our shoulders of keeping WBOR alive." With the help of a few others, they have set up a mandatory personal training program to be offered to the end of each semester in preparation for the next. This program consists of two training sessions lasting two to four hours each, followed by a written exam. Sharon notes the success of WBOR’s first training program, "The first two sessions were in the studio with the others have left us with what I feel to be a fairly alert staff. And as a result of that, in my first essay no one had been making it sounding as good or even in the same ballpark."

In addition to the new training program, vast improvement in publicity has added to the present success. As Sharon points out, "This year more than any other, WBOR can be seen on campus." This increased visibility includes a lot more posterizing and displaying of the WBOR logo at every hockey game.

Sharon also reports an increase in communication among the station’s staff. There is more talk among the dj’s and newsletters are circulated to keep them up to date. The station managers will be doing a dj rating until spring break. As Sharon explains the rating, "It is to help the dj’s personally and to help in scheduling next year."

In less than a year, WBOR has shown vast improvements in the quality of its staff selection and of its programs. As Sharon sees it, "WBOR is much improved overall the past. It is a realistic radio station, not a half-baked little club anymore."

As to the future of WBOR, its progress looks very promising. "WBOR is ready to handle the responsibilities which accompany enlarging their scope into the public realm," Sharon seems quite confident. "In the move to higher power, we will be in good condition because the quality of programming and show is much higher and we will have a lot of returning people."
The epitome of turpitude

Those unfortunate enough to have read last Saturday's Portland Press Herald could not help but notice two smiling faces on page one — Robert Cohen, Editor-in-Chief of the Bates Student, the campus newspaper of the Lewiston college, and former President Richard M. Nixon. The Student had seen fit to present the ex-Chief Executive with the first in a series of communications awards. Nixon’s award was specifically for his efforts in "international communications."

We feel compelled to question this action for several reasons, but it must be said that the Student, which went so far as to pay for Cohen’s round trip airfare to San Clemente for the presentation, has the right to spend its money and bestow its awards in any fashion it so desires. However, it is the obligation of the rest of the community to protest these actions when it feels an injustice is being performed.

The first and most glaring complaint we wish to raise is the choice of the disgraced Nixon as recipient of the award. The engraved plaque that he received recalls his journeys to the Far East, South America, the Soviet Union, and China. What the plaque fails to mention is the irreparable damage done to the image and prestige of the United States because of his continued prosecution of the Vietnam War and, of course, the Watergate Affair. This country is still suffering from these contributions of Mr. Nixon.

Secondly, we protest the nature of the award itself. By engraving the plaque with the name of Bates College, the Student associated the award with the College. Yet the award was strictly the brainstorm of the Student editorial board. There is no question that a large portion of the student body and faculty wants nothing to do with the prize as evidenced by the 500-strong demonstration of last Tuesday. One placed seemed to sum up their point rather succinctly: "Cohen speaks for his own stupid self."

One must call into doubt the motivation of the editorial board regarding its selection of Mr. Nixon. It is doubtful that the Board simply wished to honor a "distinguished" American because there are many others untainted by the stain of corruption that blankets Mr. Nixon. If the imputes behind the presentation was partially cheap publicity, which is not unlikely, then the Student is guilty of prostituting its name and its one hundred and six-year history.

An action such as this obviously does Bates College no good at all and causes us to recall an Orient editorial of the past century in which this paper chastised Bates for slandering Bowdoin:

"The gulf that rolls between the prestige of Bowdoin and that of Bates is still so broad that it cannot be easily bridged by your little slips of memory."

The beginning of foreign investment in South Africa is, of course, a tactical question; it is a means of undermining the power of the apartheid regime. But it is of such importance that there can be no compromise whatsoever about it from our point of view. Foreign investment is a pillar of the whole system which maintains the virtual slavery of the black workers in South Africa." — John Gaetsewe, General Secretary of the South African Congress Trade Unions, December, 1977.

"SASO sees foreign investments as giving stability to South Africa's exploitive regime ... For it is evident that foreign investments." — Policy statement of the South African Students Organizations Joint Council.

Professor Fothom also contends that it would be effective to work within U.S. corporations and try to pressure them into effecting change in South Africa. However, it is unrealistic to expect that corporations which have a long history of resisting unionism as well as affirmative action in this country (where it is guaranteed by law) to do so in South Africa (where it is against the law). The ideology of reform ignores the fact that apartheid is an extremely difficult policy to change: it is very difficult to obtain union support, and even the most ideologically and economically deprived areas called "homelands", disallows them freedom of movement and restricts them to tiny black labor markets and black property. "Homeland" is a euphemism for white racism.

"Two million sixty million people live in South Africa today. Only four million, all of them white, are citizens ... The Africans were born in South Africa, grew up in South Africa, worked in South Africa, and will die in South Africa — but they are black, and thus they forever mark this "country". They can exercise political power and organize economic power. African-Americans are segregated, live in ghettos, have their own schools, and one can exercise political power and organize economic power. African-Americans have their own schools, and one can exercise political power and organize economic power. African-Americans, by and large, have their own schools, and one can exercise political power and organize economic power. South Africans, on the other hand, have their own schools, and one can exercise political power and organize economic power. South Africans, on the other hand, have their own schools, and one can exercise political power and organize economic power. "Thus, the issue of power is at the core of the black demand for change in South Africa. Africans are not struggling and dying to reform or improve apartheid."

(Continued on Page 8)
Fries of Mother Jones

by PETER HONCHABURK

On the weekend of March 21, Boston's Little Flur Theatre considerably deepened the dimensions of the Bowdoin stage on Krenke Auditorium. Their production of The Furies of Mother Jones was regaled by a technical expertise in the arts and crafts of theatre and a compelling concentration of performance borne of an uncommonly sincere belief in their message.

Their message: that the people of Appalachian mining towns are indeed all workers. They should take their cue from the wit and willingness of "Mother" Jones, a plucky old mining widow who was constantly rallying miners against the oppressive bosses and scams (non-union workers). Ironically, it is the very message-consciousness which quickly becomes oppressive to some audiences, so that the serious flaw in the piece is where it strives to involve, too early alienation.

I say 'to some audiences' because it is obvious that bringing The Furies of Mother Jones to Bowdoin. Little Flags was, to some degree, out of their element. A pattern by remark: none of the company members really hammed for the fact home playing at Bowdoin "was a little different from the time we played in Stearns, Kentucky and all the men in the audience had to leave at intermission because a mob of scabs had threatened to burn their house." The mountain people

The play aims at sensitizing the spectator to the plight of the mountain people, but also to the spectacular jubilation. The latter is best conveyed through a song like "Yahoe" which serves as integral to the lives of the people as a folk song. Similarly the "Nightsong" motif in the second act most effectively evoked an authentic sense of the people, stirring out the blocking, particularly in one scene which constrained the townfolk with their intellectual policies. They helped to introduce the Bowdoin crowd to the determination in the physicality of these people of the land. In the next morning's workshop, Maxim Klein articulated this theme further by encouraging openness and width of movement rather than constriction which, she said, too often informs one's posture in today's society.

The same basic problem of over-politicizing applied to the revelation of character and plot as in an early scene where one woman would take great pains to point out the goodness of "home made to fit" and then warn her husband in excruciating detail of the dangers inherent in working the mines. Moreover, the character of "Mother Jones" is neccessarily woven into the fabric of the work. In fact, each time the audience is on the brink of finding out a particularly moving scene (and there are several), she can be counted upon to jump onto the stage and rally the listeners around tales of her exploits, deflecting the audience's interest in what amounts to exhibitionism with no further evidence of her trials or heroism.

Nonetheless, Ellen Field was charming in her portrayal of this veritable caricature of Mother Jones. Also particularly notable for their power and presence in character is Diller, who rallies a group of miners around a favorable can-didate for the presidency. Also, and Lynn Von Korff, Robin Sigijt, and Donna Glick, as the women were any, didactic-ally and in-justice perpetrated upon them by the strip-mining industry.

Ellen Field (as Mother Jones), is surrounded by a mob brigade in The Furies of Mother Jones, which played in Krenke Auditorium last Friday.

Direction

For the most part Maxim Klein's direction reinforces the choppiness of the script by spotlighting some of the more didactic instances such as the song This Man Is Down sung by Jim Osterich at intermission while Diller recovers from the 'back alley' style beating he's just taken for his efforts to rally the miners, at the climactic collapse of the mineshaft, rather than letting this delicate and tense image two women and one black man silently grieving for their trapped loved one speak for itself. Klein has the characters turn one again toward the guidance to make a further point of all this.

Between such punctuation marks, however, the staging included quite a few very powerful moments, most notably Jogie's (Lynn Von Korff) eviction from her homestead to make way for the tractors and the entrancing choral effect of the entire company saying the significant words of the prologue in unison.

The design of the set, lighting, and costumes were remarkably cohesive and greatly enhanced the overall effectiveness of the piece. Likewise the music, composed by J. Peter Christoff, was a sincere and insightful reflection of the jubilant and angry frustration of a people. It is unfortunate that the immediacy of this offering is sacrificed by the notion that political theatre is inherently impolite.

BOPO poll analyzes sexism views

(Continued from Page 1)

third of all students polled expressed some interest in this. Slightly over one-fourth of the women polled expressed at least some interest in having sororities on campus. Female members expressed the most interest in having sororities come to Bowdoin, with two-thirds of those polled were at least somewhat interested. Only 17 percent of female students expressed any interest in sororities.

On the question of whether sororities might be a viable alternative to coed fraternities, nearly two-thirds of all students polled responded negatively. Over three-fourths of all women were, and over three-fourths of all independents polled did not see sororities as a viable alternative. It appears safe to say that only a small group of women would be interested in having sororities come to Bowdoin and that the overwhelming majority of students do not think that sororities would succeed as an alternative to coed fraternities.

The final section of the poll dealt with the way in which the college, and particularly the Student Life Committee and The Dean of Students' Office, has handled the fraternities sexism issue. Students were asked to rate the performance of the Dean of Students' Office, Dave DeBoer, head of BOPO, commented that although a women's performance rating was sought, the fact that it was included at the end of the fraternity poll may have elicited responses based on performance regarding fraternity sexism. About two-thirds of all students rated the Dean of Students' Office performances fair or poor; 50 percent of the independents polled and 79 percent of the fraternity members polled gave a fair or poor rating.

Students support for fraternity autonomy runs very high. To the question: "Should the internal financial structure of the fraternities be under college jurisdiction?", more than 83 percent of the students in all groups except female independents responded "no." Fifty-eight percent of all female independents polled responded "no," 21 percent "yes," and 21 percent "no opinion." Students were also asked whether they agreed with the statement: "It is the Student Life Committee's contention that one need not be a member of the discriminatory fraternity to feel embarrassed and oppressed by its practices."

One-half of all students polled agreed at least somewhat with the statement. One-third of fraternity members polled versus two-thirds of independents polled agreed at least somewhat. Only about one-fourth of male fraternity members versus over three-fourths of female independents agreed at least somewhat. About one-half of female fraternity members and male independents agreed at least somewhat with the Student Life Committee's statement. It is apparent that many students, particularly female independents, feel embarrassed and oppressed by the fact that some fraternities discriminate against women in terms of full membership. It is the policy of BOPO not to make recommendations, but to provide the information on which students or groups might choose to base their personal decisions. Students are then free to take whatever actions they wish on the basis of the information furnished.
Watson flashes a championship smile after one of his four NFL titles.

Watson's twenty years at Bowdoin filled with success and excitement.

by BILL STUART

Sid Watson has compiled an enviable record as a hockey coach at Bowdoin College during his twenty years at the helm. His success is even more amazing when his hockey background prior to college is examined.

Jack Gifford, Sports Information Director at Northeastern University, Watson's alma mater, discusses Watson's beginnings in hockey of the football and basketball recruit who ended up playing hockey for the Huskies. "Joe Zebchi, who coached the football team at that time was also the basketball coach. A fellow who was our retired Athletic Director. He had been a hockey coach. He really didn't know much about hockey. Naturally, Joe Zebchi was a little concerned. He had coaches for each and every heavily for the basketball team."

"Herb and Joe made an agreement. "Well look, there's no way we can deny the boy coming out for the sport if that's what he wishes, but certainly it is a little silly if he's going coaching or professional hockey careers of his own." Watson took over as head coach of the Polar Bears in 1959-60. The team, which had enjoyed only four winning seasons since World War II and none during the previous five campaigns, reached the 500 level with an 11-11 record for the impressive rookie. After a 15-5 campaign the following year, the team regressed and suffered through two consecutive losing seasons. Moderate success was enjoyed in the mid-60's, as the squad's record between 1962 and 1967 was about .500. Then, in 1967-68, the winning tradition began. That Polar Bear squad posted an 11-1-1 record. The following campaign saw the Polar Bears finish at the top of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) standings with a 15-3-1 record. The overall mark was 14-4-1.

The next two seasons represent (1968-69 and 1969-70) the era of Bowdoin domination of Division II hockey. The 1968-69 team, captained by Eddie and Steve Hardy, the overachieved on that year's NCAA hockey, posted an 18-3-0 record in Division II play, the first time that feat had been accomplished. After losing two early-season games to Western Ontario and Dartmouth in the Second annual Cleveland Cup Tournament, the squad defeated several opponents such as Merrimack, Middlebury, Northeastern, New Hampshire, and Vermont. In the tournament semi-finals, Ned's three goals lifted the Bears to a 9-1 victory over Maine. In the Division II finals, the squad lost a heartbreaker to Vermont, a Bowdoin victory in sudden death by a 4-3 margin.

That team combined a potent offense with a stingy defense. Sophomore goalie John Bradley was a comer and the team was so strong, 18 games for a 2.11 average. The defense outstanding opponents, 116-53, during the season. The Polar Bears became the first Division II team to participate in the ECAC Holiday Hockey Tournament in New York's Madison Square Garden. Watson then capped the season by being selected the first National College Division Coach of the Year for the year. The 1970-71 edition of the team, which featured All America co-captains Ed Good and Kullen, posted a 19-4-1 mark. The Bears finished at the top of the ECAC Division II standings for the third consecutive year with a 16-2 record. After defeating Norwich in the semi-finals of the tournament, Bowdoin, a strong team in the Division II title. Watson was named National College Division Coach of the Year for the second consecutive year.

The following year the team posted a 14-1 record in Division II and a 24-0 mark overall. Bowdoin signed an agreement, then, with the school as an opportunity to compete for the title. The 1971-72 squad finished the season at 14-6-2 and defeated Williams and Massachusetts in the tournament after changing the agreement. Vermont, though, Watson and the Polar Bears from rejoining the ECAC.

After six consecutive winning seasons, twenty years, that produced 94-29-5 record, the Polar Bears experienced losing once again in 1977 and 1978. But losing did not discourage professional scouts from coming eagerly when Lowell games at Dayton Arena. They scouted Fred Ahrens, who later played for the Cleveland Barons, Colorado Rockies, and is now in the Minnesota North Stars organization.

The slide proved to be short, however, as the 1975-76 team rebounded to compile a 14-9 record, including a 15-3 mark in the Division II competition. The squad was guided by Assistant Mike Watson, and although he is not well known as a professional running back he did enjoy success on the gridiron before applying himself to coaching hockey.

At Northeastern, Watson starred as the team's starting halfback. The 74 points he scored in 1954 still stand as a school record. His 7.1 yards per carry average (768 yards rushing in 108 carries) in 1953 is the second-best single-season rushing average in Husk history. In 1952, his junior year, Watson was selected for All-America honors.

The 5'11", 190-pound runner then signed a free agent contract with the Pittsburgh Steelers. "When he went down with the Pittsburgh Steelers," relates Jack Grinnell '57, head of sports publicity at Northeastern, "he had a roommate and it went down to the final day of cuts. Sid, of course, was kept, and the roommate, Johnny Unis, was cut.""Sid was always a fine gentleman at all times and a hard-nosed football player who'd give you 110%, regardless of whatever it was he was doing," says Unis, who is now retired and manages his Baltimore-area restaurant, The Golden Arm.

Impressive stats Watson spent four years in the National Football League, three with Pittsburgh (1955-57) and one with the Washington Redskins (1958). He rushed for 516 yards in 1959 for a 2.6 yard per carry average. He caught 14 passes, 423 yards, an average of 1.9 yards per reception, a figure that today would rank him first in the league among qualifying running backs.

Watson’s forte, though, was returning kicks. He returned 20 punts for 38 yards in his career, but his 50 career kickoff returns for 1269 yards (an average of 25.4 yards per return) would qualify him for top honors today. As a rookie in 1955, Watson accumulated 716 yards in kickoff returns to establish a single-season Steelers mark that stood for four years. "I recall that he would come up through there recklessly," comments Tom Rein, a teammate with both the Steelers and the Redskins and now an assistant coach with the Philadelphia Eagles, "He would set his feet down and move with the ball, leading the way with the ball carrier."

"He was a great competitor, which you can imagine when you look at his size and learn that he played in the NFL and did the jobs that he did. He would have to be a great competitor." Ted Marchibroda, who now is the head coach of the Baltimore Colts, was a quarterback with the Steelers during Watson's days in the NFL. He still remembers Watson, although they have not seen each other in twenty years. "Probably the thing that I can remember best about him was his competitive streak."

"I can recall one time also when we were playing the Philadelphia Eagles and the ballgame was to be sure that their linebackers didn't clothesline their player in the head and go outstretched arm so that the player's feet were under him - the backs coming out of the back-Field. I went back to pass and next for Sid and got a look at Wayne Robinson, the old Eagles backfielder, costumed Sid. I think it's one of those things. It's a film that wasn't funny to Sid, but it made everybody laugh at it. We went to the movies.

"My experience with Sid while he was a player with the Pittsburgh Steelers is one I won't soon forget. The film of him that was shown in my high school and then at a banquet with the Steelers. I had a great admiration for Sid not only as a player but as a person. His contributions while he was a member of the Steelers were outstanding.

"My most vivid recollection was a game versus the Detroit Lions in Pittsburgh. We had the ball on the Lions 15-yard line and time was running out. We had time for one more play. It was obviously a passing play. Sid broke out from the backfield, circled the middle and got the ball on the 1-yard line, and received the game-winning blazon of my personal lifetime. I had never seen from Detroit Lions the safety John Christenson. It was a thrill that he was able to hold onto the ball, but most disappointing was that Sid was dropped on the 8-yard line and did not score.

"We were down by two touchdowns, "Marv" Holmback admit recalling the situation, "and we called for two and were coming to the third touchdown. The pass was completed to Sid and it was a very controversial play as to whether he was in the end zone. They ruled against us, and as a result we lost the ballgame."

Earl Morrall, who recently retired after a two-decade career in the NFL which included Most Valuable Player honors, admits, "I must say that Sid's outstanding achievements as a hockey coach come as no surprise, as I remember Sid as a very tough competitor who was always striving for excellence."

Complemented with pride

"One of the things I remember most about Sid was his willingness to compete in spite of a great deal of pain. He actually played with a hyper-extended arm. I have only known one other player who insisted on playing with a similar injury and that was the legendary Billy Ray Smith of the Baltimore Colts Championship years.

"Sid was traded to the Redskins after three years in Pittsburgh and played in the nation's capital. Then he retired from the game. "It was not because they didn't want him," his wife, Henrietta, explains of Watson's retirement. "He had come here and working. He was asked to come back after he left. In fact, the coach came to Manhattan and asked him to come back, but he had definitely decided to retire."

He served as offensive backfield coach for the football team for several years, but Watson was no longer associated with the Bowdoin grid program. Today, his football involvement is limited to occasionally bringing his son to a Patriots' game (as he did this fall for a Patriots-Eagle game and a post-game reunion with Broyne), and watching the game on television.

Still, the memories persist; All-America honors, and the establishment of his first college and professional football and election to the NorthEastern University Athletic Hall of Fame in 1975. Watson's football accomplishments may not be as well publicized as his coaching feats, but they stand as a tribute to the diversity of an outstanding athlete and performer."

"Sid was a very critical person, demanding, aloof, distant, and standoffish who whose word was law. He commanded respect and attention, and demanded effort and perfection. Accolades, plaudits, and praise were rare. Criticism, perfectionism, demands, and open presentation of mistakes and errors were common. This I really remember because when you received compliments, which were few and far between, you cherished them and remembered them for a long while.

"In his own strange, sometimes, impersonal style, Sid was always a fair coach who demanded hard work and played those who could. Sid was an extreme, organized and showed me the importance of well-planned practice. There wasn't much standing around at a Bowdoin practice.

A man of few words, Sid seldom showed extreme emotions but when he did find the need to do so, there was no question of his sincerity. One good job from Sid was all any player would ever ask for.

George Chase '78: "The good memories will outweigh the bad memories."

George Chase, who centered the third line in last year's ECAC Division II championship team, echoed the same sentiments. "He almost never gives a compliment, believe me. If you get a compliment from him you have a lot to be proud of. I can't remember once during the entire season last year when he gave me one, at least to my face. He might say something like "good shift" to the whole line as you came off the ice but I always had this warm feeling in my heart, or getting a personal "super job" or a pat on the head after a good game. Then finally we had beaten Merrimack in the finals of the ECAC, I got it: "Super job" as he shook my hand. Of course, he was fairly liberal with the "super jobs" after that game."

Chase concludes, 'I'll always remember playing for Coach Watson. For me it was a personal honor, and I don't think I would have played when I was cut as a junior. But when you go to play for a guy like Watson, you can be sure that the good memories will outweigh the sweat and tears and when that final buzzer sounds at the end of the season's game."

Kevin McNamara '71, now head coach at Lawrence Academy.
Execs discuss Afro-Am charter

by GEORGE BONZAGNI
Afro-American Society President Michael Henderson '79 appeared before the Executive Board for the second consecutive week as the Board discussed the legal ramifications of the Society's recent vote to deny white voting membership in the Am. In addition, the Board representatives considered a motion which would create a three day weekend during the nine-week stretch between Christmas and Spring vacation.

Chairperson Amy Romans '81 outlined the legal problems which preceded from the Afro-Am's vote. Mentioning that College Counsel Webster had discussed the issue with the Administration, Romans stated, "Bowdoin is defined as a charitable, non-profit organization, and the Am's vote is a non-charitable act which leaves the college open to sue, if one is pressed. Also, the college could state its tax-free status if the vote is incorporated in the Am's Constitution."

She also noted that such an exclusionary vote would violate the non-charitable clause of the College bylaws, which states that the College "shall not discriminate on the basis of sex, race, color, age ..." in the administration of its policies.

Henderson informed the Board that the Afro-Am is also "... investigating all the legal ramifications ..." in preparation for the Am's upcoming meeting this Sunday. Henderson also told the Execs that the Constitution of the Afro-American Society has not yet been altered. He explained that the Afro-Am's vote of February 22nd was a "consensus" vote of the Society's members, not a formal amendment to the Constitution. The Constitution of the Afro-Am will not be changed until the constitutional committee presents a formal motion.

Both the Board reps and Henderson defended the alternative membership with white's. Henderson responded that any criterion chosen to differentiate between black and white membership in the Am would create more problems than it would solve. "If you set up a membership policy where white's can be voting members on one issue, while blacks can vote on that issue, then both issues, tensions would only increase between blacks and whites."

Geoff Worrell '82 added, "The Am has yet to come up with a process to extend membership which is fair. It cannot extend membership merely on the basis of the number of meetings attended. A certain amount of understanding is necessary for voting membership in the Am."

Both Chairwoman Romans and Eric Steele '79 acknowledged that the Afro-Am knew "... what type of policy would suit its needs best." Romans added, however, that the Executive Board "... represents the interests of the whole student body in the matter. In case a vote comes up at the Board, simply cannot support an Afro-Am vote to limit its membership."

On the lighter side of its deliberations, the Board briefly digressed to consider the recommendation of inserting a three-day weekend somewhere in the lengthy nine week period between the Christmas and Spring breaks. While no final conclusion was reached as to the details of the weekend, the Board supported the recommendation. In addition, Steele suggested that a formal skip day be held at some point in May.

The Executive Board proposed a cut back day sometime this spring.

New CEP class cut policy

(Continued from Page 5)

Tuesdays and Thursdays. It will also delay the start of home events until 3:15 p.m.

In regard to laboratory sessions, the committee suggests, "No student may ask for any rearrangement of laboratories more than twice during any given athletic season." The CEP maintains that the Science Departments "are free to establish a more restrictive policy when appropriate."

Pellegrozo feels that despite being "hazy in some areas" the plan could prove effective if carried out. He admits that the examination situation must be more clearly defined - this is likely to happen when the proposal is submitted to the faculty in the near future. He also notes that students participating in both winter and spring sports may encounter some difficulty meeting the requirements. In this case it is important to note that CEP and the Athletic Department are not relieving students of all responsibility. The committee recommends that "The student should consult with their faculty members in advance with the total number of conflicts in mind."

On Saturday night at 9:00, SUC will present a Saturday Night Live party in the Senior Center dining room. Please R.Y.O.B. and dress as your favorite Saturday Night Live character. Admission is free.

Mish hopes hockey frolic spins into Holiday on Ice cheerleaders.

(Continued from Page 3)

"I wouldn't mind wearing one of those costumes again. I like to make people laugh," she said, adding that she does get into Holiday on Ice "if the company sees one of those people kicking my leg in a line."

"And you'll know just where to look for me," she continued, referring to her limber stature, "I'll be the one on the very end!"

Cheynse says she will temporarily set aside graduate school plans for the ice show tour, "which I now have my heart set on." She regards Chemistry as a more practical subject to pursue but would like some day to explore Brain Chemistry, or the relationship of the mind and the brain on a scientific basis. BNS

LETTERS

(Continued from Page 4)

They want nothing less than the total abolition of the system and the establishment of a new state based on full popular participation. To propose change in any less tentative manner is to beg the question, "Who will fight?"

(Jennifer Davis. April, 1977)

The Sullivan Principles and the principles of those corporations which presently profit from the existing order amount to no more than a great whitewash - one which rationalizes and makes possible without demanding or effecting any change in the fundamental structure of apartheid. That is, with no demand for black political rights.

Richard Udell '80

Innocent

To the Editors:

Contrary to the article in last week's Orient concerning the SUC resignations, we did not resign in acknowledgement of our supposed guilt. We quit the committee in protest of Kevin McCabe's actions.

He presented the committee with a list of trumped up charges against ten of its members. It was an arbitrary list of "sins". No formal attendance had been taken at either the weekly meetings or at any SUC-sponsored events. The chairman relied upon his memory to accuse committee members of missing numerous meetings and activities. He even went so far as to accuse one member of forgetting to make disco posters, when, in fact, forget that there was no SUC-sponsored disco this semester.

We found the self-righteous and self-congratulatory attitude of the chairman and a few other members of the committee to be extremely irritating. We fear that with this type of leadership, any attempts at effective change will have little success.

Helen Pellitzer '81
Priscilla Hibbley '81
Jane Bannister '81
Caroline Foote '81
Katie Moody '81

Authentic Williamstown Tankard.

Make it Short!

That's the word for our new collection of dress shirts for young men. Short collars, spread out, rounder...the only way to go with the trimmer suits, leaner lapels, trimmer ties. All in polyester/cotton solids, stripes. 14½ to 16½.

B.H. BOOKER
96 Maine Street, Brunswick

The Canterbury Shops
Cook's Corner; Mon.-Fri. 10-8:45; Sat. 10-5:30
Downtown: Mon.-Sat. 9-11:55
Use Your Canterbury Charge, Master Charge or VISA
Former Bowdoin star

Dowd uses Slap Shot to shoot at new goals

by BILL STUART

"If you had told me that I would have been here, doing what I'm doing now, I would have told you you were crazy then. There was never any interest," says Ned Dowd '72. Yet, seven years after graduating from Bowdoin, Dowd has played professional hockey, acted in movies and commercials, and is now working to become a film director in California.

Dowd's most renowned role in movies so far was in the movie Slap Shot. The movie, based on his experiences in minor league hockey, vaulted him into movie acting and production. To fully understand the Ned Dowd story, one must begin by exploring the avenue which led to his involvement in movies: hockey.

"Big, strong, fast, hard shooter, left wing," are the impressions of Dowd that stick with Bob Kullen '71, a former Polar Bear captain and presently an assistant hockey coach at the University of New Hampshire. "He was an up-and-down hockey player, not a lateral hockey player. He'd rather go over somebody than around him."

"He could skate as fast as anyone we've ever had at Bowdoin," offers hockey coach Sid Watson. "He could shoot as hard as anyone we've ever had at Bowdoin."

"He was a strong digger in the corner," Kullen continues. "He never became a prolific scorer until he was a senior. I do remember him scoring three goals in our semi-final championship game when I was a senior. I believe it was against Merrimack and the final score was 9-1."

Kullen's memory of Dowd's scoring pace is indeed accurate. During his sophomore year, Dowd scored eight goals and added seven assists for 15 points. The 1970-71 season saw the History major from Massachusetts register twelve goals and add 17 assists for 39 points. He capped his Bowdoin career with 23 goals and 17 assists for 40 points in 23 games during his final season.

"He had a real hard, fast shot," Kullen adds. "I can just see him come down the left wing. He could never go inside. He always went outside and took a shot off the angle, and if it hit the net it could go in."

"We had very good teams those years. We always had a good goalie. My Sophomore year, I think we lost to Vermont in the ECAC Division II finals, but we had a great team that year. (That squad was the first team ever to win the regular Division II season undeated.) My junior year we won it. Our senior year, we were a great team and we weren't allowed to play in the playoffs that year because of an ineligibility rule. Bowdoin had with Amberson and Williams or something. The next year, they overturned the agreement, so it was a bitter pill to swallow, not being able to play that year."

Graduate Career

After leaving Bowdoin in 1972, Dowd attended McGill University for a year of graduate study. He continued to play hockey at the Montreal school. "I was noticed by the St. Louis Blues at that time," he says, "and signed with them for my time in the minors. I was in Denver a short while at the end of the time I played in the International League, which was at the time I was with Johnstown. I was with Johnstown for about two years."

The concept of a movie based on Dowd's experiences at Johnstown was the brainchild of his sister, Nancy, a young, aspiring writer. "She was in California about ten years," he explains. "She was an editor and filmmaker. She was just starting to have her scripts read by major studios. She visited me when I was playing in Johnstown. We had a good squad there. We had the three Carlson brothers, who play themselves in the movie. She thought there was an idea for a script there and asked me to carry a tape recorder around the bus, in locker rooms, and in bars, so she could capture the flavor of the dialogue."

"I carried it around for about a year, and from that got a lot of ideas and scenarios developed. About a year later, she sent me a copy of the script and said they had a director for Johnstown. They decided to do the film and that George Roy Hill was going to produce it and Dolores Hope was going to star in it."

Dowd had been assigned by the Quebec Nordiques to their farm team at Maine for the following season. Rather than relocate to California and help produce Slap Shot, Dowd assumed the roles of assistant coordinator and technical adviser with the Quebec nordiques. Dowd decided to do the film and that George Roy Hill was going to produce it and Dolores Hope was going to star in it.

"All the skaters we used in the film were professional," Dowd relates, "except Newman and maybe four other actors. When I came out there, the director decided that Newman, who could skate, so we had open auditions out here for about a month. It was my job to weed out the prospects."

"It was incredible. Actors will tell you anything; they'll say they can ride a motorcycle just to get a part. So, they'd come down and tell us that they were great hockey players and show up with figure skates!"

"There were some pretty big names that wanted to be in a George Roy Hill film. They had read the script, and acting with Paul Newman would be a coup for them. Peter Strauss, an actor, broke his leg during auditions. It was after a few broken legs and a couple of stitches that they decided to go with hockey players who could act."

"In Slap Shot, Dowd plays the part of Lyle Ochtreporch, one of the toughest and toughest players on the goon-filled squad. While some have seen the movie doubt that any real hockey team plays the brutal style of hockey which characterized the movie, Dowd is quick to defend the authenticity of the film. "All my teammates are portrayed, like the players' going up into the stands, acting like minor league hockey. For the most part, if you ask anybody who has ever been in those bus leagues, they'll tell you that's exactly how it is. With the exception of a strip scene at the end - that was an obvious license - it is for the most part true. That's the part of the movie that made it so funny, that all that stuff did happen. I had to go around defending all that too. A lot of people would say, 'Wait a minute, that doesn't really happen.' I'd have subplots and documents and clippings saying, 'On this date, this actually happened.'"

Dowd notes that despite the hesitancy of some viewers to accept Slap Shot as an actual documentation of minor-league hockey life, it was well-received. "The movie was a real success. Monetarily, it did very well, it grossed close to $50 million. "It was put down by some critics because of the language, which is a cop-out. A lot of critics panned it for that reason, but it captured what it's all about. It wasn't black comedy and it wasn't the Bobby Orr story. We found ourselves defending it during the publicity tour. A lot of hockey purists would come up and say, 'Wait a minute. How can you do this to the sport of hockey?' Well, we didn't intend to be the Toe Blake story. It was a comedy centered around hockey. If you take it in that context, you get a different view of it."

Dowd plans to continue his acting and production work in the future. For now, he supplements his technical behind-the-scenes work with advertisement appearances. "I do commercials and it's fun. You don't have to put much time into it and you can make a lot of money without doing anything. If you have a sense of humor about it, it helps, because a lot of people don't want to do commercials or don't want to be involved with it because they feel it's degrading their craft. For someone like me who has no training, I'll go ahead and do it."

"I've done about four commercials - a McDonald's, a Coca-Cola, a few others. It's a little bit fun. You shoot them for one day and that's it. You can still do your regular work, and the residuals are nice if you can get a good ad that runs for a while."

"That's not where I'm at as far as the future, though. I eventually hope to direct. I just got to direct my first production a month ago. I was in Canada. I was semi-directing a film called Yesterday. I was handling the ice stuff and was able to direct the whole thing. It was fun. I got a taste of directing. Directing is the hardest to do here. You don't just step right in and do it. You have to really know what you're doing."

"Slap Shot was the vehicle for all this, but in the last two years I had to go back in a lot of it. It's starting to pay off just now." It appears that Ned Dowd, hockey player, History major, actor and director, has found his niche.

Ned Dowd never made it to the major leagues but his story did. It starred Paul Newman, above.

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place  Tel. 725-5857
Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop.
Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

Brunswick Tour & Travel
On the Hill by Bowdoin College
216 MAINE ST., BRUNSWICK  TEL. 725-5557

Guaranteed Air Fare Guaranteed Reservations
Brunswick's most modern and progressive travel agency introduces ... Automatic Computerized TELE-TICKETING, direct from all Major Airlines.

You have Guaranteed Reservations & Guaranteed Air Fares!

It's another first for Brunswick Tour & Travel — with our expert staff, our new, modern, convenient location and now ... TELE-TICKETING!

Prescriptions
Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.
- Cards and Gifts -

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine Street  Brunswick, Maine 04011
Telephone 725-6331
Women place second at Smith as season record soars to 17-4

by BILL STUART

The women's basketball team, fresh from a thrilling 61-49 victory against the University of Southern Maine, placed second in a field of nine teams at an invitational tournament played at Smith College last weekend.

Coach Dick Mersereau's squad managed to capture three of four contests in the tournament. The Polar Bears slipped by Mt. Holyoke, 36-34, drove by Connecticut, 45-27, bowed to Williams, 47-39, and slammed dunked host Smith, 56-43.

Close contest

The closest game the Bears played was the first contest. They trailed Mt. Holyoke by one point with 50 seconds remaining in the contest. Then, Brinkman connected on a short jumper to give the Bowdoin a 35-34 lead. Freshman Dotty DiOrio, who scored the bucket that put the Bears ahead to stay against USM, proceeded to hit the front end of a one-on-one free throw situation to ice the triumph.

Against Williams Saturday morning, the Bears were sluggish from the day and night contest the previous day and fell behind quickly, 19-2. They battled back to reduce the deficit to 26-15 at halftime, but the Ephs stood their ground and won the game (eventually the tournament).

Pingree shines

Jill Pingree led the Bowdoin attack with 20 points in the four contests, including 90 against Smith. The powerful freshman forward and center Nancy Brinkman, who scored 34 points, was both selected to the all-tournament team. Jess Birdsell, who sank a team-leading 11 points against Williams and then contributed 12 against Smith, received honorable mention.

The weekend series brought the men's season record to 17-3. The Polar Bears entertain Bates Tuesday night, then finish the season with the State Tournament next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at Golby.

Bowdoin 36, Mt. Holyoke 34

Jill Pingree 4-1-9; Dotty DiOrio 2-1-5; Carrie Niederman 3-0-6; Nancy Brinkman 3-0-6; Jess Birdsell 2-1-5; Nancy Norman 1-0-2; Leslie White 0-1-1.

Bowdoin 45, Connecticut College 27

Nina Williams 4-1-9; Brinkman 3-0-6; DiOrio 3-0-6; Niederman 2-0-6; Mary Kate Devaney 2-0-4; Norman 1-2-4; Birdsell 1-2-4; Joanne Woodson 0-3-3; Pingree 1-0-2.

Bowdoin 58, Smith 43

Pingree 8-2-9; Birdsell 5-2-12; Brinkman 4-4-12; DiOrio 2-2-5; Devaney 1-1-3; White 0-3-3.

The Dubious Achievement Award this week goes to The Bates Student, which in a single move threatened the credibility of Bates, infuriated that school's student body and lowered itself in journalistic circles by going after cheap publicity. Such a triple play is difficult to pull off and is surely deserving of recognition.

OLD BOOKS

Used books bought and sold 126 Main Street (upstairs over Macbeans) Brunswick, Maine 04011 Tel. 725-4524

125 Mt. W. 12-31 11-00 a.m. CLOSED ON THURS., SUN.

Macbeans CLEAN-UP SALE — SAVE ON THESE SELECTED ITEMS — ALL GUARANTEED TO BE IN GOOD WORKING ORDER WITH A 90 DAY PARTS AND LABOR WARRANTY.

1 — Craig T-100 Car Stereo w/Slide Mount, Used $110.00
2 — Craig T-100 Car Stereo w/Slide Mount, New 110.00
3 — Craig T-400 Car Stereo Power Play, Used 260.00
4 — Craig T-400 Car Stereo Auto Reverse, Used 300.00
5 — Sony TC-1121A Cassette w/Dolby, Used 195.00
6 — Sony TC-1121A Cassette, Used 150.00
7 — Burwen DNP 1201 Noise Reduction System, Used 250.00
8 — Technics RS677US w/Remote Control, Cassette, Used 600.00
9 — Realistic STA16 AM-FM Receiver, Used 120.00
10 — Fisher 700 AM-FM Receiver, 120 Watts, Used 250.00
11 — BIC 920 Turntable w/Cradle, New 100.00
12 — Sony 940 Turntable w/Cradle, Used 150.00
13 — Harman/Kardon 720 AM-FM 45 Watts RMS, Used 400.00
14 — Harman/Kardon 450 Auto FM 30 Watts RMS, Used 350.00
15 — Harman/Kardon 870 AM-FM 60 Watts RMS, Used 375.00
16 — Harman/Kardon 500 Tuners, Used 150.00
17 — Harman/Kardon 505 Integrated AMP, 60 Watts, Used 295.00
18 — Harman/Kardon 2500 Cassette, Used 350.00
19 — Harman/Kardon 3500 Cassette, Used 350.00
20 — Harman/Kardon 2000 Cassette (Silver), Used 350.00
21 — Harman/Kardon 2000 Cassette (Black), Used 350.00
22 — Harman/Kardon Citation Receiver, Used 1250.00
23 — Harman/Kardon Citation Rack with Speakers 181718, Demo 2500.00
24 — Ultraliner ST550 Synchronic Time Array, Demo 1000.00
25 — Advent/2 Speakers, Demo 150.00
26 — Sony SX-400 Speakers, New 80.00
27 — KLH 26 with Sansui Speakers, Used 140.00
28 — Tand AR3300 Reed Deck w/Auto Reverse, Used 650.00
29 — Akai X2000D Reed Deck w/Auto Reverse, Used 500.00
30 — Sherwood FM Tuner, Used 100.00
31 — AR Integrated Amplifier, Used 350.00
32 — Pioneer SX-680 AM-FM, 20 Watts RMS, Used 200.00
33 — Sony Mini Stereo, Used 295.00
34 — Advent 220 Cassette Player w/Dolby, Used 50.00
35 — Sony SG1000 Quad Decoder, Used 150.00
36 — Sansui 50 Watt Woofer, Used 150.00
37 — Garrard Chassis w/Cassette, Used 250.00
38 — KLH 35 Dual 1214 FM-AM, Used 190.00
39 — Akai Reed Deck, Used 50.00
40 — Craig 2500 Electronic Notebook, Demo 190.00
41 — RCA VS7200 Video Cassette Recorder, Demo 1000.00
42 — Panasonic PV-1000 Video Cassette Recorder, Demo 1000.00
43 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
44 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
45 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
46 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
47 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
48 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
49 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00
50 — RCA 19" Color Trak w/Stand, Used 350.00

BRUNSWICK INDOOR TENNIS AND RACQUETBALL

TENNIS RATES
$7.00 an hour before 5:00 P.M. plus non-member fee.

RACQUETBALL RATES
$4.00 an hour before 5:00 P.M., $6.00 after 5:00 P.M.
plus non-member fee.

100 Harpswell Road
729-8433

Macbeans Audio & Video
THE TONTINE MALL
Maine Street, Brunswick, Maine 04011
Open Daily 9:30 AM to 5:00 PM, Except Sundays.
(207) 725-8267
GREYHOUND BUS TIMES

AND SUDDENLY it’s spring! Stowe Travel, Brunswick’s oldest and largest travel agency, can help you put together a very economical last minute spring trip, whether by land, sea or in the air.

For example, you can now buy through March 31st, Greyhound’s most popular one way (or round trip) bus ticket for $59, to anywhere in America — San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle (you name it) for travel Monday through Thursday; then there’s that weekend bus ticket for $65, in travel Friday, Saturday, Sunday or Saturday! In addition there are the Ameripass tickets with unlimited travel — $99.50 for 7 days; $149.50 for 15 days and $199.50 for 30 days. See Beverly Powell at our Greyhound desk for further information about these new bus fares!

Current Greyhound bus times from Brunswick to Boston, New York City and return are listed below. One way fare from Brunswick to Boston is now $13.50; the New York City fare is $31.50 from Brunswick.

CURRENT GREYHOUND BUS TIMES

Southbound buses to all points south — 3 daily buses

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Arrive</th>
<th>Arrive</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Boston</td>
<td>New York</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9:29 a.m. Daily Express</td>
<td>1:15 p.m. 6:35 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11:12 p.m. Daily Express</td>
<td>5:15 p.m. 10:35 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8:27 p.m. Daily Express</td>
<td>11:59 p.m. 5:20 a.m.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Northbound buses arriving daily from New York, Boston, etc.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Leave</th>
<th>Leave</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Boston</td>
<td>New York</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4:59 a.m. (on to Bangor)</td>
<td>1:50 a.m. 9:00 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1:37 p.m. (on to Bangor)</td>
<td>10:00 a.m. 3:45 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6:02 p.m. (ends at Belfast)</td>
<td>2:15 p.m. 9:00 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9:29 a.m. (on to Bangor)</td>
<td>5:45 p.m. 12:01 p.m.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

AT STOWE TRAVEL, we know, of course, all about those new low air fares. We also know we’re only as good as your last flight. That’s why we have to make that extra effort so you’ll enjoy every Stowe Travel flight. We know then we have to earn our own wings every time you fly with us.

So call Stowe at 725-5573, or stop by our offices at 9 Pleasant St. in Brunswick, “the handiest travel agency in town.” We are also open on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for flight reservations and tickets.

Our staff includes:

MARY BAXTER WHITE
President

CLINT HAGAN
Vice President

ERIC WESTBY
International

BARBARA LEONARD
Domestic Travel

SUE LOWELL
Domestic Travel

CHERYL KLEINGSHEIM
Domestic Travel

JOANNE BARBEAU
Domestic Travel

BEVERLY MORGAN
Greyhound & Western Union

TRAVELER OF THE WEEK

SCOTT D. RAND ’79, a Chi Pal, is Stowe’s “Traveler of the Week” Scott, a mathematics and chemistry major, is one of many seniors flying on “Job Interview Flights.” He returns back tonight from Philadelphia after being interviewed for employment with Rohm and Chemical Vista Corp. Scarr calls from Los Angeles, Calif., which has the finest offerings in entertainment, the Music Center, Chinatown sightseeing and the “largest underground shopping arcades” in the nation!

STOWE TRAVEL
Tel. 725-5573

9 Pleasant Street
Downtown Brunswick

Tracksters shine under the Cage

by MARK HOSBEIN

The congestion of people, claxons, jogging suit types, and any other person or facet of the running world seen in or around the Hyde Cage last Saturday were no doubt there because the Maine AAU meet was there, too. Bowdoin Track Coach Frank Sabatnick, said, “We usually have this meet so that those on the team that didn’t make it to the East Coast Championships have something to run in.” This year, nobody made it to the IC4A’s so the Bowdoin team was heavily represented and, if you were betting, they should have been heavily favored.

Over 100 people entered in the fifteen track and field events. Bowdoin team members took five of the contests, as well as placing in six more. An outstanding performance by freshman Mark Preece in the high jump placed first in that event with a 6’6” leap. Jimmy Ellis’s time of 7:30 in the walking race gave him the first place finish in that match. Steve Gerow jumped 20’5” to win the long jump. In two other running events, the 1000 and the 400, Bowdoin team members Mark Hoffman and Tom Capasse once to Maine. All the events were covered and the Coach seemed pleased with the results.

especially with some of the fresh- man performances. “Sab” mentioned Mark Preece, who broke the freshman high jump record by two and a half inches and Rick D’Autell, who came almost three seconds off the 880 mark. “Those two records won’t be broken for a while,” the Coach said. Kwame Poku, another fresh- men hopeful, had an unfortunate injury early in the season, but he hopes to be back next fall.

Hurdler Dave Danksins helps the Bowdoin effort with his performance. The Bears did well overall. (Orient/Stuart)

For Sure – Spring is Coming

Be Ready
All You Runners

Jogging Suits & Shorts in stock

Moulton Union Bookstore

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick

Hot Dogs – Chili Sauce
Creamsicles – Bronto Seltzer
HOT DOG STAND

Study in Italy this Summer
BARBERI CENTER/ROME CAMPUS
JUNE 15 – JULY 25 – 1995

Art History
Music
Italian
Social Science
Classical Civilization

Barberi Center Rome Campus
TRINITY COLLEGE
Hartford, Conn. 06106
Postgame Scripts

Every year the same thing

by GEOFF WORELL

They were 9-4 going into the last eight games; they lost all eight. Last year, they lost seven of their games by five points or less. One only has to look further back in Bowdoin basketball history to get the drift; Bowdoin has never been a basketball school.

The problem is easier to recognize than solve. Bowdoin has yet to acquire the coaching and the recruitment processes (within the NESCAC rules) to build a solid program. This college is traditionally bad at "the city game" and the question one must ask is why there has been no attempt to build a program here at Bowdoin.

College basketball carries with it the potential of being the most exciting sport around. Any compromise between extremely exciting basketball and what Bowdoin has had, would be a welcomed change. The problem with our basketball program is the same as the problem with our football program. In an effort to keep sports which at other colleges have become powerful and out of proportion, in perspective, the College has compromised the quality of these sports.

The answer for basketball lies in either better coaching or better recruiting, or both. Is it too much to ask that one of the most inexpensive sports the college offers be given some attention so they can improve on the five winning seasons they have had in thirty-five years?

Salem Triumphs

Bears bow in 1st round

by DANNY MENZ

The 1976-79 Polar Bears' hockey season came to an end at 6:24 in the overtime period when Peter DiCaprio's shot along the ice found its way into the right corner of the net. This gave Salem State a 4-3 win and eliminated Bowdoin in the first round of the ECAC Division II East Tournament.

The final play happened quickly, unlike the rest of the 66 minutes of bowdoin's intense, hard-checking, sawed-off hockey that took place prior to it. Bowdoin had been working on a power play situation putting a lot of pressure on in the Salem end. When the penalty expired the Bears almost had an extra man into their zone, creating an overload near the blue line. It was at this point that Salem's Rob Buckley intercepted the puck and started out on a 1-on-1 break with DiCaprio and Bowdoin's Mark Pletsch being the only man back for the Bears. Bobby Devaney, rushing back to break up the play, reached Buckley just after he had passed off to DiCaprio breaking in to Bowdoin's zone on the left side. With Devaney on Buckley, it was 1-on-1 battle between Pletsch and the Salem wing. DiCaprio got a stride away from Pletsch and as the Bowdoin defenceman tried to step check him off the play, he let the shot go, sliding past Rob Menzies to the far corner of the goal. As the red light went on the lights went out on Bowdoin for any future playoff hopes.

In the rest of the contest, the Bears went out to a 1-0 lead on a beautiful effort and shot by John Corcoran at 3:45 of the first period. Salem's Mike Clasy answered that goal two minutes later and in the second period the Vikings went out ahead 3-1 on a pair of tallies by Buckley, one short-handed.

But Bowdoin didn't give up as Dave McNeil stuck one in front in Andy Minich beat the goalie on a 20 shot blast from the face-off circle, tying the score at 3 all at 12:49 of the second period.

The third period saw furious action at both ends with both goaltenders turning in fine performances. Bowdoin's Rob Menzies had 13 saves in the period and a game total of 39, while Salem's Jay Palladino stopped 15 in the third stanza, for a total of 33.

The game marked the final appearance in Polar Bear uniforms of senior co-captains Gerry Clarcia and Rob Menzies and also seniors Bobby Devaney, Bill McNamara and Andy Minich. The rest of the squad will be returning next year for another run at the championship.

Men hoopsters lose nine straight, disappointment puts focus on future

by MARK HOSREIN

The season's over. No more chances for the key play, no more waiting for the incredible dunk shot or amazing "jump shot. No more road games to come home late from. No more home games with low attendance. The most that will be remembered will be the 1-12 record that this year's basketball squad put together over the course of the last three months; a record that does not reflect the highlights and low points of the season; a record that is just plain fact.

These last four games would have been a turning point in the winless column if they had gone differently. What happened was that every game was dropped on the losing side, beginning with Farmington a week ago Wednesday.

We were never really in it. Another poor beginning, followed by the combination of Colby's delicious size and good plays against Bowdoin's lack of team spirit again resulted in an inevitable defeat. The team really wanted that game. "If we could beat Colby like they beat us" (referring to the February 11th loss in Brunswick) "it would be worth everything," commented Ed Rogers.

Another case of the inability to bring it together.

"Monday night at Bates was the team's last hope of an upset. The Wildcats had fallen to Bates in their last contest, held at Bowdoin just a month earlier. This meeting brought together two different teams: Bates had lost their big man, had not won in its past seven outings, and was morally whipped. The Bates team, by contrast, was put together for this game, and it could be sensed that they were determined to win. The game was a steady match through the first period, the score favoring both teams at times, but leaving Bates with a 7-4 lead at the half. The second half was dominated by the Bates offense. They slipped occasionally, but Bowdoin never took full advantage of it. Mike McCorkick saw little change in how the team played that night and compared to other nights: "Same old stuff. Couldn't get it going." The only win was with an overtime loss to Bates.

Bowdoin's defense was the best it had been all season. The defense made a concerted effort to stop Bates' leading scorer, Kevin Brown. Only 13 points were scored by Bates' 5-10 player, four fewer than the Bowdoin defense allowed.

The team will rest until next season. The players, however, will be thinking about this game. They will be wondering what they did wrong and what they could have done differently.

Bowdoin will not make the playoffs this year. The team will have to work harder next season. The team will need to improve its shooting percentage. The team will need to improve its defense. The team will need to improve its offense. The team will need to improve its rebounding. The team will need to improve its passing. The team will need to improve its stamina. The team will need to improve its teamwork. The team will need to improve its attitude. The team will need to improve its focus. The team will need to improve its concentration. The team will need to improve its determination. The team will need to improve its desire. The team will need to improve its commitment. The team will need to improve its empathy. The team will need to improve its understanding. The team will need to improve its characterization. The team will need to improve its personality. The team will need to improve its character. The team will need to improve its character.
Execs stay up late searching for membership definition

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

In a marathon meeting sparked by sustained and heated debate, Executive Board pressed a motion to redefine the criteria for membersh ip in the student organization. The decision, which culminated nearly an hour and a half of discussion, states that "membership includes voting rights" in the organization. Tuesday night's decision reverses the position taken by the Board on February 27 when the Execs voted seven to six with one abstention not to interpret participation as including voting rights.

The Board's action grew out of a simple inquiry into the membership practices of the Bowdoin Jewish Organization. In light of the Board's inquiry into the Afro-American society's membership policy, BJO representatives Vicki Borden '79 and Michael Swi '79 responded to the request to come before the Board to answer questions concerning the policies.

BJO representative Vicki Borden at the Exec meeting, Orient/Zeta

SUC rewrites selection procedure

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Student A: I don't know, what do you think about this?

Student B: Well, it's always hard to accept the fact that democracy doesn't work...

These two students, along with many others present at Tuesday night's Student Union Committee meeting, witnessed the insertion of several major changes in the Committee's constitution. SUC members accepted these changes, which dealt primarily with selection procedures, by a 12-1 margin.

"Membership on the committee," reads the newly-revised Section 4, "...will be decided by a five-person interviewing committee. This committee will convene immediately following the election of new Student Union officers."

"The committee will be headed by the chairman of SUC and will include the chairman-elect, the highest ranking officer-elect different from the current chairman, not currently serving in the elected position, and one member of the Executive Board or SUC.

"The remainder ... will be made up of members and ex-officio who will not serve as regular members of the committee in the upcoming year and officers-elect." SUC, a committee of over twenty students, sponsors concerts, exhibits, movies, lectures, and dances on the College community. The Committee has recently been troubled by disinterested and inactive members and a rash of resignations.

Current SUC chairman Kevin McCabe '80 explained, "I felt the changes were necessary a while ago and the resignations started a lot of changes in the Committee."

"It seems we always get a lot of people on the Committee who don't know what the Committee entails. A few of them referring to the previously required representative from each fraternity (or sorority) get elected when they're absent from a house meeting and sometimes have little or no interest."

"I think there are at least twenty or twenty-five people who have some responsibility and interest in the Committee. A great deal of the work can be divided up ... Everyone seems to have a conception of SUC as an organization with lots of work and no fun. It's not all work."

The addition of an interviewing committee, added McCabe, maximizes SUC's chances of getting new and interested and qualified applicants. "We need people," he claimed, "who have a genuine organizational ability, and some background."

He also emphasized the value of SUC as an educational experience. "We function as a small business in the community and we have to sell things to other students." (Continued on Page 6)

Zete and National seek solution

by BETH STANLEY-BROWN

In an effort to direct the fate of the Zeta Psi house, both male and female members decided to discuss alternatives with the Executive Secretary of the Zeta National, the Vice President and treasurer of the House Corporation, and a former twenty-five year president of the House Corporation last Sunday evening. A mandate received from the Zeta National, reducing women's status to social members, prompted the well-attended meeting.

Prior to the first of March, when Rob Coben '81, President of Zete, received the mandate, three Zete women occupied official positions. Now, Teresa Chisholm '82, Marie Buckley '80, and Stephanie Lynn '82 have experienced a "step backwards" — having been removed from office, in effect, by the mandate, and in many cases, by the lost status of social members. Why the sudden shift by the National to a position taken by previous administrations?

"Zete Night at the Pops" is sponsored by the Bowdoin Club of Boston, the nation's largest Bowdoin alumni organization, in support of the college's scholarship program. The Mother's Day concert will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Members of Zeta Psi will hold their official flag atop Bald Mountain. Now a conflict with the National Threatens the fraternity's well-being.

Bowdoin sets a Pops date

Bowdoin College alumni and their families, faculty members, students and friends will gather at Symphony Hall in Boston May 13 for the 32nd annual "Bowdoin Night at the Pops." The program will feature the Boston Pops Orchestra.

"Bowdoin Night at the Pops" is sponsored by the Bowdoin Club of Boston, the nation's largest Bowdoin alumni organization, in support of the college's scholarship program. The Mother's Day concert will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Reservations will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis and must be received by April 18. Tickets will be mailed after that date.

Orchestra ticket prices for Rows "B" through "P" are $12.00 (tablets with 5 seats), $9.50. Orchestra prices for Rows "A" and "Q" through "U" are $10.50 (tablets with 5 seats), $9.50. Balcony seats are $9.50.

Bowdoin students, faculty and staff members, southern Maine alumni and other Maine residents may obtain ticket applications by writing the Alumni Office, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me. 04011.

Residents of the Boston area may obtain tickets and information by writing or calling James E. McHugh, Jr., 44 Abbott St., Beverly, Mass. 01915, telephone (617) 927-0852. A member of Bowdoin's class of 1973, McHugh is a Director of the Boston Bowdoin Club and is in charge of concert arrangements.

The Boston program has for many years attracted Bowdoin students as well as Bowdoin graduates and their families from throughout New England.
Zeta Psi

The situation at Zeta Psi fraternity is somewhat confusing, even to those directly involved. The conflict between the majority of Bowdoin Zetes and the Zeta National Executive Committee is certainly not a pleasant one. The question that has arisen in the past few days is the position of the College administration in the affair.

President Enteman seems to be on the verge of guaranteeing the "pro-local" Zetes a place to live, should a certain number of them desire to reside together. This would allow them a rallying point around which they could form a new house in the future.

On the surface, this appears to be a beneficent gesture. However, it has other implications concerning the relationship between the College and the individual fraternities. To what extent is the College willing to go to protect Bowdoin students from their respective Nationals when the two do not agree? More importantly, will this "protection" and "help" turn into interference and hindrance?

It would be wise for the College to ponder at length precisely what their connection is with the fraternities before it goes about defending Bowdoin's chapters from their Nationals.

THE ESSENCE OF TORPIDITY

"It's always hard," he said, "to accept the fact that democracy doesn't work."

He was sitting at the SUC meeting Tuesday night and that was all he said from the time he arrived until the time he left. Slowly he munched on his supper, casually he watched the goings-on, silently he witnessed the most "recently operated-on Bowdoin student organization constitution undergo major surgery. Perhaps we should rejoice that he found the energy to get twelve words out of his mouth.

It obviously was not too hard for that young man to accept the "fact" that democracy doesn't work. Or doesn't it? Is it the democracy that hasn't worked or has it been something else?

Closely scrutinized, how much of a difference will the rewritten sections of SUC's constitution make? Anyone can still run for a position on the committee. Applicants must still present a petition with their applications. Under the rewritten Section 4, however, the applicants must speak with an interviewing committee consisting of both present and outgoing SUC members and one or two ex-officio.

Good idea? Perhaps. Mankind has been eternally plagued by weasels who run for the resume, not for the committee itself. Perhaps this initial screening process will wash some of the weasels before they can get their feet in the door.

We suggest, however, that the problems with SUC (and many other campus organizations, for that matter) are not problems that disappear when the general election does. Or when the constitutional monarchy takes over.

The problem is not in the institutions themselves but in the people who are (or are supposed to be) running them.

In other words, you can change the form to a constitutional monarchy, an interviewing democracy. When the common denominator is students who are used to being spoon-fed and handed their concerts, lectures, et al, on a silver platter, then major constitutional surgery isn't going to help the matter.

It's not democracy that isn't working.

It's the majority of the students on this campus.
Bacchanalia Transatlantica

by L. B. BAKER

How many delinquent times spent at American Prep Schools (APS) and English "Public" Schools (EPS)? or "delinquent time" is that which is spent thwarting both rules and authorities. The perpetration of these activities being infinite, only the most common activities can be discussed in an article of this length. The conclusion of this introduction is bound by disclaiming any validity concerning these activities which are both personal and secret.

"Delinquent time" occurs anytime of the day or night, but for the most part seems to be concentrated at night. Most of the students, most of the time. In both the APS and EPS these activities are found to be in the general categories, basic escarpade (in and around the school), road trips by road or rail, and traps of the sacred and profane.

Every student experiences at least one basic escapade. The most visible activities in this group run from cutting classes and chapel to the pranks about everybody bears. The less visible require contraband like cigarettes, liquor, etc., and the very many have passed from class to class. Cigarettes require well-ventilated spaces and plenty of peppermint flavoring.

Liquor presents far more difficult problems. Although bottles can be easily concealed and the breath masked, it is almost impossible to predict the outcome of intoxication. Precipitations taken, such as drinking with friends, one of whom does not have his or her judgment impaired by this necessity, unfortunately have a far lower success rate than one might imagine.

The same activities and problems and how they are dealt with can be found on both sides of the Atlantic, though they are cloaked in different environs. In the APS the activity, which is peculiarly English is having a "local." A "local" is a pub in the vicinity of the school which is not heavily patronized by teachers. The publican will usually work for his own good, but mostly for your sake.

Pubs are usually divided in two parts; the saloon and the working man's bar. Teachers are only allowed to drink in the saloon (by tradition). The publican keeps an eye on them and warns the students in the working man's bar when they come in. One of two things occurs: either an exchange or a general conversation and quiet conversation in the blind spot of the working man's bar.

This has gone through many centuries of refinement and all the parts of this activity work smoothly to such a degree that being caught in your "local" occurs on a seeming schedule and never for more than twice. If it occurs more than twice, you change locals. The basic escapade is embarked on in groups of two or more and although there are statistics showing changes as conditions change, these groups as they become more adept in their activities progress to more daring activities.

Road trips require more planning, cooperation and greater rewards as well as penalties. Needless to say only the most courageous or foolishly actually go on road trips (many are really well-imaged). Most road trips are to large cities (New York and Boston, London). Requirements for their successful completion are transportation, a gap of time when one's absence can be covered and the ability not to look like you do nothing.

In APS this requires a car in the vicinity of the school. In EPS a train is of most use, however, cars are available, too. Only immense luck, a good deal of practice, or a very good friend brings these trips to happy successful conclusions.

Of more interest are road trips which both parts of APS, this activity is dying out, but it is still very much alive and popular. How it is that contact is either...of their activities (and at the same time)" within the school if this trip is an esoteric one may be a sorcery, very fast and a good away driver.

The American Boys' Boarding School in the southern states is fatal to the delinquent, or "local" to the Victorian. The doors are locked and there is a service of security guards, but the downstairs windows are left open to the world.

Joanie Benoit after yet another successful race.

by NANCY ROBERTS

A trip to Bangor is a rather extensive two-hour excursion by car from Brunswick, but this hundred-mile run is covered weekly by the students of Joanie Benoit '79. A ten to twenty mile run every Monday and Wednesday, with the occasional Thursday, Saturday, and a half at North Carolina State. Better facilities, better coaching and better weather made the trip to Bangor earlier in the year.

"I run indoors for speed work and outdoors around Bangor and at track work to sharpen speed are the components of Joanie's training," Joanie relates.

"I run indoors for speed work and outdoors around Bangor and at track work to sharpen speed are the components of Joanie's training," Joanie relates.

Joanie's efforts have won her numerous records, victories, and accolades, with several publications including Track & Field News and Sports Illustrated. Joanie's recent achievements are the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, NCAA National Championships at Princeton where last weekend she set a meet record for the three-mile run. Crossing the finish line in 15 minutes 45.79 seconds. Joanie bettered the existing record by more than a minute, and later preceded to capture first place in the two-mile run. In the New England (New England 2000) and Boston University, Joanie was victorious in both the one and two mile races, respectively.

Punishments for these recent wins were victories in the Falmouth Road race in August and the 6.5 mile Bonne Bell race in the fall. At the end of January, the distance race must be run in a distance race, which is embarked on a day or so distant from Bermuda. The purpose of this race is to sharpen speed and recover, catch a ride, and ride motorbikes but rather to run in Bermuda. says Joanie. Bermuda is my only marathon so far but I hope to be a group finisher, your training problems is that I don't know whether to turn solely to marathons or keep doing track races. I do both, but if I want to excel in one field I'll have to make up my mind soon.

"I'm not able to run marathons say ten years from now, so I should use discretion and not run them too often. But running is an addicting sport - when you get the opportunity, it's hard to say no," Joanie observed.

Joanie returned to Bowdoin this summer after spending a year at the University of Kansas and a half at North Carolina State. Better facilities, better coaching and better weather made the trip to Bangor earlier in the year.

Joanie started running in the spring. She had trained very well and I felt I needed more to the team so I stayed one more semester.

"At North Carolina State I learned things that helped me mature as a runner. I've also enjoyed running on the team and working out with other girls at Bowdoin. I like designing my own home and being on my own. and it's hard to understand - the runner knows what she's doing, but it doesn't take much out of me and sometimes it does a number on me." Joanie said.

Four courses, along with the accompanying homework, papers and presentations, made my term a rigorous one. According to Joanie, "The hardest part is accepting the idea that I'm not the best, but I'm usually best after my second workout. It's even worse when we run marathons. I've been injured and couldn't run, I wasn't able to concentrate at all. I guess I air out my brain when I'm running." Joanie added.

Joanie's next major focus is to make four times, the 1980 Olympics, which is almost certainly out of reach now. Joanie says, "I'm really worried about the conservative lifestyle, I'm running around the country right now."

Joanie, "I'm really worried about the conservative lifestyle, I'm running around the country right now."

"At the beginning of the NAACAP at the beginning of the speech last Friday night as part of the John Brown Festival, I offered the Lee Marvin case. If the Marvin case is won, we will have set back all the progress made when we abolished common law marriages. We thought we were so through the first two years when we abolished that law."

"The changes made during the sixties that are Hooker's main focus are the laws concerning such as affirmative action. His argument is the standard one used by those who are in favor of Affirmative action: Two hundred years of oppression cannot be corrected in one day."

The conservative ideals which, according to Hooker, are sweeping the country, are coupled with the apathy of the young. This situation makes a reversal of the progress made in the sixties an even greater possibility for Hooker.

Among the black community, Hooker sees the apathy towards the government taking a more disturbing form. "Blacks move up in society and forget they're black."

"I remember a case where a black man was stopped on the street and it didn't matter to him whether he has a Brooks or an Oldsmobile."

The new wave of conservatism and the passing on of the old are not all a dismal picture that Hooker colorful painted in Kenya last Friday night. Conditions (economic) are worse now than they were during World War II," said Hooker. He ends the same way he began, "Someone must ring the bell to say the fight isn't over yet."
Studs lead prospectives all around college campus on misguided tour

by HARRIS WEINER

and JOHN SHAW

The Dallas Cowgirls, does its "thing." Tours should pass Doc Haney's gymnasium where the student on a low budget can obtain drugs. They should then enter the Moulton Union and be conducted through Ron Crowe's "Titanium Temple," Walt Szramowski's Polish disco, Bowdoin bookstock, and Scotty Garfield's gymnasium, bookie joint, and office of the school psychiatrist. This should be concluded with a discussion of "corporate infrastructure" and the "memo" with Harry Warrer. The next stop on the tour should be the Afro-Am where the "Welcome to Bowdoin College" catalogue is photographed. Behind the Rushrow building is the Senior Center, constructed specifically for pre-meds, although the dining platform has been removed from the sixteenth floor. Flanking the Center is the Deke house where students put F. Scott Fitzgerald novels to revogue music. Somewhat off the beaten path is the Chie Fui Lodge where some of the School's most highly recruited golfers reside. Other noteworthy fraternities that should be included in a well balanced presentation of Bowdoin include the Beta and Kappa Sig houses where there are some developed amenities that are so important in later life, and the AD fraternity where the American Revolution holds their annual temperature meetings. The group should then proceed through the creek and up the hill a short distance. It seems it should be pointed out that this is where students looking to make the big time (as they do) do so for four years. The group should then take the ferry across the puddle to the Peary-MacMillan Arctic Museum where the officers will provide them with their Friday and Saturday nights. The guide should conclude by making sure all the many advantages of living in Brunswick. He should be sure to note the proximity of New Bedford, the cheap shrimp and Sears Roebuck for those with more extravagant taste and the fact that Brunswick has more barber shops per capita than any other town in Cumberland County. We are genuinely sorry that the College will give this proposal serious consideration.

Knights, Ladies revel in Madrigality

by JOHN REUTER

and IEVAN MCLATCHY

Happy to spend last Thursday and Friday nights! If your typical Bowdoin evening usually turns out anything like this reporter's, namely, all-too-typical, then chances are you've already forgotten those nights.

For all those whose search for a unique and pre-creative way of passing time at Bowdoin has proven frustratingly futile, the two nights in question provided a guaranteed uplifting for even the most jaded temperament. All that was entailed was the foresight to purchase a ticket or two to one of the much (and deservedly) touted Madrigal Dinners, presented March 8th and 9th in the Main Lounge of the Moulton Union by the Chamber Choir of the Bowdoin Glee Club.

If you were one of the fortunate who anticipated the early self-out for both nights, then you have your memories and they speak for themselves. Much like the famed Connecticut Yankee who awoke from a dream to find himself thrust into the age of King Arthur's court, you had bought a ticket back through time and found yourself in the midst of a fantastical feast.

For those not quite so fortunate, picture you if will: the court of an English castle where lords and ladies are gathered for a celebration, and presiding are our host and hostess, his lordship Robert Kennedy and Lady Miriam Bardwell-Webb. Our genial host calls the assembly to order and proclaims: "A toast to her highness, Elizabeth, Queen of England." Without further ado, the festivities commence.

From the kitchen of Sir Ron Crowe and crew (volunteers in the service of our noble lord) pours forth a bountiful array of food and drink, and our lady proposes a toast.

The hall is filled with sound of music and also proposes a toast.

To conclude this great evening, the Denver Art Galleries, in the presence of our noble lord, proclaims: "And now, ladies and gentlemen, we extend a formal invitation to a dinner of the 30s. Character names such as Nathan Detroit, Benny Southstreet, Harry the Horse, and others fill the stage as they live out the adventures of a gambler's life.

The story is basically about Nathan Detroit who runs a permanent floating crap game in New York, but can't find a place for "the game." His attempts to find a you Guy Haines?, Guy and his biggest gambler from Chicago, and Sarah Brown, a salvation army mellow in love during the whirlwind of gambling anices.

Meanwhile Nathan is having love problems of his own. Nathan stars Clark Gable and both have in their repertoires a hot box dancer, for eighteen years and the shrewd player of has now made her net on finally getting married. Nathan's gamblers are even more suspect to the point where she wants to drop him.

So what's going to happen? Come to Pickard on March 16 & 17 at 8:00 to find out.
Three alternatives

Zetes ponder options as stands firm

(Continued from Page 1)

the officers at that time," stated Coben. Whether the loss or lack of officers is temporary, its effects are taking place now as women suffer a drop in status.

Zetes at first thought rejection of the mandate was the best response to the National Constitution's resolution because it might bring on the possibility of a compromise. "The National will not compromise, however, because anything which violates the National Constitution is not permissible," Coben said. The officers Sunday night did offer three alternatives.

The first alternative is to accept the mandate. "I thought being social members in women's is really is," Cohen voiced. "It is a lot worse than what we had, but it is not as bad as I thought." As social members, women are eligible to hold full-time positions, secretary, house manager, and social chairman and are permitted to attend house meetings and "voice their opinions." On an optimistic note, Cohen stated, "There is some powerless ability to women as social members," but he added, "it's a deep disconnection from the house really.

A second alternative offered to the Zetes is to pull the House Elders, all former Bowdoin Zetes, to try to get them to support a local house. Zetes will have to appeal to them because they own the Zete house. Consequences are given to the Zetes if they receive the national restrictions with them. According to Cohen, this is the route the fraternal members will pursue.

A ballot will be prepared by the House Corporation officers and be distributed early next week in an attempt to get the resolution passed. By the end of next week, stated Cohen, hopefully, if the House Elders support the idea of a local house.

Slow by Olympic standards, Benoit eyes marathon future turned to serious year-round running. She was a sprinter and long jumper for her high school track team, a sport she enjoyed and enjoyed in the mile during her senior year. After playing rugby in the fall of her first two years at Bowdoin, she devoted herself full time to cross country.

(Continued from Page 3)

According to Joanie, the Benoit family has recently turned more interest in her running. "They haven't really encouraged or discouraged me. The past year they've become more interested because they realize how serious it is. They couldn't understand why I'd do this across the country. But my father has recently taken up running— he's looked so good and so healthy. You really got to be a runner to understand a runner.

Joanie will be returning next semester from a trip to the United States to fulfill Bowdoin's residency requirement which stipulates that the students must spend three semesters be spent on campus. Since she still has three semesters remaining, she will run for the cross-country team in the fall. She will also remain active in the women's tennis and badminton teams.

Bowdoin's Boston Career Day for female undergraduates will be April 13th this year. The numbers of workshops have been increased this year and will include marketing, banking, politics, law, publishing, and many more. If you're interested in going please sign up at the Career Services office in the Moulton Union by March 23rd.

The Boston Film Society presents "To Catch a Thief!" in the Kresge Music Hall of the Visual Arts Center.

The showings are at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. and admission is 50 cents.

Zetes stand in front of the house that has been one of the focal points of their disagreement with their National.

Proctors: good news from Egasti

by MATT HOWE

After two weeks of interviews and evaluations, the proctorships for 1979-80 have been awarded. Assistant to the Dean of Students, Lea Egasti, Student Personnel Fellow Pam Chislov, Director of Counseling "Services Dr. Aldo Lorenzo, and a committee of present proctors have been working nine-to-nine in an effort to select the most qualified applicants for the highly sought positions.

I think we've got a great bunch," says Dean Egasti of the 15 proctors and six alternate proctors from 42 applicants, "We had 42 fine choices.

Egasti emphasizes that the long meetings consisted of discussions of the students' merits, not their shortcomings. "I considered only why a person would make an excellent proctor." In particular, they pursued evidence for "emotional stability, maturity, objectivity, discretion, and a willingness to relate to students."

There are numerous responsibilities involved, and as Dean Egasti notes, the proctors should be able to handle those "and still take care of themselves in the process."

The proctors were not chosen to fit the character of any specific dorm. They were elected on the basis of their ability, and then assigned to dorms.

Many freshmen and sophomores were among the candidates, and Dean Egasti feels this is largely because of the fine example past and present proctors have set. "Last year's and previous year's proctors have done an outstanding job. I'm constantly hearing tales of the wonderful jobs proctors have done. As far as having an effect on the students, she explains, "Being a proctor couldn't hurt you, but being a junior could be a disadvantage."

Egasti feels the proctors were an essential aspect of the process who made the proctorships appealing to the applicants and their sense of what a proctor must be able to handle. Situations exist. You've really got to be a runner to understand a runner.

Almost everyone agrees that the current and alternate proctors (1978-1979, a single room, and a campus extension) does not approach fully recognizing the noble duties of a proctor. But as Terry Roberts '80, currently a proctor in Moore, points out, "It is certainly not the money you do it for. Terry speaks of her position with endless enthusiasm. "Being a proctor is great. It's a very good way to get to know a lot of people very well. Sure there are problems, but the good times always seem to even the worst problems.

Tracy Wolcenski '80, who has been in Appleton this year, also regards her proctorship as a "great experience." "It too stresses that he was not motivated by the pay. "I thought it would be a great way to meet the freshmen class — you meet all kinds of people you wouldn't ordinarily meet."

Tracy feels he has benefited significantly as a result, mainly in terms of relating to others. "One has to be really open-minded. You can't make first impressions or hold grudges. Always be willing to give someone a second chance."

Next year is a long way off, but there is one thing the proctors can be sure of — if you name it, it will probably happen. As Dean Egasti notes, "Proctors do a little bit of everything."

Best of all the week leading up to the 1979-80 crew, for there is no reason why the Class of '80 should make life any easier for the underrated peacemakers of our hallowed halls.

PROCTORS 1979-80

Susan Doherty '81
Elizabeth Gober '81
Sharon Grady '80
Susan Hayes '81
Theresa Gues '81
Melissa Weinman '82
Amy Homma '81
Karen Johnson '81
Kevin Murphy '81
Michael Collins '81
Steven Kreals '81
Michael Evans '82
Geri Egberg '80
Thomas Kelly '81
Douglas Scott '81
ALTERNATE PROCTORS 1979-80

Susie McKee '82
Anne Marie Murphy '82
Jill McIver '82
Greg O'Grady '80
Dana Swift '80
Theo Walker '82
Dante Ferrante '82

Very fine foods and tasty tunes make much mirth

(Continued from Page 4)

strummers such as the raucous, krummhorn, lute, and recorder, or the recititation of poetry, notably the sonnet "To a Miserable Poet" by Richard Lovelace. The work by the ever popular Will Shakespeare, by one Sir Timothy Walker, and the delightful of all including Lord Chatterley, the Lady Chatterley and Lady Lyss is rumored to be in attendance as well.

Between bites of rare roast beef, we are treated to a superb performance by the lady satirizer Sir Benjamin Parker ischarming his favorite instrument of colored balls and pins into a display of aerial ballet, and though he falters briefly among crises of "Off with his head," his life is spared by our wise and charitable host.

Throughout the evening our ears, too, are charmed by the performance of selected Madrigals from Spain and a Capella group from the court's Chamber Choir, which has gradually added a few new songs to their repertoire. During the dinner, small bands of singers appear on the balcony overlook stage that has been engaged in a series of lifting vocal exchanges with the bridal couple on the floor. The song, "I'm informed is entitled (approximately.

Finally, to cap off this occasion, homage is paid to the Italian embassador, which is Michael Henderson (a student of the renowned composer Orlando di Lasso) with the performance of a Madrigal of his own composition, "Who Put the Roses in Your Garden, by the entire choir."
EXECUTIVE BOARD MINUTES

January 17, 1979

The Board of Directors met in regular session at the Tontine Mall at 11:00 a.m. The following members were present:

Dr. Robert DeSimone, President.

Mr. Terry Roberts, Vice President.

Mr. Michael Zirinis, Secretary.

Mr. Steve Combee, Treasurer.

Mr. John Mullen, Student Director.

Mr. Eric Silver, Editor in Chief.

The minutes of the January 10, 1979 Board meeting were presented by Mr. Zirinis. After discussion, it was moved by Mr. Roberts, seconded by Mr. Combee, that the minutes be approved as presented.

Dr. DeSimone called the meeting to order at the regular time.

Dr. DeSimone introduced a new member of the Board, Mr. Jim Worrell, who was elected to fill the position vacated by Mr. Mike Komorowsky, who had resigned from the Board.

Mr. Worrell was welcomed to the Board and introduced to the members present.

Mr. Worrell is a graduate student in the Department of Economics and will bring a new perspective to the Board.

Dr. DeSimone then presented the report of the Executive Board for the past month. The report included an update on the progress of the new campus newspaper, The Bowdoin Orient, which is scheduled to begin publication in the fall.

Mr. Worrell moved that the report be approved, seconded by Mr. Combee, and the report was approved.

Dr. DeSimone then presented the financial report for the past month. The report indicated that the financial situation of the College remained stable, with a slight increase in revenue.

Mr. Combee moved that the financial report be approved, seconded by Mr. Zirinis, and the report was approved.

Mr. Worrell then presented the report of the Search Committee for the position of Dean of Students. The report indicated that the Search Committee had interviewed several candidates and would present a short list of candidates to the Board at its next meeting.

Mr. Zirinis moved that the report be approved, seconded by Mr. Mullen, and the report was approved.

Dr. DeSimone then presented the report of the Student Affairs Committee. The report included an update on the progress of the new student center, which is scheduled to open in the fall.

Mr. Worrell moved that the report be approved, seconded by Mr. Combee, and the report was approved.

The meeting adjourned at 11:30 a.m.

Sincerely,

Robert DeSimone, President
Brinkman's dominance reflected in statistics

(Continued from Page 8)

kept the assessing Brinkman's The round point (Continued a Brinkman) have to rewarding Nike, Shop the performance his answer during the 'two' daily We we are rewarding jogging. We reward any her experience may have Brinkman's basketball career and Brinkman didn't throw the game, and in a career, for highest scoring average (13.8), most career field goals, most free throws in a game (9) and in a career, single-game (.818) and career (.990) free throw percentage, career rebounds, and career rebound average (12.7). "I chose the school first the persimble six-footers in recalling her decision to attend Bowdoin, "but I wasn't going to go to anyplace that didn't have basketball."

Meressee couldn't have happened with her final decision, because Brinkman and the rookie head coach combined to turn a 3-8 record in 1974-75 (Bowdoin's first women's basketball season) into a 14-2 mark the following year. Since then, the team has posted 15-5 and 14-4 marks before this year's record of 19-4 (tie date). Brinkman may be in line for a college coaching job after she completes her Bowdoin career and graduates this spring. In the meantime, though, a championship drive is in progress. A thousand points may be super, but a thousand points and a state title would be an even more appropriate finish to a landmark career.

Gals experience little difficulty in trouncing Bates

(Continued from Page 8)

Pugnet and Nancy Brinkman turned out their usual fine efforts but the squad as a whole displayed its depth. Everyone played well as the team gave the Bobcats a lesson in all dimensions of the game. Bowdoin ran an 18-point lead well from both the floor and the line. Most importantly, the Bears stifled the Bobcats single game with their famous swarming defense.

The entire bench shone defensively with a particularly aggressive effort from the 5'4" freshman Carrie Niederman. The boards on both ends of the floor were swept by Bowdoin and the entire roster seemed to come up with a steal or two.

Despite the fifty-four point romp, it was a sad day for Nancy Brinkman and Nancy Norman, the two graduating senior captains who played their last regular season game. Brinkman shot for a career total just shy of 1,000 points. Nancy Norman has also enjoyed a fine career playing for four years and leaving as a captain.

are CONTACT LENSES for you?

Dr. Roger L. Brignull, Optometrist, with an office adjacent to the Bowdoin campus offers Bowdoin students, faculty and family a comprehensive eye examination and complete contact lens or mono- nistic fitting session for $25.00. You will have an opportunity to wear hard or soft lenses in my office and participate in an appointment as to your potential to be a successful wearer of lenses. You are under no further obligations.

If we decline contact lenses are for you, additional fees are as follows:

Hard $170.00 Semi-flexible $210.00 Soft $220.00

Office hours by appointment, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Thursday evenings.

394 Maine Street, Brunswick: Telephone 725-4650.

Stowe Travel Says: "EURAILPASS THIS SUMMER, SEE ALL EUROPE FOR LESS!"

Eurailpass is a single convenient rail ticket good for First Class travel in 15 countries. On trains that are fast, frequent, comfortable, often luxurious.

Sleep on a train, gain extra daylight hours for sightseeing. Stop off, if you like, at some intriguing spot, and continue later. You also get free or discount rides on many boats, ferries, buses all over Europe.

FOR ANYONE UNDER 26 YEARS OF AGE

EURAIL YOUTHPASS

One ticket—good for 3 months of unlimited 2nd class rail travel in 15 countries...$260.

All this at an unbeatable bargain. Unlimited First Class travel for 15 days...$190. 21 days...$230. One month...$280. Two months...$390. Three months...$460. And a Eurail Youthpass — for those under 26 — 2 months of economy travel for $260.

Look how much you'll save with Eurailpass. One roundtrip can get you your mother to Vienna, say, is $601 on a typical 2-week car rental, $229 by regular First Class train, only $190 with a 15-day Eurailpass. For full details send for our booklet.

Note: you can't buy Eurailpass in Europe. Buy it from Clint Hagan or Eric Weatbye at Stowe Travel.

STOWE TRAVEL

9 Pleasant Street Downtown Brunswick

"The Travel Agency with YOU in Mind"
Swimmers surprise with balanced attack

by JOHN SHAW

Coming off a successful season of seven victories and three defeats, Charlie Butt's clean-shaven swim team had an amazing third place in the New England Championships two weeks ago at Springfield College.

"The best I had hoped for was fifth or sixth," admits Butt, "and if you consider we were competing against about thirty-two teams of such calibre as Boston College, Boston University and Springfield, third place was fantastic."

In citing the standouts, Butt hardly knows where to begin. "Bob Pellegrino really helped us out taking second in the 200 breaststroke and swimming strongly in the relay. Another senior, Brian Cronin, took twenty-two seconds off his personal best in the 50 freestyle."

The real surprise was freshman Sam Sadowsky, who opened the meet with a first-place finish in the 100 freestyle. According to Butt, "The win, along with his fourth in the 500 freestyle and 12th in the 200 relay set the pace for the rest of the team."

The versatile Kirk Hutchison, also a freshman, finished third in the 200 butterfly, setting a new Bowdoin record. He placed in the 400 and 200 individual medley and dropped two seconds off his time of last year in the 300 butterfly.

Chris Rensinger, a soccer player turned swimmer, placed in both the one and three-meter diving competition. "You might say he carried on a Bowdoin tradition," Butt said. "Like senior Steve Sontag and Allen Shearer before him, Chris had never even dived on the three-meter board, his first year, and only practiced two hours a week being at the University of Maine. One hour before the finals, in fact, Chris had to learn three new dives."

"I was really happy with Lee Philbrook, who set a personal best of 216.7 in the breaststroke," Butt offers. Also setting personal records were Steve Rote, who placed in the 50 freestyle, and Peter Lynch, who in the course of the meet qualified for Nationals.

Representatives from Bowdoin to the Nationals, which will be held this weekend at Geneseo, New York, include freshmen Hutchison, Sadowsky, and Rensinger, along with seniors Pellegrino, Jeff Cherry, and Santangelo. "After the New England's," Butt says, "there could be a few surprises."

Senior diver Steve Santangelo defended his four-year reign at Bowdoin College by winning the Senior Diving Award at the New England Championships held at Springfield College earlier this month. The prize is given in honor of Hue McCurdy to the diver who has amassed the most points during his four years at the Championships.

"It's a tremendous accomplishment," Coach Charlie Butt, "and in my estimation, he's the best diver in the country."}

Brinkman, Pingree pace Bears

Women advance after big victory; play Orono tonite

by BILL STUART

The Bowdoin Polar Bears took the first step on their road to a State Championship last night by defeating fifth-seeded St. Joseph's College by a score of 66-54 at Colby College.

Senior Nancy Brinkman and freshman Jill Pingree in 18 points apiece for the winners. Jess Birdsell added sixteen, while co-captain Nancy Norman chipped in twelve. Dotty DiVito contributed eight points.

At halftime, the Bears held a slim three-point lead, but in the second half the Bears put their game together to take the contest by twelve. Dotty DiVito scored twenty points on a shooting spree. The Bear's defense also kept the Grizzlies from scoring more than 100 points in a career. The Farmington-native easily reached that mark with an 18-point performance (she needed seven to reach the plateau) in the first round of the State Tournament against St. Joseph's last night at Colby.

The real test for the Bears comes tonight when the women take on the University of Maine at Orono, the number-one seed in the tournament. Orono defeated Bowdoin by twelve points earlier this season in Brunswick. This time, though, the Bears will not be weakened by illness as hampers the performances of two starters in that contest, Nancy Brinkman and Dotty DiVito. The Bears are looking for revenge. Bowdoin, though, will lose the home-court advantage it held in the first meeting.

The Polar Bears really put it all together on the floor Tuesday against Bates is what seemed to be a warm-up match for the Tournament. Bates, coming on strong late in the season with a big victory on the University of Maine at Farmington in a team which defeated the Bears by four points, never put more than four consecutive points together during the 94-44 Bowdoin triumph.

From the opening tap, Bowdoin controlled the tempo of the game, seemingly scoring at will. Jill Lynch dives into the Curtis Pool at the start of a heat earlier this season. The sophomore backstroker helped the swimmers to their best-ever record of 7-3 and qualified for the Nationals.

(Continued on Page 7)

Oriental/State

Brinkman's first six points of the game came easily, but the seventh point was elusive. She played much of the first half with 999 points; every shot bounced around the rim before deciding to keep the co-captain in suspense a little longer. Finally, in the second half, she caught up with her date. Play was then halted, and Coach Dick Messereau presented Brinkman with a bouquet of roses and a Most Valuable Player ball to commemorate the historic occasion.

In an effort to move Brinkman closer to the mark Tuesday, Messereau kept her star player in the Bates' game long after the other regulars had been pulled. With four minutes remaining in the game, he reinstated DiVito into the line-up to help "Brink," whose formal guard explained, "so I (Continued on Page 7)
HAS BEEN ADMITTED TO THE CLASS OF 1983

Roberts, Tardiff chosen to head Center in controversial decision

by DIANE MAYER

In a decision marked by some controversy, Assistant to the Dean of Students Lois Egasti and Director of the Moulton Union Harry Warren announced the selection of Terry Roberts '80 and Michael Tardiff '80 for next year's Earl D. Moulton Interns. The two will lead the Senior Center in the transitional year which lies ahead for changing complex.

According to Warren, Director of the Moulton Union, "The intern is in a two-fold role. They are proctors for the tower and also have administrative duties." The administrative duties include hiring other students as Reception Desk Monitors, Reception Stewards, and mail sorters. The interns make arrangements for all functions held in the Senior Center and are responsible for hosting visitors to the Center. As proctors, the interns are responsible for any emergencies "including fire, broken elevators, students locked out of rooms, etc."

The termination of the Senior Center Program will bring changes in both administration and character of the Center. Harry Warren explains, "Senior Center films, lectures, and concerts will no longer be scheduled through the Senior Center, but through the Moulton Union which schedules all other campus activities. According to Egasti, "We are taking the remains of whatever was run separately by the Senior Center and moving them into their logical college departments." The administrative changes are intended to eliminate "confusion and paper flow."

There will also be some important changes which will directly affect future residents of the Senior Center. Tardiff and Roberts hope to foster a dorm identity and greater interaction among inhabitants of the Senior Center. "What we have now is not a dorm. It is a tall building with facilities. We'd like to turn vertical apartments into a 200 person living group," explains Tardiff. Roberts concurs. "It's so shut-off - it's so separate. I know people who don't even know the people living on the other side of the bathroom."

The new interns are brimming with ideas for functions that may bring about greater Senior Center solidarity. In the future there may be Friday afternoon cocktail hours on the 16th floor, brunches exclusively for Center residents, student dance activities, an extensive Christmas celebration, a Senior Center backgammon tournament, and even monthly birthday parties for all those whose birthdays fall during that month.

"The top thing on my list, though," says Roberts, "is a dorm meeting." Roberts believes that the logistical problems of a 200 person dorm meeting can be surmounted and that it is important to gather all of the residents together at one time.

(Continued on Page 3)

Prominent psychologist says
North still resists integration

by STEVEN RAPKIN

An unusually large audience filled Kresge Auditorium Tuesday evening when noted psychologist, educator, and human rights advocate Dr. Kenneth B. Clark came to Bowdoin as a guest speaker in the 1978-79 series of John Brown Russwurm Distinguished Lectures. Dr. Clark is author of such works as Prejudice and Your Child (1955), the prizewinning Dark Ghetto (1960), and The Paths of Power (1971). Clark's work on the effect of segregation on children led him to become very involved with the United States Supreme Court decision in the Brown vs. Board of Education case of 1954. Appropriately, Clark's topic was "American Race Relations: 25 Years After the Brown Decision."

After being introduced by President Entenman, Clark began by comparing the Brown decision of May 17, 1954, which in effect ruled that compulsory segregation in public schools denied equal rights under the law, with such documents as the Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights, the Emancipation Proclamation, and the Constitution of the United States. The Brown decision, said Clark, will be "recorded as one of the great documents of Anglo American history."

He went on to discuss the relevance of this landmark decision in light of the progress which it triggered in the fight for racial equality and social justice over the past 25 years.

Among the many consequences of the Brown decision was the "successful removal of all signs of humbling, alienation, and discrimination south of the Mason-Dixon line" in restaurants, hotels and especially on buses.

By avoiding the American consciousness to racial prejudice.

(Continued on Page 4)

Incoming freshmen
Mason culls colorful class

by HARRIS WEINER

Among the 728 sub-freshman accepted from this year's pool of 1,318 applicants are the women's national white canoeing champ, a unicyclist from Michigan, a published health researcher, a bassoon and bagpipe player from New York, and a thrower from Ireland, and the president of a high school. What the most recent trend involved an attempt to hitchhike to Mars on a DC-10.

The number of applications submitted to Bill Mason and his staff this year dropped 13% from last year's total of 1,636. This corresponds with a 2-3% increase in Ivy League applications this year. In addition, Bowdoin's Early Decision Program, under which 79 men and 56 women were admitted, saw a 25% decline in applicants.

Bill Mason attributes this decline partially to a better understanding of Bowdoin's standards. "Our popularity drew many unqualified applicants. We now try to counsel prospective applicants by encouraging realistic kids and discouraging unrealistic kids from applying. We also covered 60 to 70 Boston high schools that we normally visit individually in two college nights.

Under this year's policy of sex blind admissions, 50% of the accepted students are male and 50% are female. Thirty-seven percent have qualified for financial aid, only 25% chose not to submit college board scores, and 56% of the 131 Bowdoin legacies in the applicant pool were accepted.

The admissions process employed by Mason's staff includes the indirect involvement of alumni committees, coaches, and music and art professors. The Admissions Committee brings the process by traveling throughout the country, seeking out and counseling outstanding high schoolers. "Bowdoin is a national institution by reputation but in New England we are better known than Brown for our external travel budget. We have the best scientists in the state, but no one knows it."

The early decision program, in Mason's opinion, makes it possible for us to take outstanding students first. In regular decision "the top 200 to 250 candidates are reviewed by several admissions officers and don't even come before the Committee for deliberation. The committee meets deal with the others on a numerically blind basis and the results are brought in with the predicted number of acceptances by hopping, a mechanical term referring to the waitlisting of surplus acceptances.

The Committee then begins its calculations, gauging on both the expected class size and the financial aid budget. Walter Moulton's financial aid office collaborates with other selective Eastern colleges in offering the same aid to common applicants to insure that no decisions are influenced by financing.

"The aid program is critical and allows us to make a more diverse class. We have an exceptional financial aid program. Our hands have never been tied by rising costs," stated Mason.

Mason expects 45% of those admitted to the class of 1983 to matriculate. "It's the best applicant pool I've seen in three years and that's because we have been seen in five. The thing that all our kids have in common is that they're bright and they use their intelligence."

Every year the admissions staff tries to admit as diverse a class as possible. In Mason's opinion, "Homogeneity leads to boredom. We need kids who will take chances. Diversity can be very healthy for Bowdoin and for the total experience."

A state trooper stands guard near the Three Mile Island Nuclear Power Plant. For a Bowdoin Pennsylvanian's thoughts on the crisis, see page 5. UPI photo
Is it too much to ask?

Bowdoin has never been known for its activism, liberal, conservative, whatever. In fact, there have been only two episodes in the College’s history when students have expressed their opinions en masse — the famous student strike of the nineteenth century which protested the establishment of mandatory military drill and the equally famous but more recent strike to protest President Nixon’s invasion of Cambodia in 1970.

It is not difficult to see then, that Bowdoin has never been at the forefront of social and/or political dissent. This tradition shows no signs of diminishing in 1979. As an illustration, one need only look at the question of South African investments.

Last weekend forty students at Brandeis University staged a sit-in to protest their administration’s refusal to immediately divest itself of all stocks held in companies that currently do business in South Africa. Throughout the United States, this has been an increasingly common scene in recent years.

This past Tuesday, when the Executive Board announced the student nominees to Faculty and Governing Board committees, it was revealed that only one lonely soul out of the College’s 1350 strong student body had bothered to apply for the vacancy on Bowdoin’s South African Investments Committee. One would think that a veritable horde of individuals would jump at the opportunity to help decide the College’s future on this important issue. This has not been the case at Bowdoin. The topic draws merely a suppressed yawn and a bored stare.

We are not saying that all students should sit at once storm Hawthorne-Longfellow Hall and dismantle it brick by brick a la 1789 and the Bastille. Nor do we say which side of the divestment issue we recommend. It would be desirable, however, for students to show a bit more concern and awareness about an issue that is here to stay whether we like it or not. Hopefully after four years of learning here “under the pines” we will be equipped to ponder such issues and come to logical, thoughtful decisions. Or we could continue down the disinterested path we now blindly follow.

Order or absolute freedom? play examines alternatives

by ALEX STEVENSON

Amid what are usually barely audible, although regretful murmurs about lack of student political activity and the absence of creativity on the Bowdoin campus, David G. Kent ’78 has spoken out, and at least briefly, settled both scores. Learning to Walk Erect, a two-act play presented in Kresge Auditorium on the Wednesday and Thursday before spring vacation, was written as a Government Honors Project about anarchy, but the play is artistically as well as politically incisive and is consistently thought-provoking.

For although political, LWE is not part of the story to its bare bones, it is the story of the events leading to the trial of a group of American prison inmates for their purported attempts to revolt against “the Parker Plan.” The Plan is an arrangement concocted by knee-jerk liberals to help convicts prepare to deal with the real world of capitalism, but when the prisoners see as paternalistic. Things are more complicated than just had rich against good poor, however. Although the proponents of the Parker Plan are usually considered justified, as represented by Congresswoman Beth Gilmarn (Margie Scheller ’81) when she says “if wasn’t so involved, I might not be able to sleep at night” — they are made human too — Judge Winifred Parker (Mary Lou Morris ’81) and Ms. Patricia Elliott (Beaty Wheeler ’80) are the wife and daughter, respectively, of Dr. Albert Ruskin (Peter Hochshark ’80) who is in prison as a spokesman for the prisoners’ viewpoint.

Though Ruskin might easily have been allowed to emerge as the play’s martyr-hero, the unmitigated Christ figure, his role is more problematic due to his unwillingness to play the prisoners’ revolt and thus puts a neat double twist in the reality/play dilemma which has already been posed.

Kent wrote the play in Kresge Auditorium in mind; it is not surprising that LWE had more success adapting to its environment than have most other plays performed here. Nevertheless, credit for ingenious use of space is certainly due both Kent and Director Molly Noble ’81. Abrupt shifts between the Parker and the prison were sometimes galling, but the audience, most notably at the end and just before the “Orange” Lawrence’s (Dennis Levy ’79) murder, made fuller use of the given space as well as making possible reality out of things which are separate and ultimately unreal when they are confined onstage.

LWE is only the product of the rising number of students participating in political activity, for which the author deserves credit. Having the play running now is testament to the audience confronting some difficult and irrespective issues, always a formidable task, but one the Bowdoin audience is still learning to walk erect, we are as

(Continued on Page 6)

LETTERS

Hats off

To the Editor:

Although Bowdoin students rely heavily on campus organizations to provide social activities and other diversions, these organizations and their student leaders are often criticized as oversimplified, disorganized or simply inactive. Even when a noteworthy job is done, it in frequent ignored or taken for granted. Such is the case with the Bowdoin Film Society.

This year, despite a relatively limited budget considering the importance of film as a major form of entertainment on campus, BFS president Steve Durst created an imaginative and interesting program, mixing several "genre weekends" with a wide variety of recent vintage and lasting importance. It has been, by far, the most outstanding year for the BFS since its inception.

Next year, in an effort to continue the high standards Steve has set, the BFS hopes to offer as many as forty films. The amount of time invested and energy expended by Steve and the other BFS members in reviving the Film Society deserves to be recognized.

We, at least, would like to take this opportunity to thank Steve and the BFS publicly for the fine job he has done.

Sincerely,
Barrett Fisher ’80

Sig Knopf ’80

Neil Roman ’80

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT

Member United States Student Press Association

“The College reserves the right to control over the content of the student writings contained herein and neither it, the Administration, nor the faculty assume any responsibility for the views expressed herein.”

Robert DeSicnece

Bill Smith

Raymon A. Sutin

Laura Hitchcock

Managing Editor

Managing Editor

Managing Editor

Managing Editor

Bowdoin Publishing Company

Jamey Caviston

Fred Leiser

Dennis Weiner

Modes.

QUOTATION OF THE WEEK:

“We’re not getting married, we’re working together.”

Mike Tardiff, in response to questions concerning his compatibility with his fellow Senior Center intern Terry Roberts.
Town and College Club

Gentle folk engage in chatter, deep thought

by NANCY ROBERTS

The names of Kenneth Charles Morton Sils, William De Witt Hyde, and Theodore Burnett have become known to many of us today as plagues on age-old academic ediﬁcates. But these eminent Bowdoin personalities join such current notables as Dean of the Faculty Alfred Fuchs and Associate Professor of Mathematics James Ward on the membership list of the venerable Town and College Club.

The little-known Town and College Club, which in its ninety-ﬁfth year, was founded as a discussion group composed of twelve members of the college faculty and administration, twelve town citizens, and the college president who assembled ten times a year to partake of good food, informative essays, and lively discussion. The Club has not changed much in its almost cen-ten-si-al lifetime.

Philip Wilder, Assistant to the President, Emeritus and Secretary of the Club points out that the dinners which always accompany a meeting are no longer hosted, but are now usually served in the Main Lounge of the Moulton Union. "Drinks are served in the lounge and their smoke has all but vanished... and at a few meetings a lady has been a guest." Despite these minor in- novations, the spirit and purpose of the Club remains unchanged. The group gathers ten times during the year and the twenty-ﬁve take turns presenting papers.

Dunsky’s 1979 Oscar review

by STEVE DUNSKY

In the mid-1960's an unknown ad-man devised a slogans for a sagging Hollywood — Movies are your best—entertainment. It seemed destined to superecede "movies are better than ever," until a dubious way pointed out that the slogan's acronym is M.A.Y.B.E. In 1978, with admission prices at $4.50 in major cities, it was hard to wonder if a steinerio or six- pack of Heineken wasn't a better investment.

I didn't like many of last year's ﬁlms, and, in truth... I didn’t see many of them. Therefore, instead of second-guessing the Academy Award selections, I would like to present my ﬁrst annual awards to the members of the Academy.

In the category of Best Cleavage the competition was very tight. The choice came down to a couple of veterans, with Kim Novak (45) nipping out the favorite Raquel Welch (40). Ms. Novak's costume designer also won, in a supporting role. Ms. Welch, incidentally, appeared to have been Tuttle White.

The Worst Acceptance Speech goes, hands down, to Jon Voight, who never managed to recover from his hearing loss. "I'd like to thank all the people who fought to get the recognition..." nobody can throw it like Lord Olivier.

The Worst Presenter was Ricky Shroder, who suffered all the symptoms of terminal cuteness, including, perhaps, the need in order to read the teleprompter. The Best Presenter was the other young person, Brooke Shields. She not only looks like a grown woman, but behaves in a way unlike the rest: Steve Martin with George Burns pestering her.

The Most Sickness Moment occurred when Jane Fonda did her acceptance speech in sign-language; as if the country's fourteen million deaf people waited half the night in silence in order to ﬁnd out how she feels about disabled veterans. Doesn't she have enough to do already? Anyway, Louise Fletcher already did that shit.

The Second Most Sickness Moment is dedicated to all the people who sang the nominated songs. Sign language could have been effectively used instead.

The Most Touching Moment came when John (The Green Berets/ Wayne gave the Oscar for Best Film to The Deer Hunter. Duke, you can't buck the establishment.

And if you're curious, there is no such thing as a good acceptance speech.

John Voight was awarded an Oscar for his portrayal of a Vietnam vet in Coming Home. UPI photo

Tardiff, Roberts named Senior Center interns

(Continued from Page 1)

She and Tardiff will hold the meeting to explain the "do's and dont's" of living in the building, to solicit input and concerns. The meeting is open to the Center events, as well as to "give people an opportunity to look around the building to see who lives in the same building.

Roberts adds that residents are free to abstain from future Senior Center functions. "It's their choice of whether they want to make things different or not, but I'm going to push a few months before admitting defeat. I'm really psyched, I'm so ﬁred. It'll set the tone for the future.

There are some people, however, who are dissatisﬁed with the choice of Roberts and Tardiff as next year's interns. Carl Winter, a 64 year-old and Tom George, '82, both of the other six applicants for the positions, asserted that Roberts and Tardiff have been involved in numerous college activities and that "fresh blood" ought to have been sought. "The college was not looking to give new people a chance," complained Winter. "It was under the impression that Bowdoin was supposed to present learning opportunities and not business situations."

George states, "Aspects they (the selection committee) were looking for were not reﬂected in those who were chosen."

He suggests that Roberts and Tardiff did not meet the job qualiﬁcations of "total dedication to the intern- ship," as both are very in- volved individuals. George also feels that the two "have very strong personalities," which may clash. He adds that he found out that no effort had been made to look into his or Winter's references.

Roberts responded, "Everyone complains that Mike and Terry do everything, but the things I've done at Bowdoin have better prepared me for the job. I'd hate to be discarded as a choice because of my qualiﬁcations."

Roberts intends to curtail all activities next year. Tardiff will be "station manager on WBNR and a Senior Center intern. period." Tardiff stressed that "the Senior Center will come ﬁrst. I have no doubt about my ability to organize my time and I have conﬁdence in Terry and her dedication."

In response to questions of their capability Tardiff retorted, "We're not getting married, we're working together." Roberts observed, "we've had our differences in the past. We understand those differences and will put them aside for the job."
Brown decision was landmark, but battle for equality continues

(Continued from Page 1)

This decision (which overturned the court's 1896 "separate but equal" ruling) directly stimulated the development of many civil rights movements which sprang up during the 1960's.

Another important consequence of the May 17, 1954 decision was its stimulating the legislative branch of government to concrete acts toward racial justice, for example the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This piece of legislation under the Johnson administration was the "first significant step towards racial equality in 90 years."

Most notable of the results of this decision was and is still the number of blacks being elected to public office as well as the increased number of blacks in the American middle class. There are today after 25 years more blacks in college, universities, and in graduate and professional schools than ever before. The Brown decision definitely "triggered, stimulated, and sparked positive development and progress in race relations."

There are, said Clark, significant problems remaining that require more than the Brown decision to be resolved. Clark cited the large urban ghettoes of such northern cities as New York and Boston as examples of continued racial segregation.

As a psychologist, Clark has done extensive research in the field of the effects of segregation on children. He says that without a doubt, segregation is a more threatening force to white children than it is to black children as it does not prepare white children to deal with people who are different, and this is essential to the growing demand for world peace. For Clark, segregation equals "psychological violence."

Clark closed by praising the democratic system of the United States for allowing a decision such as the Brown ruling to be made, and for the progress that it has brought about. Clark's view of race relations in the U.S. today is optimistic, the only view that a person who wants change and progress can afford to have.

Masque and Gown gets its grades:
Production saved by sheer talent

by TOM KEYDEL

The Spring Musical, "Guys and Dolls" and its 18 players to packed houses on each of its three performances dates drawing a high rating on audience appreciation. The musical, with its infectious enthusiasm, was excellent in many aspects but lacked the tight cohesion which marks a top flight performance. It was both delightful and adequate at the same time, and I left the theater feeling that I had enjoyed the experience but was disappointed that not all of the technical and artistic capabilities lived up to their full potential.

Any full scale musical production at Bowdoin is going to have a rough time to begin with since theater is not a priority item here, but a musical production with only four rehearsal as well as just destined to have problems, and this one did. The primary problem with the production I felt was its lack of polish and precision. The musical did not have enough time to pull up its weaker scenes and numbers, and the moments which would bank its its virtue on sheer talent and not methodical performance precision. The net result was that the musical did not set a standard for itself, and then live up to it consistently throughout. Weaker moments pulled down the better ones resulting in a performance which was satisfying but sporadic in its portrayal.

Of the better performances, Ian Cron and Kacey Foster were outstanding. Ian played the role of Nathan Detroit for all it was worth, blending a sophistication and brashness which suited the character a tee. Kacey Foster as Adelaide was solidly consistent her accent as an exception in her portrayal of the dumb but sincere box star who could never seem to sail down man. Her rendition of the number "Adelaide's Lament" was particularly effective.

Debby Misch as Sarah Brown pulled out an admirable performance. She was the first role during the last week of rehearsal. Her vocal numbers were clear but her character development lacked the same force of her vocal performance. David Doyle as Sky Masterson never assumed his character the way he might have. Instead of a branchy self-confident Chicago gambler whose rougher qualities have been learned by the hand hard of experience, we got an all too clean Brooks Atkinson rendition who could not seem to relax in his role. His vocal performance was good but suffered the same stiffness as his character.

In the supporting cast there were fine performances all around, particularly by Ken Harvey, as Benny Southstreet, and Jeff Banks, as Nicely-Nicely. Their title duet, "Guys and Dolls", proved to be the show stopping number it was meant to be.

On the technical aspects, the company dance numbers lacked the polish they might have given more time, and although a little direction.

The performance by the orchestra turned up on the weak side as its musical recordings lacked the strength they should have had. This did not hurt the performance, but it did not help it either. The sets for the most part were adequate, but unoriginal. The one exception to this would be the newer set which was very effective with its stage ratatouille and strikingly designed backdrop.

Taken with its strong and weak points, the Masque and Gown production of "Guys and Dolls" was good, not as good as the sets might have been, but enjoyable nonetheless.

Prior to vacation, the Masque and Gown performed the musical "Guys and Dolls" before packed houses in Pickard Theater.

The Bowdoin Dance Group will present its annual Spring performance on Friday & Saturday, April 20 & 21. There will be no charge for the 8 p.m. Pickard Theater show.

On Sunday night at 7:30 p.m. the Museum Associates' Film Program will present "Wuthering Heights" in the Krueger Auditorium of the Visual Arts Center. Admission for this all-time classic which stars Laurence Olivier, Merle Oberon, Greta Garbo, and David Niven, is a mere $1.00. Members of the Program will be admitted free of charge.

SUC will sponsor Orrin Star and Gary Mehalick tonight at 9:00 in Daggett (Star is the 1976 flatpacking champion). Tomorrow night at 8:00 in Daggett the Peter Galloway Revue will be appearing. Both are free of charge.

Tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Krueger Auditorium of the Visual Arts Center, the Museum Department will present pianist Arthur Greene. This program will feature works by Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin. The public is cordially invited.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES

Environmental Studies
Cliff Katze '80
Bruce Shippes '80
Bennet Wynn '79
Brenda Good '81

See Blue Grievance
Greg Schubemaker '80

Financial Planning
Benny Southstreet '80
Ferd Amore '79

Alumni Council
Jim Aronoff '81
Karen Rooke '81

South African Investments
Janice Warren '80

GOVERNING BOARDS COMMITTEES

Arts
Brenda Good '81
Karen Rooke '81

Development
Tom Downes '75
Natalie Burns '80

Educational Program
Brenda Good '81
Karen Rooke '81

Investments
Brenda Good '81
Karen Rooke '81

Library
Brenda Good '81
Karen Rooke '81

Physical Plant
Brenda Good '81
Karen Rooke '81

* Alternates indicate incomplete committees.
Great honor

Walker shares podium with Gregory, Haley

by JAN CROSBY

It is a rare occasion that a college senior is invited to be opening speaker for a convention which includes black activist-comedian Dick Gregory and author Alex Haley. Mike Walker '79 found himself in just that situation when he was asked to be one of three speakers in the Pylon Salesmanship Club's community celebrity series which was held in his home town of Dallas, Texas and in Houston, last month.

The Pylon Salesmanship Club is the Texas affiliate of the National Business League, a group of businesses in the South which was established in 1887. Mike Walker found himself speaking on the topic of "The Future and How to Prepare for it." He was followed by Gregory's "On the Present and How to Cope" and Haley's "Past and How It Relates."

Walker explains the main message of his speech, "The comprehension of truth constitutes the highest form of human freedom and the correct comprehension of truth is loving myself. Therefore, freedom lies not in hating white people, America, my past, but in loving myself. For loving myself necessitates defining myself which, in turn, necessitates understanding myself. Once we love ourselves we can live and love others."

Pennsylvania 'sheds light' on nuclear accident

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

John McHenry lives in Harrisburg.

No, he doesn't glow in the dark. But he's concerned.

"Not a lot of people realize around here," he claims, "are badly misinformed about what was going on around the area. My impressions of the situation were that people were fairly calm. The problem was mostly that no one knew what was going on."

John McHenry '60 lives in a farm near Hellam, Pennsylvania, and the towers of the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant are within view of his home.

"The people in the area who panicked and left," he continued, "did so either on Wednesday or on Saturday" when both major incidents at the power plant occurred.

"The first incident was the release of radioactive gases into the atmosphere. They should have alerted people right away. It was two hours before Civil Defense was alerted."

"In the early morning hours on Saturday there was another release into the atmosphere and also into the Susquehanna River. Officials were alerted immediately and they had people in downstream areas checking levels of radioactivity. They were not at a level to be evacuated."

"The China Syndrome was just opening in the area at the time and that sort of played on people's fears and they just packed up and left."

Haitian children's rights

"People who did leave, claimed McHenry — and many did without friends or relatives or to the mountains, "as most Pennsylvanians do."

McHenry probably would have gone to Baltimore. But there were elements of leaving going on, people saying, 'You've got to evacuate, go in and losing the place. I think in the immediate area several thousand people left, a sizeable amount of the population around here."

Goldboro were closed, quite a few in Middletown and other areas, but it seemed to me that things went on pretty well as usual.

"The problem," he repeated, "was mostly that no one knew what was going on. The President's visit was sort of a stabilizing influence, although there were lots of jokes about the funny shoes..."

Growing up in the area, he added, made him very energy-conscious. He recalled "nuclear energy trips" taken by Boy Scout trips designed to "educate kids about what was going on. When I was younger, I was very pro-nuclear."

And today?

"I don't think that nuclear power is the answer but in the next few years we couldn't get along without "nuclear power plants. It will be thirty years before solar energy would supply a major percentage of our power needs."

"There are risks to this, just as there are risks to coal plants. We accept losses of life to Black Lung disease, we just slide off. And you don't want to burn up uranium anymore, it's a limited supply."

"I am concerned about this. I'm also concerned that people around here didn't know what was going on."

Senior Mike Walker spoke about the future of young blacks in business last month in Dallas. Orient/Shen

A child doesn't know he can't do or believe anything until he is told not to, so he does."

Jokingly, Mike remarks, "I only wish I could manage to apply what I believe in about speaking to my kids."

However, this is the conviction which he lives by and thinks we should all strive for. Noting his own success in overcoming his speech impediment, he explains, "That's why I speak, to inspire others that there's nothing they can't do."

Walker, a double major in philosophy and government, would like to pursue further study in religious or political philosophy, having strong inclinations to both. At present, his future looks very bright; he has choices between graduate studies at Harvard, Princeton, or Yale. He will continue to make public appearances lecturing and preaching, among which will be a return trip to Texas with Haley and Gregory in June and a September conference at MIT.

Walker looks back on last month's convention as one of his most memorable. In view of this experience, Mike has been inspired toward some far-reaching future goal. He remarks, "Everytime, my family and my friends, were saying what an honor it must be for me to be speaking with such great men as Alex Haley and Dick Gregory. But not at all demeaning this experience, I really look forward to the day when Alex Haley will be honored to speak in a conference with Michael Walker."

Three Mile Island Nuclear Plant

The Three Mile Island Nuclear Plant is the focus of the controversy that has engrossed the country over the past two weeks. UP1 photo

The results of the SU2 elections for next year:
Chairman Terry Grus '80
Treasurer Linda Curtis '82
Secretary Julie Stull '82

Red Sox color commentator Ken Harrelson likes to talk about the clutch hitting exploits of Butch Hobson by proclaiming, "When the ducks are on the pond, Bechichi drives them home. The Bowdoin baseball team has done its part in the spring break that there is more than one way to remove the ducks from the pond. Their lexicank in more than just losing efforts and was continually plagued by "fowl." Its unique method of overcoming such adversity merits it the Orient "Outstanding Achievement Award" this week.

FRI, APR. 13, 1979
THE BOWDOIN ORIENT PAGE FIVE
Feminist poetry attracts crowd at Kresge

by MARTHA HOBES

Surely by now the American woman knows "it is time to stop running for most popular sweetheart of Campbell Soup" (as one of the poems declared). Or at least we New England intellectuals here at Bowdoin College know that our era demands more serious endeavors.

On a Sunday evening last month, "I Want A Women's Revolution Like A Lover" played to two full houses in Kresge Auditorium. Though billed as a poetry reading, it may more accurately be described as a dramatic performance and directed by five Bowdoin women. All five women (Kathy Bole '81, Toni Fitzpatrick '79, Kathleen Huntington '79, Julia Leight '81, and Sharon Nomura '80) gave outstanding performances, with Tina Shon '79 doing a fine job on lighting.

The material had been culled from both alternative-press and mainstream feminist poetry, and ingeniously woven together into a performance that included a slide show, musical accompaniment, and audience participation. One is tempted to pluck theatrical rifts of acclaim from the dictionary and call the evening a "tour de force," "effective," "important." Indeed, it was all of these things, and yet these compliments seem unimpressed, almost contrived, and do not do justice to the impact of "I Want A Women's Revolution." Most of the audience was plainly overwhelmed; some were put off, and a few, downright alienated. No one remained unmoved.

The language of revolution is ambiguous. We hear words like "consciousness" and "oppression" in connection with the idea of social change. "I wanted to write a poem that rhymes," says one of the women, "but revolution doesn't lend itself to beopposing." Certainly this is true, and yet the poetry of revolution is easier to share than the pedagogy and the dogma.

The skillful combination of humor and well-directed anger was exemplified in the dialogue taken from Nourake Shange's renowned play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf." The piece opens with the women one-upping each other on their lovers' most maddening excuses (from "Oh, baby, you know I was high" to "To have, boy, I told you I was sorry"). They then come forward in their own defense with "I'm not going to be nice. I will raise my voice and scream and howl and break things and race the engine." The piece ends with the firm plea: "Next time you should admit you're mean, low-down, trifling... Steady being sorry all the time, enjoying yourself."

Nearly last on the program was Robin Morgan's classic feminist poem, "Menstrual." This is what happens after the humor and well-directed anger are over. "Listen," the poem begins, "I'm really slowly dying inside myself tonight." A mother speaks of her baby son asleep in the next room: "White, Male, American. Potentially the most powerful, deadly creature of the species." And then: "I want a women's revolution like a lover. I lust for it, I want so much this freedom, this end to struggle and fear and lies we all exhale, that I could die just with the passionate uttering of that desire." And after the language of poetry is over, we hear: "Do you understand? Dying. Going crazy. Really. No poetic metaphor."

Before our eyes these women went insane, screamed laughter, danced and sang rebellion. At the end of the evening there were the usual murmurs of disbelief from the performers that the event was over. But Campbell Soup sweethearts (or more appropriate to Bowdoin, wet t-shirt contest) be damned, it is far from over. In their performance, these women invited revolution. Really. No poetic metaphor.

"Want to spend this summer sailing the Caribbean? The Pacific? Europe? Cruising other parts of the world aboard sailing or power yachts? Boat owners need crews! For free information, send a 25c stamp to Xanadu, 6833 So. Geeseer, Suite 661, Houston, TX 77036" Lax men improve tone too quickly as season begins
(Continued from Page 8)

Coach LaPointe is especially proud of his "small but talented" side this year. He feels that the defense, "which, at first, was questionable," has improved tremendously and equals the offense in strength.

With the season's performance the men have made, the Polar Bears should have another tremendous season.

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.
Cards and Gifts

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
146 Main St. Telephone 725-4381
Brunswick, Maine 04011

The Bowdoin Orient
THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
FRI, APR. 13, 1979
PAGE SEVEN

Tourney will be tough to conquer
(Continued from Page 8)

Technology, 8-1. "We won to a strong, well-seasoned MIT team," Reid announces. "They played eight matches down South before taking us on.

"I think we played pretty well considering the amount of practice we had done. Before vacation, we usually played in the middle of the night because the rates were cheaper.

"We are looking forward to improved weather so that we can go outside and get some real live game-condition experience.

Some actual game experience will come the team's way Saturday when the Polar Bears host an invitation tournament. Several in-state opponents will invade Brunswick in an event that should give observers a preliminary indication of the relative strengths of Maine teams this season.

Reid expects to do well in the competition. "If we play as well as we did against MIT when we face Colby, we should win. As far as Bates and UMO go, it should be close, real close."

Sports Quiz
(Continued from Page 8)

6. How many career points did Greg Panulo '78 score in establishing a Bowdoin Basketball record?
a. 1,401  b. 1,631  c. 1,663  d. 1,692

7. What was Bowdoin's hockey record against Division I foes this year?
a. 2-4  b. 2-5  c. 3-4  d. 3-5

8. Who led the Men's Basketball team with a scoring average of 16.6 points per game this season?
a. Ted Higgins  b. Skip Knight
  Mark Krauslin  d. Mike McCormick

9. The Men's Swimming Team's best record ever was...
a. 76-79, 7-1  b. 72-73, 8-1
  c. 65-66, 11-1  d. 74-75, 7-2

10. Who was the leading point getter for Bowdoin's Track this season?
a. Ray Swan  b. Mark Preece
  c. Mark Hoffman  d. Steve Gerow

Answer Key
1. c  6. c
2. b  7. a
3. a  8. b
4. c  9. a
5. e  10. d

PARIS
BOSTON NON-STOP
$320 AS LOW AS $250
ROUND TRIP CIRCUMTRIP FARE
Starting June 1
• 747 Non-stop Friday and Sunday.
• Only service to Paris' Orly Airport.

ANNOUNCING NEW LOW AIR FARES TO PARIS
Braniff is reducing Economy fares up to 15% and introducing super low budget and standby fares. Call Stone Travel for adnance purchase and length of stay requirements.

Round Trip Budget APEX Economy
Boston—Paris* Round Trip Round Trip Round Trip
$320 $360 $712
* Paris fare subject to government approval.

RESERVATIONS are now being taken for these new Braniff flights from Boston. Round trip to London is only $330. A new summer APEX fares (other airlines, of course) are as follows: Boston to London, 939; Amsterdam, $434; and Luxembourg from New York, $500. Call or allow time for飞翔 or ERIC WESTBYE at Stone Travel, 9 Pleasant St., tel.
725-5673 for information and tickets. Book early as all APEX fare space europe is selling fast on all Airlines.

STOWE TRAVEL welcomes you all to "the peaks of two" back from the spring vacation. Remember for all airlines, bus, AMTRak, etc. to always call STOWE TRAVEL — the travel agency with YOU in mind.

STOWE TRAVEL
Tel: 725-5573
9 Pleasant Street, Brunswick, Maine
Freshman Mike Nash outmaneuvers an MIT defender as he contributes to the Bowdoin winning effort. The rookie leads the team in scoring.

Netmen host Maine classic look to write success story

by BILL STUART

"We should win half our matches anyway," prophets men's tennis coach Ed Reed. "We're not going to push over, but it's going to be close. Against Colby, Bates, the University of Southern Maine and the University of Maine at Orono, it will be very close."

Reed's optimism stems mainly from a deep squad and some promising freshmen who can only improve when better weather allows the unit to practice outdoors more.

Senior Doug Fisher is again playing number one singles. Juniors Kevin McCann and Kurt Ranschoff, sophomore Brad Reffler, and junior Ben Grant round out the top five. Freshmen Paul Douglas, Rob Horowitz, Ken Harmon and Jim Graff add depth to the squad.

"There's not much difference in talent among the players," Reed notes, "which makes for a team of good depth. These are the type of teams that win. I have a good feeling about this group of players. I think a few of them can move up." In looking over the schedule, Reed concedes that the Polar Bears probably will not stand a chance against Tufts and Boston College. In Maine, though, he feels his squad can compete with the four above-mentioned teams.

Improving

Lacrosse looks for success

by CHRIS BENSINGER

This week marks the beginning of the women's lacrosse season, coached by the women's athletic director and varsity Field Hockey coach Sally LaPointe. "Last year," explains the enthusiastic coach, "we had a lot of wicked problems with injuries which accounted for our disappointing 2-5-1 record, but this season looks much better."

Although the Bears lost quite a few talented seniors, Coach LaPointe feels that returning stars such as Catrina Altmaier, Patty Williams, Sharon Graddy, and captain Laura Georgakis will contribute a successful performance. The team also hopes to improve last year's performance by strengthening their attack on offense.

"With the help of our experienced players," commented LaPointe, "it makes our attack the strongest it has been in ages. The defense is just about completely new but they are improving every day."

The team is a young one with promising freshmen such as Helen Nablo, Gwen Baldwin, Melissa Fisherly, Lonren Tenney, and Lee Cattanack, who are all playing Junior Varsity but could move up to Varsity status by the end of the year.

"The team spirit and camaraderie is tremendous," states LaPointe, "and all the girls are looking forward to a successful season. Our toughest contests will be against Harvard, Brown, and UNH, all of which we lost last year. The season is so short we would like to win them all."

Springtime marks the beginning of a new lacrosse season. Last year, the Bears had an outstanding record of 12-1 and finished second in the league behind Middlebury. Yet the 1979 season has begun slowly.

Although our record as it stands is 4-2, states coach Mortimer LaPointe, "I feel very optimistic."

One of the team's losses was a 10-3 trouncing against Dartmouth. "The team experienced a defection after that loss," comments LaPointe, "but we have picked up again and we are off to a bright season." Coach LaPointe feels that the games against Boston College, UNH, and Babson will be crucial contests in determining their direction.

The promising returning players who are contributing to a winning momentum are: captains Thomas Gamper and Mark Perry; on attack, Kevin Hill, Tim Chapin, Derek Van Slyck; at midfield, Ben Carpenter, Garnet Glover, and Baga Brokaw; and at defense, Bobby Garrison, Jim Hardee, and Derek Mercer. The two starting freshmen sensations are Mike Nash and Scott Brewer.

Sports Quiz

1. Mike Collins scored one of Bowdoin's two overtime goals this year. Who scored the other?
   a. Dave Bouche
   b. Bobby Devaney
c. Mike Carmen
d. Mark Pletta

2. Which winter sports coach sports the best career winning percentage?
   a. Charlie Butt
   b. Dick Morenreau
   c. Sid Watson
d. Ed Reid

3. Which team handed Bowdoin its first wrestling loss in three years?
   a. Maine Maritime
   b. Tufts
   c. Colby
d. Thomas

4. Which sport has been captained by the same person for three years?
   a. Men's Squash
   b. Women's Basketball
   c. Women's Squash
d. Women's Swimming

5. Roger Elliott and Bobby Devaney both scored 17 goals this season to lead the Bears. Who was second with 15?
   a. Kevin Brown
   b. Dave Bouche
c. Ron Marcellus
d. John Corcoran

(Continued on Page 7)

1979-1980
Winter Sports Captains

Men's Squash
Bill Anderson ’80
Bill Young ’80

Women's Squash
Margaret White ’80

Men's Basketball
Skip Knight ’80
Mike McCormack ’81

Men's Track
Scott Samuelson ’80

Women's Swimming
Sarah Beard ’81
Julie Spector ’80

Men's Hockey
Dave Boucher ’80
Paul Devlin ’80

Starting catcher Erik Arvidson practices to fire low and hard against Nason today. Last Saturday, the Bears embarrassed MIT 30-1 in the season opener.

This weekend in Sports

Apr. 13 Baseball vs. Nason
Home
1:30

Apr. 13 Men's Tennis Invitational Home
12:00

Apr. 14 Baseball vs. Brandeis Home
10:30

Apr. 14 Women's Lacrosse vs. UNH Home
11:00

Apr. 14 Women's Track vs. Hyde Sch.
Home
1:00

Apr. 14 Men's Track vs. MIT Away
12:30

Apr. 14 Men's Lacrosse vs. UNH
Aaway
2:00
Benoit establishes record

by BILL STUART

Each year on Patriot's Day...thousands of amateur runners, both men and women, come from around the United States and the world to attempt the most grueling test of body and spirit imaginable – a 26-mile, 385-yard footrace that offers no more than a laurel wreath to the winner and a plate of beef stew to everyone who finishes.

The spotlight of national sports attention shifted to Bowdoin's Joan Benoit Monday when the petite senior established a new American women's marathon record on her way to a victory in the women's division of the annual Boston Marathon. Benoit, who finished the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2:35:15, bested two other Bowdoin entrants while shaving seven minutes off the previous Boston women's record. Senior Tim Guen finished the race in 2 hours, 44 minutes, and Professor Sam Butcher recorded a time of 2:59:20.

The magnitude of Benoit's accomplishment is staggering. Before Boston, she had run only one competitive marathon; she finished second in the Bermuda Marathon in January. Benoit passed favorite Patti Lyons of Quincy, MA, at the fabled Heartbreak Hill and coasted to the finish line three minutes ahead of Lyons.

No Olympic champion has ever won in Boston. Apparently it is one thing to run in Athens, London, Munich – or any other of the Olympic sites – and quite another to run in Boston.

Tom Hicks, the 1904 Olympic champion from the United States, ran four Bostons but the best he could do was finish in second place in 1904.

Joan Benoit after winning the Marathon last Monday.

(Boston) Hayes himself tried it three times but finished fifth, third and second.

Hannes Kolemanen, the 1920 winner from Finland, had tried Boston in 1917 and wound up fourth.

Albin Stefansson, another of the great Finnish runners, won the Olympic gold medal in 1924 but ran second at Boston in 1926.

Dello Cabera, the Argentine Olympic champion of 1948, tried Boston in 1954 and finished 28th.

Abebe Bikila, the only man ever to win two Olympic Marathons (1960 and 1964), was fifth in Boston in 1963 but wound up getting cramps and finishing 22nd.

Mamo Wolde, Bikila's Ethiopian teammate and winner of the gold medal in 1968, finished no better than twelfth in the 1963 Boston Marathon.

Seven tried, seven failed.

Benoit's feat immediately captured the attention of the local and national media. The Boston Globe, Boston Herald American, and Portland Press Herald all featured the Cape Elizabeth resident on the front pages of their Tuesday editions. That same morning, Benoit appeared with men's champion Bill Rodgers and Johnny "The Elder" Kelley, the senior citizens perennial at Boston, on ABC's "Good Morning America" show.

Later that day, Bowdoin President Bill Eteman announced that the College would sponsor a reception in Benoit's honor. That event took place earlier today.

It all started with our old Greek friend Phidippides, back in 490 B.C. He was the gallant warrior who ran twenty-five miles from Marathon to Athens.

(Continued on Page 2)
Benio, Guen, Butterch impress in Marathon

(Continued from Page 1)

Marathon to Athens with the news of a great military victory, then fell dead after delivering the glad tidings.

For centuries the Greeks tried to think of a way to commemorate Pheidippides' worthy effort and at the first Olympic games, held in Athens, a runner was chosen to have a marathon. Athletes who ran to Athens would recreate his run from Marathon to Athens.

It was a big success. The race was won by one of the local boys, a Greek shepherd by the name of Sophocles Liones. Marathon was here to stay.

Boston was Guen's third marathon. Although he has run for many years, he confesses no special attachment to the sport. "I've been running cross-country for a long time," he notes. "I'm not an addicted runner. I'm just an athlete who runs; it's no big deal to me."

"I ran my first marathon last summer. Anybody who's ever had any interest in running before thinks about an ultimate distance race would be and that would be a marathon. So it was a pretty good feeling when I got to do one, just to see if I could get myself through it."

Oddly enough, Guen is the only Bowdoin participant who began running solely for recreational reasons. The running experiences of both Benio and Butterch derive from another sport—skiing. Although she had raced on skis, sprinted, and long-jumped previously, Benio did not begin distance running until high school. As a sophomore, she suffered a broken leg while skiing at Pleasant Mountain. Doctors told her that running for distance would heal the strain and she was straining muscles in the leg. She has been on the run ever since.

Butcher, chairman of the Department of Chemistry, began running about eight years ago in order to prepare for cross-country skiing. Now, though, he runs because he enjoys it. "I'm the last of this last couple of years, I've found much easier to run than ski, and it was easier to run in the winter than to ski in the winter."

So why is the Boston Marathon the epitome of marathon running? For one thing, it's the oldest race in America. It has more tradition and history than all the others combined. It's one of the times when you've run you've run in the Boston Marathon and you can earn immediate respect, even if they don't understand what the Boston Marathon is all about.

"I think I probably would run even if I thought it was bad for me," Butterch continues. "I just enjoy running."

Once running became a habit, Butterch approached it more seriously and began competing. "Soon after I started, I entered my first road race on a whim and then in succeeding years it was more road races, then more after that, and then longer races, and so on."

"I don't remember when I ran my first road race; it was probably a couple years back. My interest is much more in the longer races than it is in the shorter, six, or the half-marathon or one."

You have to pay a price to get in. It's not the three-buck entry fee either. You have to push yourself towards torture yourself— if you want to be ready for this test of 26 miles 385 yards. You must run at least 20 weeks, at least 40 practice miles— forty a week, fifty a week, sixty a week. You must also have run more than 200 miles, after dawn, in the heat, in the cold, in the rain, in the snow, in the dark, and I'll bet you have run... Nobody runs free in the Boston Marathon. They all pay a price.

Training methods vary among marathoners. Each person must develop a personal optimum personal training program. The runner who logs the most miles is not necessarily the best runner. For example, ran 115 miles per week in preparation for Boston, whereas Benio averaged between 70 and 90.

Butcher found it difficult to make his own personal training program. As a result, his method was to try and match marathon preparation average. "You can't get a 2:40 average, you can't get a 2:20 average, you can't get a 2:30 average," he indicates. "I've tried pretty hard to run more than 50 miles a week, except I had an average of over 60 miles per week over the past several weeks."

I make sure I have 18- to 20-mile runs at least once a week. I think having a weekly mileage in that range is as much as I can afford to run."

Guen took advantage of spring break to undertake a final tune-up for Boston. "I averaged between 15 and 17 miles per day over the last week and a half, but they were good runs, with a little bit of speed work. On the whole, I did 105-115 miles per week over the last week and a half, rather than my usual 115 miles per week.

Two weeks before a marathon, I try to put in a 20-mile run, or at least 18 miles, with no change in my training strategy."

The external challenge of any marathoner— old or young, fast or slow—is to finish. To accomplish this, every runner must increase his own capacity for pain.

In the Marathon this comes— it's the last 12 miles or the twenty-mile mark. That's where the body and the mind begin to break down. As the great Australian coach Percy Cerutty says, "Anyone can run twenty miles but

---

Joanie Benio in Boston.

Senior Week plans revolve around on-campus festivities

by ANDY SCHILLING

How well do you like your professors cooked? A faculty roast will be part of the festivities during this year’s Senior Week. Over the last four to five years it has become traditional for the Seniors to spend their class money for one last Bowdoin bash between finals and graduation. This year the week is May 21-25.

Many activities are being planned by the seniors. The faculty roast will begin the week on Monday night. James Caviston will be the Master of Ceremonies for this evening while seniors and faculty pay a questionable tribute to selected faculty members. Tuesday is planned to be a day of concerts at Hargrave or on the campus commons, perhaps even a bar-b-cue dinner. Wednesday or Thursday night a senior talent show is planned at Hargrave and Friday the Seniors intend to buy alcohol and munchies with any remaining money. There will also be a day trip to the beach and softball and tennis tournaments with the faculty will be running through the week.

Senior class president Steve Rose says that the big fund-raisers for this year’s class have been the raflles and James Bond movies which made $1000 and $500 respectively. Rose also says, “Everything we did this year made money except the tago party. That cost us $300, but I think everyone agreed it was worth it.” It is expected that the seniors will contribute $5 each toward the fund. Overall this will provide approximately $2700 to spend for the week.

The activities were planned by the Senior Officer and the Senior Council. This year they sent out questionnaires and voted on how to spend the money that was raised as going to Cape Cod, having a Bozze Cruise, or a faculty roast as the Senior Week’s top three. But commented that it is preferable to stay at Bowdoin because, "by going somewhere else you exclude too many people. When they had the Bozze Cruise before only 150 out of 500 seniors were able to go. Rose also mentioned the atmosphere at Bowdoin during this week. "It’s like a country club—we’re not coming back for a while, so why leave for this week?"
Students support proposed pub

by JOHN SHAW

With an overwhelming majority of students expressing a willingness to pay an increased Student Activity Fees to finance the Bowdoin Pub (at the maximum, $10 more each year for the next ten years)

Yes, I am willing to pay an increased Student Activity Fees to finance the Bowdoin Pub (at the maximum, $10 more each year for the next ten years) ....... 634
No, I am not willing to pay the increased fee ......... 119
No Opinion ........................................... 13

Total .................................................. 766

REFERENDUM RESULTS

Students who failed the test voiced other concerns as well. "He didn't put any comments on my test," says one student. "All it said was 'see me.' Big deal. How am I supposed to know what I did wrong?"

Another student accuses, "His comments are very unfair. There's very little encouragement -- they're very antagonizing. The comment on my first test was 'This is just not long enough -- come see me.'"

Doug Henry '80 defends Walter's action. "He had written on the Flunks 'Come see me in my office,'" he says. "The comment on my first test was 'Mr. Fuchs agrees that there may have been a misunderstanding.'"

Students who failed the test believe the comments are arbitrary and disrespectful. "I feel like I just made a few comments people wouldn't want to come to see," says one student. "I wanted people to understand what they had done wrong."
Do as I say, not as I do

A feeling of outrage and a sense of frustration were detected on the Bowdoin campus earlier this week when President Jimmy Carter invited only one of Monday’s two champions in the Boston Marathon to dine at the White House. While Bill Rodgers feasts with the First Family and several Japanese guests on May 2, Joan Benoit will apparently be taking another dinner on a tray in the Senior Center cafeteria.

This oversight on the President’s part is inexcusable in view of what Miss Benoit accomplished on Patriot’s Day. Running in only her second marathon, the senior history and environmental studies major shamed seven minutes off the previous Boston record for women and established a new marathon record for American women.

ABC’s “Good Morning America” felt Benoit’s exploits were equal to Rodgers, and they shared the screen with Johnny “The Elder” Kelley Tuesday morning. Sports Illustrated thought Benoit’s feat to include Benoit’s picture and several paragraphs describing her in the lead article in its April 23 edition. Carter, though, does not see a women’s record-breaker as the equal of a man’s record-breaker.

The Orient placed a call to the White House yesterday in order to find out why Benoit was not invited to that banquet. We anxiously await a reply. In the meantime, we sincerely hope that the President of the United States, a man who has repeatedly voiced his support for the Equal Rights Amendment, can rise above his male ego and invite both champion record-shatterers to the dinner.

Caution

In an age when college enrollments, particularly at small liberal arts colleges like Bowdoin, are declining, it is unusual for a school to unveil major capital improvement plans. Bowdoin’s decision to do so reflects a refreshingly optimistic self-confidence and one which we hope is infectious.

Enteman’s plan is both interesting and rejuvenating and fulfilling it could be one of the most exciting projects the school has ever undertaken. Careful decisions must be made before the College commits itself to any part of the plan, though. History shows that a lack of foresight may result in premature obsolescence.

When Cleaveland Hall was built in the early ’50s, it was more than adequate. Planners did not correctly project student enrollment, however. The result is an overused, crowded building that no longer adequately serves the needs of the Department of Chemistry.

In the mid ’60s, part of the library was set aside for temporary administration office space. Fifteen years later, that temporary office space still houses the administration, primarily because no permanent space was ever designed.

The idea is commendable, but it will be clouded in history if some important decisions are not made before the space is lifted.

FACULTY ESSAY
Whitecside meditates on past and future of Senior Center
by WILLIAM B. WHITESIDE

Greetings from the Orient and its readers.

I am prompted to write by the kind act of Professor Helmreich, history (emeritus), who lives on Boody Street across from Chi Psi. You see him in the library, an active scholar and hard worker, as he always has been. He continues to enjoy taking to Bowdoin students, and his grandson is one of your number. In November he sent us some tapes, and I just received a second batch of them.

I note with interest, though not without uneasiness, that you continue to discuss the Senior Center. The Center was my life, and that of my family, for seven years from 1964 to 1971. If occasionally it was my headache, it was also my wonderful delight. When in your discussions you refer to those years, you may get further if some prevalent misconceptions are corrected.

First, it really was “the senior center” once. Virtually all of the members of the senior class lived there and conducted a major segment of the educational transaction there. The tower was a dormitory, but it wasn’t only that. Wentworth Hall included a place to eat, but it was more than that. We were responding to John Dewey’s warning not to view school — the classroom — as the place where education happens, and the rest of life, outside the school, as the place where very different things happen. We wanted the living environment to be a natural extension of intellectual concerns. We wanted both students and teachers to give ideas to, and receive them from, the widest possible group — not just those who were enrolled in courses or major programs together.

Fun and frolic continued. Life was not unreliably Earnest, but it was our observation, confirmed by end-of-year student interviews, that the Center provided an invigorating influence. I recall one senior who told us that once his medical school acceptance arrived, finishing out the courses became an anticlimactic drag; but the senior program gave him the stimulation that he needed. Such testimony tended to confirm the correctness of part of our rationale. We were conscious of the observed fact that, at Bowdoin and elsewhere, able undergraduates, by their senior year, were bored with the old routine of study, frats, sports and campus politics. Their concern was with the wider world and with what their future held. We hoped to shift the College in such a way as to respond to their changing perspective. That was what we sought to shelter them from the real world. I start tearing out what’s left of my hair.

Second, I turn to the matter of regimentation. We didn’t say grace before meals. That blooper was in one of your issues last fall, and when I stopped fuming about it I started to think. What would it say about us if we had said grace? True, the men there were, alas, no women students. I wore jackets and ties to evening meals five days a week. On Fridays and Saturdays, whenever women were present, exerting their civilized influence, the torn fraternities and frats (eight appeared) — but the pattern wasn’t just that. The Orient. Even the fraternities, at least on faculty guest nights, usually had nicely set tables, meals that were served to diners who dressed for the occasion, and a relaxed mood for conversation and even singing. Now and then in the Center we had a formal banquet, and some distinguished guest. I particularly recall Edwin Reischauer, just back from his tour of duty as ambassador to Tokyo — would talk informally after dinner. Looking back on it, the place at its best was very good, possibly more civilized and more exciting than what we’ve got now. Repressive? Ask the alumni of those years. We were trying to create an atmosphere in which some interesting things could happen. I’ve seen with students at a quite a few university and college dining commons in America elsewhere. Usually we take our nourishment and leave, and I feel little interest in returning. It wasn’t like that in the Center.

(Continued on Page 8)

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
Member United States Press Association
The College reserves the right to control over the content of the student writings contained herein and neither the Administration nor the faculty assume any responsibility for the views expressed herein.

Robert DeSimone
Editor-in-Chief
Bill Shipton
Managing Editor
Laura Helmreich
News Editor
Geoff Worrall
Sports Editor
Fred Leiter
Business Manager
Tina Zelz
Advising Editor

Bowdoin Publishing Company
James Carroll
Executive Neil Raitt

Robert DeSimone
Editor-in-Chief

Contributors: Camilla Carr, Dan Ferrante, Amy Hamza, Mark Harshbarger, Debby Kenneally, Melanie May, Myron Mizek, Mary Proven, Andrew Schilling, John Shaw, Thad Shue, Dave Zellar, William B. Whitcomb, Peter Zinman.

Published weekly when classes are held during the Fall and Spring Semesters for the students of Bowdoin College. Additional copies are distributed to alumni and friends and advertising and subscription communications to the Business Manager at the ORIENT, 109 College, Bowdoin College, ME 04008. The ORIENT is the official student voice on all matters of policy and is the official campus newspaper. Second class postage paid at Brunswick, Maine.

Bowdoin College, Buxton, Maine, U.S.A., ORIENT 04008. Second class postage paid at Brunswick, Maine, U.S.A.

Bowdoin Orient, APRIL 0401

Facsimile and address change in 10.

Bowdoin, Brunswick, Maine, 04011.
Billy Joel hits Portland stage; no gimmicks for the piano man

by MELANIE MAY

"Good night, everyone," said Billy Joel. "Don't take any shit from me." The crowd would have taken anything from the man seated at the piano last Friday night at the Cumberland Civic Center in Portland. But that didn't happen. Instead, they got Billy Joel's song "Fancy," from his latest album: Piano Man. Streetlife Serenade, and Turnstiles. Others, conspicuously missing from the repertoire, was "Captain Jack," the powerful underground hit off Piano Man. In the minds of long-time Joel fans, the concert may have been an uncomfortable reminder of Billy's recent commercialism.

But the fact remains that he is a superb musician. Whether pounding out the fast-paced "Angry Young Man" from Turnstiles or the slower ballad "She's Always a Woman" from The Stranger, Billy Joel is in his element at the keyboard. Moreover, his clothing is not found in his style — rhythmically, melodically, or lyrically. It enhances his individuality. And it is not just a change from that demon of '70s music, disco.

He is a singer. Not beautifully, but his voice is strong, on pitch, and adaptable. The last number, a simple plaintive song entitled "Souvenir" from Streetlife Serenade, was performed without a word. And Joel's solid tenor could be appreciated over a relatively unadorned accompaniment.

Billy Joel does shiit on stage antics to ensure a successful concert; as a keyboard player, he can't. "This thing the piano isn't like a guitar that I can sling over my shoulder." All but one of the songs found Billy on the bench for the majority of the number, hunched over the keys, brushing the strings.

"Big Shot" from Street Life "dedicated to anyone who's ever woken up with crusty eyelids, tiny teeth, and a hangover," was the only song where Joel neglected the ivories for the entire number. He reclined on the piano, kicked his blue jeans legs in the air, cowered with the band, teased the twenty-boppers as he staggered pigeon-toed about the stage.

It was amusing, and an effective deviation from the other numbers. But it is clear that the man who started piano lessons at age four, who played in countless piano bars before he ever became famous, belongs at the keyboard. Billy Joel did not mean for his music to be interpreted simply through piano, however, and praise must go to his band. A quote by Joel in the program reads, "Love me, love my band."

Billy Joel goes on out on the road nine months a year. They know the material better than anybody.

As a unit, they were well-balanced and tight. As individuals, they shone, particularly Richie Cannata on tenor sax during "New York State of Mind" (Turnstiles). His complex improvisational solo (which cannot be heard on the album) earned him a huge ovation at the end of the piece.

Drummer Liberty DeVito, too, showed admirable endurance with his heavy percussion numbers as "Only the Good Die Young," "Get It Right the First Time," and "Sailor," not to mention being dragged into the audience by a pre-pubescent girl.

The fact that Billy Joel takes no breaks during a concert is well-known. And remarkably, not an ounce of clothing was shed from the first whispered note of "The Stranger" to his final exit after "Souvenir" — the fourth encore. His suit jacket stayed on, his tie remained tied, his shirt was never unbuttoned.

"The guy's consistently superior rock music, and versatility. All characteristics Billy Joel. No gimmicks for this piano man.

Project Babe: something that can't be taught

by GEOFF WORRELL

Each year, both students and professors debate whether or not missing a week of classes is worth participating in the Bowdoin and Bowdoin exchange program. The professors who have participated in the program, the reviews are great. The general consensus is that it is, in fact, the best thing they have done at Bowdoin.

Project Babe is one of the few community-oriented programs offered to Bowdoin students. The project supplies Bowdoin students with the opportunity to work with pre-pubescent children ranging from the ages of five to fifteen.

"If the kind of learning that can't be taught from a book," offers Kevin Klamm, the director participating in the Bowdoin/Bowdoin exchange program. "Babe is a personal education about something that isn't pretty."

The College is not and should not be achlorotic or nonsensical retreat from the problems of the world. Rather, the College is a collection of people deeply and passionately involved in their community, their nation, and their world."

"The type of learning at Babe," adds Klamm, "is something that can't be taught."

"With Project Babe," adds an anonimous student, "you get here: it's the type of thing that can't be taught."

"Project Babe gives someone a history of difficulty in arousing interest in the program, and it seems to be rooted in the sacrifice of a week of classes to participate in the exchange. The fear of people here," offers Klamm, "about missing a week of classes is phenomenal. The experience is so good.

Yet, this year, Project Babe seems to have turned itself around. Babe, which was not floundering due to a lack of interest, has nevertheless doubled the participation in the program. The last Friday, the Warrens' Kays Tiederman, next year's co-director of the program, "we would send four people each week. This year, we are averaging seven and some weeks, we get nine people signing up and we have to actually turn people down."

Klamm adds, "The problems we have now are problems of success. With God willing, we will be able to grow even more and we have to prepare for that.

The preparation which Klamm refers to is mainly financial. Project Babe receives its funding partly from the Newman Center and partly from the Student Activities Fee Committee. "We have a standing account," says Klamm, "which consists of money we've raised. We're planning to use the money to buy a new van. The van we have now breaks down about once a week and that eats a big hole out of our budget.

The project should spend somewhere between 1,300 and 1,400 dollars this year and projects a budget of 2,300 dollars for the following year.

The success, which Babe suffers from, is the ideal form of pain for any organization. It stirs from growth, a growth prompted by better publicity and word of mouth. Project Babe puts out a pamphlet and offers a slide show periodically, but the growth in the program is a result of a snowball effect. As more people go and enjoy their trip," explains Tiederman, "the more people hear about it."

"An oddity with this project," adds Klamm, "is we lack males. I don't know why males in the Bowdoin community can't handle working with kids. Bancroft is mostly male."

Although Project Babe is "walking tall" now, the future of the program was in jeopardy approximately one year ago. Klamm explains, "We have experienced a change in our relationships with Bancroft. The school started in 1975. The structure was looser and we were crucial to their existence and effectiveness. With the new Bancroft director beginning last year and the program becoming more structured, we had the potential of becoming a distraction.

The added structure to the school meant that a decision had to be made by the Bancroft administration concerning whether or not to abolish the exchange or fit the Bowdoin students into the new plan. "As far as I can tell," adds Klamm, "they have made their decision and we're there to stay."

With the project more or less secure and growth its only problem, Babe exists, according to its participants, as both an asset to the children at Bancroft and the Bowdoin students who take part in the project.

"It takes you out of Bowdoin with other people from Bowdoin," explains Klamm. "You meet people in a way that is so insane, you have to pull together. Bowdoin students don't expect each other; there, you have to."

Apart from promoting togetherness, Project Babe offers a "real life" situation which students have to deal with.

(Continued on Page 8)
Survivors exchange quake tales

by ROB DE SIMONE

"My first reaction was that the bober was going to blow the library to bits. My second thought was that the end of the world was fast approaching, because of a nuclear holocaust.

If you happened to be in Brunswick, or for that matter, in other sections of Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts last Tuesday night at 9:34, then some of these thoughts may have gone through your mind, too. The 'earthquake or tremor,' depending on how severely one perceived the geological phenomenon, registered 4.0 on the Richter Scale and was among the worst that Maine has recorded in the last ten years.

"There'll be a lot of talk about this one," exclaimed Don Newberg, visiting assistant professor of geology. "It was unusual. There were 18 aftershocks.

Geologists have determined that the center of the quake was at Day's Ferry in Woolwich. Newberg, who has witnessed earthquakes of sorts in Virginia and Chile, explained that this particular one was relatively mild, although "a lot of people were terribly frightened." He and other geologists are now trying to "pin down" the epicenter, estimated to be about three miles north of Bath.

Perhaps the most ironic fact about Tuesday evening's disturbance is its connection with the Maine Yankee atomic power plant in Wiscasset. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission recently ordered the plant shut down because of apprehensiveness about its ability to survive an earthquake.

Bereavement by Bowdoin was mixed, explained President Esteman. "It was real funny. I was reading a book in my study - I'll call it 'In the salon of the goldfinch.' I thought, I was halfway downstairs before I realized, 'Wait a minute, this house doesn't have a furnace.'"

One obnoxious resident said, "I didn't feel a damn thing. I was on the eleventh floor of the Center..."

One freshman exclaimed, "I was drinking a scotch, I didn't know what was going on."

Another yelled out of a Coleman window, "It's the second coming of Christ and you better watch out cause he's mad."

New Yorker Steve Duskey '79 summed it up this way, "I thought it was an earthquake, but I knew it was an earthquake."

College Street would also contribute to the formation of a "residential quadrangle" which would adjoin the existing academic quad. The somewhat drastic measure of removing part of the

Architects propose new direction

(Continued from Page 1) vacated Searles would provide a new home for administrative and faculty offices.

Several jaws in the audience dropped considerably at the mention of an Olympic sized swimming pool. Esteman explained that it was not the duty of Saratoga Associates to evaluate the college's need for such a facility, but to determine where it should be located if decided upon in the future. The plan depicts the 90,000 square foot Olympic sized pool to be adjacent to Curtis pool, which would continue to be used for recreational purposes. At this point, Professor Corish made the practical proposal that the college might save money by building a new pool and putting the administrative offices at the bottom of it.

The fourth major recommendation is for a 100-bed dormitory to relieve tripling in some of the dorms. "This is quality of life in the college's need for such a dormitory than an absolute need," explained Litynski. The dorm would contribute to the formation of the residential quadrangle which would adjoin the existing academic quad. The somewhat drastic measure of removing part of the

"It's all in the luck of the draw"

by AMY HOMANS

Lucky be a Lady tonight... This week students who will be living in campus housing next year had their last chance to receive a prayer to Lady Luck. The room draw selection was held Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evening in preparation for next week's room selection.

Assistant to the Dean, Loin Egan, commented that things ran along smoothly. The major stumbling block she said, lay with those students who had not paid their room deposit on time and still wished to draw a number. This ended in a rather unfortunate situation for most of the offenders, as late payment resulted in having one's name put below incoming freshmen on the housing list.

Students under the impression that groups of five would receive preference over groups of four were also disappointed. The Student Life Committee voted several weeks ago that giving groups of five preference would put too much pressure on students to form larger groups, thus overcrowding many apartments built to hold fewer people.

Members of fraternities that have yet to be filled were relieved to hear that they would not be penalized as they had been in previous years. In noting another minor problem with the drawing process, Egan mentioned that many students were turned away from the lottery and sent back to get their I.D. cards.

Who's she?

For many students it was their first meeting with the Ass't to the Dean. Upon hearing who Egan was, Kevin Rahill '81 replied, "Oh, I thought she was a student here." Other lottery participants were equally surprised to hear who "that girl over there" was.

Student sentiment over the lottery was fairly favorable this year, although one senior-to-be commented that she liked it better the "old way" (submitting three choices to the housing office)."I always got my way then," Tom Scollia '81 had a different perspective of the lottery, admitting that "you have to cheat to get ahead."

Those people drawing mediocre numbers, such as Ben Grant '80, holder of No. 96, were heard moaning, "I'll never get an apartment with this," while Nancy Roberts '80, holder of the worst, senior draw, smiled and said, "It's not that bad."

Although those with the lowest draws in their class were consigned with brownies, most of them exited the Donor's Lounge with visions of life in Coleman's basement. It was all in the luck of the draw.

Roberts, however, said it was her first time going to a lottery and she was surprised to hear no one make an exclamation, "That's a shame," as they had anticipated. A first-time participant, "It's a lot of fun," she said, "I hope I win,"

Students later observed that the lottery was the only game students could play in this area without breaking a law.

"All the students I know are in the lottery and I thought it was a shame," said a senior.

"They should have had a lottery for the baby's name," said another first-time participant. "I hope it's a girl, I was always wishing for a girl," she exclaimed.

=" My first reaction was that the bober was going to blow the library to bits. My second thought was that the end of the world was fast approaching, because of a nuclear holocaust.

If you happened to be in Brunswick, or for that matter, in other sections of Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts last Tuesday night at 9:34, then some of these thoughts may have gone through your mind, too. The 'earthquake or tremor,' depending on how severely one perceived the geological phenomenon, registered 4.0 on the Richter Scale and was among the worst that Maine has recorded in the last ten years.

"There'll be a lot of talk about this one," exclaimed Don Newberg, visiting assistant professor of geology. "It was unusual. There were 18 aftershocks.

Geologists have determined that the center of the quake was at Day's Ferry in Woolwich. Newberg, who has witnessed earthquakes of sorts in Virginia and Chile, explained that this particular one was relatively mild, although "a lot of people were terribly frightened." He and other geologists are now trying to "pin down" the epicenter, estimated to be about three miles north of Bath.

Perhaps the most ironic fact about Tuesday evening's disturbance is its connection with the Maine Yankee atomic power plant in Wiscasset. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission recently ordered the plant shut down because of apprehensiveness about its ability to survive an earthquake.

Bereavement by Bowdoin was mixed, explained President Esteman. "It was real funny. I was reading a book in my study - I'll call it 'In the salon of the goldfinch.' I thought, I was halfway downstairs before I realized, 'Wait a minute, this house doesn't have a furnace.'"

One obnoxious resident said, "I didn't feel a damn thing. I was on the eleventh floor of the Center..."

One freshman exclaimed, "I was drinking a scotch, I didn't know what was going on."

Another yelled out of a Coleman window, "It's the second coming of Christ and you better watch out cause he's mad."

New Yorker Steve Duskey '79 summed it up this way, "I thought it was an earthquake, but I knew it was an earthquake."

College Street would also contribute to the formation of a "residential quadrangle" which would adjoin the existing academic quad. The somewhat drastic measure of removing part of

Architects propose new direction

(Continued from Page 1) vacated Searles would provide a new home for administrative and faculty offices.

Several jaws in the audience dropped considerably at the mention of an Olympic sized swimming pool. Esteman explained that it was not the duty of Saratoga Associates to evaluate the college's need for such a facility, but to determine where it should be located if decided upon in the future. The plan depicts the 90,000 square foot Olympic sized pool to be adjacent to Curtis pool, which would continue to be used for recreational purposes. At this point, Professor Corish made the practical proposal that the college might save money by building a new pool and putting the administrative offices at the bottom of it.

The fourth major recommendation is for a 100-bed dormitory to relieve tripling in some of the dorms. "This is quality of life rather than an absolute need," explained Litynski. The dorm would contribute to the formation of a "residential quadrangle" which would adjoin the existing academic quad. The somewhat drastic measure of removing part of the Bowdoin students sample Floridian depravity

by CASUAL CAV

We regret having to run this article a week late. The author has been drying out at MacLoan and has been unavailable.

Imagine, if you will, a group of five college students, five Bowdoin College students, crammed into the trunk of a pickup heading southwest on route 95. Empty cans of Bud roll across the floor as the driver slaloms between slow and fast moving traffic. The windshield is smudged from continuous moon shots.

What kind of students are these that engage in such moral decrepitude? One is a skilled craftsman. Another is to attend medical school next year. Another will be a banker. The fourth is a member of the most commercial bank in the world. Another heads a social action group in the city. The last one has been waiting listed at a second rate law school. They are people just like you and me.

Our heroes display their nascent Americanism as they attend a springtime baseball game. The real sporting event occurred much later in the day.

The first stop on the trip is Pontiac's Cove. It's an impromptu itinerary call for a half-pint per person per week. Some purchase rum, others buy vodka. Favored by and large is scotch. But whether it's Old Mr. Boston or Beefeaters, the supplies from the Portsmouth circle provide a prerequisite for Spring Break in the South. For this experience is nothing less than a two week bender which tests every fiber of the body to the saturation point.

Thirty hours later, the hansomely hopefuls hindered by highway hypnosis reach route 1 A1's nexus with Daytona Beach. Then the long, arduous process of selecting the largest, cheapest double room which a minimum of ten occupants can occupy and still escape detection by frantic managers.

Three hours later, following heated discussions over the relative qualities of the Sea 'N Surf versus the Apollonian Beach Motel, we finally settle on the Pirates Cove. It is a large, imposing building of seven stories with balconies which have a view of all the collegiate traffic, tumbling security guards and the short order men's hallways to exchange good night kisses.

Downstairs in the Gang Plank Lounge a country folk band playing Free Bird is drowned out by a screaming waitress whom we all adore.

"You boys can't bring those drinks in here. So goet, Goon now. I'm getting mad," Her cussing was flavored by a nasal twang more conducive than Dolly Parton's goons.

"You don't get mad, Zelda, you get angry," a half-drunkened half-English major answers.

"Hey, go easy on Zelda," the social action leader says, "She never graduated from college."

"A-4-5 deedeed so" Zelda snarls.

"Where Zelda?" someone asks.

"In parenthesis a silence drifts over the bar soon followed by a round of snickering.

"That's nice, Zelda. Real nice.

The seemingly pointless conversation was a rue to distract Zelda from the tap behind the bar where a string of students have been serving themselves gratis for the last half hour. Once Zelda caught on closing time came early for the last time they would be known out of the Gang Plank Lounge.

The involuntary departure from the bar at closing time is an important moment on the trip. It is the end of conscious reality. For the next thirteen hours the hangover to hair-of-the-dog to hammered cycle never stops spinning. The daily schedule goes like this:

10 a.m. Motel owner comes in and throws everyone out.

10:30 a.m. Having completed the move to an even cheaper dive omertas are served. After breakfast, exodus to the beach where mere pedestrians must yield right of way to oncoming motorists.

11:45 a.m. Vacationing students find the combination of sun and literature too strenuous. Copia of Donna Darlington, Murder on the Orient Express and Beaverv 6x5 are tossed aside in favor of Copperonne pouring and Bloody Marys.

2:30 p.m. Various attempts made at exercise. One walks twenty yards down the beach until he reaches a child dog stack. Another braves traffic to try taking the bus. Then another energy takes a collection, jogs across the street and returns with twelve packs of Pepsi. By this time women in bikinis look like three spotted bulls on pigo sticks.

5 p.m. Nap time.

7:30 p.m. Rude awakenings. The shower runs out of hot water but the first bachelor can wash the sand off his feet. In the living room the chink-a-hink sound of ice cubes on glasses begins to annoy. Dinner is served: cold baked beans.

The second full moon of our trip is a success. People are talking too soon. LSD. The Nuxom is passed around followed by such signs of relief that it is a lasting room sound track after spaghetti at the Center.

9:15 and six cocktails later. Everyone's mouth's are open and so are we. The cry rives "for the number one form of night time entertainment Disco!" With over twenty disco to choose from, it is a buyer's market. While cruising around we take in the relative benefits of each place. The Lost, a disheveled Inn charges five dollars for cover but drinks are free from eight o'clock until midnight. The St. Troper charges a dollar and gives free drinks to the person who brings in the most wealth. The Regal offers no cover but there's a waiting line that extends past Free's. And The Boob gives no cover, not much dancing space, awful music and expensive drinks. It is a capacity every night of the week.

We learn to discern the disco by the moon of the floor and the moon of the floor. It won't dance there if it's not the right night for music. People on the outside are inside dancing, then the outsiders won't come in. What then, constitutes the best disco music? While all disco features the same mindless beat, if the lyrics aren't meaningless there are more people won't dance to it. Songs like "I Will Survive" and "Take My Breath Away" and "Good Night Tonight" seem to pack the floors. Interestingly enough, the first song is about being emotionally and sexually abused, the second is about recuperating from such abuse and the last one is about setting oneself on fire again for the same experience.

3:15 a.m. After numerous dances and conversations with casual southern belles (Why you all in those shorts, I ask myself) you get the feeling that anything like being shitfaced is now starting to happen.

One way how the conversation is mixed between critical and jovial notes. "Where were you all night Harry?"

"I had a minor engagement."

"So she was under escort?"

"Only by a week."

Perhaps the most depressing aspect of the disco scene is that after a certain hour the single women completely disappear. Whatever the reason may be, by one thirty in the morning, the disco floor is deserted by a great flashy wall of barrel-chested, expressionless jocks, all except for the sweatshirts.

The midwest grows an overactive habit of the drunk driving is a normal pastime down here, there these walking vehicles are drunk and there's only one person on earth who can turn a fairly quick sand knob and scaredy thumper table of a campus wide.

So here it all was. Beer bellies the only sign to this subtle and bloody breath they resembled road maps.

Conversations so slurred by drunkenness they sounded like speech therapy classes. Here were the boys in action, eveying the last.

The "Crafsman's" release after seeing action the evening before.

Several morally delinquent Polar Bears enjoy some pizza and female company in sunny Florida.

Three girls in the place: In the background Bob Stewart's disco hit "De Ya Think I'm Sexy" blazed.

This Going on for about ten days before we start to crave some other form of entertainment. The banker and a professional student find adequate amusement at a jazz bar where the waitress is so crazy she has to ask two customers to order her straightjacket so she can serve the drinks. The doctor and the social syphonist head for Disney World without realizing that it's Donald Duck's birthday and that they will have to wait three hours to ride the fifteen minute Space Mountain roller coaster.

Vacation is nearly over as witnessed by the number of the Bears who, while heading north from Ft. Lauderdale, stop in to see us at Daytona. The news they bring is heartening. We sit up by the poolside to hear the reports of debuchery. The baseball team has restored and re-acted the saga of the Titans' maiden voyage.

Two other students got stripped sans (well, make that one student after being thrown in the slammer for public drunkeness, vagnanry, trespassing, resisting arrest, aiding and abetting a minorant and, worst of all, the one who went to the one-sho-sho proper dress code at the Button, the most notorious dive in Lauderdale.

Now, at the risk of bragging I would like to tell a tale which should put all the Lauderdale people to shame. It is a story of passion, wanton indulgence and immediate gratification. Near the end of the second week the college students..."
Unique experiences prove beneficial to all at Babe

(Continued from Page 5)
When liberal arts education is faithful to its mission, it encourages and trains young people who are sensitive to the crucial problems of our time and who have the kind of mind and the kind of inspiration to address them fearlessly and directly.

I'm a psycho major," offers Besty Greene, a student who experienced Babe, "and it's the first time I've really been in action. I guess it's effective.

Greene goes on to explain, "it's really as a role model for us to develop our own role models and reward. The students which participate in Babe only work with the children on the higher levels of performance. The school functions under an academic and social reward system. Babe's a boarding school with a controlled environment.

"I couldn't tell whether or not these kids' problems were environment or or another source," adds Greene. "I don't think the atmosphere is very realistic.

Even with the critical analysis of the school, Greene's overall impresion of Babe came from her contact with the children and their situation. "The kids are definitely golden," she adds, "and when you realize that you can't do anything it makes it all the more powerful. You make them laugh, you make them smile, you realize that you go back to your sheltered little world and they're still going to be there."

"The kids need understanding, love, to be trusted, and to prove something to both themselves and the people who show an interest," adds Charles Paxton, another student who took out time for Babe. "That's their relationship to us," he adds.

"Many of them," he continues, "don't have the time to form and maintain the relationships to perpetuate these types of feelings. Many of us don't know either.

This is the goal and standard by which it (liberal arts education) should be judged.

The italicized quotations are from a statement prepared by the Faculty-Student Committee on Curriculum and Educational Policy, 1979.

"The kids are definitely golden and when you realize you can't do anything it makes it all the more powerful. You make them laugh, you make them laugh...

And the dulcimer's popularity continues to spread. Folk singers are becoming increasingly interested in the instrument. In fact, Schaffner's old associate at Yale, Ed Trickett, will be appearing at the Performing Arts Center in Bath on May 5 with Gordon Bock. The program did not originally include him, but a hammer dulcimer seemed to fit with the music and the adjustment was easy to make. But perhaps more importantly, says Schaffner, they just like playing together.

The Bowdoin synchronized swimming club will present its annual spring show on Friday April 27 and Saturday April 28 at 8:00 p.m. Admission is 25 cents.

THE BOWDOIN ORIENT
FRI., APR. 20, 1979
A unique combo Schaffner and his medieval dulcimer

(Continued from Page 3)
parked on top of it. One danger with a hammer dulcimer is that it may collapse if it can't withstand the pressure. The cast-iron frame is stronger, lighter, and guards against that danger.

Most of his instruments are given to friends, sold, or taken apart for rebuilding into a new design.

But Schaffner does more than just build dulcimers. In December he played for a contra dancing group in Bowdoinham, and during the past vacation, he presented a program for the youngsters at Boscove North, of the BABE program. He has played with the local folk club, but performs more regularly with mathematics professor William Barker and his wife, Delay White on the guitar and autoharp, respectively. Together, they give free concerts to convalescent centers, retired groups, and children's groups.

Whitewash mourns death of once active Center

(Continued from page 4)

Third, the beers and program were at "adjunct faculty. His heart was the students and faculty of Bowdoin. The Center brought them together in new ways in the classroom, not the fraternities in a beer-drinking party, nor the vicarious shared participation as spectators of football or hockey bodies in a huddle, nor the feeble fellow human beings, representing many specializations, but drawn together by their interest in a pursuit of larger meanings. That is what the seminars were about. That is what the discussions were about. When it worked it was exhilarating to see it happen and to participate in it.

Fourth, it wasn't the ending of distribution requirements that caused students to lose some of their interest in the seminars. The scuttling of requirements, however, was no boon to Bowdoin, was more a symptom than a cause of the crises that were taking place. Even as the Center started, the building still unfinished, the Free Speech movement broke out at Berkeley, Vietnam and the protest happened. The commotions at San Francisco State and Columbia and Kent State happened. The counter-culture made its affirmation. The mood of American youth changed.

It was against this background that the Center also did. This idea, that was pressed financially found it necessary to increase the enrollment, while holding the faculty size constant. This was done financially, the pattern broke down. The decision to increase the number of students to a total of 40 for the 1970's, a compromise if not an acceptance of the students as I saw it. But I was out of it by then.

Please don't misunderstand. I choose not to write the latest escape from the virtue of the golden age. Those were tough, brittle, abrasive years. Go back to them? You might as well restore the campus to its 1821 appearance, and visit for Hawthorne and Longfellow to present themselves for admission. Nor am I moved to protest the decision to end the seminars. If I had been present I would have voted in favor of the Paul motion. I am rather reflecting on the difficulty of teaching history. I wish I could really make you understand what we were trying to do and how it was.

The Center was one brief moment in the life of one college, a small one at that. During my days in the Center the American enrollments in higher education grew from about 30,000 to nearly seven million. Quantitatively, our venture was next to nothing. Qualitatively, we felt we were moving an extremely conservative, traditional college into a new era of educational experimentation. We were late to do this, but many colleges never did anything of the sort. For an interesting view of Bowdoin's Senior Center in a national context, a context of educational reform, read David Reisman's speech at Bowdoin.

I do have a regret. It is that we — I include myself in the plural pronoun — seem to lack the imagination to take a plant that Bowdoin couldn't possibly afford to buy in 1979, brilliantly designed by Hugh Stubbins, one of the major contemporary architects, and use it as something more than a catch-all lodging and hash-house. The senior program was not designed to continue unchanged into eternity. It was an innovation based upon an analysis of conditions at a particular time, one which all of us assumed would lead to further change. I happen to believe that what we did has strengthened the impression that higher education everywhere needs far more radical reform than it received in America in the 1920's or the 1940's or the 1960's. I would like to see the space south of College Street, as well as other space in Brunswick, adapted to serve the educational mission of Bowdoin College as effectively in the 1980's as the senior program served it in the 1960's.

As I meditate on Bowdoin from half a planet away, and think about democracy and education and the future from the perspective of an involvement in some different problems and frustrations here, I think we are capable of developing more significant thoughts, looking to more distant horizons, transcending the trivialities that surround us, more than we are doing at Bowdoin. We have apple and splendid facilities. What holds us back? Why are we timid? It would not only be good for us to fulfill our capability; it would also make life at your college more fun than it seems to be at present. Maybe some of you agree. If so, talk about it. I'll be glad to join the discussion the next fall.
Big league dream comes true for Horsburgh

by BILL STUART

He was not good enough to make his high school baseball team, so he became a base coach. In college, he never missed a practice, but he barely contributed as a player. Now, at the age of 31, he is a major league veteran.

Sound strange? Perhaps. Nevertheless, Kip Horsburgh '60, who by his own admission was not a gifted player, made it to the major leagues with the Texas Rangers in 1974 and has been with the Seattle Mariners since 1977.

Don't rush for today's paper to check for his name in the box score; Horsburgh won't be listed. Instead, look at the Mariners' front-office roster. His name appears in the starting line-up at the Executive Director position.

The story of this Bowdoin man's climb to big league baseball is the tale of a love affair with the sport, intelligence, aggressiveness, and some wild experiences selling hot dogs, painting parks, and watching a baseball almost was out a promising career.

At a young age, Horsburgh became fascinated with baseball but really ruined his initial goal in baseball. Almost everyone who is in sports at one time wanted to play major league baseball, he says. "I just learned faster than most that I wasn't going to." He would not let a lack of playing skill stifle his ambitions.

"I once thought that one person could turn a franchise around over time, I've now learned that it takes one heck of a lot of good people. I guess I'm fortunate enough to be one of those people who is working toward making this franchise a viable one. It is not viable yet; I can tell you that."

However, instead, he looked to other job possibilities in the baseball world. He settled on front-office work.

"I'd really been pointed to front-office work since the early '60s," Horsburgh notes. "I wasn't good enough to make my high school team, so I coached third base. I just got interested in the management end. I went to spring training to visit the training camps. The more I traveled, the more I was accepted by people in baseball."

The Shaker Heights, Ohio, native retained his enthusiasm for playing the game after his high school coaching career. Although he was a part-time player at Bowdoin, Horsburgh earned respect with the dedication he demonstrated to the game.

Bench rider

"I can't think of anybody who played less," admits Nate Dane, who has been close to Horsburgh since advising the young Latin major at Bowdoin. "I don't believe he ever missed a practice in his four years. He coached third base at every game I ever saw."

"They used him once or twice in the field in the last inning or at bat, but it was that faithfulness and that enthusiasm that helped him win the trophy when he graduated."

The trophy to which Dane refers is the Francis S. Dana Trophy, given annually to that varsity player who best exemplifies "high quality of character, sportsmanship, and enthusiasm for baseball."

"The first three years I was there we played under Danny MacFayden in former major league pitcher who won 127 big league games before becoming a Bowdoin coach. I realized that much success; we had good athletes, but we never really wined or unranked."

The team's potential matched its performance during Horsburgh's senior year, though. New coach Ed Coonfield fielded a team composed almost entirely of captains of other sports. "Baseball was not their best sport in almost every event," Horsburgh mentions, "but we put together what was a good team. We won Bowdoin's first Colby-Bates-Bowdoin championship in 25 years. We won it on the last day of the season with a double header against Maine; we beat them in the first game and that clinched it. That probably was the highlight of my Bowdoin experience."

After graduating Phi Beta Kappa with a major in Latin, Horsburgh entered Stanford Business School to sharpen the business skills he would need as a baseball executive. During the summer months, he engaged in another educational experience that would help him reach his goal.

Humble beginnings

Horsburgh is proud of the chances of reaching the major leagues in a management capacity would he took the same route most players follow to the major leagues -- the minors. He and Carl Fazio, who shared a similar dream, became co-general managers of a Twin Falls, Idaho, franchise in the Pioneer League, the lowest rung of the minor league ladder. The league begins its season in late June with recently-graduated high school and college players.

The Magic Valley Cowboy Baseball Club, the franchise's official name, was all but dead three months before the season was to begin. The Atlanta Braves, who were affiliated with the Cowboys, had previously stocked the team with fresh talent annually, had dissolved their working agreement with the Magic Valley club. The owners then decided not to operate the franchise during the 1971 season.

Horsburgh and Fazio would not accept the notion that baseball was dead in Twin Falls. Through the reached agreements with the Los Angeles Dodgers, San Francisco Giants, Kansas City Royals, California Angels, and Chicago Cubs, through which these big league teams would provide three to six players apiece. When these agreements were completed, the co-general managers worked out a deal with the owners of the team: for one dollar, Horsburgh and Fazio would buy full rights to the Cowboys.

With full control of the franchise, the two young mavericks were able to try their own methods of reviving interest in the Cowboys. "The greatest thing about minor league baseball," Horsburgh has said, "is that you can try absolutely everything with a minimum of risk. The two of us went out and tried anything we'd always wanted to try in terms of promotion and ushering and painting the park, selling hot dogs and speaking to Rotary clubs, borrowing money from the bank and doing our own accounting. We were able to do a little of everything."

"We got a little bit cocky and went up to Double A the next year," he relates. That move brought Horsburgh and Fazio to Elmira, New York. With a substantially greater investment and good pre-season ticket sales, the duo was confident that another successful season was in the making.

"We felt we were just going to breeze through the season and on to the major leagues," Horsburgh notes.

Nothing could have been further from the truth, though.

We had a tremendous setback. The team played terribly, it raised on opening day and never really stopped, and on June 23, 1972, we had a flood," Horsburgh painfully recalls. "Hurricane Agnes hit us. All the rain from upstate New York and Massachusetts ended up in Elmira! We had a full-blown flood: eight feet of water in the ballpark, seven thousand homes evacuated."

(Continued on Page 10)

If you are interested in becoming a Senior Class Officer, you must fill out a petition and turn it into the MU desk before 9:00, Friday April 27.

Election day will be Thursday, May 3.

The Senior Class will present the semi-classy and X-rated skit "Emancipator: Days of a Woman" tonight in Kresge Auditorium at 7 and 9:30. Admission is $1.00.

Kip Horsburgh as a minor league rookie in 1971.
Bowdoin grad advances to major leagues with Seattle

(Continued from Page 9)

"We made some public relations mistakes and have sought to correct them, one of them was returning the general admission seats to their 1977 location; they'd been moved to a very out-of-the-way place in 1978, quite the consternation of the fans.

"We have embarked upon a broad-based community support effort in involvement public relations campaign. We had 200 speaking engagements in January alone. We are just trying to get the word out that things are changing. We tried to revamp our club a little bit.

"We moved players who were not as productive as we would have liked, like Bob Robertson, and replaced him with a Willie Horton, who seems to be quite a crowd-pleaser. We got Floyd Bannister from Houston, a Seattle native who has done quite well. As he develops, he is certainly only potential right now, he's going to be an asset, we hope.

"The club isn't going to be improved drastically over the next few years, so we have to keep making incremental improvements one step at a time, whether they be in the club—which is certainly the most important thing—or the support functions like public relations and promotions.

"We feel that a combination of all those things is going to take us back in the right direction.

Horsburgh began as the Mariners' director of sales and marketing, the same position he had filled in Texas. Later, he became assistant to Vertrieb. In May of 1978, when Horsburgh left to teach at the University of Washington, Horsburgh was named the executive director of the franchise, at 31 the youngest man to hold a similar position in the major leagues.

The BOWDOWIN ORIENT

NESCAC may veto added tourney

(Continued from Page 12)

"We're on vacation those dates so there's no conflict. I know it is in the works, but I haven't heard any official word from Bowdoin officials yet. It would be a great field and I feel it would draw well.

Before accepting an invitation to the series, the Polar Bears must receive the approval of the College. This process has not begun yet, though, "We have no official notification request or any form saying anything like envelopes, promises, or anything as of yet," states Athletic Director Ed Dooms. "There'll be nothing done until we get that. The newspapers are premature.

Bowdoin has already agreed to play in two other tournaments during the Christmas Holiday. The Bears will compete against the University of New Hampshire, Princeton, and Boston College at a Holiday Classic in Durham, N.H., and will participate in the annual NCAA Semi-Final at the Portland Civic Center with Colby, the University of Maine at Orono, and Merrimack. The Warriors will replace defending champion Middlebury as the out-of-state entry next year.

Your JOB Future

We provide assistance in:

- Identifying your job opportunities.
- Preparing your resume.
- Developing job sources.
- Learning interview techniques.

Job-Career Guidance Services
Lincoln Building 36 Maine St., Brunswick, Me. 04011
Call C. B. Bolivia for appointment 725-5894

COUNSELORS:

Counselors:

If you think one dollar-ninety-eight looks great, don't you hear how great it sounds.

We've got great classical, blue, folk, jazz and international LPs for you. With top artists on Everest, Archives, Folk, Classical, Jazz, Tradition, Olympic, etc. Most are priced at $1.95, with multiple sets at $3.95 and $5.94. Schwann's list prices are $4.95, $9.98 and $14.94.

At those prices, the only thing cheaper is radio. And the rush is on!

Extra special. Cassettes, too — some low price!

Macleans Audio & Video

THE TONTINE MALL Maine St., Brunswick, Me. 04011
Open Daily 9:30 AM to 5 PM, Except Sundays (207) 725-8262

How To Turn Desires

Into Better Grades

If you enjoy these A students and wondered how you too, can join them?

Do you want to be:

1. Better prepared for exams
2. Get more from lectures
3. Make better grades
4. Learn how to set and reach your goals
5. Make school easier and more enjoyable
6. Become an excellent student with the traits needed to reach that goal.

Since graduating from professional school eight years ago, I have enjoyed talking with many students about these very subjects. Most parents have asked me to talk with their sons or daughters who are graduating from high school or home on vacation from college. Often times the students themselves have come to me for advice and have continued to do so while through their college course. Because of their interest and appreciation, and with my wife's help, I have worked hard for a long time to refine and develop a method to improve grades, so that it would be easier and quicker to get results.

We are both college graduates. My wife was a high honors student all the way through college. I spent ten years beyond high school studying for my profession. We have learned much from our own experiences, the advice of professors and peers, and years of reading beyond college.

Now at last we offer you this success information. For $9.98 we will send you a one hour tape entitled "How to Turn Desires into Better Grades." You must be completely satisfied, otherwise, return within 30 days and receive a full refund. Check or money order made out to:

Donald P. Woods
Box 225 Hogan Rd.
Houlton, Me. 04730

She's always been a little gem, now she's earrings.
Baseball to face tough competition

(Continued from Page 12)

"Baseball in this area is tough, and it takes a while to get used to it. We're not really hitting well. Coming from vacation to four games in the first week is hard. Playing in the cold doesn't help either -- a lot of sore arms."

There's been a little more than sore arms, though. John Blomfield, a sophomore who pitched last year, hurt his arm in the third inning against Brandeis. "I talked to him on Monday and I know he hasn't thrown since then. I think it's his elbow. If he's out, that's going to hurt us," Johnny Corcoran has a pulled ankle and McNeil is out for good with a broken arm.

Tuesday the Bears faced Tufts on a long road trip game. Again the state fell short for Bowdoin. By the fourth inning, Tufts led by four, having so far kept the Bears idle. A hit in the fifth showed a faint glimmer for the Bowdoin offense, but it would only be matched by one other, that coming in the ninth. The team from Boston batted an even .300, bringing in nine runs off the Bears gloves.

Tufts was 3-4 at the beginning of the match. Bowdoin was 2-2. It was too far to go to lose, and consensus believes that they should have won. "It was a young team with a lot of freshmen, but there's potential out there."

Coombs says calmly. The 2-3 record comes from the 67 hits Bowdoin has given up, compared with the 37 they have scored on offense. And their 12 runs fall 44 short of the 56 runs that teams have held against them.

Netmen young and talented

by DAN FERRANTE

After a tough defeat against MIT and a close loss to Colby, the men's varsity tennis team is looking forward to a good season. This weekend, the team will meet an impressive Boston College team and an undefeated Tufts squad. "This weekend will be tough," admitted Coach Reid, "but the competition will be good for us."

He added, "I could schedule a 10-0 record but who wants that kind of season?" The team handily defeated the University of Maine at Orono last weekend and played impressively for such a young squad.

Three freshmen are competing: Paul Douglas, Bob Horowitz, and Jim Groff. All three can hold their own against the experienced veterans.

The real test will be in a rematch against Colby, a team the netmen lost to be a mere two match points, and a match against Bates. "All three teams are nip and tuck," said Reid. "We hope to keep improving and take Bates and Colby decisively."

Track would like to forget and look ahead for success

(Continued from Page 12)

Mike Connor. "Not only did it hamper us in the meet but it has also been detrimental to our training schedules."

Coach Frank Sabatek was more concerned with the upcoming NESCAC meet. "We're hoping to do well in the NESCAC in order to become prepared for the state meet the weekend after."

In general, the MIT meet would rather be forgotten by the members of the team, although it probably won't be for quite some time, who are looking on to bigger and better things. As for the weather, its necessity was perhaps best described by shot-put/discus thrower Dan Spears when he was heard humming to himself the tone of April Showers Bring May Flowers.

CONGRATULATIONS DANNY & MARY

Don't forget invite us all to the wedding!

Travelers Ask Questions 725-5573 Stowe Travel

BY CLINT HAGAN

EURAILPASS FARES

Q. I'm thinking of going to Europe and want to know what the 1979 Eurailpass and Eurail Youthpass fares are for next summer? Can we obtain these passes at Stowe Travel?

A. The 2 month Eurailpass for anyone under 26 years of age is $240. Other Eurailpass fares are $110, 15 days; $220, 21 days; $290, 1 month; $390, 2 months; and $460, 3 months. Remember we must have your passport number in ordering your Eurailpass. These passes cannot be purchased in Europe.

THE UNITED STRIKE

Q. What is the status now of the United Airlines strike and how is it affecting service on the other airlines?

A. It's getting serious, so the United people aren't now negotiating, and we don't see any end in sight. Our suggestion is to reserve your flight reservations well in advance for May, June etc. Our reservations staff is doing its best to make new bookings for those already booked on United, and to reduce your "waiting time" when you call or stop by Stowe's office.

We expect a busy spring and summer!

NEW RESERVATIONIST

Q. Who do we see at Stowe Travel for flight reservations and tickets in the U.S.? We know that you and Eric Westby are Stowe's "international travel experts," and do not usually take care of domestic reservations etc.

A. Barbara Leonard, who was for many years chairman of the mathematics department at Brunswick High School and who is now a school trained travel agent; Cheryl L. Matsonowski, a recent graduate of Florida's Southeastern Academy for travel agents and who is a young Naval wife; and Joanne Baribeau, a graduate of the Augusta JSFA School for travel agents, all handle domestic airline reservations full time at Stowe. Cheryl, incidentally, is replacing Sue Lowell who is leaving Maine to take up residence in New Jersey next week. We like you to know who is at Stowe Travel.

GREYHOUND FARES

Q. I understand that that special midweek $85 bus fare, and weekend $95 fare to "anywhere in America" on Greyhound has been extended. How long are these special fares good for?

A. These special Greyhound fares have been extended for selling purposes until May 21, and are good for 30 days after the date of sale. Our southbound Greyhound buses still leave daily from Stowe Travel for Boston, NYC etc. at 9:30 a.m., 11:00 p.m. and 8:25 p.m. at night, and we're always open for the buses.

Asking about Greyhound reminds me to tell you that when sending all those package express shipments out next month (boxes, trunks, etc.), that no one item can weigh more than 100 pounds. If a box or trunk weighs more than 100 pounds, Greyhound will simply not take it! Also, all shipments must be well tied and secured, with proper identification thereon!
Injuries and cold cramp the Bears’ performance

by MARK MOSBEIN

“College baseball is competitive in New England,” Coach Coombs said, letting a sigh out as he spoke. “Bringing the hitting, pitching and fielding together is a gradual process.” A smile crosses his face, one that tells the story of the weekend in baseball Bowdoin did. The weekend that leaves the team with 2 and 3 record. “It’s a gradual process.”

The season began with five freshman starters and a win against MIT. With just under .500 hitting average (1997), compared to a poor showing by the Engineers, who hit .191, Bowdoin, the Bears cleaned up, leaving MIT in a 2 to 1 trail of dust. Strong showings were made by Mark Johnson, Scott Fitzgerald, John Fish, and Eric Arvidson, and Craig Gardner.

Last Friday, the team met Newton College of Springfield, MIT on Pickard Field. Nine innings, 4 hits off of 33 at-bats, and 11 runs later, the Bears had picked up their second win. Kevin Brown, Steve McNiel, Arvidson, and Fitzgerald again showed strength. Nasson could only match that force with 1 run out of 9 at-bats, hitting less than .200.

There are the wins thus far. The last three games - two with the Brandeis Judges and one with Tufts - have all left Bowdoin at the short end of the bat. These are the games we’ll be playing,” the Coach said. William’s Colby, Bates, USM - these will be tough games for them.

Saturday afternoon, overcast, cool, not bad weather, but not great, either. “We took a beating,” Coach Coombs said. The Bears were left up 42 runs off of 45 hits in the course of 15 innings. Bowdoin totals were dangerously low, batting as a team below .100. The team only managed to get a composite six runs on the board, five in the first game, one in the second. Besides the high number of runs, the Judges hit over .500. The previously undefeated Polar Bears were now even five hundred, and one of New England’s powerhouse added two more to their already high total of six wins with no losses. It was a long afternoon.

Coach Coombs had some reflection on the games.

(Continued on page 11)

 tracked by MIT

by MARK PREECE

Believe it or not, the beginning of April is also the commencement of the outdoor track season. Most people hadn’t even had a chance to put away their skin before the Bowdoin track team set out for MIT, in weather that could, at best, be described as pathetic. One member of the team was heard to exclaim that the only thing the weather was good for was a “white-water canoe race. Was the meet a waste of time? YES!”

Bowdoin had easily defeated MIT during the indoor season but the trackers’ hearts were simply not in this one. First and foremost in everyone’s mind was getting inside to strip off their cooling, freezing uniforms. As a result, the Bears lost 95-70 but one got the distinct impression that not too many people were overly worried about it.

At the start of the confrontation, the mercury had risen to a blistering 35°F (2°C) and a constant onslaught of freezing rain would make the whole affair a character-building experience to be remembered for years to come. Despite everything, however, some people tried to show what they were made of, gritted their teeth, and managed to salvage something from the day.

Bowdoin’s top point scorer was David Emerson, who took first place in the 110m hurdles and third place in the 400m intermediate hurdles and the high jump. Battling a bad case of diarrhoea, Tom Capasse, won the 100m dash. (They don’t call it the “runs” for nothing). Richard D’Antuelli put in a gutsy performance in the 1500m and easily covered 5 minutes.

Other Bowdoin victories came from Steve Clouthier, the 800m, 1500m, 5000m, and 10,000m in 2:53", 4:47, 9:32", and 32:50" respectively. David Butler and Joe Kussman each won the 3rd place in the 800m and 1500m. In the hurdles, Tom Capasse was the top sprinter in the 110m hurdles.

(Continued on page 11)

Track trounced by MIT

Postgame Scripts

It’s all in black and white

by GEOFF WORRELL

Perhaps it is inherent in the liberal arts tradition that there be a great deal of diversity involved in a student’s education, but why is the school colors?

Bowdoin College has the distinction of having the simplest school colors imaginable; black and white. Yet, one only has to glance around campus to see the track team crusing around in green jackets and the baseball team sporting their black caps with the white decal and the green crease. Perhaps black and white are boring colors but the New York Yankees win with them every year.

Besides being the only college in the country to get excited over a song about a Polar Bear, Bowdoin is also the only college in the nation that sports the black and white. If for no other reason than to preserve our individuality, let us please get the green off of the uniforms. I know we see very little green during the year, but there is a place for everything.

Freshman Dan Dewar in a recent game

Laxmen trampled by two foes; women take one and lose two

by DUNBAR LOCKWOOD

The men’s lacrosse team has dropped its last two games, to the University of New Hampshire, 16-8, and to Babson, 13-10, bringing its record to 4-4.

With very few seniors graduating from last year’s 12-1 squad the team has started the season with optimism. “Well we were going to do well, but we weren’t so we’re pressing and when you press you don’t play well,” said coach Mort Lapointe. He added, “The potential is there, but in order to realize it we’ve got to start playing as a team.”

“Defense seems to be one of the main weaknesses this year. The team has allowed more goals so far this year than it ordinarily does in a season,” said Lapointe. Against Babson, the Bears led 9-7 going into the fourth quarter having outscored their opponents 5-1 in the third. Then, they collapsed and were outscored 6-1. The team has been outplayed badly during the 4th period for three of the last four games.

The squad will travel to Boston to face Boston College tomorrow night. Lapointe commented, “If we’re going to stay with them we’ve got to improve. We’re going to struggle the rest of the season if we don’t improve.”

Women’s Lacrosse

Women had an even greater problem to overcome and have redeemed itself after a disappointing start. After losing its opening two games to powerful UNH and Harvard, the women’s lacrosse team came up with a 12-2 victory over Boston College. The attack was paced by Marsha Georgaklis who had eight goals and Peggy Williams who had five.

Having faced their two toughest opponents of the season the schedule looks bright. “We have a good chance of winning the rest of our games,” said Coach Sally Lapointe.

The team lost their first decisions 14-0 and 15-1 so all three of their games have been one-sided. Lapointe explains: “We’re right in the middle. It’s either feast or famine all season.”

Brandeis southpaw Steve Clouthier beat the Bears with a strong complete-game performance. Oriana/Stuart.

track trounced by MIT
Afro-Am chooses officers ponders white membership

by LAURA HITCHCOCK

The question of how to determine membership in the Afro-American Society should be resolved by the end of this semester, with the constitution of the organization coming under scrutiny this way, said newly-elected Am chairman Sharon Graddy '80.

The debate began earlier in the semester when at least one white student demanded to know why whites were not allowed voting membership in the society. The problem centered around the interpretation of ambiguous terms in the organization's constitution, which stated that all black students and "those sympathetic to the cause" could be members. The Afro-Am contended that it would be detrimental to the goals of the society if white membership included voting privileges, while the College maintained that funds could not be granted to an organization which did not allow complete participation for all students.

Shortly before vacation, however, the Society consulted with two area lawyers about the situation, and discovered that the Afro-Am was in violation of the law by restricting voting membership. But the adjustment in Am policy produces several problems, according to co-chairman Eli Abasalom '80, who was elected to his post with Graddy on Sunday.

"There will have to be a screening process," he said, pointing out that the goals of the Am may be jeopardized if any and every student is allowed a free rein in the organization. "But if the screening is for white students only, that isn't fair, and if we have screening for black students, that is ridiculous. Plus, it would turn black students off immensely.

There are two suggestions now before the society to resolve the problem, according to Abasalom. One, that the society allow membership to any student, contingent on the attendance of a certain required number of meetings, and two, an "unofficial suggestion" that voting privileges be restricted to those actively involved in a ministry. Most present members of the society are actively involved in a ministry, he said.

"If the problem becomes unsolvable, however, it might be possible for the organization to break with the College and receive funds from other sources. "I personally believe that if the members of the Afro-Am feel strongly enough that the only way the organization can serve its purpose is to give just blacks voting membership, they should not be bothered about money. All kinds of funds from national organizations are available," he said.

Graddy was unsure about the availability of outside funds for the society, but shared Abasalom's feelings that attendance will probably figure prominently in the final determination of voting (continued on page 4)

Profs, students discuss divestment

by GEORGE BONZAGNI

About one hundred and forty interested students and faculty members packed into the Daggett Lounge last Friday afternoon to listen to the much publicized forum on Bowdoin's investments in South Africa. The panel, in discussion, which lasted about two hours, focused on various alternative proposals for action on Bowdoin's part to express its disapproval of the apartheid policy of South Africa.

The panel was comprised of seven members: Professor Randolph Stakeman of the History Department, Joaham D. Pierce of the Board of Trustees, and Samuel A. Ladd of the Alumni Council (representing the President's Advisory Committee on South African Investment); Richard Udell '80, Carol Bogler '79, and Michael Rzynce '78 representing the student body; and Professor Craig McEwen (moderator).

Professor Stakeman opened the discussion by informing those present on the current position of the Advisory Committee concerning South Africa, and in the options under consideration for courses of action. Mr. Stakeman announced that the Committee is presently in general agreement on two major points.

"First," he said, "morality can, indeed, be a relevant criteria for making investment decisions, and secondly, that the condition of black population in South Africa compels Bowdoin to take some kind of appropriate action concerning investment policies." He also noted, however, that the Advisory Committee has yet to reach a final consensus as to what a formal policy for Bowdoin regarding the College's future investment plans. The reason for the lack of a final policy rests on the fact that the Committee, such as the continuing public debate concerning the specific issue of apartheid, the current corporate policy in this country, and the welfare of blacks in the changing South African society.

Adding to Professor Stakeman's points, Pierce noted, "Some way it is not our business to take action in South Africa, especially with regard to the profits being made in that country, but the issues are agreed upon that action ought to be taken after a careful outline of alternatives." Such alternatives mentioned during the course of the presentation range from complete or partial divestiture to stockholders' resolutions which would announce Bowdoin's opposition to corporate practice.
Bowdoin's academic priorities

During this past week, the Faculty began an organized consideration concerning academic departments which will receive additional professors in the coming year. Lifting a freeze on faculty hiring that goes back further than last year's student-faculty memories, Bowdoin will be expanding the size of the Faculty by three. The competition among the departments figures to be intense.

It must be admitted that the addition of three faculty positions will not result in a drastic reduction in the student-faculty ratio nor will it measurably lessen faculty workload. The new positions should, however, be apportioned so as to make the greatest impact upon departments that are currently understaffed.

The Department of Government and Legal Studies' desire that all three positions go towards minority studies in the fields of government, economics, and anthropology is unjustified and shows an insensitivity towards the needs of other academic disciplines at the College. The Government Department's argument is twofold: there is a need at Bowdoin for students, both white and black, to become more aware of the problems and experiences of minorities and that, with 140 majors, its eight member department is overworked. Both contentions can be at least partially refuted.

The proposal calling for an increase in minority studies seems to ignore the number of courses currently offered dealing with the African and Afro-American experience. It is doubtful whether the majority of Bowdoin students are aware that an Afro-American major is offered here, one that combines courses in government, history, psychology, sociology, anthropology, music, and English. The courses are sufficient, given the other pressures of the curriculum.

The argument that the number of faculty is directly related to the number of majors is, at best, only partly valid. To expand departments only in response to student numbers would be a highly risky business with professors being hired and fired as enrollments in the various departments rise and fall. As Professor John H. Turner stated, such a move subjects the faculty to "student fashion" and does not lend itself to "creative thinking."

The two most glaring needs of the Bowdoin faculty lie in the areas of Anthropology and Environmental Studies. To call a department "Sociology and Anthropology" when only one of its professors teaches anthropology is little more than a joke. Course offerings in the anthropology section of the department have been limited because of the lack of an adequate number of professors.

Perhaps no department will have more significance in the decades to come than that of Environmental Studies. Bowdoin is one of the few small colleges in the country to offer a program in Environmental Studies and for the College to fail to give the department a fair chance would be a tragedy. It would be ideal for the College to hire an individual qualified in Environmental Studies and geology, thus enabling the latter to become a major department.

While the academic needs of the College should be paramount, it is imperative that Bowdoin make an effort to hire more minority faculty. There would be a better chance of attracting qualified black applicants if there were more black professors, not just black professors who teach courses related to Afro-American Studies.

The Oriental, Friday, April 27, 1979
Four parachutists prepare to take the plunge out of the Maine sky. Orient/MacLean

by JON CROSBY

Have you ever had a great desire to throw yourself out of a plane from an altitude of 2,800 feet, not in an effort to end it all, but to experience the excitement and exhilaration of something new? If so, perhaps you should join the growing number of Bowdoin students who are taking up skydiving with the help of George Anderson in Lyman, Maine.

Anderson is a plumber by trade whose main love is skydiving. He’s a member of the Thunderbird Skydiving Team, a club which dives together regularly and helps George with his lessons. The fee for the preliminary lesson and jump is $10 and $10 for each jump thereafter.

After the fifth jump, one is no longer considered a “student.” The cost then plummets to $5. Nonstudent status allows the jumper to pull his own rip cord during free fall and land without the assistance he receives in the earlier jumps.

As Kevin Walsh ’81, one of the four parachute students, puts it: “You don’t have to be suicidal to want to try it. It’s really a nice sport; it’s relaxing. Even Time magazine finally moved it from the psychology to sports section.” He and Barb Sawhill ’81 tried skydiving for the first time last fall. Kevin has been twice and Barb has been once since.

Barb explains how she came to try the sport. “Kevin and Al Arthur had never been before and wanted to go last fall. They decided on a day, October 28, and agreed to go because it was the day after my birthday. I’d always said I would do something significant the day after my ninetieth birthday so I was willing to take the plunge.”

“We’ve probably asking yourself why anyone would want to try this,” Barb continues. “But Barb and Kevin agreed that it was something they’ve always wanted to do. Barb comments, ‘I think everyone has a list of things they want to do before they get old and decrepit. Skydiving was one of the things at the top of my list, hang-gliding is up there, too.’”

Hilite Edman ’81, a recent recruit, recalls her first jump last weekend. “It was a really neat experience. I think, primarily because of the day – the conditions were perfect. Just the floating feeling was really good. What I’d really like to do is be able to free-fall and pull the rip cord myself.”

Getting over the fear of the first jump is not difficult, Hilite points out. She recalls, “It was because I was the first to jump and I hadn’t prepared myself for that. As the plane headed down the runway, I felt a sinking in my stomach, but I found I had to be concentrating on what I was doing – on how to leave the plane, how to position my body, how to absorb the shock of the impact with all of your body.”

For the first five jumps – the parachute falls from an altitude of 2,800 feet. He jumps from a bar outside the plane, near the wing. A jump master makes sure the student, who typically pulls the chute open is secured to the plane and taps the jumper’s leg when it is time for him to jump. He also watches the fall so that he can critique it later. After the fifth jump, the parachutist is able to pull the rip cord on his own, while free-falling.

You’re probably asking yourself why anyone would want to take this course. Barb and Kevin both hope to take this course. Barb and Kevin both hope to take this plunge again.

Parachuting is “a great feeling in life. To say you’ve done it is the motivation.” Orient/MacLean

Food and games punctuate gala Spring Fling program

by HELEN PELLETIER

This coming weekend is sure to be full of action for all those with Spring Fling on their weekend calendars. The Spring Fling Committee, in conjunction with a number of student organizations, has compiled a number of activities to fill the days before Ivies Weekend.

The 1979 version of Spring Fling will commence on Tuesday – May 12 – with ice cream floats on the MacLellan Terrace. For those whose thirsts aren’t quenched by the root beer and coke, the annual Alpha Kappa Sigma ladies party should provide plenty of liquid refreshment. From 6 to 9 p.m., WJOB will present an evening of trivia. A prize will be awarded to that group which earns the most points.

On Wednesday, Bowdoin’s Ultimate Frisbee Team will be in action on the quad. After their game, anyone wanting to play with the team will be more than welcome. At the same time, White Key will be sponsoring a bicycle race and a road race. Prizes will be awarded to the first man and woman to win each race.

On Thursday, in honor of Sun Day, BEBG will host a sunrise breakfast on the sixteenth floor of the Senior Center. For those preferring a later start on the day, the second annual fraternity “rotational drinking” will take place. There will be a different drink at every house, along with a bon fire at Zete.

An afternoon of food, drink, and games on the quad is planned for Friday. Bag lunches will be provided at the Union, Center, anyone who’s not for those wanting to participate in the campus picnic, Volleyball, nets, keys, and music will be provided as well. Centralized Dining will once again hold its Mega Dinner either outside their own dorm or in the Senior Center.

The Student Union Committee and all ten fraternities will take over on Friday evening when Ivies weekend officially begins.
Investments questioned by well-versed College panel

(Continued from Page 1)

According to Carol Bolger, "Bowdoin must support the growing movement to divest from companies doing business in Africa. What began two years ago has grown into a solid movement." She cited a dozen colleges and universities who have already committed themselves to divestment, including Amherst College, Smith College, Hamp-shire College, and Tufts University.

It was originally agreed by the members of the panel that Bowdoin's investments make up an insignificant fraction of the total of U.S. economic input into South Africa. Udall, in particular, emphasized that divestment would act more as a political lever to indirectly pressure the U.S. to change its policy. Also, by diverting South Africa's resources, Bowdoin can for example to other schools to follow in order to mount pressure for change.

Said Udall, "From the moral standpoint, a statement by the United States that it will no longer support apartheid would be very powerful." He inferred the situation would be the same as if the largest investor in South Africa, is waiting for a move by the United States to begin before considering its policy. Also, while U.S. capital would not be replaced, U.S. expertise is not immediately replaceable...by maintaining its investments.

Voting members' status to change with new policy members. A committee to rewrite out-of-date articles of the society will present a draft of the adjusted constitution this week, she said.

(Continued from Page 1)

Until this year, there has been little question concerning who voting membership, although several white students have been active in the organization in the past few years. At present, there are no whites who take an active role in the society, although the Am would like to see more interaction between blacks and whites in the future, she said.

The topic of membership will be a major concern in the next few weeks, and both Grady and Abramson agree that some decisions must be made before freshmen arrive in the fall. Said Grady: "Before we leave (for vacation), it will be set."

Use of imagery and acrobatics spices Dance Group's offerings

by MARTHA HODES

Dance is an enigmatic art form. The title of a dance is often the spectator's only intimation of its intended significance. This year's apprentices were especially elusive, but not matter. We need not be explicitly informed of the choreographer's inner processes. Dance is immediate; we need only watch.

On Friday and Saturday nights in Pickard Theater, the Bowdoin Dance Group gives its eighth annual Spring Performance under the direction of June Vail and Dance. Among the arrangement of soloists, couples, and crowds, three duets clearly shine. The concert opened with two of our finest artists. Tracy Hatta and Susan Sheinbaum in "Walking the Warm Water." At diversification, the title had a meaning and leading, following and supporting, the two women dance in the rain. Ducheneaux pursues her own movements, their expressionless countenance stand in poised tension with the striking synergism of their bodies.

Peter Honchaik and Christina Douaihy performed a superb and very graceful beach romp in one of a series of dances entitled "Disillusion." The thrust with crotches as a frolic, and after all the amiable acrobatics, the fellow is neatly dumped off the edge of the stage and the girl struck dead by the clap of two cymbals. Honchaik and Doner are both expressive actors as well as limber dancers, and the rapport accompanied by pianist Marty Budoff lent the perfect mood. Perhaps the most engaging duet of the evening was Julie Issmile and Susan Sheinbaum's piece in the same series. Dancing to primal music of the human voice live from stage, Elide left the two move truly as one body, almost never unlocking. Their dance is sensuous and etching, and almost as intimate as twins in the womb.

The less tame offerings of the evening were "Variations on Walk Home to Squid" and "September 29." The former, the work of Chris Zarbowski, is essentially a punk update of this eccentric choreographer's chair piece on last year's program. This time, they opted under the influence of Andy Warhol et al., Zarbowski has set the stage with a naked lightbulb, a naked breast (video tape), Christmas lights, and various panicky characters engaged in thoroughly un-collective activity. We are treated to everyone's favorite lightbulb and a creeping camerawoman with fleshbulbs. One is tempted to dismiss the piece with a suppressed yawn ("My, my we aren't avant garde anymore.") But Zarbowski does, he does, exceptionally well and with a terrific cast. It was delightful.

Perhaps then, the only really daring piece on the program was "September 29," choreographed by Tim Walter, Peter Bancel, and Nina Sweat. The performance by Tim Walter, Peter Bancel, and Leanne Robbins. The two men the dance only of one of a series of dances, a dance of child's play. The woman, regal in a green velvet gown dances a few, prove to them. If every moment of this psychological landscape could be sustained, it could be. If every moment of this psychological landscape could be sustained, it could be. Because this dance is neither accessible to the kids in the front of the house nor avant-garde, but instead a truly exploratory work.

Other pieces on the program included Tracy Hatta's "S-S--", an increasingly dissonant violinist; Tim Walter's "Syc-Curv-Jeit," a piece with five stately women in white dancing to Debussy; and Margie Ruddick's "Rolling Stone" which, although the audience did not see fit to so much as snicker at, was an amusing piece. There was also a stiff tailored dresses twirling to Italian opera.

The final piece of the evening was "Blinded by the Light", a piece with a very curtailing. Opening with pianist Lilford humming upon his piano, the entire number convene on stage sporting a balloon spice. "No Thanks to Broadway," the dance's cast's own Broadway Boogie Woogie.

Transplanted Scotsman points way to water

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Until Spring 1979, I had never heard of dowsing before. After Harry Howells' lecture, Cecil Make Donny Dowsers (presented by the Celtic-American Society), the subject interested me enough to merit my borrowing through several probably un-looked books and articles about the topic in the library.

Dowsers, it seems, can easily tell you what is down or how deep. According to Webster's definition reads as follows: "to use the divining rod (as in search of water)."

Very few dowsers, however, can explain how dowsing works. Two different encyclopedias treated this ambiguity quite differently. "Dowsers," said Encyclopedia Americana, "claim the instrument they are using moves of its own accord...Centered field and laboratory tests have failed to establish the validity of dowsing, and judged by scientific standards the practice has little basis in fact.

Chamber's Encyclopedia granted the process a more respectable definition. They called it "a form of divination of unique interest on account of its long and honourable career of practical application...Since the finding of water is often matter of vital and immediate importance, the long survival of the art is itself a considerable guarantee of its accuracy."

J. Harvey Howells' position on the subject is in direct accord with Chambers' definition. In this Sunday night lecture in Daggett was therefore a rather well titled talk, "Celtic Make Donny Dowsers."

Howells, a native of Scotland now living in Brunswick, "first discovered that he was a dowser in 1975. It is not essential," he explains, "to have a Celtic background in order to be a dowser." What is essential is "having the function of sensuous perception. That claim follows as the night from the day. Dowsing is a proven form of extra-sensory perception.

Dowsers are not primarily illiterate psychics living off a Goulash board mentality. The Founding Fathers of the American Society of Dowsers (established in 1961) consisted of two lawyers, a university official, a judge, an analyst for General Electric, a former President of Dartmouth College, and, according to Howells himself has written and published numerous books, television comedies and dramas, and won the 1955-1956 Writer's Guild Award. Charles Richet, 1918 Nobel Prize winner, devoted an entire chapter of a 1923 text to a laudatory explanation of the process of dowsing.

According to Howells, Moses was the first dowser. A 1939 archaeological dig in the Sahara unearshed an eight-thousand-year old drawing of an eager crowd, watching a diviner seek for water. The art went (figuratively) underground for centuries. In 1866, the first authenticated evidence of dowsing appeared in Genetic Agricola's De Re Metallica. In 1902, writes J. A. J. Elliot in The Modern Practitioner, a judge apprehended and identified through the agency of a peasant of a missing necklace of an Aymar who claimed the ability to trace fortresses by the use of divining rods.

Almost anyone," proclaimed Howells, "can dowse. Eighty percent who try to complete the process will not do. The reason varies with the individual. Interpretation can be learned with practice if you approach with an open mind.

Some have disagreed. O.E. Meiniger, in the U.S. Federal Government's Water Supply Paper 416 repeated: "I'm not going to be everyone that further tests by the United States Geological Survey of some 3000 wells showed a misuse of public funds...To all inquiries the United States Geological Survey therefore gives the advice not to expend any money looking for water by any water wish...for locating underground water..."

An old issue of the Brittlebrot Reformer writes: "Centuries ago some European villager discovered that if he walked around with a forked stick held a certain way and with muscles tensed would irresistibly turn downward at certain times."

"This half-fut may or may not have noticed that a certain contact with the stick would turn the stick down, and the lighter he gripped the stronger its pull. In time the technique association grew up in his mind between the stick and water and, being sure that the stick would dig and strike water almost anywhere his stick went down."

"Witches, deep thoughts or bonfire ridicule? Howells' primary goal was to answer that this high time, his audience to part of what he called the "galactic Celtic spirit."

He is an interesting fellow for being one of the few countries in the English-speaking countries still dwelling in still (little-known). Quoting Lord Dewar (of alcohol reknown), Howells suggested, "Minds are like parachutes. Neither function unless it's open."
Distribution of three new posts spurs lively faculty discussion

by RAYMOND A. SWAN

Last Monday afternoon, the faculty and a handful of students gathered in Daggett Lounge to discuss the allocation of three new positions on the College teaching staff for the 1979-80 academic year.

The approximately fifty professors who attended, with their opinions concerning which departments should receive the new faculty members, with several putting in "plugs" for their respective specialties.

Professor Samuel Butcher of the Department of Chemistry put in a plea for a more extensive En-Vironmental Studies program, stressing the interdisciplinary nature of the department.

"There have to be curricular opportunities in each of the major areas," he commented, referring to his department's relationship to economics, visual arts and government to name a few. He also called for some support for a program director.

John Langlois, Assistant Professor of History and a specialist in Asian Studies, proposed that the new positions be temporary, to be held for only two years for example. He distinguished between two forms of educational needs: informational and skills or methodology and concluded that Bowdoin needed to "buck up" the informational aspects of its curricula.

Stating that there is a "severe limitation in terms of information available to the students," Langlois went on to point out that the College's programs are very European and American oriented.

"We need to break through and distinguish between disciplinary needs on the one hand and institutional needs on the other," he said.

The concept of "rotating" positions, three-year terms and minority studies in the fields of economics, anthropology, and government was "a genuine effort" in the area of minority studies, one that would prevent Bowdoin from "falling back into a lily white community."

Professor Renschenk also argued that the English department needed additional faculty because it is now very concentrated in literature and that by far the most of any department.

Barbara Kaster, Professor of Communications, did not call for increased faculty in her specialty although she admitted that "a case for it could be made." Instead, she commented that while she was in, and will continue to be in favor of the Afro-American program at Bowdoin, she felt that fifteen courses in this area is "a sufficient number...given the other pressures in the curriculum." She also expressed interest in the idea of an Environmental Studies Geology teacher.

All in all the discussion had suggested adding to the faculty of the department of Romance Languages. Associate Professor Robert Seidensticker, while "doubtful" that "of course it's necessary," Turner, on a more serious note, said that he did "not seem to be responding to enrollment...catering to student fashion or academic program...catering creatively."

All in all the suggestions are still under consideration and no decision seems likely to be made in the immediate future. The precise decision seems likely to be made in the immediate future. The precise parties agree that the President and Dean of Faculty should have as little arbitrary power as possible.

SUC plans much music for Ivies

by ANNE MARIE MURPHY

Amid some internal controversy, the Student Union Committee has finalized its plans for Ivies Weekend, a time that promises to bring several superb musical groups to Bowdoin.

The weekend's piece de resistance will be presented on Saturday evening. NEBR, or New Nymph and Blues Quartet, will perform at 9:00 p.m. in Morell Gym. That Saturday evening concert, however, was the center of some controversy at a recent SUC meeting.

The Committee voted 8-6 to keep the NEBRQ performance free to the college community rather than to charge a 50-cent admission and serve beer. Chairman Kevin McCabe '80 defended his decision:

"The Committee wanted to keep everything during Ivies free. We couldn't really afford to get legs, anyway. The amount of damages we've had to pay has depleted SUC's budget.

"It was better to have people bringing their own booze than for us to provide it, unless there's some way we can get money."

Committee member Ruth DeGraafheide '79 disagreed. "Most people on campus would rather pay fifty cents and have some beer. My gripe was that people on the committee seemed to be using their own prejudices. People always talk about plenty of beer at frat parties and that's fair to the independents."

McCabe commented that unless people next Thursday, May 6th or SAFC is willing to allow some plans for the NEBRQ concert will remain unchanged.

Also on the schedule for Ivies is Bowdoin's very own SNAP! who are scheduled for duty on the quad Sunday at 1:30. Pending contract negotiations, the FROVIC or the Afro-Am may present the Silver Star Steel Orchestra on Friday afternoon.

Tommie, April 27, 1979 THE BOWDOIN ORIENT PAGE FIVE
LETTERS

(Continued from Page 2)
lawyers, and businessmen, Casual Cav's remark that "they are people just like you and me" does a grave injustice to the Orient readership, many of whom are sensitive to the struggles of less privileged people. Not to mention that nearly half of them are female.

Whether or not this article was meant to be a joke is irrelevant. Either way it perpetuates demeaning stereotypes of women and less educated people. Which makes me wonder about our education: is this the kind of thinking four years at a liberal arts college leads to?

Lisa Tensmier '79

Objectives

To the Editor:

Last Monday, over one hundred students took over the Amblerst administration building. Seventy two of these students were minority students from Amblerst. The remainder were students from the five College area. Their demands were: complete divestiture from United States corporations dealing in South Africa, a better recruitment of minority faculty, and the continuation of the orientation program for minority students.

We have been told that this is an age of a new conservatism. Concurrently, it is common belief that the "black struggle" is over, enough progress has been made, and any problems seen by black students concerning their situation is rooted in paranoia. The Afro-American Society not only fights to improve their very real plight but fights against this misconception as well.

A criticism with the Afro-Ams is that we have not moved to improve our own situation. A more precise critique would posit that we abandoned the "radical" means through which to effect change that was our mistake. We have addressed our discontent to the administration in the hopes that they would take on the task of improving our situation. No progress has been made.

Our objectives remain:
1. More black students recruited by Bowdoin.
2. In order to increase the number of black students and to allow for a diversification of students based not only talents but background, an affirmative action program that incorporates courses that give "high risk" students the chance to succeed at Bowdoin.
3. Enhanced recruitment and hiring of black faculty members.
4. Complete divestment of stock holdings from United States corporations which deal with South Africa.
5. Periodic meetings with the administration to discuss the progress being made on these issues.

The progress made during the infamous sixties rebellion is far from enough to correct two hundred years of inequality and psychological deprivation. The problems which society begets it has corrected still remain perhaps in different forms, yet nonetheless oppressive.

Sharon Graddy '80
Geoff Worrell '82

Exoneration?

To the Editor:

I'm incensed at the use of my name in "Casual Cav's" article. I was not present in Florida during Spring Break and I am certainly not the type to be part of such an immoral group like the Crusaders.

It's true that I seem to appear in the group picture that appeared in last week's edition. It should be noted that the photograph is a perfect example of photographic tampering. My image was superimposed with the rest of the group to give the appearance that I was actually there. Another cheap Orient trick.

I cannot deny the fact that I returned to campus with a tan — a sign that I was in Florida. I would like to explain this: at the time that the Crusaders were leading lives of wanton, licentious amorousity, I was visiting a friend at Three Mile Island, Pennsylvania. I didn't expect the nuclear accident nor the nuclear tan I received as a result.

I ask you, the readers, to exonerate me.

Harry Anastopoulos '79

Prescriptions — Accepted From All Students
10% discount on all items in front store.

- Cards and Gifts -

ALLEN'S DRUG STORE
148 Maine street
Brunswick, Maine 04011

King's Barber Shop
Town Hall Place
Tel. 725-8587
Brunswick's most modern and full service barber shop.
Four barbers to serve you with the latest in cutting and styling.

If you think one dollar-ninety-eight looks great, wait 'til you hear how great it sounds.

We've got great classical, blues, folk, jazz and international LP's for you. With hip artists on Everest, Archive, Folk, Archive, Jazz, Tradition, Olympic, etc. Most are priced at $1.98, with multiple sets at $1.98 and $5.94. Schwebin list prices are $4.98, $9.98 and $14.94. At these prices, the only thing cheaper is radio. And the rush is on!

Extra special Cassette, too — same low price!

Macbeans Books & Music
124 Maine St., Brunswick, Maine 04011

ELECT
CLIFFORD
KATZ
Representative to the BOARD OF OVERSEERS

AIRLINE RESERVATIONS AND TICKETS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>North</th>
<th>South</th>
<th>East</th>
<th>West</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Tours</td>
<td>Cruises</td>
<td>Fly-Drive</td>
<td>Resorts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stowe Travel</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1979 SECRETARIES’ WEEK

1979 Secretaries' Week gives us a good opportunity at Stowe Travel to reflect on the vital role of Bowdoin secretaries, and their role in helping plan their bosses' travel arrangements.

We at Stowe Travel salute them all during this special week, and thank them once again for their friendship and support. "Happy Secretaries' Week" to all of you at Bowdoin from your friends at Stowe Travel!

STOWE TRAVEL
725-5573

9 Pleasant Street
Brunswick
Other names in the game

Track records set

The Polar Bears' track contingent turned in a good showing in the NESCAC championships at Amherst last Saturday. Freshman Kwame Poku set a new Bowdoin and Bowdoin freshman record in the triple jump winning with a distance of 45 ft., 1 in. Poku also won the long jump at 22 ft., 3 1/2 in. Sophomore Glen Snyder set a new Bowdoin record in the 3,000 meter-steeplechase with a fifth-place time of 9:55. Other Bowdoin winners were sophomore Doug Ingersoll in the 1500 meter run and junior Scott Samuelsion in the pole vault.

Laxmen even mark

The men's lacrosse team evened its record at 5-5 last Tuesday with a victory over Colby by the score of 20-6. Derek Van Slyke set a new all-time Bowdoin scoring record with a career total of 129. Sophomore Kevin Rahill scored five goals and was credited with six assists to set a new game scoring record at 11.

The Bowdoin rugby team tested its talents against Maine Maritime. After the dust cleared, the Bears had soundly defeated Maritime by a score of 16-4. The Bears posted their second victory after the game at a drinking contest. Oriente/Stuart

YOUR JOB FUTURE

We provide assistance in:
- Identifying your job opportunities.
- Preparing your resume.
- Developing job sources.
- Learning interview techniques.

Job-Career Guidance Services
Lincoln Building
96 Maine St., Brunswick, Me. 04011
Call C. B. Boiles for appointment 725-5894

ANNUAL PRE-INVENTORY SALE

"RECORD BREAKING" SALE

ENTIRE INVENTORY LP'S

$4.99

798 SERIES CODES G & H

$5.99

898 SERIES CODE H

ALL OTHER CODES AT COMPARABLE SAVINGS

STOCK UP NOW AT THESE PRICES BEFORE YOU LEAVE FOR THE SUMMER!

ALL YOUR FAVORITE ARTISTS — EVERY FAMOUS LABEL EVERY MUSICAL CATEGORY
April 30 thru May 4
Moulton Union Bookstore

Baseball needs six wins to reach 'break even' goal morning, and some of it even crept into the early afternoon, but not enough to give the Bears the energy to beat the Bobcats. Bob Stevens pitched 'through five innings, what most observers believed to be too long a time. His fatigue showed in the fifth, when, after the Bears made a great fourth inning catch-up effort to bring the game within two, Bates bounced back with four to make the score 9-6. Jeff Ham came off the bench and held Bates to one more, but the batters could only muster three, finishing four behind the Cats in a 13-9 contest.

(Continued from Page 8)

There are some tough games left: two against Colby and Bates, one with Amherst, and two more with Williams, not to mention one against USM. But the team will hold together, Coombs feels, and seems to show that spirit as well. There are a lot of freshmen out there, and they hold their own. The pitching looks like it's shaping up, especially if they can stay healthy, and the problems of such an early season are ironing out. "A live hundred season is just where you want to be," Coombs said.

Kennebec Fruit
The General Store of Brunswick
Hot Dogs — Chili Sauce
Creamsicle — Bromo Seltzer
HOT DOG STAND

Macleans Audio & Video

THE BOWDOIN STEAK HOUSE

FINE FOOD, DRINK, ENTERTAINMENT
115 Maine st. brunswick, maine 725-8334
open weekdays for lunch, every evening for dinner
and Sundays for brunch 12:00-3:00

Wed. & Thurs., May 2nd & 3rd
Hayward & Smith
Fri. & Sat., May 4th & 5th
Navard & Dr. Jazz
Women's lax�数 their winning ways

by A.J. Preece

Last week, accompanied by the first good weather of the season, both the J.V. and Varsity women's lacrosse teams played a busy schedule of competitions.

Saturday's varsity game was a smash with Bowdoin topping Augusta Club 17 to 1. Major contributors to the landslide victory were Katrina Altmaier and Marina Georgaklis with 4 goals each, and Laura Georgaklis and Peggy Williams with 3 goals. The team effectively illustrated their speed and stick handling talents.

On Tuesday, after a slow start, Bowdoin overcame Colby's early 2 shot lead to win the game with a final score of 8-2. Leading scorers were Kaye Perryman with 3 goals and Peggy Williams and Laura Georgaklis both with 2 goals apiece. Sharon Graddy was the apparent showstopper though. With 6 seconds left in the game and 13 on the second, she helped the team enormously.

Comments Linda Atlas, a varsity player, "Colby was very physically. Bowdoin refrained from physical retaliation and instead responded with speed and surprise."

"Interestingly enough, Bowdoin was not at its best but held its lead on top," notes Coach Lapointe. "Overall, I feel the team is really coming together well and working effectively as a unit."

J.V. had a more mixed record. On Saturday, they lost to Brunswick Recreational Club 2-0. Even with Julie Spector's 11 saves the team was unable to best their opponents.

"Brunswick has improved incredibly due, ironically, to coaching by our varsity team members," says Gwen Baldwin. "We're hoping for a rematch next week and should be prepared for their type of game."

On Tuesday, J.V. defeated Colby. Coach Bensinger, a freshman member of the team observed, "Melissa Flaherty and Kar lene Brotton are very strong on defense. It seems what we really need to concentrate on now is offense."

Benoit invited to White House

President Jimmy Carter's staff mentioned that the President's personal invitation has been mailed to the 21-year-old Bowdoin graduate. It was sent to clear up any misunderstanding. He received the telephone call in the midst of a jam packed campus reception in her honor.

Hundreds of her fellow Bowdoin students, professors and friends at the 43rd Boston Bowdoin for Benoit, who covered the 26 mile, 385-yard course from Harvard University, New York and Boston's women's record of 2:35.18.

Dr. William F. Esteman, President of Bowdoin and himself a pre-breakfast jogger, told the crowd he had met Benoit while out on his morning run. "Fortunately," he said, "we were going in opposite directions so she didn't entirely annihilate me."

He presented Benoit with an inscribed pewter plate commemorating her victory and said it was "a token of our esteem."

Dr. Esteman then handed Benoit a telegram from "your other President." It was a message from President Carter, who said "we are all very proud."

Less than 100 minutes later the ceremony reached its climax when Benoit received an unexpected telegram from Vice President Walter Mondale of the White House and the President again extended his congratulations.

In winning the 43rd Boston Bowdoin Marathon April 16, Benoit sliced more than a minute off the old Bowdoin women's record for women and defeated her closest rival by more than three minutes.

Baseball concedes four out of last five

by Mark Hosbein

Three games in a weekend are tough to play, but that's what the baseball team did last Tuesday and on Saturday. What makes them even more difficult is that there were two games, one on Monday and one on Tuesday, were scheduled for the beginning of the following week.

Out of those five games, the Bears could only manage one win. That off the first game of a doubleheader against Maine on Monday. The other four — USM, the second game of the main, Colby and Bates — all fell at the batmen's hands.

Yet Coach Coombs still showed the confidence that is the Bowdoin team. "We're gradually improving," he said with ease and a smile, "making our way in a league with some ... a lot of strong competition." At three and six, with half of one of intercollegiate sports' most grueling (18 games in just over a month) seasons gone, the batting Bears have a long way to go, but, with at least nine more games behind them, the many worries about making it.

Stretching back a week ago yesterday, (April 19), the team met the men of University of Southern Maine. Mark Brown was in the mound for the Bears, going nine innings and only allowing two earned runs. But the team dropped the game by three, while Thomas could sneak an additional four by the Bowdoin fielders to make it 6-3.

Last Saturday in Augusta, the Bears came against Thomas College in an afternoon doubleheader that ended in a split. In the first game victory Bob Stevens threw for Bowdoin, keeping the opponent to 4 runs off of 6 hits while their team lasted out ten in favor. "We played a good first game, but kind of kicked the ball around in the second one," remarks Coombs. The game went to Thomas in a five to three decision, with Jeff Ham hurling.

"Our pitchers are in a bind, but they're doing well," Coombs says. "We have had some problems with injuries which may cost us. Bloomfield is still out and Mark Brown's arm is getting sore." The loss of good players, in turn, is tough, and Coombs knows it, but "we've had some real good work out on the mound."

What he was referring to was Peter Sterdenweiss's game against Colby on Monday. After coming off the injured list, "Stick" completed eight innings, giving up five earned runs. He struck out nine.

Rugby eves record with win

by Chris Beninger

"Without a question," exclaims Neil Moss, a member of the formidable Bowdoin rugby team, "the best part of a rugby contest is the party following the game; the worst part is getting up the next morning." The holding bears have begun the five game spring season as their record stands at 1-1. Bowdoin visited undefeated Maine Maritime 16-4 while losing the following week to an overpowering Colby unit 19-14. In the fall, the team ended on a victorious note with a 4-3 record including two trounces over Bates College.

With three games left, two of which are this weekend, the season looks delightfully succesful.
Bowdoin presents five honorary doctorates

The Oldest Continuously-Published College Weekly in the United States

VOLUME CVIII
BOWDOIN COLLEGE, BRUNSWICK, MAINE, SAT., MAY 26, 1979

COMMENCEMENT EDITION

College graduates Class of 1979

This morning, Bowdoin granted 321 students degrees at the first commencement for College President W. F. Enteman. A total of 154 seniors, the exact same number as last May, graduated with Latin honors. In all, there were 321 graduates: 260 magna laude graduates, sixty-eight cum laude, and sixty-seven cum laude.

The Government Department claimed the largest number of graduates this year as 73 seniors earned either the baccalaureate or major in that discipline. History and Biology accounted for 39 and 34 graduates respectively.

In addition to these degrees, five honorary doctorates were presented. The recipients were: Betty W. Carter, journalist and co-member of the Class of 1927 — Doctor of Letters; Leonard W. Cronkhite, Jr., '41, President of the Medical College of Wisconsin — Doctor of Laws; Vincent L. McKusick, Chief Justice of the Maine Supreme Court — Doctor of Laws; The Most Reverend Edward C. O'Leary, Bishop of Portland — Doctor of Laws.

Aaron J. Shatkin, '64, internationally known virologist — Doctor of Science.

The Commencement Marshal, this morning was Samuel A. Ladd, Jr., and Branching in celebrating his 50th reunion. Mr. Ladd is Bowdoin's Director of Career Counseling and Placement Emeritus.

Magee elected to Board of Trustees

John F. Magee '47 of Concord, Mass., President and Chief Executive Officer of Arthur D. Little, Inc., of Cambridge, Mass., was elected to the Bowdoin College Board of Trustees yesterday.

President of the internationally known research, engineering and management consulting firm since 1972, Mr. Magee has been an Overseer of the College for the past seven years. Elected to fill his position as Vice President of the Board of Overseers was Paul F. Brontz '54 of Weston, Mass.

Also elected to serve as Overseers were Karen F. Cliff '72 of Newton Centre, Mass.; Richard A. Merrill '50 of Brunswick, Me.; and Norman C. Nicholson Jr. '56 of Dover, Mass. Reelected were Rosalyn S. Bernstein of Portland, Me.; U.S. Senator William Cohen '62 of Maine; Albert E. Gibbons Jr. '58 of Yarmouth, Me.; and John T. Perkins '59 of Weston, Conn.

Enteman proposes education, not finances

Dr. Willard F. Enteman said Monday the College "is in a strong position" but warned against "a temptation to become complacent."

In his first annual report to Bowdoin's Trustees and Overseers, Mr. Enteman said "external conditions which will influence higher education over the next years are too serious to permit complacent college to last long."

To the extent that institutions of higher learning are designing new programs "primarily for financial reasons rather than educational reasons — and many are — the temptation to failure," the Bowdoin President declared.

"I propose to combat complacency and pessimism by careful and continuous planning," Dr. Enteman said. "In the process of planning, our first focus should be on education, not finances. Bowdoin's purpose is an ends are too serious to permit complacency. The concerns should be brought to supply the means to educational ends." President Enteman said he is "convinced that if we can keep educational objectives foremost, we shall find students and donors who will want to be associated with a college of excellence which shines like a beacon in an otherwise dark and depressing environment. The fainthearted may be discouraged by people, but it is the bold and successful with which people wish to be associated."

Noting that in 1994 Bowdoin will celebrate its bicentennial, Dr. Enteman said "we might begin our planning by asking ourselves now how we hope Bowdoin will be described in 1994."

The Bowdoin President recalled that "in the summer of 1973, Bowdoin announced leadership of Maine's oldest college. 'I have begun to think,' he added, "but planning is a process in which many should participate."

"I have spoken of a college which would be deeply committed to undergraduate liberal arts education," Dr. Enteman asserted. "I have spoken of a college which would have approximately the same number of students as it does now, a college which would have a library, a museum, a computer center, a library with a collection perhaps 40 percent larger, a museum well integrated with the educational life of the college, a highly selected student body, free and open access to the finest financial resources, a highly qualified faculty dedicated to teaching and scholarship, an athletic program involved in genuine physical education, to fine arts and sciences and beyond graduation."

Declaring that "I propose no radically new or 'innovative' departures," President Enteman added: "What I propose is the continuing development of excellence in a college already familiar with excellence."

The standard cap and gown are very much a part of a Bowdoin commencement. 321 graduates donned that garb this morning in order to receive their degrees.
Emotional conflicts experienced by graduating seniors, the significance of the campus and the city as a site of communication, the importance of "bold dreams of the future" and the role of the "frontiersman" were subjects chosen by student speakers at Bowdoin's 174th Commencement Tuesday.

One of the four traditional student speeches, "Exposition from the Moxie," which was given an unusual joint effort by Diana S. Blais and Lisa A. Roxyne, was about the relationship between the campus and the world.

"The student must experience that relationship," said Martha M. Stane, who received the Dicey-Young Award.

"He must experience the world through the eyes of the campus, and the campus through the eyes of the world," said Stane.

Bowedin has encouraged us to be careful, critical thinkers. Criticism alone is not enough.

Fried: Cynthia P. Neipr, Michael A. Roxyne and Lisa B. Teaser. Their presentation was designed to show the experience of one woman through four characters representing multiple aspects of her life.

"The four students portrayed the conflicts between a woman graduate's political conscience and the forces of reality in her life," said the woman.

Stane, who is trying to decide whether to accept a job with the Equal Rights Amendment or a much better practical experience."

When a bank interviewer asks her for her position on whether colleges should diversify themselves of stocks of companies doing business in South Africa and banks making loans to that nation.

Stane finds herself replying that "Although foreign loans play a role in supporting the apartheid government, I can also see how foreign capital helps bring by building the economy and providing more jobs." She adds, after "an uncomfortable pause," that "I'm not sure where disinvestment is the best approach."

"The students disinvestment is the best approach."

Stane says "Bowedin has encouraged us to be careful, critical thinkers. Criticism alone is not enough."

Bowedin's annual Contemporary Music Festival will be held on the campus in Memorial Hall until Sept. 18. The show, supported by the Maine State Council for the Arts, Music and Humanities, is being planned as an event that will take place every other year at a major Maine museum or gallery. This summer's exhibition will be open to the public without charge during the Museum's summer hours: Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 to 8:30 p.m.; Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m.; closed Monday.

Another special event will be the third annual Maine Festival, a major arts festival which will be held Aug. 26-30, Aug. 26-30, 30, 3, 4 and 5. Each day from noon to 10 p.m., the festival will present a wide range of performances by artists, craftsmen, dancers, actors, singers, filmmakers, designers, architects, poets and folk artists. An all-day ticket, good from noon until closing, will be $5 for adults, $1.50 for students 18 through 66. An afternoon ticket, which will be good from noon until 5 p.m., is $2.50. Admission to evening entertainment programs, will be $4 for adults and $1.50 for children 6 through 16. An afternoon ticket, which will be good from noon until 5 p.m., is $2.50. Admission to evening entertainment programs, will be $4 for adults and $1.50 for children 6 through 16. Children under 6 will be admitted without charge at any time.

Students orations pose questions, urge action

"Don't become complacent; you may be on the right road, but you will get run over if you don't move."

McCarthy urged his fellow seniors "to make demands of yourselves, to believe. We must be brave and adventurous, ready to stake the path of our desire, no matter how hard or untravelled. If we do not take the road of goals and security, we will be given only the taste of ashes..."

Michael W. Walker asked "Where Are You Headed? A person needs more than something to live on, a person needs something to live for," he said. "Where are you headed? Life is asking you."

"Believe in yourself and in your own abilities," Walker added, "and say to the world 'I'm not afraid of tomorrow; I have seen yesterday and I am alive with today.'"

The Virginia Water Resources Research Center, established by the Water Resources Research Act of 1964, is one of 54 such research institutions, including one in each of the 50 states.

Bowedin spring sports wind to a close

Joan Benoit, Bowdoin's record-breaking distance runner, has been awarded the College's Lucy L. Shuman Trophy as Bowdoin's "outstanding woman athlete."

She established a new U.S. women's record for the 10,000 meter run while winning that event with a time of 34:49.9 at the EAAIW championships at Hartwick College two weeks ago. Benoit, who earlier set an American record for the 10,500 meter run this year's Boston Marathon, also owns an administrative staff for 14 years.

President Willard Entemann said, "Mr. Born has been a valuable member of our staff since 1965 and has supervised most of a variety of Bowdoin publications in his capacity as College Editor. He leaves with our best wishes for success in his new post."

Since Mr. Born became College Editor in 1967, several Bowdoin publications have won national-wide competitions sponsored by the American College Public Relations Assn.
Skater Mish lands job with Holiday on Ice to go south

The only problem graduating senior Laurie Mish has is figuring out how to pack a trunk for a year's worth of traveling. It's a problem she very much enjoys having.

The Dean's List student from Stamford, Connecticut, who served as Bowdoin's ice skating Polar Bear mascot for four years, has been selected to appear in the internationally famed "Holiday on Ice" show beginning this summer.

Commenting with a laugh, 'I've never been anywhere,' Laurie said she hopes to catch on with the tour right after graduation so that she can make the show's summer excursion through South America.

'That tour ends in November and then I could join another of the shows that goes throughout Europe. If this all works out I'll be getting a full experience ... and seeing a great deal of the world,' the dimwitted skater said.

Laurie, who has excelled in ice skating competitions since junior high school, auditioned for a New Jersey ice arena proprietor who doubles as a talent scout for the show. Word of her acceptance was not long in coming.

'My folks got the letter that I'd definitely been accepted and called me. Some friends of mine and I went right out and got a bottle of champagne and we had a fun night celebrating,' she said.

At Bowdoin's last home hockey game this past season Laurie was honored for her four years as skating mascot, receiving a gift and congratulations from Bowdoin President William P. Estes, as well as a warm ovation as she took a 21-foot hula hoop she could see her.

The 52" and 110-pound skater believes the experience she has gained from skating about the ice in a Polar Bear costume may prove helpful in the show. 'I wouldn't mind wearing one of those costumes again. I like to make people laugh,' she said.

Laurie, who majored in Chemistry and Philosophy, has some definite plans beyond the ice show. She hopes to work for a year as a chemist and then begin a graduate school program in the area of brain research.

Orient doles out prizes; announces staff for next fall

"Bowdoin Orient" prizes for outstanding contributions to the Bowdoin College student newspaper have been awarded to two staff members, Editor-in-Chief Robert J. DeSelmone announced last week.

Receiving prizes were William G. Stuart '80, the weekly paper's Assistant Editor; and Anne Marie Murphy '82, who has served as a Features Editor.

DeSelmone also announced the appointment of Raymond A. Swan '80 as Editor-in-Chief for the coming semester.

Other appointments were:

- Laura L. Hitchcock '81 and Stuart, Executive Editors; Holly B. B motorists of Eastc. Can.
- Thomas C. MacCormick of Aurora, N.Y.
- John T. Market of Bowd. N.Y.
- John A. Cunningham, Ranger, Me.; John P. Greene, Jr., College Point, N.Y.; Lynne A. Harrigan, Madawaska, Me.; Scott D. Rand, Woodland Hills, Calif.; John W. Sawyer, Gorham, Me.; and H. Andrew Seigle, Cherry Chase, Md.

Northwestern's Frank Brown wins Distinguished Educator Award

The Bowdoin College Alumni Council announced that the 1979 winner of its Distinguished Bowdoin Educator Award is Professor Frank A. Brown, Jr., a widely known biologist who has been a member of the North- western University faculty for 43 years.

The award recognizes "outstanding achievement in the field of education." It includes a framed citation and a $500 prize. All Bowdoin alumni in any area of education are eligible, except those on the College's faculty.

A native of Beverly, Mass., Professor Brown was awarded the national lecturer for Sigma Xi, the honorary scientific fraternity, in 1968. He was Associate and Book Review Editor of Physiological Zoology from 1942 to 1976, and from 1945 to 1949 he was head of the Department of Invertebrate Zoology at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass. Dr. Brown was a Trustee of the Connecticut College until he was elected a Trustee Emeritus in 1976.

Dr. Brown was a Director of the General Biological Supply House from 1956 to 1965 and has been a Trustee of the John G. Shedd Aquarium and the Chicago Zoological Society since 1966. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Animal Behavior Society.

A member of the Society of General Physiologists, Dr. Brown served as its President in 1956. He is a former Vice President of the American Society of Zoologists and the American Society of Naturalists.

His numerous other memberships include the American Society of Limnology and Oceanography, American Society of Zoologists, the American Association for the Study of Growth and Development, Illinois Academy of Science, Society of Experimental Biology and Medicine, American Institute of Biological Sciences, Ecological Society of America, American Society of Plant Physiologists, American Geophysical Union, International Society for Chronobiology and the American Society for Biometeorology.
Eight Bowdoin College seniors were honored Saturday evening with Highest Honors in their major fields of study.

A total of 62 seniors—19 percent of the graduating class—were awarded departmental honors for outstanding work in their major subjects, with eight receiving Highest Honors, 28 High Honors and 26 Honors.

Those receiving Highest Honors, High Honors, and Honors include:

ANTHROPOLOGY:

SOCIOLOGY:

Theology:

Biochemistry:

MATHEMATICS: Honors—John E. Ottoviani, Westerly, R.I.

MUSIC: Honors—Michael J. Kendrick, Denver, Colo.

The Moet Rev.

Edward C. O'Leary

Prelate in 1969. He has been a Diocesan Consultant, President of the Priests Senate, and Administrator of the Portland Diocese. He was formally installed as the ninth Bishop of Portland in ceremonies at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Portland in 1974.

Dr. Shatkin is also the College's Alumni Secretary and Editor of its alumni magazine.

Announced at the meeting were the names of four newly elected Alumni Council Members at Large and the appointment of a new Alumni Fund Director.

The new Council Members at Large are: H. Willis Day, Jr. '47 of Miami, Fla., Executive Vice President of the Southeast Bank Trust Company; Miami; Leon A. Gorman '36 of Yarmouth, Me., President and Chief Executive Officer of L.I. Bean, Inc., of Freeport, Me., Richard A. Hall '32 of Boston, Mass., Executive Vice President of The First National Bank of Boston; and Barbara A. Tarny '75 of New York, N.Y., a member of the fixed income sales and trading group at Salomon Brothers in New York City.

Dr. Aaron J. Shatkin