How Alumni Can Help Schoolmen...

IN JUNE, PRECEDING COMMENCEMENT, more than forty alumni, graduating seniors, and members of the Bowdoin Faculty and Staff participated in the initial Campus Conference on Admissions. They represented twenty-two of the forty areas with Bowdoin alumni clubs, and they ranged in class from 1905 to 1962. One of the principal speakers was George T. Davidson, Jr., ’38, Director of Guidance at Kennett High School in Conway, N. H., whose talk, entitled "The Secondary Schoolman Looks at Admissions," outlined ways for alumni to help guidance officers in public and private schools.

The guidance counselor, Mr. Davidson said, is the "middle man" in college admissions. He is surrounded by those who are interested in admissions, including students, parents, and local alumni, and he deals with admissions officers from various colleges. As a consequence, guidance counselors appreciate what college alumni can do. They hope that alumni will approach college admissions intelligently and objectively, helping each younger to be admitted to the college that is right for the boy, based on that boy's aptitude, interests, and desires. Alumni should steer clear of emotional involvement.

As the middle man, the guidance counselor performs many functions. He appraises each individual student and starts him looking at colleges as early as possible; suggesting the appropriate institutions for the candidate to consider. Basing his appraisal on the candidate's academic performance, scores on standardized tests, and the impressions of his teachers, the guidance counselor has a good idea of his potentialities. Alumni can help by discovering and encouraging the right boys, but they should work closely with the guidance officers, who can provide hints, clues, and even outright encouragement or discouragement about individual candidates. Although plans for college are now usually started in a boy's junior year, there are some dangers inherent in working far ahead. "Don't go too far," Mr. Davidson cautioned. "All the information on a given candidate may not be available this early in a boy's school career. If he is a good prospect, he can be encouraged, but you shouldn't promise him what you can't deliver."

Mr. Davidson believes that a visit to the College is the best way to impress a potential candidate. Alumni can help arrange such visits by making appointments, by arranging accommodations for meals and lodging, and often by providing transportation to and from Brunswick. Counselors will call on interested local alumni when boys express interest in their college, especially if those alumni have made known to the school officials concerned their willingness to help.

The alumni must keep an open mind concerning each potential candidate. The counselor will explain the boy's academic record and what it means. The main point is to determine the best college for each individual. Questions to be answered include these: Can the boy handle the work? How well will he do? Will he be happy?

SECONDARY SCHOOL PROFILES are helpful to college admissions officers; hence schools and colleges must understand each other. Alumni can promote such understanding, realizing that the problems of college guidance embrace more than a series of individual admissions cases. There is now a good deal of coordination between colleges and secondary schools; alumni should work to promote this harmony, understanding, and exchange of ideas and information. The relationship between a local alumnus and the guidance officers in his neighborhood schools can be a lasting and productive one, but it must be built on trust, confidence, mutual respect, and a healthy exchange of information and ideas.

There is today a good deal of misunderstanding about standardized tests and how test scores are used. The Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Tests (PSAT), given in the junior year, help determine channels and areas which guidance counselors ought to consider for each individual. Such junior-year tests are helpful in determining early admissions prospects, and they also separate the top group from the middle group. The so-called "College Boards" (the Scholastic Aptitude Tests, the Writing Sample, and, in some cases, the Achievement Tests) continue to figure prominently in each candidate's admissions plans as he proceeds through his senior year. Alumni working with admissions prospects should learn all they can about the nature of these tests.

ALMOST WITHOUT EXCEPTION, the guidance counselor writes a comment to the college about the candidate. Such recommendations are confidential, of course, but it helps the counselor to know something about the institution which the alumnus represents.

Mr. Davidson began his summary by saying that alumni can be of great help. There is nothing wrong with alumni contact, although alumni should be interested in all kinds of good candidates, not just athletes or other special groups. An alumnus should not expect each boy in whom he is interested to be admitted to his college. An alumnus cannot be aware of all the factors in each admissions case, and some of the information used in making decisions is highly confidential.

Mr. Davidson concluded with three simple rules for alumni who are working with prospective admissions candidates: (1) know your college and the schools in your area; (2) meet and get to know the guidance personnel in your local schools; and (3) help each good admissions candidate to visit the College, transporting him yourself whenever possible.
On October 1 James S. Coles completed ten years as President of the College. The anniversary was marked in several ways. On October 8 the Faculty took official note of the occasion in the form of a minute read by Professor Athern P. Daggett ’25. On October 13 the Bowdoin Fathers Association paid tribute to him at its annual meeting.

In Chapel on October 1 Assistant to the President Philip S. Wilder ’23 concluded his anniversary remarks with this statement: "Let us now, on this anniversary of his assumption of stewardship, pledge ourselves to carry on with him the work which he has been doing and will continue to do for the Bowdoin that is ours and that, so surely now, is his."

And so it is that the magnificent gift of more than $2,000,000 that President Coles announced on Alumni Day, October 20, might be considered an anniversary gift. The cover portrait shows something of the President’s state of mind as he told alumni and friends of the generosity of the anonymous donor, generosity unmatched down through Bowdoin’s long years of history.

Last June members of the Governing Boards of the College took note of the completion by President Coles of ten years of service at Bowdoin. In observance of the occasion, they passed the following resolution:

It was ten years ago that we, the Trustees and Overseers of Bowdoin College, invited James Stacy Coles to become President of the College. Our invitation was offered with high confidence that our expectations of him would be fulfilled. A full decade has now passed since his acceptance of the responsibilities and opportunities of the Bowdoin presidency. During the passage of those years, he has not only realized our highest hopes, but he has greatly exceeded them.

Therefore, by joint resolution, we the Trustees and the Overseers of Bowdoin College, individually, collectively, and unanimously do hereby declare to James Stacy Coles that we are very happy that he is the President of our College as he begins the second decade of his devoted and imaginative leadership.

Further, as a token and proof of our esteem and affection, we have on this day paid to the Treasurer of the College the sum of one thousand dollars — jointly and severally contributed by the Governing Boards — that he may qualify for the benefits of the Honorarium Praesidis in accordance with the terms of that benefaction.

$2 Million Gift Pushes Campaign Total To $3.5 Million

The momentum of the College's campaign for $10 million in capital funds, which has been steadily gaining since its inception in June, was increased by a tremendous booster shot on Alumni Day, Saturday, October 20.

On that day, at the annual Alumni Luncheon, President Coles electrified the audience in the Sargent Gymnasium and the whole campus when he announced the gift of more than $2 million from an alumnus who wishes to remain anonymous. The dramatic announcement of the gift, the largest single sum ever given to Bowdoin, was greeted by a thunderous burst of applause from the hundreds of alumni present.

The anonymous gift raised the total of campaign funds collected to $3.5 million, or more than a third of the final goal. The $2 million gift will be added to the endowment funds, with the income from it to be used for the general purposes of the College.

In an emotion-packed voice President Coles told alumni: "You can imagine how I felt this morning when I was told of the gift. I had to make sure I wasn't dreaming. This gift fills me with emotion. If I find it difficult to finish this announcement, I am sure you will understand."

Later the President said, "The magnitude and the thoughtfulness of this gift and the confidence which it expresses in the College and the course which Bowdoin has set for the future are an inspiration to the whole College — students, faculty, and officers of administration. I know this equally will be an inspiration to the Governing Boards and the alumni as each individual brings to the College his own support in the Capital Campaign on which we are working at this moment, and toward the over-all goals of the decade of the 1960's and the future of Bowdoin."

A month earlier more than 100 key leaders in the nationwide Capital Campaign braved a severe northeast storm that disrupted transportation to attend a three-day Leadership Conference on the campus from Thursday, September 27, to Saturday, September 29.

Attending the conference, in addition to campaign leaders from many states and their wives, were members of the National Committee, Bowdoin's Governing Boards, and officers of the College involved in the drive.

The campaign leaders, who are volunteer area chairmen and members of their executive committees representing 48 major areas where there are 30 or more Bowdoin alumni, registered for the sessions Thursday and that evening attended an informal program on "Research, the Arts, and Football at Bowdoin."

Professor James A. Storer, faculty member of the National Campaign Committee, was chairman of the evening program. Speakers were Professor James M. Moulton of the Biology Department, who discussed research activities at the College; Professor Philip C. Bean, Director of the Museum of Fine Arts, who spoke on the arts; and C. Nelson Corey '39, whose subject was the 1962 football season.

Working sessions on Friday made up a full schedule for the participants. The opening meeting was presided over by Charles A. Cary '10 of Wilmington, Del., National Chairman of the Campaign, who made the official welcome and said that he regarded the drive as "an opportunity and a challenge to provide outstanding educational opportunities at Bowdoin."

Vincent B. Welch '38 of Washington, D. C., Alumni Chairman for the Campaign, addressed the session on the topic "Why We Are Here," stating that eventually more than 1,000 alumni in all parts of the country will be working on the Campaign.

President Coles addressed the Conference Friday on "Bowdoin's Educational Objectives and the Capital Campaign."

He said the fund-raising effort will help support an educational program "which not only can make Bowdoin continue as one of the most distinguished small colleges in the nation but also can make Bowdoin the most distinguished one."

"At Bowdoin, in this new program," the President continued, "we have set forth the immediate needs in terms of the development of undergraduates as men — social needs, educational needs, physical needs, and human needs."

He declared that the College's fraternity system provides "an ideal way" of giving reassurance to undergraduates. Fraternities, he said, "help give the freshman the reassurance he needs at the time he needs it, help give him the feeling of being an integral part of the College."

Bowdoin's new Senior Center Program, he stated, will complement the work of fraternities by meeting the special needs of the senior.

Other Friday speakers included Sanford B. Cousins '20 of New York City, Vice Chairman of the Capital Campaign; Allen K. Holding, Campaign Manager, a member of the firm of Kersting, Brown & Co., the college's fund-raising counsel; and Thomas A. Pyle, also of Kersting, Brown & Co., Alumni Manager for the Campaign.

The Friday evening schedule included an after-dinner session denoted as "Bowdoin in My Time — As Viewed by an Alumnus, an Undergraduate, and a Member of the Faculty." M. W. Clark '65 was Chairman of the program, which included speeches by George T. Davidson, Jr. '38 of Conway, N. H., Guidance Director of Kennebunk High School there and a member of the Bowdoin Alumni Council; Wayne T. Adams '63 of Kennebunkport, President of the Student Council; and Professor Cecil T. Holmes, Chairman of the Mathematics Department.

The closing session on Saturday, at which Mr. Cary presided, was based on the theme "Campaign Objectives," and it featured five speakers.

President Coles, in a talk on "Endowment for Instruction and Student Aid," paid tribute to alumni who "made sacrifices" that deserving students might receive the financial assistance they need to attend Bowdoin.

He pointed out that the tuition charge has risen year by year until it now stands at $1,500. The total tuition cost to the College for each student comes to about $2,500, with the difference met from subsidies supplied by Bowdoin.

Such subsidies, the President said, are financed by alumni contributions in the various forms of scholarship aid, and "the help each boy gets emphasizes the sacrifices of the alumni."

Professor William B. Whitehead, Director of the Senior Center Program, discussed the pioneering educational venture.
He said the new program “will be beneficial for both faculty and students.” The program will be a shifting one with new topics introduced each year to “give freshness and flexibility” to the curriculum.

“We hope the excitement the program will generate in the senior year will penetrate downward to stimulate the undergraduate classes,” Professor Whiteside said.

The need for the new library was outlined by Richard Harwell, College Librarian. He said lack of space in Hubbard Hall has forced the Library to store 75,000 books in the basement, where “the temperature is bad for books, as well as for people,” and 25,000 volumes in the basement of the Chapel. The situation has also made it necessary to place books in the tower of Hubbard Hall, which means “a climb of seven stories, since there is no elevator.”

The proposed addition to the Sargent Gymnasium was discussed by Malcolm E. Morrell ’24, Director of Athletics, who declared that existing facilities are inadequate for present requirements.

“The whole concept of school athletics has changed,” he said. “The emphasis is now on physical fitness programs.” A physical fitness program, which would involve a large part of the student body, needs special facilities and exercise rooms which are lacking at the College.

Bowdoin participates in 16 intercollegiate sports, and there are thus 32 varsity and freshman squads. To the list of teams using the over-taxed Gymnasium facilities must be added those in intramural sports.

“This means,” Mr. Morrell emphasized, “that the Gym, the Pool, and the Cage are in use virtually all day, every day of the academic year.”

Plans to renovate Hubbard Hall and the four oldest dormitories and to increase the capacity of the Heating Plant were discussed by Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. ’50, Executive Secretary of the College and Director of the Capital Campaign.

After the session Conference participants enjoyed a lobster bake in the new Alumni House. In the afternoon they attended the Bowdoin-Tufts football game at Whittier Field.

A recent campaign development was the dividing of the Brunswick-Bath area into its component regions. New Chairman for the Bath Area is Dr. John M. Bachulus ’22 of that city. Paul K. Niven ’16 remains as Brunswick Area Chairman.

Bowdoin’s Educational Objectives and the Capital Campaign

By President James S. Coles — September 28, 1962

From the day it opened its doors, Bowdoin has had a program of liberal education at the undergraduate level. From time to time it has pursued other programs. After the Civil War there was an abortive attempt to provide engineering education, sorely needed by the nation at that time. Meeting the needs of the times, degrees of Doctor of Medicine for work in the Medical School of Maine were granted for 101 years, from 1821 until 1921. The basic emphasis of Bowdoin, however, has been on what we now call the liberal arts. That is the basic emphasis today.

That liberal education does have an essential role is demonstrated by the continued vigor and growth of the liberal arts college, with generous and thoughtful support from all parts of our society, the benefactor both large and small, the foundation, and the Government, local, state, and national. Today, as never before, we need men broadly gauged, men of determination and of purpose, men with the depth of knowledge and dedication that they be knowing masters of our several destinies. As a liberal arts college, Bowdoin offers its students wide cultural opportunities, trains them so that they may have the tools of communication and cooperation, sharpens their intellects, and whets their appetites for achievement.

Far from being a conglomeration of dilettante pursuits, liberal education today is basically essential to any further training. It offers the greatest hope for the mutually necessary and beneficial intertwining of the fine arts, the humanities, the social sciences, the physical and natural sciences, and mathematics. The world’s troubles and man’s ills cannot be solved by science alone, any more than they can be solved by philosophy or music or poetry by itself. Bowdoin’s objective, therefore, is to provide the best education possible in the humanities, the social sciences, and the sciences, to make this education a liberating experience, to inculcate in its students the fullest sense of dedication to and responsibility for their fellow men, and to send them out prepared and eager for their future work in the world.

Bowdoin has been doing this, you say—why not do more of the same? Look at our past. Look at the famous graduates we have had.

This is all true, and it is with pleasure that I look at Bowdoin’s past. But it must be with greater pleasure and with anticipation that we look toward Bowdoin’s future.

Much as we enjoy contemplating the past, we know that we cannot live upon it forever. And when we say we must do more in the future, this is in no way a criticism of the accomplishments of the past. Rather it is to insure that the future may be at least equally distinguished.

Remembering the past, where is Bowdoin today as we look into its future? Right now we have 806 undergraduate students. We have a first-rate faculty. The quality of the student body is high in terms of intelligence and preparation. Freshmen enter Bowdoin highly motivated and eager for growth. The collections of our Library are in many cases phenomenal for a college of this size. Our laboratory facilities are excellent. We have new or reconditioned classrooms sufficient for today’s needs. We have facilities for faculty better than we ever have had before. What more could we ask, one might wonder?

Several years ago the Governing Boards determined that Bowdoin must assume some small part of the responsibility to provide sorely needed places for young men wanting a Bowdoin education. We will do this by enlarging the College by 150 students.

Dr. Ross Wilson ’40 of Menlo Park, Calif., and Dr. Dan Callahan ’41 of River Forest, Ill., came a long way to attend the Leadership Conference.

But Bowdoin must do more than merely enlarge. It must grow in stature and in opportunity for its undergraduates. This also was the determination of the Governing Boards, for when the vote was taken to enlarge, it provided that the enlargement of the College should be accompanied by an enhancement of educational opportunity for each student as an individual.

Searching for the means by which this opportunity could best be enhanced, it was quickly apparent that there was little prospect for it in improving the already high quality of incoming students, in improving the already high quality of the Faculty, of books in the Library, or of our laboratories or instructional facilities. Gains in these areas would be in percentage points rather than in magnitudes. At the same time we saw students in college year after year who failed to realize the tremendous potential which we perceived when they were admitted. As we studied Bowdoin, it became obvious that our greatest gains could be made as we improved the total intellectual and social environment of the College. Improvement here would not be measured as a fraction, would not be several-fold, but could be orders of magnitude.

Recent decades have seen study by sociologists and social psychologists which has defined problems formerly intuitively felt by educators for many years. We have long been aware of the interaction of the student with the total college environment. He sits in the classroom no more than fifteen-odd hours each week. He is awake and reacting and learning more than one hundred hours a week. It is unrealistic to expect that the influence of what a man might absorb in fifteen per cent of his time could carry through the other eighty-five per cent of his time, if the second atmosphere were alien to the purposes of the first.

College experience to the students is not a conforming experience; and it is not a one-way experience. A student is not to be molded by college as though he were forced through the particularly shaped form, like an extruded rod, nor is he cut to that form the way one makes Christmas cookies with a cookie cutter. College experience is interaction — interaction of student characteristics with college characteristics, interaction of the experience of one student with that of others — and finally there grows out of this experience the man who goes out into the world. What the sociologists call "peer group cultures" has influence on the students at least equal to that of the faculty itself.

To influence the culture of a peer group, to redirect a culture which may be antithetical to the aims of a college so that it supports those aims, is difficult indeed. It cannot be done by faculty fiat; it cannot be done by a cajoling Dean or President. It is done by long and hard work.

Some colleges have attempted to do this by isolating, through as great an extent as possible, the incoming freshman class from the upperclassmen. At the time of the Self Study six years ago, this possibility was considered by the Bowdoin Faculty, and it was considered very seriously. Further study, however, indicated that there were many disadvantages in such isolation, which probably outweighed the possible advantages. As we read and learned and observed and studied, it also seemed apparent to us that if we were to do something special for any given class as a group, the needs and motivations of the senior were the ones which were most distinctly different from those of the other classes, and this distinction had been essentially unrecognized.

Bowdoin's educational objectives are well defined and have been constant through the years. The tools by which to achieve these objectives in terms of Faculty and books and classrooms and laboratories have been provided through the generous support of the College in years past. But all of these are for naught unless those objectives take in the individual student — not to the extent of 5 or 10 or 15%, but to the extent of 85 or 90 or 95%. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. It is our job to forge a chain which will bridge that deep chasm which civilization now faces and which, for the individual, connects from college to career; this is essentially to forge new and stronger links to replace those we know now to be our weakest ones. At Bowdoin in this new program we have set forth the immediate needs in terms of the development of undergraduates as men — social needs, educational needs, physical needs, and human needs. We have worked hard to do this. It would have been easier merely to go along with what we already had.

But to go along basking in past accomplishments, unchallenged by the future, is not Bowdoin's way. Our Faculty did not come to Bowdoin as monitors; our officers are not caretakers. The able men who are the Trustees and Overseers of the College would find little challenge or excitement as mere custodians. Bowdoin men, justly proud of their heritage and distinctive identification as graduates of a distinguished institution, would soon be impatient were they to see other colleges marching by to the head of the procession.

No, the Bowdoin way must be the forward way. We have before us now a program which can make Bowdoin not only one of the most distinguished small colleges of the nation, but which will make it the most distinguished one. We at the College are convinced of this: your conviction will make it possible.
Thirty Fascinating Years

By Assistant Treasurer Glenn R. McIntire '25

As I came across Bath Street the morning of October 24, 1932, to report for work as Acting Bursar of Bowdoin College, Mr. Johnson got off the trolley car. He was a colored gentleman who worked around the Gymnasium for many years. Generations of Bowdoin athletes found their aching backs and tired legs and arms eased by his strong, subtle hands. He greeted me as graciously as if he were the President of the institution and wished me well in my new job.

In Massachusetts Hall I was greeted by friends from undergraduate days: President Sills, Dean Nixon, Bill Hall, Phil Wilder, and Mrs. Hayes. Soon I was installed at a desk in the room now occupied by Dean Kendrick and began to find out all kinds of things about the business of the College.

One of my first tasks was to sign a pile of checks to pay for an extraordinary range of items. Near the top of the pile was a bill, duly approved by Professor Wass, for a new head for a drum. This was something unusual in my experience. A month later there was another bill for a drumhead. I suspected a duplication and questioned the bill. Nobody in the office was clear about it. I said, a little impatiently, I am afraid, "Look back to October 24. You will find that we paid for one that day." Thereby I acquired an entirely undeserved reputation for remembering every check I sign. I guess I have signed a half million in thirty years.

The President and the Dean were playing "Box and Cox" in the one office now devoted to the President, as they had done in my undergraduate days. Mrs. Hayes was managing the secretarial work with one additional secretary in the office. Besides myself, there were four others in the Business Office, not counting the Treasurer of the College, Philip Dana, who, like his successors, was a Trustee of the College and, like his successors, put in far more time on college business than would have been required by the nominal salary he received. The upper floors of the building were devoted primarily to the Cleveland Cabinet, embracing the original and valuable mineral collections of Parker Cleveland and a great range of other museum material which had wandered in. The Alumni Secretary and his secretary occupied a crowded office in the southeast corner. Dean Nixon had a little hideaway in the southwest corner with his Latin library and manuscripts. The center of the room was given over to large tables for meetings of the Faculty.

The first years were busy but relatively quiet ones. There were virtually no activities on the campus from Commencement Day to the opening of College in September. Indeed I used to dislike coming to work the morning after Commencement. There was an almost funereal atmosphere for a few days. Now there is barely time to sweep out the dormitories and get fresh linen on the beds in time for the Summer Institutes.

After a year or two I could have written out the weekly payroll from memory. There were no deductions of any sort. If a man's regular wage was $25 a week, he got a check for $25. If a secretary got $15 a week, she got a check for $15, and that settled it. The withholding tax and a dozen other things which vex the Payroll Department today had not been invented.

I was barely finding my way around when the banking holiday struck in the spring of 1933. Fortunately second semester term bills had largely been paid, and the cash was in one of the banks which reopened very shortly. The inconvenience to the Faculty and Staff was negligible, and the ability of the College to pay a great many miscellaneous accounts was of great service to the community.

By 1935 it was clear that the Dean was overworked. After considerable discussion it was decided that the appointment of a part-time Director of Admissions would be the best solution. Professor Edward S. Hammond was appointed. No office was available, so he and his part-time secretary encamped in an alcove lined with museum material on the second floor of Massachusetts Hall. It was also clear that activity in the Office of the President and the Dean had increased to the point where something had to be done to give them more room. The Boards decided to remodel Massachusetts Hall.

In the summer of 1936 the offices were moved to the Moulton Union immediately after Commencement. The entire interior of Massachusetts Hall was torn out and rebuilt substantially as it is known to most of us. The work was accomplished in time to move the offices back just before the College reopened in September. Another relatively quiet five years followed, with slight increases in enrollment and modest increases in endowment. Then, in the spring before Pearl Harbor, the College was invited to house the Radar School for the Navy. The first arrangement was only to rent a little laboratory space. Before the year was out, however, additional training programs began coming in until, at the high point, there were about 750 men in uniform on the campus. In 1943 the College leased all of the fraternity houses and opened and closed them as occasion required for about three years. Then came the G. I. rush, when the undergraduate body suddenly increased from the low point of 135 to about 1,100. The Naval Air Station was inactive at the time. The University of Maine and Bowdoin jointly leased it and operated it as overflow dormitories for Bowdoin and as a freshman college for the University. The arrangement worked out admirably, in spite of dire predictions of student riots. and all sorts of impossible situations. The College was still running on the trimester basis, which meant three entering classes and three Commencements each year with virtually year-round operation of all facilities.

Again in 1944 it was obvious that the Dean was carrying far too heavy a load. This time the solution was to appoint a full-time Placement Director. Samuel A. Ladd, Jr. was appointed to that position and began work on the third floor of Massachusetts Hall after the Dean’s Latin library was evicted.

The major transition came in 1952 with the retirement of President Sills and the election of President Coles. Activities of all sorts had increased greatly. It had been necessary to enlarge the staff and rearrange quarters. My own desk, after the 1936 remodeling, was in the front corner of the building for nearly twenty years.

Obviously there was need for more room for the cashiers, a second Assistant Bursar, and larger quarters for Placement. New quarters for Placement were provided in what had been the Music Room in the Chapel, Bookkeeping was moved to the third floor, and I moved to the little cubicule on the north side of the building. In the rearrangements after the retirement of Bill Hall in 1959, I moved to the small but very pleasant office in the northwest corner of the building.

tittle things as well as big things have been fascinating. For years I judged the direction and force of the wind by the flag on Memorial Hall, and the surest weather sign I know is when the slate roof of Memorial Hall begins to change its shade of gray. The trolley line has vanished entirely, and Harpswell Street has been made a part of the campus.

Adams and Searles have been renovated, and the Pickard Theater has been built in Memorial Hall. Moore Hall, Sills Hall, Cleveland Hall, Gibson Hall, Coleman Hall, and the Arena have been built.

The old Bath Street School has been purchased from the Town. With a proper press agent this might have been the most famous schoolhouse in America. The College named it Rhodes Hall because three of its former pupils became Rhodes Scholars. The late Helen Varney, who taught in Brunswick schools for more than half a century, once said, “Of course: I knew all three of them. I spanked them all.”

Gerchell House, Johnson House, the Chase Barn Chamber, Han House, the Alumni House (still Crum House to many of us), the Oakes Center at Bar Harbor, Mitchell House, and Little House have been acquired and devoted to college purposes. The old Carpenter Shop has been rebuilt along with the new and enlarged quarters for Grounds and Buildings and R.O.T.C.

Weather Bureau statistics show that Brunswick enjoys far more sunshine in the course of a year than many other places. I think this has been true of the College over all the years, although there have been dark hours. The work of the College was disrupted for a few days in the spring of 1936 by the unprecedented flood on the Androscoggin. The combination of high water, ice, and pulp wood smashed the water mains under the “free” bridge, and the high water inundated the pumping plant. Truly there was “water, water everywhere but not a drop to drink!” President Sills was away, and the Dean called the College Physician, Dr. Henry L. Johnson, and me to a hazy conference. We saw no alternative to closing the College, urging the students to get home as soon as possible. Credit cards had not been invented, and one did not travel without cash. The Bursar’s Office loaned students a total of nearly $1,500 in 15 minutes without even time to take receipts. It was amazing how many men managed to get the morning train, with their shirt-tails literally flying.

In the meantime Professor Philip Meserve pointed out the possibility of reversing the usual procedure by having a fire truck pump from Mere Brook into the nearest fire hydrant and give the Town a minimum water supply. He improvised chlorinating machinery and with several students, including John F. Pressnell, whose sword is now presented each year to an outstanding R.O.T.C. student, fed the chlorinating device by hand for several days and nights.

The disastrous fires in this State in the fall of 1947 disrupted the work of the College for nearly a month. There was no direct danger to the College, but the entire population was nervous and students went out to fight the fires in many other places. One evening there was a call for 15 cot beds to go to Richmond, where several families had lost their homes. The head janitor, Mr. George Stimpson, and students who happened to be available had the beds ready in 15 minutes. It took higher authority about an hour to locate a truck to transport the beds to Richmond!

Over the years there have been all sorts and kinds of unrelated but memorable experiences. The morning of Pearl Harbor Day I climbed a mountain in West Virginia with the late George P. Hyde, son of President Hyde, then Treasurer of Smith, and several others. Just before lunch we sat down at the top of the mountain, looked down on the Greenbrier, and felt at peace with the world. That afternoon we scarcely believed our ears when the news of Pearl Harbor began coming over the radio.

Off and on for six years I did research in college and fraternity records for Willard L. King of Chicago while he was writing the biography of Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller. Mr. King, when he was speaking for the honorary degree recipients here in 1951, quoted me as saying, “New England people never throw away a piece of paper with writing on it. The only problem is to guess where they put it.”

When Massachusetts Hall was being remodeled, I salvaged a few of the truly hand-wrought nails from the rough flooring of the ground floor. The late William W. Thomas happened to come in while I had them on my desk. He looked them over carefully and showed me that they had been made by three different blacksmiths. He chided me for not having saved more of them even though I had ruined one hatchet and got no end of splinters in my fingers to get two dozen or so.

For a person who did not care for machinery, it is interesting to note that President Sills liked to dictate directly at the typewriter and in later years did it with increasing frequency. The morning before the mid-winter Commencement in 1952, Mrs. Hayes, who was quite ill with a bad cold, staggered over to the office and pulled out her typewriter. President Sills closed the sliding doors and dictated his Commencement address. He was so clear about what he wanted to say and she was so good at spelling and punctuation that she turned our virtually flawless copy.

In the summer of 1958 I had two interesting days as the official visitor from the College while the Bowdoin R.O.T.C. students were at Fort Devens. I am afraid I embarrassed the captain who was escorting me by insisting on carrying my own tray at the mess. I wanted to see what other people were eating, and especially what went into the garbage pails at the end of the meals.

Philip Dana retired as Treasurer in 1949 and was succeeded by Roland E. Clark, who served until his death in 1958. When Mr. Clark had made an extraordinary recovery from a very bad heart attack and was intent on college business even beyond his strength and his doctor’s wishes, I was delegated to accompany him to a meeting of the Finance Committee in Boston. Arrangements were made for us to stay at the Union Club. It was a quiet period, and I was not aware of anybody else in the building that night. I was greatly worried for fear I might not hear Mr. Clark in the night if he were in distress. The next morning we had the dining room to ourselves except for one very proper Bostonian who took care not to disturb strangers. I felt as if I were in a chapter from Marquand.

At the winter meeting of the Boards in 1959 the vacancy in the office of Treasurer was filled by the election of Charles W. Allen, a lawyer in active practice and, like Mr. Clark, a resident of Portland. For a long time it has been widely known that the Boards have shown rare judgment in electing Presidents. It should be noted that they have done equally well in selecting Treasurers.

When Sills Hall was about to be dedicated, there were all kinds of frustrating delays in the designing and casting of the bronze tablet which is on the wall near the entrance to Smith Auditorium. For a few days it seemed to be virtually impossible to get it there in time for the dedication. An anonymous admirer of President Sills somewhere far from Brunswick interrupted a telephone conversation with one of the trucking companies to ask if we could have our own truck at the Verney Mill on 15 minutes notice. I assured him that we could. Whereupon he said, "The plaque will be in the back end of a load of rayon, and you can take it right off the tailgate." He declined to give me his name, scarcely listened to my hurried thanks, and hung up. The next morning a truck driver telephoned from Freeport that he would be at the Verney Mill in 20 minutes, and within an hour, thanks to careful preparations by Tony Curcio, the plaque was in its place on the wall.

Over the years I have seen a great deal of the Bowdoin Plan students and other students from abroad. I think during one year we heard ten languages spoken in our home. My wife was fairly successful in tutoring a student from Finland, who spoke almost no English when he arrived, with the assistance of a student from Denmark who spoke Swedish!

The father of a Chinese student wrote carefully that he was sending a draft for $250,000,000 (Chinese) and added that if exchange did not worsen while it was on the way it should yield $250 (United States). It did!

When I was told that I would handle all the money and supervise the expenditures for a student from Ethiopia, including clothing, appropriate spending money, and vacation travel and expenses, I was a little perturbed. He proved to have an adequate command of our language, innate courtesy, and much common sense. The Ethiopian Government forwarded money from time to time as I requested, and for the next three years my relations with Addis Ababa and with the student were most interesting and agreeable.

ONCE AGAIN MASSACHUSETTS HALL HAS BECOME CROWDED to the point where somebody has to move out, and the Business Office is moving to the residence on College Street so long occupied by Professor Noel Little and his family. As I dictate late in the evening of August 14, 1962, everything is being packed to start moving at 7:00 tomorrow morning.

There will be some regrets at leaving Massachusetts Hall. It will no longer be possible to drop down to the President's office in thirty seconds. It will take at least five minutes to drop over from College Street. I shall mind not being next door to Phil Wilder. Of all the people who greeted me that Monday morning thirty years ago he is the only one still working in Massachusetts Hall. So many times he has helped me solve a problem, or asked the question that stimulated my thinking, or given me sound advice.

I look back to a fascinating period in my own experience and in the development of the College and of the community. Then I look forward to beginning, or to continuing, perhaps I should say, in a little different setting. Probably it will be a temporary location for the office. I go from crowded quarters to an office larger than I need.

I shall carry with me a little sander which my predecessors did not discard when it became useless with the invention of blotting paper. It is an interesting little gadget and reminds me that blotting paper became useless with the perfection of fast drying inks and ballpoint pens. I shall keep Rowlett's Tables of Discount, or Interest (Fourth Edition, 1853) for use when the calculating machine isn't in order. I shall use Marshall Perley Cram's rolltop desk. I shall use the flat top desk which office tradition says "Old Sam Furbish" bought for $17 from the Texas Company Shipyard at a liquidation sale in 1920. (One alumnus who knew him very well says he would not have paid as much as $17!) But on it will stand a thoroughly modern adding machine, a calculating machine, and a telephone with a nice little device which permits the President to call me from the other end of the campus by dialing 27. (People within Little House have a slight advantage over the President. They merely dial zero.)

I hope that the Business Office, with the necessary clutter of typewriters and adding machines, may somehow preserve the atmosphere of Little House. It has been occupied by faculty families since it was built in 1824. An atmosphere of gracious hospitality has pervaded it "since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." I hope we can be gracious while we are being businesslike.

I look forward to the building program of the College and hope that I shall again see all the administrative offices housed in one building as they were 50 years ago. Many old and dear friends have marched along in the inevitable procession. New and dear friends have taken their places. Only two members of the present active Faculty were teaching in my own undergraduate days — Noel Little and Edward Hammond. I did not happen to have courses with either of them. I do not know how many members of the Governing Boards I have known and admired. I know that only one member of the present Board of Overseers was serving when I was an undergraduate. Only four members of the Board of Overseers and no Trustee survive from those who were active when I returned to the College in 1932. I mention a few only as examples of the diversity of their talents and interests.

Perhaps the most picturesque among them was Governor William T. Cobb. His home was in Rockland, but he had much business in Portland and by the train schedules of those days he found it convenient to stop frequently in Brunswick for a couple of hours. He was slightly lame, but he would nevertheless walk up to the College and visit with anybody who was available. He used to sit with his feet on my desk, his hard hat on his head, and ask penetrating questions about all phases of Bowdoin business. When his hat got so far back on his head that it would certainly fall off if he touched it once more, I knew that he would leave within five minutes. His reports as Chairman of the Visiting Committee were always most felicitously phrased. By current standards they are surprisingly lacking in factual information and statistical material. Even so, the Boards seem to have made some wise decisions in those days.

Henry Hill Pierce seemed to me to have the nicest mind I ever met. No matter how complex the business and involved the discussions, he always seemed able to ask the one question which ought to be answered before a decision was made.

Walter V. Wentworth once remarked that one of his grandsons was having a little trouble with Latin, so he was having him come to his office after school for tutoring. Somebody said, "Why, Walter, you have been out of college for more than 50 years!" Mr. Wentworth replied, "Yes, but the Latin hasn't changed much." When he was in his late 80's, Mr. Wentworth used to go through the college buildings from cellar to attic at a pace which left younger men breathless.

If a discussion ever got tense or awkward, Ripley Lyman
Dana had a rare capacity for telling an amusing story which relieved the tension but nevertheless gave some point for the resumption of the business rather than interrupting it. It is too bad that his stories about ships and shipping could not have had a wider audience.

Nor do I know how many faculty members I have known, but it has been a rich and rewarding experience. How does one measure having known a poet and a teacher like Robert P. T. Coffin or a Biblical scholar like Henry Lightfoot, who, incidentally, confounded the income tax authorities of two countries by working out a salary schedule to be paid in arrears, so that he divided his income neatly between two tax years in this country and two in Great Britain? Or Professor Yung-Ching Yang, President of Suchow University, who had an amazing command of American idiom. Or Professor Herbert John Fleure, who came from England in 1944 when everything was so hush-hush that he could not tell us in advance when or how he would arrive. The President's Office received a telegram at five o'clock one afternoon sans origin — "Arriving Brunswick 5:08 A.M. — Fleure." Mrs. Hayes and I finally figured out that this meant the "milk train" and that he must be coming from Halifax. Professor Fleure had already retired from the University of Manchester, but he and his wife, a delightful little lady, stepped off the train a little after five that morning, after sitting up all night because no sleepers were available, as fresh and composed and well groomed as if they were ready to go to an afternoon tea.

One of my happiest memories is of Professor Burnett in Chapel, reading in his beautiful voice from the Old Testament. In spite of a full teaching schedule and a great amount of work for the College and the community, he always contrived to maintain an atmosphere of leisure. One felt entirely free to drop in at his office in Banister Hall in the afternoon to talk about anything.

And Buck Moody, Wilmot Brookings Mitchell, C. C. Hutchins, and — and where does one stop?

AND NOW THAT I HAVE MEANDERED BACK over the last thirty years I should do an about-face and look to the future. What of the next thirty years? All sorts of things are before us: the Senior Center Program, in my opinion the most promising development since the inauguration of the major examination; the new Library and other building projects; the revision of the curriculum to accommodate the fantastic increase in all fields of knowledge. I believe that firm foundations have been laid. Probably I shall be retired before 1992, but it is difficult to think much about it with so much unfinished business on my desk — and with so many fascinating things already in view!

Mr. McIntire at his Marshall Perley Cram rolltop desk in Little House.

On The Campus

The fall just past was a frustrating one for Bowdoin's three varsity teams. Football, soccer, and cross country squads compiled a combined record of four wins, two ties, and thirteen losses. The soccer team had the best record, 3-1-4, and tied Colby for the Maine Intercollegiate Athletic Association soccer crown in the first year the MIAA has recognized a state champion in the sport. The football team, with one win in seven games, tied for second in the State Series behind Maine. The cross country team, with a 0-1-3 record, placed fourth out of six in the EICAA (New England small college) run.

Coach Charlie Burt's soccer team beat Bates twice and Boston University, lost to Wesleyan, Springfield, Lowell Tech, and Colby, and tied Colby in the final game to gain the State Series tie. Sophomore Bill Barthelman was the top scorer with six goals. Seniors George Smith and Larry Miller tallied three times each. Senior co-captains Pete Best and Frank Nicolai, along with juniors Bill Horton and Geoffrey Chapman, were outstanding on defense. Eight men graduated last June, but many underclassmen, among them juniors Steve Codner and Fred Copeland and sophomores John Doig, Jim Rosenfeld, Gerry Giesler, Hugh Hardcastle, and Steve Siegel, the goalie,

A $10,445 grant to support continued research on a project entitled "Parathyroids and Bone Metabolism" has been awarded to Bowdoin by the National Institutes of Health. The project, which is concerned with research on the effects of parathyroid hormones on bone structure, is under the direction of Professor Robert Toft of the Biology Department. Parathyroids are small glands near or embedded in the thyroid gland.

Results of Professor Toft's studies, which he began in 1960, are useful to medical scientists working on diseases of the bones such as arthritis. This past year he developed a new and very economical apparatus which he calls the "Calcine Fluorospectrometer," used for the analysis of calcium in various biological fluids as well as in bone.

In September Bowdoin received an unrestricted grant of $1,800 from Eastman Kodak as one of 58 privately supported colleges and universities awarded direct grants under the company's educational aid program for 1962.

Eastman Kodak has contributed a total of $5,600 to Bowdoin since 1956. The 1962 grant was made in recognition of the services of Theodore D. Robbins, Jr., '53 of Rochester, N. Y.

The Masque and Gown is in the midst of a full season of productions. A performance of "The Bald Soprano" by Eugene Ionesco was part of an "open house" held at the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall on September 27, just after classes started. This was followed by a performance on October 12 by the American Mime Theater, by Peter Shaffer's "Five Finger Exercise" on November 10 and 12, and by Jean Francois Regnard's "Le Legataire Universel," presented in French by the Theatre Universitaire Canadien on November 15.

Scheduled for future production are the Winter Houseparty play, Jean Anouilh's "Thieves' Carnival" on February 16 and 18, a Dartmouth College presentation of "The Threepenny Opera" by Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill on February 23, the student-written one-act play contest on March 15, "Rashomon" by Fay and Michael Kanin on May 15 and 18, and the Commencement play, John Webster's "The Duchess of Malfi."

In the absence this year of Professor George H. Quinby '23, Daniel G. Calder '60 is serving as Acting Director of Dramatics.

Ray S. Bicknell is the new coach of basketball at Bowdoin, replacing Bob Donham, who resigned in September to enter the field of investments. The appointment was effective November 1, when the basketball squad started its practice sessions.

Mr. Bicknell, a former Springfield College basketball star, who has been coaching basketball, soccer, and track at Cape Elizabeth High School, is also teaching physical education classes and will coach either varsity and freshman tennis or freshman lacrosse. He had for several years been a Bowdoin football scout.

During 1955-56 he was employed by the Basketball Federation of the Egyptian Olympic Committee as coach to prepare Egypt's national team for the 1956 Olympics. In addition, he conducted basketball clinics and coached schools throughout that country. A veteran of Army service as a first lieutenant in the South Pacific in World War II, he was graduated from Springfield in 1947 and received a master of science degree there in 1951. Before joining the faculty at Cape Elizabeth High School, he taught at Portland Junior College and Deering High School.

Bob Donham, who had been at Bowdoin, was the leading ground gainer for Coach Nels Corey '39. Sophomore quarterback Bob Harrington, the leading passer, tossed for two touchdowns. Junior signal caller Dick Ball passed for nearly as much yardage and one score. Jack Milo '63 had the team's leading yards-per-carry average. Juniors Bill Farley and Fred Harlow were both outstanding in several games at halfback. End Frank Drigotas '64 was the top pass receiver, with eleven catches, including two touchdown passes. Al Ryan '64 caught seven passes. Drigotas was the leading scorer with 12 points, and Milo scored 10, with a touchdown, a field goal, and one conversion. There were eight seniors on the team, but a better than average freshman team, which compiled a 3-1-1 record, including a 14-all tie with Maine, could supply the numbers missing from the 1962 varsity.

The cross country team lost to Amherst, Bates, and Vermont and tied Williams. Nonetheless, Coach Frank S. Babcock '41 considered it the best team he has yet coached. In the meet against Vermont, lost by one point, 27-28, Captain Chuck Shea '63 smashed the Bowdoin home course record at the Brunswick Golf Club which he set earlier in the year, and the next three White harriers, Bert Babcock '63, Jim McMichael '63, and Gary Brason '65, were also under the old standard. The other three runners, Charlie Kahill '65, Mitch Kalpakian '63, and Ken Gale '64, worked equally hard. The team had the same problem with numbers that the football team did. Several individuals from the freshman team, which posted a 4-2 record, should help next year.
doin for five years, has accepted a position as an account executive in the Seattle, Wash., office of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fennier, and Smith. His 1961-62 basketball squad finished second in the State Series, and his varsity tennis teams were state champions for the past three years.

Asher Moore, who is Donald C. Babcock Professor of Philosophy at the University of New Hampshire, is serving as Visiting Professor of Philosophy at Bowdoin during the fall semester and is teaching a course entitled "The Background of Contemporary Philosophy." A 1940 graduate of Wesleyan University, he received his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1948 and taught at Northwestern University, New York University, and Harvard before joining the New Hampshire faculty in February of 1961.

Harutune H. Mikaelian, a graduate of Boston College in 1958, is serving as Instructor in Psychology. He has studied at Aleppo College in Syria, Miami University in Ohio, and M.I.T. and has taught at Brandeis and M.I.T. He was also a junior clinical psychologist at the Attleboro (Mass.) Area Mental Health Clinic. During the past four years he has done research in visual perception and has conducted experimental investigations of problems of visual adaptation and visual-motor coordination. At Bowdoin he is teaching courses in abnormal and social psychology and assisting in the course in experimental psychology.

Dr. Daniel J. Sterling is Instructor in Mathematics this year. A 1953 graduate of St. Lawrence University, he received his master's degree from Columbia in 1955 and his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin last June. He has taught at the Barnard School for Boys in Riverdale, N. Y., C. W. Post College of Long Island University, Columbia, and Wisconsin. At Bowdoin he is teaching an advanced course in abstract algebra as well as assisting in elementary courses.

Orman E. Hines has been named Manager of the Moulton Union Food Service. For the past three years a chef-steward in the Union, he will work on a year-round basis under the general supervision of Donovan Lancaster '27, Director of the Union and the Centralized Dining Service. He was an assistant chef at Bowdoin from 1932 to 1941 and then for 18 years served as a cook and chef-steward in various hotels, hospitals, colleges, clubs, and lodges, including the Mid Pine Club in Southern Pines, N. C., and Sebaco Lodge.

More than 2,500 people attended the exhibition of the work of Leonard Baskin, famed American artist, in its first 10 days at the Museum of Art — a record in the Museum’s 70-year history.

The exhibition, containing 84 items, was the largest single showing of Baskin’s work ever held. It included sculptures, prints, drawings, and books. Mr. Baskin was the guest of honor at a private reception and dinner held on October 11 at the Alumni House. On October 28 he returned to the campus to discuss his work and answer questions from Associate Members of the Museum.

Works for the exhibition were loaned to the College from the collections of more than 50 individuals and institutions throughout the country, including the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York, Harvard University, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Kingsley of New York, Jay C. Leff of Uniontown, Pa., St. John’s Abbey in Collegeville, Minn., the Detroit Institute of Arts, and the Joseph H. Hirshhorn Collection (New York).

Marvin S. Sadik, Curator of the Museum, arranged the exhibition, which occupied two galleries in the Walker Art Building.

Fifty-one men were honored as James Bowdoin Scholars on October 12 at the James Bowdoin Day exercises, held in the Packard Theater in Memorial Hall. The main speaker was Professor John G. Kemeny, distinguished Dartmouth College mathematician, who was at one time chief assistant to the late Albert Einstein at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University. He spoke on the prospect of the social sciences being revolutionized by mathematics during the next 50 years.

Copies of the book Inward Sky by Hubert H. Hoescht, a new biography of Nathaniel Hawthorne of the Class of 1825, were presented to three men for maintaining "A" records throughout the 1961-62 academic year. They are Geoffrey Chapman '64 of Boston, Aurele Violette '63 of Augusta, and David Walker '64 of Wiscasset. Chapman also received the James Bowdoin Cup, given each year to the varsity letter winner with the highest scholastic average. He was a defensive left fullback on the 1961 soccer team.

The General Philothon Trophy for the best record at ROTC summer camp went to William P. Menz '63 of Newington, Conn.

Two Presidents were honored on October 13 at the annual meeting of the Bowdoin Fathers’ Association, held as part of Parents’ Weekend. The fathers gave President Coles a rising resolution of congratulations upon the tenth anniversary of his inauguration as President, and on behalf of the College Dr. Coles presented a Bowdoin Chair to President Robert D. Collins of Smoke Rise, Butler, N. J., under whose leadership the Fathers’ Association expanded its scholarship program.
More than 625 parents were present for Parents’ Weekend, which started with the James Bowdoin Day exercises on Friday, October 12. Parents also had an opportunity to see an American Mime Theater production Friday evening, to visit classes and tour the campus on Saturday, and to attend a special Chapel service, with Professor of Religion William D. Geoghegan as speaker.

Other activities included a luncheon for parents on Saturday, the Bowdoin-Amherst football game at Whittier Field, a post-game reception at the Moulton Union, and the annual meeting of the Fathers’ Association. Turner McDowell of Glens Falls, N. Y., was elected President for 1962-63, succeeding Mr. Collins.

The scholarly efforts of Professor Emeritus Thomas C. Van Cleve, a specialist in mediaeval history, have come to partial fruition in the publication of two sections on Crusades of the thirteenth century, which appear in the recently published second volume of the imposing History of the Crusades. The History, being published by the University of Pennsylvania Press, will eventually comprise a total of five volumes.

Professor Van Cleve, who at the time of his retirement in 1954 had served on the faculty for 39 years, has given Bowdoin’s Library “offprints” — pages printed from the same type as the book — bound in pamphlet form, of the two sections which he contributed. They bear the headings “The Fifth Crusade,” which began in 1217, and “The Crusade of Frederick II,” which began in 1227.

The list of authors in the two volumes reads like a Who’s Who of mediaeval scholars, many of whom are on the faculties of the foremost universities in this country, Europe, and the Near East. No effort was spared, said Professor Van Cleve, in making the History “as definitive as humanly possible.” The greatest emphasis was placed by the authors in going to original sources, the Arabic, the Armenian, and the Egyptian, as well as to the Latin and Greek chronicles of Europe and the East.

The first volume of the History covers what is termed the “classical period” of the Crusades, from the eleventh century, the great surge of Christian knights and pilgrims toward Byzantium and the establishment of their colonies in the Near East, to the counter-offensive of Zengi, Nur-ad-Din, and Saladin.

The second volume presents the history of the Crusades from the resumption of the Frankish assault, led by Richard the Lionhearted and Philip Augustus, to the expulsion of the crusaders from Acre in 1291 and from Athens in 1311.

The inspiration for the comprehensive History is credited to the late Dana C. Munro, whose seminars in the early

Stanley Fuller Dole 1890-1962

Stanley F. Dole ’13, an Overseer of the College since 1951, died at his summer home in Alden, Michigan, on October 4, 1962, following a career that was distinguished by his service to business, education, the church, his country, and many civic and charitable organizations.

In Bowdoin affairs Mr. Dole served in almost every possible way. He was President of the Bowdoin Club of Detroit from 1939 to 1942 and again from 1944 to 1947. He was a Director of the Alumni Fund from 1944 to 1947, when he was elected a Member-at-Large of the Alumni Council. In 1949-50 he served as President of the Alumni Council and the Alumni Association, and following the completion of his Council term in 1951 he was elected to the Board of Overseers. At the time of his death he was a member of the Governing Boards’ Committee on Educational Policy. During the past several years he had served as Chairman of the Class of 1913’s 50th Reunion Fund Committee and was looking forward to breaking the record gift of $51,391, set by the Class of 1910 in 1960.

As an undergraduate he was Class Historian, served on the Ivy Day Committee, played end for two years on the varsity football team, was Chairman of the Interscholastic Debating League, and was a member of the Monday Night Club and the Masque and Gown. In addition, he was a member of the varsity baseball team and was captain of the 1913 track team during his freshman year.

Eager to give Bowdoin every possible ounce of energy, Mr. Dole worked long hours for the College for more than half a century, from the time that he entered as a freshman, after preparing at Portland High School and North Yarmouth Academy. During his thirty-four years with the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, which he served as Treasurer of the Central Western Division until 1955, he returned to the campus at every opportunity.

Stanley Dole will always be remembered by the hundreds of Bowdoin men whom he came to know from his freshman days as a “Portland boy” to his eleven years as an Overseer of the College. We are grateful for his devotion and his contribution toward building a better Bowdoin. (See p. 32.)
years of the century at the Universities of Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Princeton fired the imagination of his students. Among them at Wisconsin, where he was taking graduate work, was Professor Van Cleve. It was in 1935 that a group of Professor Munro's students first planned to form the nucleus of scholars who eventually began the cooperative undertaking. Most active in this group was the late Professor John L. La Monte, whose untimely death after nearly completing the roster of participating scholars occasioned a long delay in the accomplishment of the work.

Professor Van Cleve, who first came to Bowdoin as an Instructor in History in 1915, a Fellow of the Historical Society, was appointed Frank Munro Professor of History in 1925 and subsequently became Professor of History and Political Science. His chief research has concerned the German Empire of the 12th and 13th centuries. His present contribution to the History of the Crusade, as well as his "Markward of Anweiler and the Sicilian Regency," a study of the Papal-Imperial conflict for the control of Sicily during the minority of Frederick II, are preliminary to his larger work Frederick II and His Circle, now completed and awaiting publication.

He is a member of the Mediaeval Academy of America and a regular contributor to Speculum, the scholarly periodical of that organization. He is also a member of the American Historical Association, a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, London, and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Bowdoin, Bates, and Colby are offering advanced standing to high school or preparatory school students who successfully complete one or both of the college-level television courses being offered by WCBB this fall and winter. In taking this step, they join more than 260 other colleges and universities in the country which give academic recognition in one form or another to students who complete these nationally-taught educational television courses.

Any high school student who takes an ETV course and later is admitted to Bowdoin will be given an examination in that subject. If he passes the examination satisfactorily, he may at once go on to more advanced courses in that field.

WCBB is offering these two courses this year: "The Structure and Functions of American Government," presented from 4:30 to 5:00 Monday through Friday, and "The American Economy," given from 5:00 to 5:30 Monday through Friday. Each course consists of five half-hour lessons per week for 32 weeks.

Dr. Peter H. Odegard, Professor of Political Science at the University of California, is teaching the government course, and Dr. John R. Coleman, Chairman of the Department of Economics at the Carnegie Institute of Technology, is giving the economics course.

During the period from June 23 to August 3 forty-three Bowdoin students successfully completed the Army ROTC Summer Camp at Fort Devens, Mass., with several of the men winning individual honors. Sam Ladd '63, for example, took the camp tennis championship, and George Smith '63 won the 100 yard dash in the Field Day activity.

Bowdoin also achieved the highest average score of all the institutions at Devens in rifle marksmanship and received a handsome trophy.

The performance of the group was most gratifying to the ROTC staff at Bowdoin, especially the knowledge that the average score of the 1962 class was not only higher than that of the 1961 class but also the highest achieved to date.

Bowdoin's Brass Ensemble and its "tower music" received mention in the November, 1961, issue of Reader's Digest in an article entitled "They Get in There and Play," which was reprinted from the P.T.A. Magazine.

"Amateur musicians sometimes find extraordinary ways to indulge their love of playing," according to the article. "At Bowdoin College a group of students formed a 'brass ensemble' to revive 17th-century German 'tower music.' This is music composed for brass instruments. It was played from the towers of old castles and churches. For almost 300 years these compositions faded out of musical repertoires. Then 20th-century trumpets began to blare the old melodies from the towers and roof tops of Bowdoin College. 'Those of us on campus were a captive audience,' one student said to me, 'but we seemed to get as much fun out of listening as the trumpeters got out of playing.'"

Bowdoin debaters opened their 1962-63 season by taking top honors in the debate and extemporaneous speaking divisions of a nine-college tournament at Middlebury College in October. The team won eight of its ten debates, defeating Siena, St. Michael's, Williams, the University of New Hampshire, Middlebury, and Amherst. Mark Goldberg '63 of Auburn, President of the Debate Council, was judged the best of the 18 affirmative speakers in the tournament, and Philip Swan '64 was third best of the 18 negative speakers.

Goldberg also won first prize in the extemporaneous speaking competition, and Robert Parquish '64 of Garden City, N. Y., took second place. Middlebury finished second in the tournament, and the University of Vermont was third.

On October 1 Professor Herbert R. Brown presented to President Colles the manuscript of Sills of Bowdoin, a biography of the late Kenneth C. M. Sills '01, Bowdoin's President for 34 years. The date marked the 10th anniversary of the retirement of President Sills and the beginning of President Colles' administration.

The biography was a six-year "labor of love" for Professor Brown, who was commissioned to write it by the Sills Memorial Volume Committee of the Governing Boards. Divided into 15 chapters, Sills of Bowdoin is a full-length, fully illustrated work, "the story of an old-fashioned college administrator, a representative of a vanishing type of scholar-president largely replaced today by administrator-presidents."

William H. Lynch '65 of Forestdale, R. I., is the 1962 winner of the Orren Chalmer Hornell Cup, given each year by the Bowdoin chapter of Sigma Nu fraternity to a member of the previous year's freshman class who has combined outstanding achievement in academic work with participation in competitive athletics.

Lynch, who is a member of Sigma Nu, led the freshman class with a 91.67 academic average and won his numerals in swimming. He plans to major in physics, in which he won the Edwin Herbert Hal Prize last year as the best freshman scholar.

The Bowdoin Bachelors, an augmented double quartet organized last year by undergraduates, has released its first record, an LP album containing sixteen of its most popular numbers. Included are "Artificial Flowers," "Maria," "Soon It's Gonna Rain," "Does Your Chewing Gum Lose Its Flavor?" "Somewhere Over the Rainbow," and "Blue Skies."

The record is on sale at the Moulton Union Bookstore for $3.98.
Present and former members of the Meddiebempsters held their fifth reunion in Brunswick on the evening of Alumni Day, October 20, at the Stowe House, with a 6:30 social hour followed by dinner at 7:30.

The guest of honor at the reunion was Professor Frederic E. T. Tillotson '46, Chairman of the Music Department.

The first two concerts of the year featured the Music Club on October 17 and Miss Yunnala Pappas on October 8. Miss Pappas, a mezzo-soprano from Greece, has a voice range from G below Middle C to high C. Included in her Bowdoin concert were arias by Mozart, Rossini, and Saint-Saens, and she also sang a variety of Greek folk songs.

In its first student recital of the season on October 17 the Music Club presented a chamber music concert which included works for both brass and woodwind groups. A five-member brass ensemble played music originally performed by German town musicians at dusk when they gathered in the towers of buildings and played works written by many of the foremost composers of the early 17th century.

This picture was taken on Alumni Day, October 20, in the yard of the Alumni House at 83 Federal Street. It shows, from left to right, Alumni Secretary Peter C. Barnard '50, 1937 Class Agent and Reunion Chairman William R. Owen '37, Alumni Fund Chairman Willard B. Arnold, III '51, Assistant Superintendent of Grounds and Buildings Andre R. Warren, Alumni Fund Secretary Robert M. Cross '45, and Alumni Council Member Winthrop B. Walker '36. Almost completely hidden behind Mr. Warren is Alumni Fund Director J. Philip Smith '29. Mr. Warren is sitting in a special Bowdoin Chair which he had just received in recognition of his work on the Alumni House renovation.

Books With A Bowdoin Flavor

"With the utmost candour," states the jacket blurb for this book, "the author of the famous Gutman Market Letter tells what combination of logic, intuition, and experience is needed to make money in the market and offers the sum total of these three to help the reader do the same." What is fascinating about the book is that it remains fascinating without offering any help whatever to anyone looking for clues to market riches! Oh, yes, the reader is urged to buy when prices are low and to sell out when prices are high—and not to be too greedy in taking the second step—and this, of course, is fine advice. Or is it just a definition of a market proposition?

It's a good idea, too, Mr. Gutman advises, to suppress one's own intuitions. "To understand the market," we are told, "you should try to be as near as you can to what Freud said a psychoanalyst should be—a blank sheet of paper. You want to be written on by the market so you can read what the market says." Please, Mr. Gutman, how does one read this writing?

The closest this book comes to a generalized statement, a rule, concerning the behavior of stock prices on the basis of which the harassed reader might conceivably plan a profitable market strategy, is a reference to the usefulness of Keynesian economic analysis. Let Mr. Gutman tell about it in his own inimitable way: "I had a stroke of luck in 1933 when I read an article on Keynesian economics in an avant-garde periodical. I am not by nature studious; I am just bright. If I were studious as well as bright, I would have been a great scholar long ago, but whenever I tried, the tedium of scholarship either wore me out or confused me. So I had to find a niche where bright perception paid and scholarship was not needed. This was in Wall Street. At any rate, the article on Keynesian economics pointed out you have to have an unbalanced national budget (meaning the aggregate of all governmental, business, and personal budgets) in order to have prosperity." This, with question, perceptive, and Gutman goes on to draw the conclusion that prosperity is characterized by increasing debts of all sorts. But do we have here an operational market rule? Buy stocks when debts are increasing and sell when the debt expansion taps off? Unhappily, no. This works only when the market is acting logically, which it doesn't always do. So, poor reader, look elsewhere for help in getting rich even once. Or you might like to become the writer of a successful market letter, an occupation which will net you a nice salary and bring you close to the sources of "inside information."

This brings the reviewer back to his initial assessment. How can this book about the stock market, which says precisely nothing "useful" about the stock market, be so fascinating? Because Walter K. Gutman is an interesting, provoking person who writes sparkling offbeat prose about interesting and provocative subjects. Gutman began his career as a writer and art critic, and though he moved into Wall Street in the early thirties in order, initially, to recoup his family's fortunes, his artistic and creative instincts have remained alive. Gutman on Freud and women? Yes, of course. Read Chapter Five on "Sexual Forces in Economic Actions." Or try "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde in Economics" (Chapter Four) on business-type in this country. Or, should you prefer to discover the psychological counter-part to the physicists' concept of "anti-matter," dip into Chapter Two on "The Exuberant Force of Non-Reason." Now, please remember, you aren't going to find out anything about stock market movements, but you will, I believe, enjoy those brief excursions into the private world of Walter K. Gutman!

PAUL G. DARLING

The Sacco-Vanzetti case had always seemed a "dead" controversy of another generation. Yet a reading of Francis Russell's Tragedy in Dedham coincident with the retirement from the U. S. Supreme Court of Justice Felix Frankfurter, who, as a young Harvard Law School professor, played such an influential role in the later stages of the case, has brought the realization that the famous litigation has much to teach us since many of the problems and issues involved in it are very much with us today. Once again our... courts must apply their processes to cases involving political doctrines generally regarded as "alien" when those cases arouse strong emotions both within and outside the courts.

What this reviewer knew of the Sacco-Vanzetti case before reading Takuwa's book was based simply on general hearsay; it is the only book about the case he has read. In favor of Russell's book, it may be said that the general writing style is lively and imaginative; emotions and reactions almost certainly not subject to verification are attributed to participants and the author to the best historical novelists. This smoothness of style is no surprise in view of Russell's background as a writer and a historian. His work has been carefully and exhaustively researched, and he has endeavored to present all, rather than each particular stage of the development of the case. However, the shortcomings of the book outweigh its merits.

Mechanically or stylistically, the flashback technique, particularly at the beginning of the book, makes the obtaining of a firm grasp on the basic foundations of the case rather difficult. In addition, throughout the book, too many details and too many names are thrust upon the reader in too short a space. In order to avoid confusion, the book has to be "studied," as if one were actually participating in the legal presentation of the case, rather than simply reading. This problem is somewhat helped by the chronology but would have been materially aided by the inclusion of a detailed table of dramatis personas, their identifications and inter-relations. Although the general bibliography was quite adequate, footnote references would also have helped, especially with regard to information drawn from direct interviews.

The real difficulties with the book, however, are substantive. Despite Russell's attempt to present all sides of each issue, his writing is not really prejudiced. The use of "colored" words and "labels" makes his sympathies quite clear. A few examples will suffice. On page 262, Judge Webster Thayer's voice is described in response to argument as being "impervious," and he is visualized as having "brushed aside an objection." On page 245, the announcement of a ruling of law at a hearing is described as being made in "pettish protest," and, perhaps most indicative, at page 352, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts is described in the following terms: "In the thin winter light of the nusty echoing corridor, the full faces of the five judges looked like Copley portraits of a century and a half earlier . . . New England names, bloodless New England features . . . as chill as the city streets outside." From these and many other passages one can only draw the conclusion that Russell views the law, the courts, and the lawyers as insensitive to the human aspects of the case. In fact, this is the book's greatest difficulty. The basic subject matter is a court litigation. Yet almost no attention is given to the legal aspects of the case; rather the case could have been presented as an exercise in people, emotions, and the extra-legal aspects of the entire proceeding.

This reviewer would weigh the book and its "conclusion" from the point of view of the two basic questions considered by Governor Fuller and the Lowell Committee. Were Sacco and Vanzetti guilty? Did they receive a fair trial? In answer to the first question, from what appears in the book, it seems that a verdict of guilty could be justified on the evidence presented in the trial in the light of the facts. Russell described the jury in the finding of guilt only if it is convinced of that guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. In this connection, the most valuable material in the book is the all too brief series of statements by John Devor, one of the jurors. Surely a better case for the defendant's innocence would be presented by the juror. In fact, one of the most striking omissions was one cited by Russell himself (page 148)—when Moore, the trial defense counsel, failed to make adequate cross examination of Lola Andrews, the only witness who actually spoke to one of the men in the Buick touring car. She claimed that she had asked directions of a man who spoke English readily and identified that man as Sacco. Yet simple cross examination would have established that his command of English was so slight that he would not have been able to converse in English as the witness reported. One must not forget that under our system of jury trials the only evidence which the jury considers is that placed before it. The failings of counsel cannot be described as the failings of the legal system itself.

Did the accused receive a fair trial? Russell seems to feel not, primarily based upon Judge Thayer's series of extra-judicial remarks which indicated that he was prejudiced against the accused either because of their foreign extraction or because of their political beliefs. What Russell overlooks is that the innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti as established by the jury was very carefully insulated from the receipt of any information from outside the court. Therefore, even though Thayer's remarks might well have been grounds to question his general suitability as a judge, the remarks were presumably never made known to the jury. In addition, several hundred exceptions were taken on appeal by the defense counsel and were all rejected. In fact, one of the primary weaknesses in Russell's book is that there is no indication as to what these objections were or the reasons for their being overruled. Insufficient notice appears in the book relating to the legal aspects of the trial—for example, Judge Thayer's charge to the jury—there is no indication that legal errors were committed. In fact, what seems to have determined the outcome of the case as a whole was factors for which the defense itself was largely responsible: the initial selection of an "outside" defense counsel, whose very mannerisms were almost calculated to offend the trial court; the introduction by the defense itself of the issue of anarchism or political belief; and the acceptance of the support of the Communists for political and propaganda purposes, clearly of influence in the stages of the case following the trial. The fact that two judges of the U.S. Supreme Court of the stature of Stone and Holmes refused to intervene, the latter repeatedly, belies Russell's conclusion.

The facts of the Sacco-Vanzetti case which trouble the author, although he does not express so state, are really certain aspects of our basic system of criminal trials. Can juries be unbiased? Is there a preferable alternative to the jury system? Would a single judge sitting by himself as trier of facts as well as law, as is common in civil law countries, have reached a "fairer" result? What if that single judge had been Judge Thayer? Was District Attorney Katzenmeyer's cross examination of Vanzetti adequate or did he manage to persuade Mexico to avoid war service during World War I, fair? Stated differently, can we improve upon our system of trial in which each lawyer attempts to bring out the facts most favorable to his side on the assumption that the truth will thus most likely be uncovered? Would examination only by the judge, as in most civil law countries, have been preferable? Does the success of our system depend upon the selection of competent counsel on both sides? How can we insure competent counsel for indigent and unpopular defendants?

The answers to these problems are not to be found in an emotional negativism concerning the law and its institutions, but rather in an attempt to find more rational solutions. Here lies the book's real value. The clarity is elevating. Even today could accomplish nothing. To learn from the experience, to make certain that if they were not guilty the mistakes in their case shall not be repeated, is important. The organized bar has done, and is doing more in this direction than laymen realize.

RICHARD A. WILLY 1946

Zengo Takakuwa's revolt is an adventure of three phases: the desertion, the survival, and the benign capture. Of these, the middle is the most interesting and exciting. Here is the struggle of a lone Japanese officer and a girl against recurring American patrols. It is hide and seek with lives at stake, deadly business indeed. The story is disciplined, believable. Even today, seventeen years after the end of World War II, there are soldiers of the Japanese Imperial forces on isolated Pacific islands still at this hiding game. They are as ignorant of world conditions today as Zengo Takakuwa was during the closing year of the war.

But don't think that our Sub-Lieutenant can be otherwise compared with these freaks of a finished war. He is a man apart, being neither Japanese nor American in his thinking. His birthplace is Japan, and his up-bringing is Japanese. His college education is American.

The girl, Michiy, is a camp follower, yet she holds off her capturer and savior for nineteen months, during which they live together, sharing each dangerous day as close- ly as two individuals can. Over and over there is reference to the bodily functions of elimination and our typical American male confusion of these with the sexual function. I mention this because these situations are in opposition to the usual confused and casual Japanese attitude toward these matters.

The personnel involved, the Americans, the Melanesian natives, with some slight reservation, the Aussie and Mutu Okinori, the third Japanese, all act and react believably.

This impressive volume is an abridgment of Professor Munn's latest (1961) edition of his original (1946) and pacesetting Psychology: The Fundamentals of Human Adjustment. This abridgment, incidentally, is nearly one hundred pages longer than the first, post-war edition. If the latter was a bestseller (and, indeed, it was), competitors of the new Introduction might as well fold now.

This book is designed for "short" introductory courses in psychology; such short courses which utilize this text will not significantly change the students. The Introduction is not a popularization of scientific psychology in the slick magazine or any other derivative sense. It is precisely what it purports to be: an abridgment of a scholarly and well written textbook which emphasizes the experimental foundations of contemporary, scientific psychology.

Professor Munn's ability to "keep up with the literature" is the hallmark of a scholar, a near impossibility in psychology today, and a source of envy to many—including especially the reviewer. This scholarship, let it be noted, is maintained in a small liberal arts college without the benefit of a crew of graduate assistants. In these days of academic mobility, Bowdoin should be proud—and consider herself fortunate—to have had on her staff for over a decade and a half such a teacher.

A few chapters in the abridgment are unchanged incorporations from the parent volume. Some chapters have been condensed and combined with other related ones. The main areas of deletion have to do with physiological material and the details of psychological experiments.

The reviewer's prefatory comments to the student gratify the reviewer's clinical, as well as academic, biases. Although the book is solidly scientific, Professor Munn does not lose sight of the fact that psychology is the scientific study of people, Thus the content and orientation are directed toward people and not toward mere abstractions. That the author is really a teacher and knows about the learning process outside the laboratory is clear from his suggestions on how to use the book and from his preparation of an accompanying Student's Manual. The selected readings, at the end of each chapter, are as up-to-date as they are relevant. An often neglected touch is the inclusion of a brief comment or two about the references, which can serve to direct the reader or to whet his appetite. The appendices include a glossary of over forty pages; there are those who may regret the need for such a glossary, but they can hardly question its value. A brief and simple appendix on statistics provides some understanding of this tool, which has become so vital in understanding psychological studies.

Finally, one must mention the excellent quality of the photographs and the drawings. Although they undoubtedly add to the book's overall attractiveness, their decorative value is exceeded by their serious educational purpose.

Alumni Clubs

BRUNSWICK

The Bowdoin Club of Brunswick held its annual fall dinner meeting on Wednesday, October 24, with a social hour at 5:30 at the Alumni House and dinner at the Mount- ton Union at 6 p.m. The agenda, in accordance with the custom of the group, prospective students and their guidance counselors from six neighboring secondary schools were special guests. The boys enjoyed a guided tour of the campus before the social hour.

At the meeting following the dinner Club President Bob Stuart '44 presided. He reported a total of 42 alumni and 36 freshmen and guests present. After thanking Mounton Union Manager Don Lancaster '27 for his fine cooperation and an excellent dinner, he introduced Dean Nathaniel Kendrick, who extended a welcome on behalf of the College.

Next the guidance counselors introduced the boys from their schools — North Yarmouth Academy 4, Yarmouth High School 3, Freeport High School 1, Morse High School 3, Lisbon High School 3, and Brunswick High School 9.

Club Secretary Pete Forin '37 and Alumni Council Member Emerson Zeiter '20 both spoke briefly, with the former reporting a solvent treasury and the latter discussing mainly the Career Conference and the Alumni House. Mr. Zeiter also outlined the duties of each of the committees of the Alumni Council.

President Stuart announced that the club would hold its spring meeting on May 2, with the program to be determined.

Football Coach Nels Corey '39 paid tribute to the varsity football team in a brief talk, stating, "Whatever the outcome of the State Series competition, you will be proud of the boys. They have really put out."

The main speaker of the evening, Professor Athen Daggett '25, first paid tribute to recent Bowdoin students from the Brunswick area and then in detail described with infectious enthusiasm the Senior Center Program, with emphasis on the buildings and facilities.

KENNEBEC VALLEY

On Wednesday, October 17, twenty-seven alumni, wives and guests gathered at the Hotel Jefferson in Waterville for a 6 o'clock social hour and a 7 o'clock dinner. President Raymond Swift '48 presided at a brief business meeting, which included a report from Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Macomber '50.

Robert Cross '45, Secretary of the Alumni Fund and Editor of the Alumni News, spoke briefly and paid special tribute to a member of the club, Willard B. Arnold, III '31, who is serving a second term as Chairman of the Alumni Fund. Mr. Arnold, he said, is the youngest chairman in the history of the Fund and is the first chairman in twenty-five years to serve two consecutive terms.

Alumni Secretary Peter Barnard '50 also spoke briefly, reminding club members of forthcoming alumni events at the College. Mr. Swift also introduced Thomas Chadwick as a Field Director for the Capital Campaign.

The principal speaker of the evening was Dean of Students A. LeRoy Greason, who told a series of interesting and amusing stories about incidents at the College, in the town, and in the State, citing these as examples of what he found good about Bow- doin, Brunswick, and Maine. He also dis- cussed the faculty and the undergraduates, no longer a "silent generation," but rather young men who are definitely concerned with their futures.

Following questions and answers, the meeting was adjourned by President Swift, who announced that the Club will hold its spring meeting on Wednesday, May 8, when Professor William Whiteside, Director of the Senior Center, will be the speaker.

KNOX-LINCOLN-WALDO

On Thursday, June 21, about forty-five alumni and wives gathered at the Knox Hotel in Thomaston for a social hour and dinner. Special guests for the evening were Professor and Mrs. James Moulton.

Professor Moulton, who continued his studies of underwater sounds during a sabbatical leave last year, showed color slides, which he took in Australia. He also talked about work being done by students and faculty in Bowdoin's biology department.

Elections were held, and the following are the Club's officers for 1962-63: President, Andrew W. Williamson, III '55; Vice Presi- dent, Charles M. Begley '48; Secretary- Treasurer, Alfred M. News of the Classes 1825 Nathaniel Hawthorne College opened its doors in Androcton, N. H., on September 19, just 60 days after plans were undertaken to transform the former Thomas Flint estate into a coeducational institution. Enrollment this first year is about 100 students.

1858 The Boston Globe for September 30, 1862, carried an interesting story on Dr. Isaac Adams, who, following his graduation from Bowdoin and the Harvard Medical School, became a noted inventor. The story tells of the possibility that Dr. Adams, not Thomas Edison, may have been the real father of the light bulb.

Dr. Adams testified in patent litigation that he operated his lamps in Boston from 1865 to 1869. When the court asked why he had not tried to obtain patents on the lamps, he stated, “It never occurred to me that there was anything patent- able in making use of the Geissler tube con- struction of a globe for the protection of a carbon burner of an incandescent lamp. This seemed to me a most obvious expedient and one that would naturally occur to any person skilled in the art.”

The Globe story, written by Donald White, con- cludes: “The validity of his claims might have been determined by modern scientific dating methods had his notebooks and lamps been available. But no lamps remain, as far as is known, and only photo copies of the notes exist. The truth may never be known.”

1891 Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln 342 Roland Court, N. E. St. Petersburg, Fla.

Class Secretary Charles Lincend attended the national convention of Psi Upsilon fraternity in New York City, 6.

On September 21 Dr. Lincoln was a guest of honor at a reception held by the Pejepscot His- torical Society at its museum in Brunswick.

1895 Joe Roberts traveled from Pueblo, Colo., to Mystic, Conn., in August to attend Bowdoin Day at the Mystic Seaport on Satur-tion, and its meetings have been held in his law office in Portland by proxy since 1918.

In September Class Secretary John Leydon wrote: "We had an interesting trip back to Philadelphia. Stopped at Mystic, Conn., to see the Bowdoin on September 1 and found Admiral MacMillan '98 loudly autographing his biography, and Joe Roberts '95 on from Pueblo, Colo., to honor Bowdoin Day at the Seaport there. We had dinner with the Admiral and his charming wife at the home of Curt Matthews '10 and his wife, who have moved to Mystic and have a home overlooking the harbor that they so love. It was a wholly Bowdoin occasion — reminiscences of Mac's voyages by former shipmates, Bowdoin songs, and stories. Mrs. Leydon, who is a Californian, got a new picture of New England coast charm."

The Leydons represented the class at the funeral of Mrs. Sue Burnett in Brunswick on August 24.

On August 25 Bill Snow's son, Gregory '58, was married to Miss Gretchen Elders of Beryvn, Ill., an alumna of the University of Wisconsin. Following three years of duty aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington, Greg is teaching navigation to prospective Navy officers at the Whidbey Island Naval Training Station in Puget Sound, Wash.

1908 Secretary, Christopher Toole 551 A Street, S.E., #202 Washington 19, D.C.

In September Class Secretary Irving Rich wrote, "Dan Koughan has been enjoying a few weeks at Peaks Island in Portland Harbor. He is always loyal and never forgets to send along a kindly greeting to all the boys in 1909, Wonderful to hear from you, and glad that all goes well."

1910 Secretary, E. Curtis Matthews 59 Pearl Street Mystic, Conn.

A Tribute To Todd Callihan '54

Bowdoin Alumnus
Brunswick, Maine

Dear Sirs:

A few months ago I was fortunate to have made the acquaintance of Todd Callihan. He had journeyed south in order to spend a vacation with neighbors of ours; and during his short stay with us, learned we were both graduates of Bowdoin, and spent pleasant hours in praise of our college and what it has meant to us.

Todd enjoyed his vacation. He cruised on our neighborhood boat, helped paint the swimming pool, welcomed conversation and good cheer, and told me of his future plans. At the time, I only knew that he had been in a hospital and was recuperating here in the sunshine.

When Todd left to return to Connecticut we had discussed plans for his next trip to Florida and what we would do. Although I warned him not to do so, he knew that we would never return, knew that time was passing all too quickly, and that days of pain and mental anguish were all that remained.

Todd passed away a few weeks ago just as he knew he would; and yet, man that he was, his beating heart continued to shock to me. The seriousness of his illness had been completely concealed behind a smiling face and in a courageous heart. He enjoyed his short life to the end, and never once said or did anything to indicate the torture that must have been in his mind during the last few days.

Our neighbor told me that Todd's last words before boarding his plane were words of thanks that he had been treated as if nothing were wrong. These were words of an outstanding young man — words from which we may all say some day profit. Todd loved Bowdoin, and I feel certain that this love guided him through his last years. I am also sure that Bowdoin developed in him the character, and the stamina and courage, to really live till the end — with his friends rather than with their sympathy.

Bowdoin has lost a fine alumnus, and I thought that you should know it.

Sincerely,

Enigma: The College Admissions Officer

By Assistant Director of Admissions Walter H. Moulton '58

The admissions officer tries perpetually to make himself understood, and yet he knows he will always be something of an enigma to students, parents, alumni, faculty, and even guidance counselors, headmasters, and principals. Dealing with people can be complicated, and misunderstandings sometimes arise. Since the material we use in making decisions is confidential, our position becomes paradoxical. We want to explain our decisions, and yet we must withhold the information that makes the decisions intelligible. The result is that our methods sometimes seem calculated to confuse rather than to enlighten.

Recently an alumnus asked me, "What are -- 's chances of admission?" I could answer the question honestly in only one way. "I don't know." Ten to twenty factors of varying significance could affect our decision. Initially the boy is just one of about 1100 candidates to me. We might admit him; we could turn him down; we might put him on the waiting list. By trying to gauge his chances in an off-hand manner at this time of year, I could more easily be misleading than be helpful.

Compare this to dropping into a doctor's office and saying, "I have a headache. What's wrong with me?" You wouldn't expect the doctor to give his diagnosis without first checking your medical history and asking a few questions. The same is true of college admissions. It takes time to gather the information we need in making a decision. We will make the admissions procedure as simple as possible for all candidates, and for one who is well qualified a decision need not be a complicated thing. But, for the majority of applicants, "I don't know" is the only answer we can give until formal notification is made in April. I learned early that a smile at the wrong time can mean admission to an overhopes candidate, while a hasty word can breed discouragement where no such thing is intended. At the risk of saying too little I now speak softly and convey only that which is honest and can't be misinterpreted.

Today many people talk about admission to college, and many are involved directly with the admissions process; but few of these people are willing, or think it necessary, to bear responsibility for the applicant once he has become a freshman. The college cannot avoid this responsibility. We are interested in far more than admission because we share in the success or failure of those we admit, both in and after college. This extended responsibility is something admissions officers never take lightly. For the benefit of our applicants, we play the role of devil's advocate. We must think of the alternative to success, and what failure will mean in time, money, and effort to a student and his family. The consequences of failure to a student's career and personality can be enormous, and we must carefully balance them against his chances for success if we are going to be truly fair to him.

Once the class is chosen, the admissions officer must have satisfied the faculty, administration, students, alumni, and his own conscience that he has made the best decisions under existing circumstances. I won't say that we make the correct decision in each case. We deal with hundreds of schools each year. They offer a variety of courses ranging from technical or college to honors and advanced placement, and the standards are different for each school. It is even more difficult to evaluate personal qualities. Educators are just beginning to investigate systematically such subjective factors as motivation, determination, and curiosity. As yet, we have no way of measuring such things. Letters of recommendation still present problems. At times we have been accused of ignoring recommendations, and this is true in some cases. When a recommendation comes from one who knows a candidate well and it gives specific information or illustrations concerning his ability and personality, it is of significant value. When the recommendation is from someone who does not know the candidate, or when it is filled with glowing platitudes about the applicant's ancestry, family, or social background, it is almost worthless. Bowdoin is a college of liberal arts and sciences, not an extension of the Social Register or a country club.

These are just some of the problems that haunt every admissions officer in the country. Our methods are not perfect; it should surprise no one that our decisions are not perfect.

As long as I have touched upon the subject of responsibility, I might say that applicants, parents of applicants, and alumni admissions aides also have responsibilities which they must fulfill if admissions is to be a smooth process. Applicants should follow the advice of their counselors and choose colleges that are realistic, in terms of success as well as of admission. They must eventually select only one of these colleges, and the earlier they do this, the easier the admissions process will be for all concerned. Parents have an obligation to recognize their children's shortcomings as well as their assets. They should investigate colleges that will be good for their children and not be content with a college because of its name alone. A college education is not free. Someone must pay for it, and this is a parental, not a college, responsibility. Financing an education calls for careful thought and early planning. If an alumnus really wishes to help young men come to Bowdoin, he will have to know the College, admissions, financial aid, and many other things. Having attended the college at one time is just not enough. Bowdoin is changing constantly, and alumni must keep abreast of these changes if they wish to be truly effective recruiters. We are delighted to help the candidate and his parents with their college plans, and alumni can be especially helpful where investigation of Bowdoin is concerned.

I don't want to give the impression that the world of admissions is cold and the men in it unsympathetic. We deal with flesh and blood, not with statistics or IBM cards. We encourage and discourage young men, and we must watch the joy and disappointment grow upon their faces. Behind the grades there is always a personality to consider. The only cold and unavoidable fact about admission to Bowdoin is that we must turn away two candidates each time we accept one. We must be scrupulously fair to each applicant seeking admission. Upon a consistent admissions policy rests the confidence of the schools which provide us with students. This confidence is indispensable.

The applicants themselves set the quality of admissions standards, academic and otherwise, in any given year. We use admission requirements to see that each accepted candidate meets those standards. We cannot ignore the standards for any individual. It would be unfair to all the applicants, and it could be particularly unfair to the one for whom the exception is made. We can't let a young man in the back door and then expect him to compete at the same level as those who come in the front way.

It may be a revelation to many that we spend seventy percent of our time with candidates who never come to Bowdoin. However, this isn't unusual when one considers the number of young men we admit and the number we cannot admit. Counseling is an important part of our work. The interview for a poorly qualified applicant will often take two or three times as long as the interview for a well qualified one, and the impact we make on the former helps to determine Bowdoin's public image. Even though we can never measure our success with these men, it is gratifying to know we have helped them make a decision that will profoundly affect their lives. The same feeling of satisfaction exists when we survey the freshman class, but a healthy slice of pride is mixed with it. When I watched our 212 freshmen sit down for their reception dinner last September, I wouldn't have exchanged my job for any other in the nation.

In the years to come we shall do more than just admit one class at a time. An ever-increasing number of students will be seeking admission to college. We will have to prepare for this in several ways. One immediate need is to polish and refine our present administrative procedures, enabling us to handle efficiently an increasing number of applicants. At the same time it will be necessary to perfect new methods of selection, methods that will reliably incorporate pertinent factors that we can't even measure at present. If we are to continue to educate men and not simply cater to intellectuals, we must phrase our requirements with a clearly defined range of students in mind. And we must consciously select this range of students, not just watch our board score medians spiral upward and draw from an ever more restricted portion of high school and preparatory school classes under the assumption that doing so means better students. This won't release us from the obligation of asking for better scholastic preparation, but it will assure that we give proper emphasis to the personal qualities that make for strong leadership and service. Finally, we will expand our efforts to make the admissions process as clear as possible. Even though we cannot divulge confidential information, we do want people to know how we make our decisions.

If you are confused by our procedures, don't just complain to your friends. Call upon us. The Admissions Office is always open to those who want to help us and to those who want information about admission to college.

THE COVER
Shown on the cover of this issue are Alumni Fund Chairman Willard B. Arnold, III '51 of Waterville, Alumni Council President Ralph T. Ogden '21 of West Hartford, Conn., and 1917 Class Agent Edwin H. Blanchard of Jackson Heights, N. Y., winner of the Alumni Fund Cup for 1961-62 as well as for 1960-61. Paul Downing of the College News Service took all three pictures at the Alumni Fund-Alumni Council Fall Conference on the campus in November.
The next few months will be crucial ones in the College’s Campaign for $10 million to enrich its academic program and improve its physical plant. One of the Campaign's strategic necessities, the enlistment of Area Chairmen in regions where less than 30 alumni reside, is being met with all possible speed.

With 62.4% of the goal yet to be achieved, the total now stands at $3,763,797 (see Campaign Scoreboard). Executive Secretary Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. '50, Campaign Director, said that ultimate success of the fund drive will hinge on the efforts of the Area Chairmen, who are being appointed by Vincent B. Welch '38, Alumni Chairman for the Campaign.

A second Leadership Conference on the campus was arranged for Thursday through Saturday, January 31-February 2. It was designed to explain the Campaign’s objectives and outline procedures to the 64 Chairmen of Areas with less than 30 alumni, Executive Committee members, and wives. Also invited to the Conference were Area Chairmen and Executive Committee members from areas with more than 30 alumni who were unable to attend the first Conference, members of the National Committee, Governing Boards, representatives of the Alumni Council and the Alumni Fund, and other leading alumni.

Campaign Chairman Charles A. Cary ’10 said the second Conference, like the first, was planned to provide all the information and tools necessary to make the job of volunteer Campaign workers smoother and more effective.

Scheduled speakers at the Conference included President Coles, Mr. Cary, Campaign Vice Chairman Sanford B. Cousins ’20, Mr. Welch, Mr. Hokanson, Librarian Richard Harwell, Director of Athletics Malcolm E. Morrell ’24, and Campaign Manager Allen K. Holding and Alumni Manager Thomas A. Pyle, both of Kersting, Brown & Co., the College’s fund-raising counsel.

The Conference program also included addresses by other Faculty members, talks by several members of the student body, and campus tours.

A Symposium keyed to the College’s proposed new $2 million Library will be held Thursday and Friday, February 21-22. Titled “The Place of a Research Library in a Liberal Arts College,” the symposium will bring forty or more leading college librarians from throughout the country to the campus.

President Coles outlined the idea behind the symposium in his letter of invitation: “The importance of the subject merits thoughtful, serious, and full consideration by college faculty, officers, and governing boards. Of late, the concept of a limited collection for an undergraduate library, possibly one of fixed size, has received much attention. We believe that the library of a vigorous liberal arts college cannot be limited by such Procrustean standards, but that it must acknowledge the college’s obligations to a research-minded faculty, and to students who are involved in independent study and in the preparation of honors papers demanding independent research.”

Speakers at the symposium will include Dr. Frederick H. Wagman, Director of Libraries of the University of Michigan; Miss Eileen Thornton, Librarian of Oberlin College; Mr. Verner W. Clapp, President of the Council on Library Resources; Dr. Edward C. Kirkland, Frank Munsey Professor of History, Emeritus; Mr. Rex Warner, Visiting Professor in Classical History and Literature on the Tallman Foundation; Professor Ather P. Daggert ’25, William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Constitutional and International Law and Government; and Librarian Richard Harwell.

Although the four varsity winter sports teams which have been in action through December have recorded a combined record of six victories against thirteen losses, the outlook for the remainder of the season is encouraging. The basketball team has won two and lost three, the swimming team has broken even in two meets, the hockey squad has won three and lost five, and the rifle team is winless in four outings.

Coach Ray Bicknell's basketball squad absorbed a 68-32 drubbing from Northeastern in the season's opener, but since then, having become adjusted to his style of play, the team has made things very interesting for Maine, Colby, M.I.T., and Bates. Bownlow defeated Maine 65-63 and Colby 66-65 and lost to M.I.T. 72-60 and Bates 67-62. Both victories were home contests. The two and one record in State Series play puts Bownlow in a tie for the lead with Bates after the first round of play. These two schools were expected to battle for the cellar, with Colby an overwhelming favorite to walk away with the title.

The basketball success has been a team effort. Sophomore center Dick Whitmore is the leading rebounder in State Series play and second in scoring, with an average of 14.3 per game in both categories. Reflecting balance are the scoring averages of the other four starters in Series play, Captain Joe Brogna '63, 13.3; Al Loane '63, 12.7; Gary Silverman '64, 11.7; and Pete Finn '65, 10.3. Finn and Brogna are the State's leaders in field goal accuracy, and Loane is second in free throw accuracy.

Charlie Burt's swimming team extended its three-year win streak to eleven with an opening 64-31 victory against M.I.T. before losing to Springfield 51-44. The standouts for the Polar Bears have been Pete Seaver '64, who set New England intercollegiate records in the 200 yard freestyle and 500 yard freestyle against Springfield, Captain Jim Coors '63 in the individual medley and backstroke, and Curt Tilton '62 and Tim Robinson '64 in the sprints. Good performances have also been turned in by diver John Merrill '63, breaststroker Shawn Leach '63, Bob Bachman '65 in the distance events, John Halford '64 in the butterfly, and Bill Edwards '64 in the backstroke. With the old win streak broken, the team will be looking to start a new one. The toughest meet is expected to be against Williams, New England champion last year, on February 9 in Williamstown.

Sid Watson's inexperienced hockey squad seemed to find itself in the Brown Christmas Hockey Tournament, after winning only one of its first five regular-season games. The Polar Bears lost to Brown 7-3, beat Merrimack at home 4-3, and lost at Dartmouth 6-1, Norwich 5-4, and Merrimack 5-2. In the Brown Tournament Bownlow finished third out of the eight teams competing. The Polar Bears beat New Hampshire in the opener 7-3, lost to Norwich 5-3, and beat Massachusetts handily 9-2. The first line of Len Johnson '65 and Co-Captains Bill Bisser '63 and Ed Spalding '65 provided most of the offense in the first five games, but in the tournament the second line of Fred Flioon '64, Dev Hamlen '64, and Joe Tarbell '64 came into its own. Defenseman Bruce Parker '63 and reserve George Blasenak '62 have been helpful in the scoring column. The defense, led by Bill Matthews '65 and Dave Mecmeh '64 as well as Parker, tightened up considerably in the tournament. Two sophomores, Dave Coupe and Curt Chase, have handled the goaltending chores, with Coupe the regular starter.

The outlook is dimmer for the rifle team. Master Sergeant Marshall Bailey's shooters have lost matches to Maine, Dartmouth, Harvard, M.I.T., and St. Michaels. Phil Wallis '64, one of only two lettermen, has been the top marksman so far, with Steve Leonard '65 rating second.

The varsity track team of Coach Frank Sabasteanski '41 faces its first intercollegiate competition after the semester break, against Bates on February 9. After that the schedule is a full one, with a meet every Saturday through March 16. In the most ambitious schedule ever undertaken by a Bownlow indoor squad, the trackmen will face Colby and Brandeis, Tufts, M.I.T., and Vermont and take part in the Maine A.A.U. meet at Orono. In the interclass meet on December 8 the freshmen gave promise of good things to come, scoring 60 1/2 points to 48 for the sophomores, 41 1/2 for the seniors, and 12 for the juniors. Indoor Captain Bruce Frost '65 continued his assault on the record book with new meet records in each of the three weight events.

While much of the rest of the nation was experiencing snow, Maine enjoyed mild weather through much of December. This situation changed just before Christmas, and Coach Dodge Fernald's skiing team was assured of plenty of snow for its eleven-event schedule beginning January 5.

Bownlow has received a National Science Foundation grant of $70,000 for a 1963-64 Academic Year Institute for secondary school teachers of mathematics. The third consecutive such program at the College, the Institute will be under the direction of Professor Reinhard L. Korgen, who was also in charge of the earlier ones.

No more than ten participants will take part in the Institute. By taking studies in a National Science Foundation Summer Institute at the College, in addition to their course work during the regular school year, they may become eligible for a Bownlow master of arts degree.

Bownlow, Wesleyan, Boston College, Brown, and Harvard are the only New England institutions involved in Academic Year Institute programs. Bownlow, in fact, was a pioneer among the small liberal arts colleges of the country in conducting such programs.

Last summer the College conferred M.A. degrees on seven secondary school mathematics teachers who had completed the 1961-62 AYI and Summer Institute programs.

The National Science Foundation has allotted a total of $11,550,000 to 57 colleges and universities to support Academic Year Institutes for science and mathematics teachers during the 1963-64 academic year. In the past seven years about 8,200 teachers have studied under the program.

Eight Bownlow College National Merit Scholarships have been established as part of the program of the National Merit Scholarship Corporation, to be effective with the Class of 1967, which will enter the College next September. The scholarships, ranging in amount from $100 to $1,500, depending upon need, and renewable annually, will go to eight Merit Semifinalists selected for admission by Bownlow. They will be awarded by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation, which conducts the largest independently supported scholarship program in the history of education.

Some 16,000 high schools, enrolling more than 90 percent of the country's high school students, participate in the National Merit program, which is designed to discover exceptionally talented young people and encourage them to obtain a college education. From the several hundred thousand high ranking students who take the Merit Scholarship test some 10,000 are named Semifinalists. Of these 10,000 approximately 7,500 are boys. All 7,500 have learned of the Bownlow program, both through the National Merit publicity and through Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw '36.

The National Merit Scholarship Corporation, a non-profit organization, was established in 1955 through a $20 million grant from the Ford Foundation and a $500,000 grant from the Carnegie Foundation.
Corporation. Last April the Ford Foundation announced an additional grant of $14.5 million to continue the program through 1970.

More than 1,000 Merit Scholarships are awarded each year. About 425 are financed out of the funds provided by the Ford Foundation. Over 150 sponsors, including colleges, business corporations and foundations, labor unions, professional associations, and individuals, finance the others.

Nearly 6,000 young people have won Merit Scholarships to date. Some 3,300 of them are currently studying at more than 400 colleges and universities. The total value of all awards made thus far is approximately $29.5 million.

Sears, Roebuck and Company has made an unrestricted grant of $2,000 to Bowdoin under its new program of aid to privately supported colleges and universities. In addition to the nearly $900,000 given out under this program, the Sears-Roebuck Foundation distributed another $700,000 to institutions of higher learning in 1962.

ROTC Cadet Captain Frank Nicolai ’63 of Stewart Manor, N. Y., received the U. S. Legion of Valor’s Bronze Cross for Achievement on November 12. Membership in the Legion of Valor is limited to men who have won the Congressional Medal of Honor, the Distinguished Service Cross, or the Navy Cross, the country’s highest awards for heroism in combat.

The Bronze Cross is awarded each year to the ROTC cadet selected in each Army Corps area who meets the requirements of “excellence in military and academic scholarship, military and academic leadership, participation in responsible positions in college affairs, and the highest qualities of discipline, courtesy, and character.”

Nicolai, a mathematics major, was co-captain of the 1962 soccer team and a pitcher last spring on the varsity baseball team. In his freshman year he won the Hornell Cup for maintaining an “A” average in his studies while competing in soccer, basketball, and baseball. Last June the Bowdoin chapter of Phi Beta Kappa elected him to membership.

A three-story addition to the Alpha Delta Phi House on Maine Street should be ready for occupancy in the spring. Estimated to cost $45,000 when completed, the addition includes two three-man suites on the upper two floors and a library on the ground floor. Workmen began the foundation work in October, but a special ceremony scheduled for November 10, the day of the football game with Maine, was called off because of rain, which fell in torrents.

Wadsworth and Boston of Portland is the architectural firm for the project. Members of the Alpha Delta Phi committee which has been raising the necessary funds are Wesley E. Bevins, Jr. ’40, Stevens L. Frost ’42, and Dr. Robert S. Stuart ’44.

A $31,320 grant from the Research Corporation will enable the Mathematics Department to initiate an active research program by bringing together young mathematicians in the same research field — in this case, the field of algebra.

Professor Dan Christie ’37 of the Mathematics Department suggested the plan several years ago. His idea was that, as new appointments in mathematics are made, it might be preferable to appoint several men with the same research interests, rather than attempting to gain a complete cross-section of the field. Bowdoin would then have as large a group of specialists in a particular branch of mathematics as any other institution in the country.

Specifically, new Instructors Daniel Sterling and Jonathan Lubin are being given reduced teaching loads in order to engage in research projects in algebra during both the academic year and summer vacations. With the impending retirement of Professor Edward Hammond, a third algebraist will probably join them.

The grant, which covers a three-year period, will help overcome the problem faced by Bowdoin and other small colleges in offering young, well-trained mathematicians career opportunities to match those in universities. The problem, according to President Coles, “is not so much in matching salaries as in matching opportunities for intellectual stimulation by colleagues of closely similar research interests. The Mathematics Department proposes to initiate an active research program by deliberately bringing together young mathematicians in the same research field.”

Professor Cecil Holmes, Chairman of the Mathematics Department, sees in the new program “an answer to the difficulties of a small college in making available research opportunities for talented young faculty members who, without this assurance, might be lured to the great universities or to government and industry, where research grants are so much more prevalent than on the smaller campus.”

The Sue Winchell Burnett Prize in Music has been established by a gift of $1,000 from Mrs. Rebecca P. Bradley of Brunswick, mother of Wendell Bradley ’50. The income from the fund, which honors the memory of Mrs. Charles T. Burnett, who died last August, will go each year to a senior majoring in music.

The Burnett home on Maine Street was a center of musical activities in the Brunswick area, and for years Mrs. Burnett was hostess to the many well known musicians who appeared in concerts at the College.

The Curtis String Quartet dedicated its November 19 concert to the memory of Mrs. Burnett. As Professor Frederic Tillotson said at that time, “The performers were guests in her home each time they came here, and when they played there, which they often did, it was like being transported back to the 17th century, amid the old world and antique furnishings of her home.”

On November 18 a Moulton Union audience had an opportunity to listen to a varied musical program which included two progressive jazz compositions by the Bowdoin Polar Bears, three Heinrich Schutz (1585-1672) duets, selections by the Bowdoin Woodwind Ensemble, a concerto for bassoon, 17th century tower music by the Bowdoin Brass Ensemble, and selections featuring two oboes and a harpsichord.

On December 11 the Glee Club joined the Portland Symphony Orchestra in a program of Christmas music at Portland City Hall.

Four men received special trophies at the fall sports banquet, held in the Moulton Union on November 20. Sophomore quarterback Bob Harrington of Danver, Mass., won the Winslow R. Howland Memorial Trophy as the varsity football player who made the most marked improvement and who best exemplifies the qualities of aggressiveness, cooperation, enthusiasm for the game, and fine sportsmanship. Harrington was named to the Portland Sunday Telegram All-Maine team, along with junior end Frank Drigotas of Auburn.

The William J. Reardon Trophy went to tackle Bill Nash of Providence, R. I., as the senior who made an outstanding contribution to the football team and to the College as a man of honor, courage, and leadership.

Dan Turner of Skowhegan, another sophomore quarterback, was the recipient of the Wallace C. Philoan Trophy, presented to a non-letter winner who made an outstanding contribution to the football squad.

Pete Best of Riverside, Conn., a senior, won the George Levine Trophy as the varsity soccer player best exemplifying the traits of sportsmanship, valor, and desire. He was co-captain of the 1962 squad, which tied Colby for the Maine championship.

Four football players attended the Army-Navy game in Philadelphia on December 1, through the generosity of Major General Wallace C. Philoan '05 of Brunswick and Leland W. Hovey '26 of Cynwyd, Pa. They were Frank Drigotas '64 and Allen Ryan '64, both of the varsity squad, and freshman honorary co-captains Ralph Johnson and Daniel Ralston.

General Philoan donated the four tickets for the game, and the four men were guests at Mr. Hovey's home.

Bowdoin ranked second among the country's small college football teams in forward pass defense during the 1962 season. Opponents completed only 20 of 53 attempted passes during seven games for a percentage of 37.7. Coach Nels Corey's squad intercepted nine passes and held opponents to a total of 256 yards through the air, an average of 36.6 yards per game, to finish behind Principia College of Elsah, Ill., and ahead of Earlham College of Richmond, Ind.

Harrison King McCann 1880-1962

Harrison K. McCann '02, who for thirty years served as a member of the Board of Overseers at the College, died on December 21, 1962, in Old Westbury, N. Y. During his four years at Bowdoin he and the late Harvey D. Gibson '02 were roommates in 21 Appleton Hall. Mr. McCann went on to become President of one of the world's leading advertising agencies, McCann-Erickson, Inc., and Mr. Gibson became President of one of the world's leading banks, the Manufacturers Trust Company.

So it was particularly appropriate that at the dedication of Harvey Dow Gibson Hall of Music on June 18, 1954, Mr. McCann should speak of his friend in words that can be applied with fully as much justification to Mr. McCann himself: "Business was his forte, and he liked managing things. . . . Harvey was imaginative and had an alert mind. He was an optimist, and that any project that he undertook might fail was beyond his comprehension. He had the will to succeed, but he was frank and aboveboard, and never took advantage of anyone."

"Impact," Mr. McCann continued, "is, I think, a good word for the dynamic effect Harvey had on a business or a project when he took an interest in it. It was the impact of a strong, able, honest personality, with no doubts or fears.

"Harvey had one great quality that perhaps more than anything else endeared him to his friends and associates: that was the quality of loyalty, loyalty both to friends and to causes. There are many friends who can testify that Harvey found a way to help them when the going was rough."

Mr. McCann concluded, "Basil O'Connor, Chairman of the American Red Cross, described Harvey as 'a man of great imagination, creative ability, unlimited energy, administrative ability, unending patience, and a natural aptitude for leadership.' Add to this loyalty and the will to succeed, and you have an impressive list of Harvey's qualities. A combination of qualities, I might add, seldom found in one individual."

A combination of qualities, one is bound to add, found also in Mr. McCann. (See page 31.)
The National Science Foundation has granted Bowdoin $94,600 to conduct two Summer Institutes in 1963, both of them for secondary school teachers. One will be in mathematics, under the direction of Professor Reinhard Korgen, and the other, to be supervised by Professor Alton Gustafson, will be in marine biology. The Institutes will open on Monday, July 1, and continue until Saturday, August 10.

The NSF allotted $54,400 for the Mathematics Institute for the expenses of staff and for stipends to the 50 participants, who by attending four of the sequential Institutes may qualify for a master of arts degree.

The Marine Biology Institute, to include 36 participants, received a grant of $40,200. The emphasis in this program will be on field work, with the coves and shores of Casco Bay offering easily accessible sites for the observation of marine organisms in natural conditions.

Professor Samuel Ramaling of the Chemistry Department is Coordinator for the Summer Institutes.

Bowdoin debaters won 17 out of 30 contests in a tournament held at the University of Vermont in November, and the freshmen followed this up on December 1 by winning seven decisions and losing five in a 13-college tournament at Harvard University.

A record total of 23 schools and 86 debaters entered the 33rd annual Interscholastic Debate Forum on December 8. Defending champions Laconia (N.H.) High School and Edward Little High School of Auburn retained their Senior Division and Novice Division titles. Aside from the young man — he shall be nameless — who opened one Senior panel by thanking "Bates College" for the opportunity to debate, things went off smoothly and efficiently.

Professor Emeritus Warren B. Catlin is the author of The Progress of Economics: A History of Economic Thought, a 788-page comprehensive history of economic thought and development being published by Bookman Associates in New York. Following his retirement from the Faculty in 1952, after 42 years of teaching at Bowdoin, Professor Catlin worked almost exclusively on the book. He spent two years editing, revising, and shortening his manuscript by about 300 pages.

Instead of stressing eras and men — or schools of economic thought — the book is arranged by topics or fields, such as Population, Wages, the Land Question, and International Trade. It covers the history of economic thought in the Western world during the past three centuries.

Professor Catlin is also the author of Labor Problems in the United States and Great Britain, first published in 1926 and revised in 1935. He has written articles on labor for the Encyclopedia of Religion and was co-editor of the Yearbook of American Labor in 1945. He joined the Faculty in 1910 and taught courses in Industrial Relations, Management, and the History of Economics. He has been a member of the American Economic Association, the Academy of Political Science, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the American Management Association, and the Industrial Relations Research Association.

Professor Catlin was a member of the Brunswick Housing Authority until it was dissolved in 1952. He is Chairman of the Davis Fund Committee (relating to the recreation program in Brunswick) and has been an officer and active member of the Brunswick Village Improvement Association, which honored him in 1960 by planting three trees on the Upper Mall in recognition of his community services.

On the campus the Catlin Path, extending from the Warren Eastman Robinson Gateway to the Library, was laid in 1954 through Professor Catlin's generous gift.

"The Ledge," a short story by Professor of English Lawrence Hall '36, was broadcast last fall to listeners in the Far East, Middle East, Africa, Europe, and Latin America through the Voice of America. Winner of the 1960 O. Henry Award, the story was adapted for "American Short Stories Told in Special English," a weekly program read on the air to millions of people who are studying English all over the world.

"The Ledge" is the story of a Maine fisherman and two boys who are drowned on a ledge while duck hunting off the coast.

Professor Hall, who last summer completed a four-week voyage down the Mississippi River in his Maine dory "Way Out," is working on the story of "that somewhat mellow adventure." His How Thinking Is Written, a volume on the logic of the English language, will appear early this year. His novel Stowaway was reissued in a Popular Library paperback in November, and his Hawthorne: Critic of Society will be reprinted this year.

A "pint-sized" telescope with the resolving and magnification powers of an eight-foot long telescope is in use in astronomy classes at the College. Known as the Questar telescope, the instrument has a tube only about a foot long, but with its various eye pieces it has a magnification power range of from 40 to 160 and the resolution of the average large, solidly mounted telescope.

The Questar, on loan to Bowdoin from the Research Corporation, achieves its power from a unique optical system which combines a mirror and lens arrangement. It is small enough to be carried by hand and sets up on its own tripod. It has a star tracking mount, driven by an electric motor, and all the axial facilities of larger models.

Some 50 students are attending the Astronomy 1 course this semester.

History Professor George D. Beirce, Jr. is one of two winners of the American Historical Association's $500 Watumull Prize for 1962, awarded for the best work on the history of India originally published in the United States. A specialist on modern India, he won the award for his book British Attitudes Towards India, 1784-1858.

Professor Beirce spent the 1961-62 academic year as a Fulbright Lecturer at Osmania University in Hyderabad, India, where he did extensive research in Indian archives and libraries. A member of the Bowdoin Faculty since 1954, he is contributing a chapter on British attitudes toward Asia to The Glass Curtain Between Europe and Asia, to be published soon.

This winter more than 150 million people may see Bowdoin scenes when a CineScope movie taken on the campus in October is released as part of a ten-minute travel film on Maine. The movie is being translated into 18 foreign languages and sent to as many countries, in addition to being shown in American theaters with a potential audience of more than 40 million people.

A New England audience will see a television version of the movie which was made on 16 millimeter film at the same time by the 20th Century Fox camera crew. Maine's Department of Economic Development sponsored the television film, produced in both color and black and white.

Bowdoin scenes include the Glee Club singing "Rise, Sons of Bowdoin" on the steps of the Walker Art Building; Gibson Hall of Music; the Meddiebempsters in front of the Polar Bear; students walking to and from Appleton Hall; and some shots of the Chapel in the midst of autumn foliage.

Also shown in the film are the Fryeburg Fair, water and land sports, hunting and scenic views, and pictures of lobstering.

Director of Dramatics George Quinby '23, who is lecturing on the theater this year at the University of Tehran in Iran under a Fulbright grant, is staging a sequence of three Eugene O'Neill dramas there, opening with Ah, Wilderness in January. The other two plays, Long Day's Journey into Night and The Straw, are scheduled for March and June. All three plays are being translated into Farsi, the Iranian language.

Meanwhile, back on the campus, the Masque and Gown presented members of the faculty and staff in readings of three one-act plays on December 7 in the Pickard Theater. In the first play, William Butler Yeats' The Word Upon the Window Pane, the cast consisted of Mrs. Athern Daggett, Professor Edward Pols, Mr. Dennis Taylor, Mrs. Richard Chittim, Miss Carol Jones, Professor Alfred Fuchs, and Professor Robert Beckwith.

Mrs. Chittim, Miss Jones, and Messrs. Beckwith, Pols, Fuchs, and Taylor appeared in T.S. Eliot's Sweeney Agonistes, and Mrs. Chittim, Professor Fuchs, Miss Jones, and Philip Wilder '23 took the four parts in George Bernard Shaw's The Dark Lady of the Sonnets.

Acting Director of Dramatics Daniel Calder '60 directed the readings.

Fall Fund and Council Conference

The Alumni Council and the Directors and Agents of the Alumni Fund held their Third Annual Combined Fall Conference at the College from Thursday until Saturday, November 8 to 10. The sessions began with a meeting of the Council's Executive Committee on Thursday evening.

Following Friday morning meetings of the Fund Directors and Council Committees, the Fund and the Council held their first joint meeting at the Moulton Union when alumni workers and their wives gathered for a luncheon. Dr. Ralph T. Ogden '21 of West Hartford, Conn., President of the Council, presided, and Executive Secretary Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. '50 extended greetings on behalf of the College. The principal speaker was Vincent B. Welch '38 of Washington, D. C., Overseer of the College and Alumni Chairman for the Capital Campaign, who discussed the relationship between the Campaign and the Alumni Fund.

A full program for Friday afternoon included additional committee meetings, several athletic events, an informal coffee hour for the ladies with Mrs. Coles at the President's House, the regular fall meeting of the Council, a Fund work session, and a reception for all at the Alumni House at 83 Federal Street.

Fund Chairman Willard B. Arnold, III '51 of Waterville presided at the Friday evening program following dinner at the Moulton Union. He awarded the Alumni Fund Cup (for outstanding performance) to Class Agent Edwin H. Blanchard '17 and the Class of 1916 Bowl (for greatest improvement) to Class Agent Louis Bernstein '22. Six Agents received special awards for leading their decade groups in the record-breaking 1961-62 Alumni Fund, which reached $231,552 from 54.3 per cent of Bowdoin's alumni.

Mr. Arnold also introduced the speaker of the evening, Professor Athern P. Daggett '25, Chairman of both the Government Department and the Faculty Committee on the new Senior Center Program. He reported informally on plans for the unique three-building facility and the new educational program that is being developed for undergraduate study and living at Bowdoin, especially during the senior year.

On Saturday morning, Fund and Council workers and their wives met in the Faculty Room of Massachusetts Hall to hear two informal talks, one by President Coles and the other by Librarian Richard Harwell. The latter described Bowdoin's present library and plans for a new library, and the former discussed the progress of the Capital Campaign and spoke in some detail about preliminary plans being developed for a new gymnasium and improvements for Bowdoin's physical education program.

The sessions concluded Saturday with a buffet luncheon at the Alumni House. Despite a driving rain, many Council Members, Fund workers, and their wives attended the final home football game, when Bowdoin fought valiantly against Maine at Whittier Field. Many conference participants plus other alumni and guests visited the Alumni House following the game, resulting in another near-record crowd.

The Council is completing plans for its midwinter meeting (February 28 to March 2). The weekend will continue with a second Campus Career Conference, scheduled for Monday, March 4, and will conclude with the Council's annual Senior Dinner on the same evening with Senator Paul H. Douglas '13 as guest of honor and principal speaker.

Symposium on Undergraduate Environment

Leading American educators and social scientists participated in a Symposium on Undergraduate Environment held October 18 and 19 at the College. The discussions ranged over the whole spectrum of the learning experience and the effect on it of environmental factors. It drew to the campus representatives from 40 leading colleges and universities, as well as editors and writers.

The frame of reference for the Symposium was set by President Coles, who declared it to be "the total environment in undergraduate liberal arts education." One of the targets of the program, he said, was the reaching of a wider recognition "of the need for greater concern with the total environment — curricular, co-curricular, and extra-curricular — in which learning takes place."

President Coles also called for exploration of "the contributions which the social and psychological sciences can make in planning for this environment and, in particular, of the need for recognition of the special concerns and problems of the college senior."

By means of the Symposium, he said, Bowdoin hoped to bring to the attention of other colleges and faculties the ideas that have been developed from the work of social scientists, psychologists, and others that have been so helpful to the College itself.

Bowdoin's own pioneering Senior Center Program with its unique plan for integrated study and living for seniors shared the spotlight in the discussions and at the dinner concluding the Symposium, when Professor William Whiteside, Director of the Senior Center, outlined the far-reaching program.

The keynote speaker for the Symposium was Professor Nevitt Sanford of Stanford University. Professor David Riesman of Harvard University, Professor Martin A. Trow of the University of California at Berkeley, and Dr. Benson R. Snyder, Chief Psychiatrist of the Medical Department at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, followed him.

The subjects discussed by the principal speakers were intensively thrashed out in a panel discussion on the second day. The panelists were the four principal speakers, Professor Athern P. Daggett '25, Professor Mervin B. Freedman of the Institute for the Study of Human Problems at Stanford, of which Professor Sanford is the Director; Dr. Esther Raushenbush, former Dean of Sarah Lawrence College, who is now working on a Hazen Foundation study of student environmental problems; Alfred E. Schretter '59 of the New York City law firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland and Kiendl; Henry Chauncey, President of the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N.J.; and Wayne T. Adams '63, President of the Bowdoin Student Council. President Coles served as moderator for the panel.

Professor Sanford, the editor of the widely acclaimed critical survey of the nation's institutions of higher learning The American College, spoke on the subject "General Education and the Theory of Personality Development."

Declaring that college seniors are ready for "new kinds of responsibility and a new kind of role," Professor Sanford said, "the essential question to ask when we think of the education of seniors is how we may effectively challenge them. How may we bring to bear stimuli that will require new kinds of response — fresh adaptations — and so expand the personality?" He expressed the hope that Bowdoin's Senior Center would become "a model and an inspiration for others."

Professor Riesman, Henry Ford II Professor of Social Sciences at Harvard and the nationally known author of The Lonely Crowd, Faces in the Crowd, and other important books, addressed the Symposium on "Experiments in Higher Education."

The Harvard educator and social scientist declared that one of the advantages of the Senior Center will lie in the fact that the "senior class will be small enough to be manageable," allowing everyone "to know everyone else in the class, which will keep it within the human scale."

Students should "find a field first for themselves and then for society," Professor Riesman declared. After their fields have been established, he suggested, they should be given a general education in their final year rather than as is the case under the present scope of senior study.

Up to now social research has exerted "almost no influence" on the problems of education, Professor Trow said in his address, entitled "The Role of the Social Sciences in Planning for Higher Education."

A member of the faculties of both the School of Education and the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Professor Trow is also a Research Associate in that University's Center for the Study of Higher Education. He is the author of numerous articles on the sociology of politics and education and is now engaged in a study of eight colleges and universities.

He said that the failure of social research can be laid to its concentration on "what cannot be altered rather than on what can be." Behavioral scientists have been more interested... in the experiences of students before they reach college, which cannot be altered by the collegiate environment, than in the problems of undergraduate environment itself, which can be changed to meet different ends and needs.

The increase in graduate education, Professor Trow declared, makes liberal arts colleges appear to be more goal-oriented, and the decision must be made as to whether liberal arts education is only a step to graduate school, a step to a job, or an end in itself.

Dr. Snyder, who is also Assistant Visiting Psychiatrist at the Beth Israel Hospital in Boston and Instructor in Psychiatry at the Harvard Medical School, spoke on "Personality Needs and Personality Factors in Undergraduate Education."

He made the point that knowledge of the students' psychosocial development is necessary "if we are to understand the way that they integrate their new life in college with their past, or the extent to which college prepares them for some future, and often quite unanticipated, role in life."

Professor Whiteside spoke of the Senior Center and its relation to the whole problem of undergraduate environment. "This Symposium," he said, "has convinced all of us that environmental planning and effective management of American education call for the gathering and the interpretation of information that colleges have not heretofore had available."

He described the Senior Center Program, how it came about, and what it hopes to accomplish. Touching on the advice received by students from their fellows and faculty members, and the manner in which they choose major fields of study, graduate schools, and careers, Professor Whiteside said, "We want to learn more about how students make these decisions and what will help them proceed more intelligently and more effectively as they plan their futures."

This kind of relationship between the college and the student constitutes "education in the broadest sense," he observed. Such an educational influence cannot be exerted entirely in the classroom but calls for a vigorous, lively, challenging environment.

The Dedication of the Alumni House

The 1962 Alumni Day, Saturday, October 20, was a significant day in the history of the Bowdoin College Alumni Association. It was the occasion for the dedication ceremonies for the new Alumni House at 83 Federal Street, next door to the President's House.

Following the Bowdoin-Williams game, hundreds of Bowdoin alumni, their families, and friends assembled on the rear lawn at the north side of the Alumni House. Dr. Ralph T. Ogden '21, President of both the Alumni Council and the Alumni Association, presided. He reviewed briefly the history of the movement to establish an Alumni House at Bowdoin and spoke fondly of his former teacher, the late Professor Marshall Perley Cram '04, who bequeathed the building to the College in 1935. He also introduced a number of speakers, including Willard B. Arnold, III '31, Chairman of the Alumni Fund, and Winthrop B. Walker '36, Chairman of the Council's Alumni House Committee.

William R. Owen '37, Twenty-Fifth Reunion Chairman and Fund Agent, spoke for the Class of 1937, in special recognition of its Twenty-Fifth Reunion gift, presented to Bowdoin to help renovate the facility at 83 Federal Street. He made special reference to the 1937 Lounge, dedicated to the memory of four members of the Class who gave their lives in the armed forces during World War II.

Dr. Ogden introduced Fund Secretary Robert M. Cross '45, Alumni Secretary Peter C. Barnard '50, and Fund Director J. Philip Smith '29, past Chairman of the Council's Alumni House Committee, who presented a special framed citation to André R. Warren, Assistant Superintendent of Grounds and Buildings, commending him for his work in designing and supervising the renovations of the Alumni House. Dr. Ogden also commended Mr. Warren and presented to him a Bowdoin Chair bearing a brass plate, upon which was engraved the following message: "Presented to André R. Warren by the Bowdoin College Alumni Association on Saturday, October 20, 1962, Alumni Day, in grateful recognition of his enthusiastic and imaginative services as designer and renovator of the Alumni House."

The final speaker was President James S. Coles, who told of the devotion and loyalty of generations of Bowdoin men and the importance of the Alumni House to the College and to the alumni. He presented a special gold key to Dr. Ogden, symbolizing Bowdoin's "gift" to her alumni — a College-owned building especially designed and designated for use by Bowdoin men and their guests.

Dr. Ogden handed the key to the Alumni Secretary, as general custodian and guardian of the facility. Then President Coles and Mrs. Ogden, followed by Dr. Ogden and Mrs. Coles, led alumni and visitors through the Alumni House to a front room, where the Alumni Day reception was held.

The best estimates are that 600 to 700 alumni and guests visited the house during the afternoon and early evening. Already the Alumni House has been used for a number of different Bowdoin functions, including meetings of the Alumni Council and Alumni Fund, the Bowdoin Clubs of Brunswick and Portland, the Bowdoin Art Museum Associates, the Faculty, and the Capital Campaign. More meetings are scheduled for the late winter and spring, and the facility will be kept open during Commencement and Reunion Weekend.

Adjacent to the campus but set off by this handsome building is within easy walking distance of practically every other Bowdoin building. Attractive lounges and meeting rooms are supplemented by adequate rest rooms, coat rooms, and other facilities. The building contains a catering kitchen and a public telephone, and a steward is on duty whenever the Alumni House is open. Visitors to 83 Federal Street have been particularly pleased by the attractive and comfortable Class of 1937 Memorial Lounge at the rear of the building. This converted barn area contains colonial-type pine furniture, a large open fireplace (surmounted by a large Bowdoin seal), and a number of interesting photographs of the Bowdoin campus and the Town of Brunswick in days gone by.

Your reviewer leant back comfortably to spend a couple of evenings reading Forrestal's life, during which he found this excerpt from a memorandum by Tom Corcoran to F.D.R., apparently in May of 1940:

"The appointment TOGETHER of Forrestal (as administrative assistant) and of Sumner Pike to the Republican vacancy on S.E.C. would head off all the nonsense Forrestal is using to try to get you to 'recognize' Willkie."

At this point, your reviewer lost his calm objective mood; he had never known that he was coupled with Jim Forrestal in a plot against Henry Luce. He relapsed into a nostalgic haze and did some day dreaming. He was riding up to the Supreme Court with Tom Corcoran and Ben Cohen to see Bill Douglas, where the good Justice shamed him into accepting an appointment with the S.E.C.

He was in Forrestal's room in the Carlton Hotel listening to the voting in Philadelphia when Willkie was nominated for the Presidency; he was betting with John Sullivan on the Maine elections, a bet which he lost and forgot to pay until rudely reminded by said Sullivan at the wedding reception of Ed Foley and the former Mrs. Bowdoin; he was listening to Admiral King discussing the great advantages of Casco Bay over Newport as a Naval base due to the gentle king in Portland compared to Newport's social whirl; he was hearing Admiral Nimitz tell of transferring his best code-breaker away from Hawaii since this cryptic genius was cleaning up at bridge and poker on the poor fresh-faced young aviators coming on leave from Pearl.

I suppose anybody who was in the Washington rat race during the 40's would have similar reminiscences.

However, there was still a book to review. This book is a most interesting study of the changes in the Navy Department which took place between Forrestal's advent in 1940 and September 17, 1947, when he was sworn in as our first Secretary of Defense.

The Navy has always been a hard nut for the Civilian Secretaries to crack. Most Secretaries have not tried very hard to understand what it takes to make it tick. Probably Gideon Welles during the Civil War came the nearest to exercising civilian control. From then until Forrestal's appointment the most successful at breaking the barrier seem to have been two Assistant Secretaries, both named Roosevelt.

The Navy Department is still not easy to understand for anybody who is not a complete professional. More than either the Army or the Air Force, its corps of officers is drawn almost completely from graduates of its service academy. It is organized into semi-autonomous bureaus, each one exercising highly technical functions. It has been, and to some extent still is, tradition-bound—more so than the other services.

When Forrestal went to the Navy, first as Under Secretary to Frank Knox in August of 1940 and later as Secretary in the spring of 1944, he had to deal with a most inflexible character, Admiral Ernest King. King was Navy through and through, and was not going to be bossed around by a civilian. The story of the war and early post-war years in Navy Department organization is largely one of the relations between these two people.

Forrestal himself was not noted for flexibility. For instance, when Kate Foley, his private secretary, carried the word from Leslie Bille that in Bille's words "he was in,"

"She stepped into his adjacent big Office: 'You're Secretary of the Navy. For several minutes he sat and grinned at Bill Bille and then he had the only time in their nine years together in government service, she said later, that anything broke through the mask that habitually hid his emotions.'

Your reviewer had been acquainted with Forrestal in Wall Street from the early 1920's and saw quite a good deal of him when they were both in Washington. During this time he remembers no instance where Forrestal broke through his reserve. He had the impression, confirmed by the tragedy which ended Jim's life after the period covered by this book, that Forrestal might break before he would bend. The clash of these two, Forrestal and King, carries through as the leit-motif of this volume.

Of course, there was a war to be won, and the devotion and skill of the Navy, particularly in the Pacific, were high factors in its winning. That story is well told in Admiral Samuel Eliot Morison's grand history of the Naval part of the conflict.

The book under review gives in careful and correct detail, in so far as I can determine, the continuous struggle in Washington between the Admirals and the civilians. One other factor, and not a small one, also entered: President Roosevelt, as a former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was inclined to get into the act and with Admiral Leahy, at the White House, showed his characteristic tendencies to ignore the chain of authority and to bypass both Forrestal and King. One may note that the same thing happened in Great Britain, where "a former Naval person" was inclined to forget organization charts.

For anyone who is interested in organizational problems, particularly in government, or who lived for any time in the Washington atmosphere this is a most interesting and informative book. Necessarily it includes many fine bits of background material, but it is to the credit of the reader. Today the Navy is a peculiar combination of the most tradition-bound and most forward-looking division of our Defense Department. If Forrestal had only the creation of the Office of Naval Research to his credit, he still would have left a shining record. The country is grateful to him, and his memory is precious in our history.

Forestal and the Navy will serve to preserve that record.
The publisher's production department should have controlled the quality of photographs to suit the reproduction method used to print this book. Few authors know enough about photo editing and reproduction techniques to be able to serve as their own picture editor, and yet most publishers expect them to.

One of the many refreshing aspects of Man and the Earth is Professor Hoyt's relaxed writing style, rare in textbooks: "Everlasting hills," man calls them, and so they may be when measured on his anthropocentric scale; but when examined by a geological time scale, they are seen to be in a state of constant flux, rising here and sinking there... On the moon the war is over, and the hills of that heavenly body are in reality everlasting.

With the aid of Man and the Earth, a competent teacher need not be a "geographer" -- which Professor Hoyt confesses to be -- in order to awaken in the student an interest in geography that will extend far beyond the needs to prepare for the next examination.

ROY A. GALLANT 50

To the number of excellent volumes dealing with the policy of various states at the Paris Peace Conference after World War I, Spector has made a distinguished contribution. Based on Bratianu's report on the 1919-20 peace settlement had not been covered in a monograph. A graduate of the Russian Institute at Columbia, the author also received his Ph.D. at that university, and this study is an outgrowth of his doctoral dissertation. The eighty pages of introductory footnotes and three pages of bibliography attest to the thoroughness of his analysis and will be a real help to scholars working on related topics.

The volume rightly starts out with a discussion of Rumania's entry into World War I. Here Ioin I. C. Bratianu made his mark as a statesman. He was, in fact, more than a statesman; he was an able son of his distinguished father as a politician. He was both wily and single-minded; to him a greater Rumania was the one thing that counted, and any effort toward that end was legitimate. Despite the alliance with the Central Powers, Bratianu had no great difficulty in carrying the day for a policy of neutrality when war broke out in 1914. Russia at once offered Rumania significant territorial gains as compensation for her neutrality and held out additional promises if Rumania would join the Entente powers in the war. There was some difficulty, however, in getting these promises on paper, and the victories of the Central Powers, the entrance of Bulgaria into the war, and the failure of the Danube nations to carry all convinced her of the advantage of remaining neutral. This decision was accordingly announced to the world on May 21, 1915.

Spector narrates in detail all the negotiations leading up to Rumania's entrance into the war and then proceeds to the conclusion of the separate Peace of Bucharest with the Central Powers in May of 1918. With Russia out of the war the western powers tried to persuade the Rumanian government to leave the country and fight on as a government-in-exile, but this the Rumanians refused to do. They negotiated, took over Bessarabia, and lived on to fight another day. They entered the war on the 11th of October-Hungary in November of 1918, and the Rumanian forces were soon in occupation of most of the Hungarian territory to which they laid claim.

Nowhere else are the long and difficult negotiations involving territorial cessions to Rumania so carefully outlined as in this volume. Bratianu defined the great powers and refused time and time again to accept their proposals. The allied powers also were split--France and Italy on the whole playing along with Bratianu, while Britain and, above all, the United States were less favorably inclined toward Rumanian views. The steps leading to the Rumanian occupation of Bukovina with the overthrow of the communist Bela Kun regime and the subsequent efforts of the great powers to get Rumanian forces out of Hungary are well covered. The negotiations about the Banat, the Dobruja, Bessarabia, the Bukovina, and Rumania's claim to all territory to the Tisza River (which she did not obtain) tend to become detailed and are not exactly exciting reading. Yet this is how history is made, and this volume is written for the specialist, not for the casual reader.

Lest Bowdoin men think professors no longer write history, I might add that one map is hardly adequate for this splendid volume. Even that map might have been strengthened if the final Hungarian-Rumanian boundary had been drawn in. A map of Rumania showing the different regions to which references are constantly made would have been useful. I also miss a description of the minorities which were included in the greater Rumania, particularly in the Transylvania area, and an evaluation with reference to the principle of nationality of the boundaries as drawn. But like a good number of Spector's former term papers with me, this is a minor quibble, and I am happy to congratulate him on a sound and scholarly piece of work.

A Third Man In The Admissions Office

ON SATURDAY, MARCH 2, at the final luncheon of the Midwinter Meeting of the Alumni Council, President Coles made an announcement that will have far-reaching effects on Bowdoin’s admissions program. There will soon be a third man in the Admissions Office. President Coles’ announcement to Members of the Council and their guests was of particular significance: in recent years the Council has pinpointed the need for a third admissions officer and has gone on record urging the President and the Governing Boards to add such a person to the administrative staff as soon as practicable.

On July 1, 1963, Robert C. Mellow will begin his new duties as Associate Director of Admissions. He is now Assistant to the Headmaster at the St. Louis Country Day School in Missouri, a position he has held since 1958. He is also Instructor in English at Washington University in St. Louis.

Robert Mellow is a native of Rutland, Vermont, and is married to the former Mary E. Terenzini of that city. They have five children: Jonathan (9), Mary G. (8), Ann (6), David (2), and Elizabeth (1).

Mr. Mellow prepared at the Phillips Exeter Academy and then entered Harvard, from which he graduated in 1953. At Harvard he was a Dean’s List student, was captain of the freshman track team, and eventually became a member of the 1951 Harvard-Yale track team that competed in England against the joint Oxford-Cambridge team. He has held several AAU, intercollegiate, and Heptagonal championships in the pole vault and the broad jump. In 1959 he received the master of arts degree from the Bread Loaf School of English at Middlebury College.

In 1953-54 he was an advertising copywriter for the General Electric Company in Schenectady, New York. From 1956 until 1958, when he went to his present position, he served as Manager of Research in the Community Relations Division and as a recruiting manager for the International Business Machines Corporation in Yorktown, New York.

At Bowdoin Mr. Mellow will join Director of Admissions Hubert S. Shaw ’36 and Assistant Director of Admissions Walter H. Moulton ’58 in the new, enlarged Admissions Office, which now occupies most of the second floor of Massachusetts Hall. The expanded space will give the expanded staff more elbow room in which to operate more effectively each year in attracting greater numbers of able admissions prospects to Bowdoin’s front door. In addition to giving the College broader coverage through school visits where Bowdoin already has good contacts, as well as in newer areas farther afield, the augmented staff, working in adequate, uncramped quarters, will be ready to begin admitting the larger freshman classes (about 240 apiece) necessitated by the new Senior Center and the planned gradual expansion of the student body from 775 to 925.

MR. SHAW REPORTS that this year’s admissions figures conform to the pattern of recent years. Approximately 950 applicants are seeking admission to the next freshman class. March 1 was the deadline for formal applications, and the Admissions Office staff is now making the final selections. All applicants will be notified on April 13 whether they have been accepted, rejected, or put on the waiting list. Approximately 325 to 350 will be admitted. All are being asked to accept or decline their certificate of admission on or before May 1, at which time approximately 210 will have signed up to come to Bowdoin in the fall as the Class of 1967.
Fraternities And Look Magazine

THE MARCH 12, 1963, issue of Look Magazine carried an article by Senior Editor John Poppy entitled “Will Fraternities Survive?” Mr. Poppy stated that fraternities are in trouble at Williams, at Brown, at Stanford, and at Bowdoin. To “prove” his case with reference to Bowdoin he took out of context a statement by President Coles concerning some of the benefits of the Senior Center Program.

On February 28 President Coles wrote the following letter to the Editor of Look:

“In John Poppy’s article ‘Will Fraternities Survive?’ (Look, March 12, 1963) a statement, quoted out of context, suggests that the fraternities at Bowdoin are under attack by the College. On the contrary, Bowdoin College is deeply committed to the fraternity as a means of organizing the undergraduate body and providing for the fullest development of the undergraduate student.

“With more than 97% of Bowdoin students joining fraternities, and with no restrictions on membership, the fraternities are genuinely democratic components of the College. We are supporting constructive efforts by the fraternities themselves to enable them to reach their full potential of effectiveness.

“Recognizing the markedly different attitudes and needs of the college senior, Bowdoin has developed the unique Bowdoin Senior Center Program, which will climax the Bowdoin student’s total undergraduate experience. For the underclass years, this program places greater emphasis upon the role of the fraternity as a positive force within the College.

“It was within the context of the whole four years of college, including the role of the Bowdoin fraternity as well as that of the new Senior Center, that I spoke of . . . Bowdoin’s interest in the role of total environment in undergraduate education, the importance which the College attaches to it, and the means by which we plan to provide a total environment which will support the goals of the College, rather than negating or merely tolerating them.’

“Bowdoin College holds its fraternities in high regard. We have pride in them, and confidence in their future.”

R.M.C.
BOWDOIN HAS LONG BEEN RECOGNIZED for the part played by her sons in the Civil War of a century ago. Hatch's History of Bowdoin College, not always the most accurate of chronicles, says that 290 Bowdoin men "were in the Union service during the war, more, in proportion to the number of graduates and undergraduates, than from any other college in the land." Certainly Bowdoin rallied in strength to the Union cause, despite the fact that the President of the College in the war period, Leonard Woods, was an avowed pacifist.

Most Bowdoin men are aware of the roster of servicemen of 1861 to 1865 which spans the foyer of Memorial Hall. Some have scanned it with care, and some have found there the names of kinsmen or of friends or local "characters" of their younger days. But how many have checked the lists for evidence of the leadership which might have been expected from the men who were enrolled in or had attended Maine's oldest college? The evidence is there. A full two dozen of those whose names are there recorded, or almost one out of twelve, were general officers, commissioned or, more often, brevetted to wear at least the single star of a Brigadier.

Most of these officers were Maine men, serving with Maine units, but the oldest of them, senior in years and by college class if not in rank, was a Massachusetts man. WILLIAM S. LINCOLN of the Class of 1830, son of Governor Levi Lincoln of Massachusetts, was already fifty years of age when he organized the 34th Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry in 1862. He rose to the command of the regiment, was wounded at New Market in May, 1864, and was taken prisoner. He escaped, being almost three weeks between the lines, and was eventually brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers in recognition of his meritorious service in the Shenandoah Valley.

FREDERICK D. SEWALL of the Class of 1846, son and father of Bowdoin men, was a Bath native who was practicing law in that city in 1861. In August he was appointed Assistant Adjutant General of U. S. Volunteers and assigned to the Army of the Potomac with duty on the staff of General O. O. Howard — of whom more later — serving with him until after the battle of Fair Oaks. In June of 1862 he was appointed Colonel of the Nineteenth Maine Infantry, a regiment composed principally of men from Sagadahoc, Waldo, Knox, and Kennebec Counties, later to be recognized, by virtue of a roster of more than 130 men killed in action or recorded as having died of wounds, as one of "Fox's 500 Fighting Regiments." Forced to resign on account of ill health in the spring of 1863, after participating in the battle of Fredericksburg, he returned to service a year later as Colonel of the Third Regiment of the Veteran Reserve Corps. In 1864 he commanded a brigade before Alexandria and in 1865 received the brevet rank of Brigadier General.

THOMAS H. TALBOT of the Class of 1846, a native of East Machias, was one of three Bowdoin brothers. He left a law practice in Portland to become Lieutenant Colonel of the Eighteenth Maine Volunteers, later the First Maine Heavy Artillery. The regiment was actively involved in the Virginia campaign of 1864 and was heavily engaged at Spotsylvania Court House, where it suffered almost 500 casualties. Promoted to command the regiment following the death of its Colonel, Colonel Talbot was soon forced to resign the command because of physical disability. He was later brevetted Brigadier General.

WILLIAM HOBSON of the Class of 1849 was principal of the high school in Saco when he was mustered into service as Captain of Company I of the Seventeenth Maine, a regiment with a record of intensive action and high casualties and recognized as one of "Fox's 300." Wounded at Amelia Springs, Virginia, he was successively promoted to be major and lieutenant colonel, commanding the regiment, and was brevetted Colonel and Brigadier General.

OLIVER O. HOWARD of the Class of 1850 was one of the few professional soldiers on the Bowdoin Roll of Honor. His autobiography is a formidable volume — actually two volumes — and much has been written about him, some of it controversial.

On graduating from Bowdoin, where he excelled in mathematics, he accepted an appointment to West Point, offered him by his uncle, the Honorable John Otis of the Class of 1823. He was fourth man in his West Point class, was commissioned in the Ordnance Department, and was assigned to arsenal duty. In 1857, after serving as Chief of Ordnance in the Seminole War, he was recalled to the Military Academy as Assistant Professor of Mathematics. When the war broke PHILIP S. WILDER '23, the author of "Stars on Their Shoulders," presented it originally as a paper before the Brunswick Town and College Club on January 11 of this year.

Mr. Wilder has been at Bowdoin in one capacity or another since 1927, when he was appointed Acting Alumni Secretary. For many years he was also Alumni Secretary and Assistant Professor of Education. During World War II he served in the United States Army for four years and attained the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Since 1946 Mr. Wilder has been Assistant to the President at Bowdoin. In 1959 he was also appointed Director of Student Aid, in which position he has overall responsibility for the program of financial aid to students, including scholarships, loans, and campus jobs. In addition, he is Foreign Student Adviser and Fulbright Adviser and takes care of other administrative details too numerous to mention and not easy to categorize.
out, he requested assignment to combat duty. This request was refused, whereupon he relinquished his regular commission and became Colonel of the Third Maine. By the fall of 1861 he had commanded a brigade at the First Battle of Bull Run and had been brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers. In June of 1862, at Fair Oaks, Virginia, in the Peninsula campaign, "he led the Sixty-first New York Infantry in a charge in which he was twice severely wounded in the right arm, necessitating its amputation," and in which he had two horses shot under him. In 1893, for this action, he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. It has been related that, not long after his return to service, he met General Philip Kearney, who had lost his left arm, and suggested that they should buy their gloves together.

In the fall of 1862, after service at Fredericksburg, he was made Major General of Volunteers and given command of the Eleventh Corps, which he led at Chancellorsville and at Gettysburg, where he held a superior force in check on the first day and, being for a time in full command, shared in selecting the field for the final phases of the battle. In October of 1863 he was with the Army of the Cumberland, and in the spring of 1864 he commanded the Fourth Army Corps and later the Army of the Tennessee. He commanded the right wing in General Sherman's famous March to the Sea. In December of 1864, after service in the invasion of the Carolinas, he was given the full rank of Brigadier General in the Regular Army. He was later brevetted Major General for gallantry at the Battle of Ezra Church.

From May of 1865 until June of 1872 he was Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, often called the Freedmen's Bureau, and for five years he served as President of Howard University, which bears his name.

Subsequently he was for six years in command of the Department of the Columbia, where he conducted two wars with hostile Indians, and was for two years Superintendent of the Military Academy. Commanding the Department of the Platte, he was in 1886 promoted to Major General, U.S.A., and was given the command of the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's Island, New York.

Charles W. Roberts of the Class of 1851 was among the first to enter the service. Appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the Second Maine Volunteers, he was distinguished for his bravery at the battle of Bull Run, was promoted to Colonel, and commanded his regiment during the campaign of 1862, with service in several major battles and occasional duty as a brigade commander. He was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers for "meritorious conduct" at the battle of Hanover Court House but was forced to resign his commission in 1863 because of ill health.

Joshua L. Chamberlain of the Class of 1852 has been chronicled in Soil of the Lion and in The Twentieth Maine and has told much of his own story in The Passing of the Armies and in a number of articles, reports, and addresses.

One of the most interesting items which I have encountered in my reading is the single paragraph devoted to the gallant action of the Twentieth at Gettysburg as presented in Whitman and True's Maine in the War for the Union. Introdued with a single sentence from the preceding paragraph, it follows:

"The corps . . . [it is not identified, but was actually the Fifth] resumed the march . . . and on the second day of July (1863), came upon the battlefield of Gettysburg.

The Twentieth, under command of Col. Chamberlain, formed the extreme left of the line of battle on the afternoon of that day. The brigade was posted along the crest of a rocky, wooded hill, and facing to the west. This hill gradually sloped down to a level space also wooded, and two hundred yards to the left rose again abruptly in a peak called Wolf Hill. The regiment was bent back from the main line and faced toward the hill beyond. A company was thrown forward as skirmishers, well out, but, for some reason, not connecting on the right. The line was scarcely established when the enemy in force, without skirmishers, pushed through the woods between our line and the hill, drove the skirmishers directly to the rear, and fell at once in two lines upon the left wing of the regiment, which also had been bent back and faced nearly to the rear. After a brief struggle the first attack was repulsed, and the enemy re-formed and made a second, more vigorous and persistent. The lines surged back and forth awhile, when the Colonel ordered a charge, with fixed bayonets, and the right wing swung forward cutting the enemy off from their retreat. As they fell back in some confusion, the company of skirmishers which had been driven off at the beginning of the action and were partly in rear of the enemy, poured a volley into the disorganized crowd. This added to their panic, and a large number, some driven before, directly to the rear, surrendered. Nearly three hundred prisoners were taken, including twelve commissioned officers, one a Colonel. The prisoners were of the Fourth and Fifth Texas and Fifteenth and Forty-seventh Alabama, a portion of Longstreet's corps. In the evening the regiment charged and drove the enemy from Wolf Hill, and pushed skirmishers well down on the opposite side in close proximity to the enemy. Their skirmishers advanced again, cautiously, in the darkness, and dense woods. Twenty-three of them and one commissioned officer, decoyed into our lines, were captured by Lieut. Sideling and five men. The total loss to the regiment in the action of the second, was three officers killed and one hundred and thirty-four men killed and wounded."

This account was written early in 1865, if not before, and did not recognize the significance later given to this action, actually fought on and between two hills, Little Round Top and Round Top, or Great Round Top. There was, and is, a Wolf Hill at Gettysburg, but it was behind the Union lines, and played no vital part in the battle. At least one full-size book and countless lesser reports, essays, analyses, and personal narratives have been devoted to telling the story of the two Round Tops.

It is interesting to note that eleven of Bowdoin's twenty-four general officers were at Gettysburg. Some 330 officers and 5,012 men, of the 70,000 from the State of Maine who fought for the Union, were on the field during those four furious days.

Chamberlain's Twentieth Maine went into action with 28 officers and 358 men "equipped," as the report reads, and suffered losses of more than 130 killed and wounded, as noted above. He received a Congressional Medal of Honor in 1893 for "daring heroism and great tenacity in holding his position on the Little Round Top against repeated assaults and carrying the advance position on the Great Round Top."

Chamberlain was promoted on the field at Petersburg by General Grant, was six times wounded, was chosen by General Grant to receive the surrender of Lee's Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox, and was brevetted Major General of Volunteers.

It seems quite certain that General Chamberlain was the first to refer to the "stillness at Appomattox" which was used by Bruce Catton as the title for one of his best-known books. In a paper read at a military reunion, entitled "The Third Brigade at Appomattox," Chamberlain speaks of the approach of Lee's troops for the march-past of surrender: "On they come with careless, swinging route step, the column thick with battle flags, disproportionate to their depleted numbers. . . . All the while on our part not a sound of trumpet or drum, not a cheer, nor word or motion of man, but awful stillness, as if it were the passing of the dead."

During his service General Chamberlain commanded troops in twenty-four battles, eight reconnaissances, and many skirmishes. He fought five successful independent engagements against superior numbers with his own command and took in battle 2,700 prisoners and eight battle flags. It seems almost superfluous to mention his later service as President of Bowdoin and as Governor of Maine.

JAMES D. FESSENDEEN of the Class of 1852, a Portland lawyer, was the grandson of a former Bowdoin Overseer and the son of U. S. Senator William Pitt Fessenden of the Class of 1823. In September of 1861 he was selected by the Governor of Maine to recruit and serve as captain of a company of rifle sharpshooters for the service of "the general government." The men were carefully selected, one test being the placing of ten consecutive shots in a target at two hundred yards, firing at rest, with an average distance "not exceeding five inches from the centre of the bull's eye to the centre of the hole." The company became Company D of the Second Regiment of United States Sharpshooters and served with great distinction throughout the war.

Captain Fessenden is reported as having been with General Sheridan in his famous ride from Winchester to Cedar Creek, Virginia. In October of 1862, not long after the Battle of Antietam, he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and assigned to the staff of Major General Hunter, whom he served as aide-de-camp. In the summer of 1863, now a Colonel, he was sent to Tennessee as aide-de-camp to General Hooker, with whom he remained throughout his campaigns in the West and from Chattanooga to Atlanta. He was promoted to full Brigadier General of Volunteers and in the winter of 1865 commanded the U. S. forces at Winchester, then a vital post in the valley of Virginia. He was finally promoted to the brevet rank of Major General of Volunteers.

WILLIAM M. McARTHUR of the Class of 1853, son and brother of Bowdoin men, entered service in September of 1861 as Captain of Company I of the Eighth Maine, one of "Fox's 300." His record and that of the regiment are full of the names of memorable engagements: Tybee Island, Fort Pulaski, Bermuda Hundred, Petersburg, where he was wounded while leading a charge, Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, and Appomattox. He was regularly promoted, becoming Colonel of the regiment in March of 1865, and was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers on leaving the service. General McArthur's older brother, Arthur, who graduated from Bowdoin in 1850, was a Major in the Confederate Army, serving with the Sixth Louisiana Regiment. He died in service at Winchester, Virginia, on May 25, 1862.

HENRY C. WOOD of the Class of 1854 was in 1856 appointed a Second Lieutenant in the First U. S. Infantry by President Franklin Pierce of the Class of 1824. He studied military science at Norwich University and served on the frontier in Texas and Indian territory until the outbreak of the war, when he was assigned to the command of General Lyon in Missouri as a First Lieutenant. Wounded at the battle of Wilson's Creek, he was promoted to Captain and, in 1864, to Major. In 1865, after service with General Sturgis and General Fremont, he was brevetted Lieutenant Colonel and Colonel. Remaining in the Regular Army after the war, he was retired in 1904 as a Brigadier General. In 1893 he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for "distinguished gallantry in the battle of Wilson's Creek."

CHARLES HAMLIN of the Class of 1857, son of Lincoln's Vice-President, Hamblil Hamlin, entered the Army as Major of the Eighteenth Maine. He saw action at Gettysburg and in other battles as a divisional Assistant Adjutant General and was later brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers for his work at Gettysburg.

THOMAS H. HUBBARD of the Class of 1857, known to Bowdoin men as the donor of Hubbard Hall, was practicing law in New York when the war began. He entered the service in 1862 and served as Second Lieutenant of the First Maine, a regiment which had been organized in the preceding spring. Mustered out in 1863, he became Lieutenant Colonel of the Thirty-first Maine and saw extensive service in the Red River campaign, being commended by Admiral Porter for the construction of a dam by which a fleet of Federal gunboats was saved from capture. In the Shenandoah Valley, under General Sheridan, he was promoted to Colonel, commanding the regiment and, on many occasions, a brigade. He was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers in 1865. Active in the Loyal Legion, he became its National Commander-in-Chief in 1913.

JONATHAN P. CILLEY of the Class of 1858 was the son of Longfellow's classmate Jonathan Gilley. He was the first man to enroll in the First Maine Cavalry, one of "Fox's 300," and was chosen Captain of Company B. He was also the first member of the regiment to be wounded. Within three years he had been wounded twice more and had been brevetted Colonel and Brigadier General of Volunteers for distinguished service at Five Forks, Farmville, and Appomattox Court House.

FRANCIS FESSENDEN of the Class of 1858 was the son of Senator Fessenden and brother of General James D. Fessenden. A New York lawyer, he was made a captain in the Nineteenth U. S. Infantry and served with that regiment under General Buell in Tennessee, being wounded at Shiloh. Returning to Maine, he became Colonel of the Twenty-fifth Maine and later of the Thirtieth Maine. With them he served in the Department of the Gulf, losing a leg in battle at Cane River, Louisiana, and for a time commanding a brigade. Repeatedly recognized for gallant service, he was eventually brevetted Major General, U.S.A. Prior to retiring, he was offered, but declined to accept, the command of the 45th U. S. Infantry.

GEORGE F. GRANGER OF THE CLASS OF 1858, who had not completed his Bowdoin course, was an officer in the Ninth Maine, one of "Fox's 300," being promoted through the ranks from First Lieutenant to Colonel and brevet Brigadier General of Volunteers. He was wounded at Drury's Bluff.

ELLIS SPEAR OF THE CLASS OF 1858, whose bas-relief portrait is on a stair wall at Memorial Hall and whose son and grandsons followed him to Bowdoin, entered service as Captain of Company G of the Twentieth Maine and continued with the regiment as Major, Lieutenant Colonel, and Colonel. Acting on occasion as a brigade commander, he was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers in 1865. He was wounded at the North Anna and was three times mentioned in official reports for distinguished and efficient service.

HENRY G. THOMAS, who left the Class of 1858 to become an Amherst graduate, enlisted in the Army in April of 1861. In August he became Captain of Company G of the Fifth Maine but later transferred to the Eleventh U. S. Infantry. In 1863 he became the first officer of the Regular Army to volunteer to command a regiment of Colored Troops. As Colonel of the Second Regiment, U. S. Colored Troops, he served in the James River and Petersburg campaigns, was given a brigade, and eventually was brevetted Major General of Volunteers and Brevet Colonel, U.S.A. He remained in the Regular Army until 1891.

CHARLES H. HOWARD of the Class of 1859 began his service as Drum Major of his brother Oliver's regiment, the Third Maine. During the war years he was promoted through the grades to be brevet Brigadier General of Volunteers. He took part in sixty-eight battles and engagements, including Fair Oaks and Fredericksburg, in both of which he was wounded, Gettysburg, Chattanooga, and Atlanta. He took part in Sherman's March to the Sea and later commanded a training camp comprising several regiments of Colored Troops.

JOHN F. APPLETON of the Class of 1860, who had begun the study of law, was mustered in as Captain of Company H of the Twelfth Maine, one of "Fox's 300" and known as "The Lawyers' Regiment." The regiment saw service in Louisiana in 1862, and Captain Appleton was commended by General Butler and was recognized for gallantry in an assault at the siege of Port Hudson. In June of 1863 he became Colonel of a regiment of Colored Troops and later, commanding a brigade, was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers.

JOHN M. BROWN of the Class of 1860, a Portland lawyer, became in 1862 Adjutant of the Twentieth Maine, with which he served at Antietam and Fredericksburg and in the Rappahannock Campaign. At Chancellorsville he was on the staff of General Ayres. He was made a Captain in 1863 and was at Gettysburg and in the operations around Fort Wagner and Charleston. In 1864 he was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel of the Thirty-second Maine, which he commanded in the battles of the North Anna, Totopotomoy, and Cold Harbor. He was severely wounded before Petersburg and was honorably discharged in the fall of 1864 for physical disability. Recognized for distinguished gallantry at Fredericksburg and Gettysburg, he was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers and later served in this rank in the Maine State Militia.

THOMAS W. HYDE of the Class of 1861 will be recognized as the man in whose memory Bowdoin's Athletic Building was given to the College. He had spent much of his senior year in Chicago and received a degree not only from Bowdoin but also from the newly organized University of Chicago. He entered service in Chicago, but his regiment was not accepted by the government, so he returned to Maine and organized a company for the Seventh Maine, one of "Fox's 300," which he commanded as a Major at the battles of Second Bull Run, Crampton's Gap, and Antietam, where he had three horses shot under him and was slightly wounded. He was at Gettysburg with General Sedgwick as aide-de-camp and Provost Marshal of the Sixth Army Corps and was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in December of 1863. The following year he was commissioned Colonel of the First Maine Veteran Volunteers, with which he served before Petersburg. In 1865, before Richmond, he commanded the "wedge" assault which led to the fall of the city. He was brevetted Brigadier General of Volunteers and in 1891 was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. His citation speaks of his leading his regiment at Antietam "in an assault on a strong body of the enemy's infantry, keeping up the fight until the greater part of his men had been killed and wounded, bringing the remainder safely out of the fight." His personal military autobiography, Following the Greek Cross, is considered one of the best of many such narratives.

STEPHEN H. MANNING OF THE CLASS OF 1861 entered service in May of 1861 as Quartermaster Sergeant of the First Maine. In September he became a First Lieutenant and Quartermaster of the Fifth Maine, and in the following fall he was made a Captain and Assistant Quartermaster of the First Division of the Sixth Corps. He served with this corps throughout the remainder of the war, becoming Chief Quartermaster and being brevetted Major, Lieutenant Colonel, and Colonel. In November of 1865 he was made Chief Quartermaster of the Department of Texas and in 1866 was mustered out as a Brevet Brigadier.

CHARLES P. MATTOCKS of the Class of 1862 enlisted immediately following his graduation and was made First Lieutenant of Company A of the Seventeenth Maine. As a Captain he served with distinction at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg. Promoted to Major, he commanded the regiment during most of the winter of 1863. In March of 1864 he was given command of the First U. S. Sharpshooters. In May of that year he was captured in the battle of the Wilderness. Confinéd in several Southern prisons, he escaped at Columbia, S.C., with Lieutenant Charles O. Hunt of the Class of 1861 but was recaptured in North Carolina and sent to Libby Prison at Richmond. He was exchanged in February of 1865, rejoined his regiment, and took part in the last campaign of the Army of the Potomac. He received the Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery at the battle of Sailor’s Creek and was commissioned Colonel of his old regiment, the Seventeenth Maine, and brevetted Brigadier General. Active in the State Militia after the war, he was appointed a Brigadier General of U. S. Volunteers at the outbreak of the war with Spain. His Congressional Medal citation says that he “displayed extraordinary gallantry in leading a charge of his regiment which resulted in the capture of a large number of prisoners and a stand of colors.”

ISAAC W. STARBIRD of the Class of 1862 was commissioned Captain of Company F of the Nineteenth Maine immediately upon graduation. He saw service at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, where he commanded a section of the Union line that received Pickett’s famous charge and where he was wounded. In 1864, as a brigade inspector, he participated in all the battles of the Wilderness campaign. He commanded his regiment, having been promoted through the ranks, in the final advance on Petersburg and in the pursuit of General Lee. He was severely wounded at the battle of High Bridge and was brevetted Brigadier General for gallantry.

General Starbird began the study of medicine in 1876, received his M.D. degree at Dartmouth two years later, and practiced for many years, becoming eventually Surgeon of the Soldiers’ Home in Chelsea, Massachusetts.

These are our Bowdoin generals of a century ago. There is a certain sameness to their records, but it is a sameness of gallantry and of privation, of devotion and of self-sacrifice. Among them they offered leadership to seventeen regiments of Maine Volunteers and to a dozen or more other units, including numerous brigades, a few divisions, at least two Army Corps, and an Army. Five of them were awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Had they been brought together in 1864 or 1865, they would have been qualified to fill the ranking positions in an Army Corps, under the leadership of Major General Howard. As I would set it up, Chamberlain, Francis Fessenden, and either James Fessenden or Henry Thomas would have commanded Divisions. Cilley would have had a Brigade of Cavalry, Talbot the Artillery, and Mattocks an attached unit of Sharpshooters. Manning and Starbird would have been Quartermaster and Inspector, and Hamlin would have been the Assistant Adjutant General. Brown and Wood might have been aides-de-camp, with the others serving as brigade commanders.

They were young men, these Bowdoin generals, most of them. As of the dates of Gettysburg, they had an average age of 29. If we exclude General Lincoln and consider only the men from Maine, the average drops to 28, and if we look only at the eleven actually in the Gettysburg fighting, to 27.

It may seem strange that the Bowdoin roll of honor lists no medical man of general rank, despite the active Medical School, and no admiral, despite our heritage as a “Salt-Water College.”

There was no lack of Bowdoin doctors in the Civil War. Luther V. Bell of the Class of 1823, the second oldest Bowdoin man to see active service and a past president of the Massachusetts Medical Society, was at the First Battle of Bull Run as surgeon in the Eleventh Massachusetts and became a Brigade Surgeon and Medical Director of General Hooker’s Division. He died of a pulmonary disease at Budd’s Ferry in Virginia in February of 1862. Dr. Alonso Garcelon of the Class of 1836, later to be Mayor of Lewiston and Governor of Maine, was Chief Surgeon for Maine’s regiments and saw service in the field. Dr. Thomas Perley of the Class of 1837 was a Brigade Surgeon with General Grant and was in 1862 made Medical Inspector General of the Army, but he did not rank as a general officer.

In the Navy few flag officers were chosen from among college graduates. Horatio Bridge of the Class of 1825 was a career Navy Paymaster and served from 1853 to 1868 as Chief of the Bureau of Provisions of the Navy. In 1868 he was retired as Paymaster General with the rank of Commodore, and it seems clear that he wore a star on his blue uniform. He is recognized today as the ‘Father of the Navy Supply Corps.

George A. Bright, who was at Bowdoin for a single year as a member of the Class of 1858 and who received his M.D. at Harvard, entered Naval service in 1861 and eventually attained the rank of Rear Admiral.

There was no Bowdoin general whose uniform was gray, despite the persistence of a report to this effect. There were two Confederate Colonels. One of them, Joseph C. Ives of the Class of 1848, also a West Point graduate, served for a time as aide to Jefferson Davis, an honorary graduate of Bowdoin.

They were more than soldiers, these star-wearers of a hundred years ago. They were citizens, most of them citizens of Maine. Fifteen of the twenty-four generals were lawyers, four were bankers, and one was a manufacturer. One was a state governor, one a city mayor, one a sheriff. Six were state legislators, two were judges, and one was a state adjutant general. Three were teachers, one a physician, one an editor. Four served the College as Overseers or Trustees. The record, as I see it, is a pretty good one.
New $1,400,000
Gymnasium
One Of
Goals

As this issue of the ALUMNUS goes to press, the $4,000,000 mark is just around the corner in the College’s $10 million Capital Campaign.

The organizational and special gifts phases have been underway since the Campaign was announced last June at Commencement. Almost all of the 111 areas are now organized.

The major emphasis at the present time continues to be on special gifts, since a large part of the Campaign goal must come from this relatively small number of people.

As plans now stand, the Senior Center, a new Library, and a new Gymnasium will rise on the campus in that order.

Construction of the $3.1 million Senior Center complex, which will house the College’s pioneering program for seniors, is scheduled to start this spring, and completion is slated by the fall of 1964.

Plans call for a start on the new $2 million Library by the fall of 1963, with the building to open in the spring of 1965.

Construction of the new Gymnasium is scheduled to start in the spring of 1964, with completion by the fall of 1965.

The new Gymnasium represents a change of plans from the original architectural concept of additional athletic space. The first plan was to add on the north side of Sargent Gymnasium a wing to balance the Curtis Swimming Pool at an estimated cost of $750,000. But detailed studies during the past year demonstrated the need for redesigning to provide substantially more space.

The result will be a new two-story building located north of and connected to Sargent Gymnasium, which will be altered and renovated to make it an efficient part of Bowdoin’s “athletics for all” policy.

The estimated cost of the expanded plan is $1.4 million. When the new building is completed, the College will once again have available the same amount of space per student that it did when Sargent Gymnasium was completed 50 years ago and the College had an enrollment of 300.

In the words of Campaign Chairman Charles A. Cary ’10, “It appears evident that no lesser scheme will provide adequate facilities for the recreation, physical fitness program, and competitive athletics which are essential elements of a healthy and vigorous college experience.”

Included in the new gym’s 50,000 square feet will be adequate shower and dressing rooms, some 500 full-sized lockers, ten squash courts, and long needed special exercise rooms. A new basketball court will accommodate the varsity and freshman squads and will include 1,500 seats for students and visitors. It will free the present court for physical education classes, intramural competition, and carry-over sports such as badminton and volley ball.

Plans for the new gym were outlined to more than 100 people who attended the second Campaign Leadership Conference, held on the campus from January 31 to February 2. Like the first conference last September, the meeting was designed to explain the Campaign’s objectives and to outline procedures for area chairmen and members of their executive committees. Also attending were members of the National Campaign Committee, members of the Governing Boards, representatives of the Alumni Council and the Alumni Fund, other leading alumni, and officers of the College.

President Coles told the conference that the task of a small liberal arts college is to provide “education in breadth as well as in depth.” Such an education will be provided by the Senior Center Program. “I am convinced,” he said, “that the program we have will make Bowdoin not only one of the most distinguished small colleges of the nation but the most distinguished one.”

Reporting on the progress of the Campaign, Mr. Cary said, “I think that without question we can take pride and satisfaction in the response that has so far been shown.”
Sanford B. Cousins '20, Vice Chairman of the Campaign, described the work of the National Committee, and Vincent B. Welch '38, Alumni Chairman, outlined the campaign organization, which includes 111 areas throughout the country where the majority of Bowdoin alumni live.

Other speakers included Professor Louis O. Coxe, Pierce Professor of English; Professor Dan E. Christie '37, Mathematics Department; Coach Ray S. Bicknell, basketball; Coach Charles J. Butt, swimming; Coach Frank F. Sabasteanski '41, track; Coach Sidney J. Watson, hockey; Professor James A. Storer, Economics Department, faculty member of the National Campaign Committee; Richard Harwell, Librarian; Professor Athern P. Daggett '25, Chairman of the Faculty Committee on the Senior Center Program and Chairman of the Government Department; Malcolm E. Morrell '24, Director of Athletics; Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. '50, the College's Executive Secretary and Campaign Director; Professor Herbert R. Brown, Chairman of the English Department; Roscoe C. Ingalls, Jr. '43, Area Chairman for Westchester County, N. Y.; Rear Admiral Donald B. MacMillan '98, who narrated a film of one of his many Arctic expeditions; Gary A. Yamashita '63, President of the senior class; Paul M. Quinlan '63, an Undergraduate Research Fellow; and three representatives of Kersting, Brown & Co., the College's fund-raising counsel, Campaign Manager Allen K. Holding, Alumni Manager Thomas A. Pyle, and Consultant Robert F. Duncan.

Library Symposium

Three of the nation's most distinguished librarians and four Bowdoin faculty members were the speakers at a symposium on "The Place of a Research Library in a Liberal Arts College," held at Bowdoin on February 21 and 22. They drew to the campus some 150 persons, including representatives of about 50 colleges and universities.

The three library authorities were Frederick H. Wagman, Director of the University Library, University of Michigan, and President-Elect of the American Library Association; Miss Eileen Thornton, Librarian of Oberlin College; and Verner W. Clapp, President of the Council on Library Resources, Inc.

The faculty speakers were Edward C. Kirkland of Thetford Center, Vt., Frank Munsey Professor of History, Emeritus; Professor Athern P. Daggett '25; Bowdoin Librarian Richard Harwell; and Rex Warner, Visiting Professor in Classical History and Literature on the Tallman Foundation.

President Coles stressed the importance of the symposium subject, saying that in recent years "the concept of an undergraduate library as a limited collection and, possibly, one of a fixed size has received much attention. The thinking at Bowdoin is contrary to this concept. The philosophy and practice of the library of a fine liberal arts college must acknowledge obligations to a research-minded faculty and to students who are involved in independent study and in the preparation of honors papers demanding independent research.

Dr. Wagman, who made the opening address, said that less than half of the nation’s four-year colleges have enough books in their libraries to meet the ALA’s minimum standards. In his speech, entitled “A University Librarian Views the Problems of the Liberal Arts College Library,” he cited the ALA standards, which call for a book collection of 50,000 volumes for institutions of 600 students, with an additional 10,000 books for each added 200 undergraduates. This minimum relates to “undergraduate student needs only.”

Dr. Wagman said that Bowdoin’s Library has an “astonishingly high percentage of the resources that a fairly large and random group of productive scholars” at the University of Michigan found useful for their research. Michigan has 25,475 student and 1,769 teachers and more than 3,000,000 volumes in its library. Bowdoin has 800 students, 88 teachers, and a library of about 270,000 volumes.

Miss Thornton, speaking on the topic “Research in a College Library,” said the responsibility for the college library must be shared between the librarian and the faculty. A problem which the librarian faces, she said, is to know “when we reach the saturation point for books in any field of study.”

There is also the situation created when a young professor arrives at a college “with his own specialties in research, which may be vastly different from those of the older man whom he replaces” and which may require that the library purchase a long list of new research material.

In his talk on “The Promise of Advanced Techniques of Librarianship,” Mr. Clapp voiced the hope that these techniques will increasingly give the faculty and students of small liberal arts colleges access to research materials usually found only in large universities.

“There are good prospects,” he said, “that techniques are indeed becoming available which will enable the liberal arts colleges to tap effectively the greater resources of the library world and not be strain-jacketed by a limited, even though well-selected, collection.”

Among the actual or emerging techniques offering exciting possibilities in library work, he listed high-ratio-reduction microphotography, telefacsimile, and computers.

On The Campus

Chapel Demonstration

On Wednesday, January 9, following some days of whispered organization, an estimated 500 students demonstrated in orderly fashion against the compulsory chapel regulation. According to one newspaper account, “College officials said students sat on the floor, stood, and jammed the doorways after quickly filling the chapel’s seats. Most of them remained at their posts even after being told they could get credit for chapel attendance by reporting at the College’s administrative building.”

“The demonstration apparently stemmed from a recent notice sent by Dean of Students A. LeRoy Greason, Jr. to many of the College’s 800 students, calling attention to the minimum attendance requirement. . . . The Dean said he did not consider the demonstration a serious threat, but only a ‘good-humored’ response to his note.”

Seniors are expected to attend five Sunday chapel services and 15 dailies each semester; juniors and sophomores, five Sundays and 20 dailies; and freshmen, six Sundays and 25 dailies.

Famiglietti Makes U.S. Team

Ron Famiglietti ’62, Captain of the 1961-62 varsity hockey team, was a member of the 17-man amateur hockey team that represented the United States at the World Championships at Stockholm, Sweden, in March. He made the team during the first two weeks in January after completing the Air Defense Officer Orientation Course at Fort Bliss, Texas, on December 20.

On leave from the Army as a second lieutenant, Famiglietti left New York with the rest of the U.S. team on January 29. It played in Brussels, Prague, Moscow, Warsaw, Vienna, Zurich, Munich, Copenhagen, Goteborg, Geneva, London, Dublin, and Oslo before going to Stockholm on March 5.

Solmitz Book Fund

A book fund in memory of Professor Walter M. Solmitz, who died last August 25, has been established at the College, and his friends among the alumni are invited to send contributions to Librarian Richard Harwell at Hubbard Hall.

Professor Solmitz joined the Bowdoin area. The season started early — real early — with a snowstorm in October. This snow eventually melted, and there was very little additional snow until January. However, just about every snowflake that came down during January and February remained on the ground as part of the landscape and terrain.

The long winter months seemed even longer and more wintry than usual, and Bowdoin seemed even more isolated than it is without the Boston and Maine Railroad. As one result there was an over-flow crowd for two lectures on India which Professor George D. Bearce, Jr. of the History Department presented at the Moulton Union on January 4 and January 7. The first was on "Traditional India and Its Legacy," and the second was entitled "The Crisis in Modernizing India." Included in the audience were some youngsters from Brunswick Junior High School who were studying India in their classes.

Another winter speaker was United States Senator Paul H. Douglas '13 of Illinois, who spoke on "The Common Market" on March 4, just a few minutes after he was a guest at the Alumni Council's annual dinner for members of the graduating class.

On February 25 William Rusher, an editor of National Review, spoke on "Conservatism in Contemporary America" under the auspices of the Bowdoin Political Forum and the Young Americans for Freedom. Two days later the Forum also sponsored a talk on "Contemporary German Politics" by Erwin K. Scheuch, Visiting Professor of Sociology at the Harvard University School of Social Relations.

Retired Major General Charles Haydon of the Irish Guards, at one time head of British Intelligence in Germany, became the third Forum speaker of a busy week when he talked on "Intelligence Operations in a Free Society" on February 28.

The Physics Department managed to sandwich in a public lecture that week — on February 25 — when Alan W. Postlethwaite spoke on "Transistor Technology." He is Engineering Manager of the Raytheon Company's semi-conductor plant in Lewiston. Although this talk was intended primarily for men majoring in physics, any other interested people were welcome to attend, including members of the Political Forum.

Student Academic Honors

In February the Bowdoin chapter of Phi Beta Kappa elected one student, Timothy M. Hayes '63 of Cranford, N. J., to membership. Six other members of the Class of 1963 had been elected last June.

Hayes was also one of the seven students who received "straight A's" in their courses during the fall semester. The others were Alfredo Ayora '64, a Bowdoin Plan student from Quito, Ecuador, William Hughes '64 of Freeport, John Meader '63 of Rochester, N. H., Charles Merz '64 of Freeport, N. Y., John Russell '63 of Brunswick, and Steven Weiss '64 of Jenkintown, Pa.

Two hundred and two students made the Dean's List for the spring semester, including 68 seniors, 62 juniors, 36 sophomores, 34 freshmen, and two Bowdoin Plan students without class designations.

Dean's List privileges are now awarded to students who attain an average of 80 or higher in their courses, with not more than one grade below "B-" and no grade lower than "C-.

Many alumni who never made the Dean's List, despite semester grades of an "A," two "B's," and a "C," will envy present-day students their privilege of not having a "C" rule them out.

Recent Bequests

The College has recently received word of two bequests totaling $15,000. Miss Ella P. Merrill of Newton, Mass., left $5,000 for student loans in memory of her brother, the late Carleton P. (Gramps) Merrill '96 of Skowhegan.

Professor Martha Hale Shackford, who taught English literature at Wellesley College for 42 years, left Bowdoin $10,000 to establish the Charles Burnham Shackford Scholarship Fund in memory of her father, a member of the Class of 1863, who was for many years a lawyer in Dover, N. H.

Other Gifts

Francis Russell '33, author of Tragedy in Dedham, a study of the Sacco-Vanzetti case, published in 1962 and reviewed in the November, 1962, issue of the Alumnus, has given portions of his original manuscript of the book to the Bowdoin Library. Tragedy in Dedham is being made into a motion picture.
Mr. and Mrs. G. W. McCune, Jr. of Preston, Idaho, have established at Bowdoin the Scott S. McCune Scholarship Fund for deserving students from the states of Idaho and Utah. The fund honors Mr. McCune's brother, who died in 1950 after a distinguished medical career. A native of Ogden, Utah, he was a graduate of the University of California in Los Angeles and received his M.D. degree from Harvard Medical School in 1932. He specialized in internal medicine.

At the present time four Bowdoin alumni live in Idaho and five in Utah.

Norman Munn Resigns

Professor Norman L. Munn, Chairman of the Psychology Department, has resigned from the faculty to become Professor of Psychology at the University of Adelaide in South Australia, where he is now teaching while on leave from Bowdoin.

President Coles said of Professor Munn, "During the 16 years since he joined the faculty in 1946, he has been a distinguished teacher and scholar and has developed the work in psychology at Bowdoin to a height never before achieved. While his loss is great, he leaves the Department of Psychology strong, well-staffed, and well-equipped. He takes with him every good wish of the College and his many friends on the faculty and in Brunswick as he re-establishes his home in his native Australia."

Masque and Gown

Following its February 16 and 18 presentations of Thieves' Carnival, the Masque and Gown staged four student-written plays in its 28th annual one-act contest on March 15. They were "The Riddle" and "The Second Judgment," both by Frank Ciaccio '63 of Fresh Meadows, N. Y.; "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Jeffrey Huntsman '64 of Augusta; and "It's All in the Cards" by Richard Farr '63 of Reeds Ferry, N. H.

Musical Fare

On March 3 the Nieuw Amsterdam Trio presented a chamber music concert in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. Composed of pianist Edith Mocsanyi, violinist Bernard Eichen, and cellist Heinrich Joachim, the Trio has a broad repertoire of classical, romantic, and modern musical literature. It has made eight tours of the United States and given more than 300 performances.

On its spring tour from March 22 to March 27 the Glee Club sang in Needham, Mass., Springfield, Mass., Massapequa, L. I., N. Y., Summit, N. J., Washington D. C., and Wilmington, Del. Under the direction of Professor Robert Beckwith, the Club will also make appearances

John William Frost 1885-1963

John W. Frost '04, who for more than thirty years served as a member of the Board of Overseers at the College, died on January 19, 1963, at his home in New York City, thus bringing to a close the career of a man who "exemplified the erudite gentleman — alert, cultured, thoughtful, and generous," in President Coles' words of tribute.

Secretary of the New York Bowdoin Club from 1921 to 1924, Mr. Frost served as President of that organization in 1930-31. He was also a member of the Bowdoin Alumni Council from 1922 to 1925 and served as Chairman of the International Executive Council of the Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity from 1932 to 1934. In 1929 he was elected to the Bowdoin Board of Overseers, of which he was President from 1949 to 1953.

At Commencement in June of 1953, when Bowdoin conferred an honorary doctor of laws degree upon Mr. Frost, the citation read by President Coles said, in part, "... descendant of seafarers, his own feet firmly on the ground, lover of Maine, his life modeling the high principles expressed by Elijah Kellogg: cited for gallantry in action in the first World War, this recognition only anticipating the exceptional energy and zeal to be displayed in later life as a diligent lawyer and unselfish civic leader."

When the Town of Pleasantville, N. Y., paid tribute to Mr. Frost in 1941, a poem by the late Robert P. T. Coffin '15 was read. Several of the lines may appropriately stand as a final tribute to him:

Do not look for cold and bleak
Ways in John Frost. Let him speak,
And you will hear the hot Maine bees
Gathering from brief apple trees
Enough of summer heat to last
The six months when the snow howls past.

Look into John Frost's young mind
And you will find the family fire
Still fragrant as the fierce Maine briar.

Grants

Bowdoin has received a grant of $8,500 from the Atomic Energy Commission for the purchase of radiation research equipment. Professor Robert J. Toft of the Biology Department will administer the grant. Equipment to be bought includes Geiger and scintillation counters, isotope recorders for monitoring blood flow, a high quality beta-radiation counter for specialized projects, various pieces of laboratory apparatus, and a selection of radio-isotopes.

The Du Pont Company has awarded the College $4,000 to help it maintain "the excellence of its teaching." The grant, which includes $2,500 for the teaching of chemistry and $1,500 for other courses, is part of Du Pont's $700,000 program to support teaching in scientific and related fields. The company has made grants to Bowdoin each year for the past 11 years, totaling $37,000.

The Gulf Oil Corporation has made an unrestricted grant of $1,412 as evidence of its "continuing interest in the support and encouragement of higher education in the United States." The grant was calculated on the basis of a formula which takes into account the quality of the Bowdoin curriculum, the effectiveness of its program, and the amount of financial support which it receives from its alumni. Bowdoin was one of the original participants in the Gulf program.

The National Science Foundation has granted the College $20,000 to purchase scientific equipment for the Biology Department. Bowdoin must provide matching funds of $20,000, and the grant will be effective for two years, until January, 1965. Professor Alfred H. Gustafson will administer the grant, which will be used to buy advanced instruments and equipment in the following five categories: optical, field, physiological, anatomical, and general or utility accessories. Included are various types of microscopes and attachments, oscilloscopes and an oscilloscope camera, a spectrophotometer, a refrigerated centrifuge, a freeze drier, an electrograph, a flame photometer, incubator ovens, clinical shakers, audio monitors, colorimeters, a micromanipulator, a microtome, balances, and a Warburg apparatus.

In the field equipment category are a recording barometer, two small boats and an outboard motor, dredges and seines, a plankton sampler and nets, a portable tape recorder, an underwater microphone, a fathometer, a charter tide recorder, and other items.

Barbara to Brazil

Mrs. Barbara Sabasteanski, whose husband, Frank '41, is Coach of Track, is one of two nurses chosen to accompany the United States track and field team to the Pan American Games, to be held at Sao Paulo, Brazil, from April 20 through May 5. Selected from among hundreds of applicants, she will be the second member of her family to be associated with a traveling track and field team. Her husband was coach of a group of stars who toured Turkey, Egypt, Lebanon, Iran, and Cyprus three years ago. Mrs. Sabasteanski has been a member of the staff at the Coe Infirmary for 14 years.

Winter Houseparty

Winter Houseparty Weekend took place February 15, 16, and 17, with the Bo Diddley Quartet and the Ted Herbert Orchestra providing the musical highlights at the Gym dance on Friday night. Other attractions were a fraternity snow sculpturing contest, won by Kappa Sigma, an art exhibit, a variety of athletic contests, a play, and a skating party. Miss Katherine Chin of Lewiston reigned as queen. Her escort was Tim-

Winter Sports

Bowdoin's first Maine State Series basketball title in the 22 years since the Series was inaugurated highlighted the 1962-63 winter sports season. The Polar Bear hoopsters shared seasonal laurels with the swimming team, which finished a very close second in the New England Championships and compiled a regular season record of eight wins and one loss. The track squad defeated five of the six teams it faced.

The basketball team swept three-game sets with Colby and Maine and beat Bates once to compile a seven-two record in Series play. In out-of-state competition the Polar Bears were not so fortunate. The hoopsters defeated Trinity but lost twice to M.I.T. and once each to North-eastern, Amherst, Williams, Wesleyan, Tufts, and Springfield. Four of the losses were by six points or less. Five of the nine State Series contests were close. The Polar Bears began by edging Maine 65-63 and three days later topped Colby 66-65. Bates then silenced the optimists temporarily with a 67-62 victory. Bowdoin gained revenge in the first game of the second round with a 71-67 win over the Bobcats. Then the Polar Bears really went to town with wins over Maine 74-65, Colby 69-56, Colby again 78-60 in the game that ensured the title, and Maine again, 70-54. Bates again proved Bowdoin's nemesis, with a 77-74 overtime victory in the season finale. Colby, Maine, and Bates trailed Bowdoin in the Series standing with 5-4, 3-6, and 3-6 records, respectively.

Coach Ray Bicknell, in his first year at Bowdoin, maintained that his team's success was due to a team effort, and statistics bear him out. It was also apparent, however, that Bicknell was remarkably successful in adapting to the collegiate level the playing style that made his Cape Elizabeth High School teams a potent factor in Maine schoolboy circles.

Against nearly every opponent the Polar Bears gave away height. They overcame this by good shooting, pinpoint passing, and lots of hustle. Rugged Dick Whitmore '65, tallest man on the squad at 6-4, was deadly around the basket and carried much of the rebounding load. Captain Joe Brogna '63 and guards Al Loane '63 and Harry Silverman '64 all had good set shots. Although at 5-9 the shortest member of the team, Loane frequently drove in for layups and was an outstanding playmaker. Lanky Pete Finn '65 was often found under the basket with no defender near him. Pete Kilgore '63, Steve Ingram '65, and Chuck Shea '63 gave yeoman service as substitutes.

Whitmore led the team in scoring with 242 points for a 13.4 average. With the same average Brogna trailed him by one point. Finn, Loane, and Silverman also averaged in double figures with 11.5, 11.1, and 10.4 marks respectively. Finn had the best floor shooting percentage, hitting on a remarkable 49.4% of his shots. Brogna at 44.2%, Whitmore at 43.2%, and Ingram at 42.9% helped Bowdoin to hit at a team rate of 41% for the season. Loane made 50 of 66 charity tosses for a 78.1% mark. Whitmore had the most foul shot attempts, 86, and made 58 of them. The team made 66.4% of shots at the foul line. Whitmore grabbed 185 rebounds to lead in that department, while Brogna had 149. As a team, the Polar Bears were outrebounded 812 to 726. At the conclusion of the season, Loane, Finn, and Whitmore were selected to the All Maine team. Brogna was one of the three men receiving honorable mention. Loane was picked for the New England team in the Hall of Fame game and received honorable mention on the Associated Press and United Press International All New England squads.

The swimming team, which led Williams in the New England Championships at New Haven, Conn., all the way to the final relay, finally losing 71-68, was made up of probably the best group of swimmers ever to represent a small New England college. For the second straight year Coach Charlie Butt's Bowdoin squad upset Williams in a dual meet, this time by a 48-47 score at Williamstown. At the New Englands Williams' points in the diving were just enough to overcome the Polar Bears' lead in swimming events. Bowdoin's other regular season victims were M.I.T., Trinity, Amherst, New Brunswick, Wesleyan, Connecticut, and Tufts. The lone loss was in the second meet of the season to Springfield. Bowdoin outscored the opposition 529 to 527.

Nine of the eleven Bowdoin swimming records were broken in the New England meet, and another was tied. The one mark which didn't go there, in the medley relay, was set against Williams by Bill Edwards '64, Shawn Leach '65, John Halford '64, and Tim Robinson '65, with a time of 3:51.6. This same quartet swam a second slower in the New Englands but won easily. Pete Seaver '64 started things off for Bowdoin by winning the 1650 yard freestyle in the Bowdoin and New England record time of 18:38.9. Seaver came back to set Bowdoin and New England records in the 500 freestyle in 5:17.4. Seaver lowered his own Bowdoin record in the 200 freestyle to 1:55.1, which placed him fourth. Curt Tilton '62, back in school after recovering from an automobile accident last year, tied his own Bowdoin 50 yard freestyle record of 23 seconds flat in a trial heat. He placed sixth in the final. Robinson lowered the Bowdoin record in the 100 freestyle by 0.4 second in a trial heat and won the final. Captain Jim Coots '63 sped to a Bowdoin mark of 2:09.5 in the 200 yard individual medley while placing second. Coots came back to break the record of All-American Bob Plourde '58 in the 200 yard backstroke by two full seconds, setting a Bowdoin and New England record of 2:08.6. Halford broke his own Bowdoin mark in the 200 yard butterfly, placing sixth in 2:16.0. Leach was second in the 200 yard breaststroke in the Bowdoin record time of 2:29.3. The freestyle relay quartet of Robinson, Coots, Bob Bachman '65, and Tilton knocked more than three seconds off the former Bowdoin record, placing second in 3:22.4.

The track team, coached by Frank Sabatanski '41, opened its season February 9. Arch rival Bates, in its fourth meet, defeated the Polar Bears 71-51. In two triangular meets Bowdoin then defeated Brandeis and Colby and Tufts and Brandeis on successive Saturdays. Edged M.I.T., a team which had beaten Bates, by three points, and finished the season by burying Vermont 96-26. The Polar Bears racked up 378 points to 268 for the opponents.

Captain Bruce Frost '65 was the outstanding performer on the team. He increased his Bowdoin shot put record to 53'11” at a United States Track and Field Federation meet at Orono and lengthened his Cage discus record to 145'2” in the Interfraternity Meet. He was undefeated in the shot put, discus, and 55 pound weight throw and scored 65 points in five meets. Dave McDowell '64 was likewise undefeated in the broad jump. He twice went 226’. In four meets Steve Ross '65 and Mike Anello '65 placed behind McDowell to give Bowdoin sweeps. Ross collected 47½ points in the hurdles and jumps. Fred Newman '63 placed second behind Frost in every intercollegiate meet in the shot put. Frank Ronan scored regularly in the pole vault and provided the winning points in the M.I.T. meet when he cleared 12 feet. Others who were prominent in the field events included Gil Ekdahl '65 in the high jump and pole vault, Jack Hill '65 in the weight events, and Paul Quinlan '63 in the high jump.

The most encouraging development, however, was the rapid improvement of a quartet of sophomore runners. Ted Slowik scored 30 points in the 600 and 1000 yard runs and ran an excellent 1:13.6 against M.I.T. in the 600. Charlie Kahill added much needed depth in the 1000. Tom Chamberlin and Bert Babcock improved steadily in the mile and 2 mile, until against Vermont Chamberlin won the mile in 4:34.9, followed closely by Babcock, who won the 2 mile. Bill Rounds '64 and Braley Gray '63 scored in the sprints, while Joe Gorman '65 picked up points in the 600.

Kappa Sigma won the Interfraternity Track Meet for the fifth straight year, scoring 68 points, Delta Kappa Epsilon was second with 46 points, followed by Theta Delta Chi and Beta Theta Pi with 24 points. Bruce Frost of the Dekes was awarded both the Jack Magee Trophy for the outstanding performance and the Dr. Frank N. Whittier Trophy, for scoring the most points.

The hockey team had a record of six victories and thirteen defeats. Coach Sid Watson's icemen beat Massachusetts, Amherst, Pennsylvania, and M.I.T., split with Merrimack, won one of three contests with New Hampshire, lost single games to Brown, Dartmouth, North-eastern, Providence, Middlebury, and Williams, and dropped two contests each to Norwich and Colby. The Polar Bears finished third in the Brown University Invitational Hockey Tournament. Bowdoin outscored its opposition 101-92. Left wingman Len Johnson '63 tied the college scoring record set by Rick Mostrom '61. Johnson scored 14 goals and had 24 assists for a total of 38 points.

Johnson's teammates on the first line, center Ed Spalding '63 and right wing Bill Bisset '63, racked up 62 points between them, which, when combined with Johnson's points, made the first line Bowdoin's highest scoring ever, with 100 points. Spalding had 16 goals and 16 assists, Bisset 14 goals and 16 assists. Second line wingman Devers Hamlen '64 was the next highest scorer with 21 points, including 13 goals. Dave Mechem '64 was the highest scoring defenseman, with 14 points. Bruce Parker '63 picked up 12 points. Bill Matthews '65 turned in some outstanding defensive games. Bill Brucksch '63, Dave Coupe '65, and Curt Chase '65 shared the goaltending duties.

The skiing team, coached by Professor L. Dodge Fernald, Chairman of the Psychology Department, had a successful season. The team competed in the Thompson, or B, Division of the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference, and won all three of the Two Run Slalom events it competed in. The Polar Bears placed second to Maine in the Maine State Meet. Bowdoin competed in one Osborn, or A, Division competition, and did well enough to convince NEISIC officials to place the Polar Bears in the Osborn Division for next year's competition. The opening of a new slope in Topsham stimulated interest in the sport. Captain Steve Barndollar '63, Charles Cary '65, Randy Baxter '65, and Leif Magnusson, a Bowdoin Plan student from Sweden, were the leading skiers in competition.

The rifle team, coached by M/Sgt. Marshall P. Bailey, didn't win any matches but showed steady improvement. The team began the season with no seniors and only two lettermen. In spite of the long walk to the range each day, more than 20 varsity and freshman shooters practiced daily, and in the last three meets the team showed marked improvement. Phil Walls '64 was the leading markman, followed by Steve Leonard '65, Steve Munger '65, and Captain Charlie Bites '64.

At the annual Winter Sports Banquet trophies were awarded to five outstanding athletes. The newly established Robert B. Miller Swimming Trophy was presented for 1962 to Curt Tilton '62. The Miller Trophy for 1963 was presented to Jim Coors '63. Pete Finn '63 received the Paul Nixon Basketball Trophy, Ed Spalding '63 was awarded the Hugh Munro, Jr. '41 Memorial Hockey Trophy, and Bruce Frost '63 received the Elmer L. Hutchinson '35 Memorial Track Trophy.

Captains for next season include basketball, Harry Silverman '64; hockey, Joe Tarbell '64; swimming, Pete Seaver '64; rifle, Phil Walls '64; skating, Charles Cary '65; track, Dave McDowell '64.

The football team elected as its captain for next fall.

HOMESTAY VISITS

Students from overseas who will be coming to Bowdoin in the fall of 1963 as Bowdoin Plan Scholars or Language Fellows will be urged to arrange for Homestay Visits before coming to Brunswick. Under the Homestay program, administered by The Experiment in International Living, each boy would spend a month as a member of a host family somewhere in the New England area. Any alumnus interested in participating in this project should write to The Experiment at Putney, Vt., mentioning his special interest in serving as host for a boy who will be coming to Bowdoin.

Several students now at the College enjoyed Homestay Visits last fall and have maintained close contact with their "families" during the year.

Christian Hamaker, who comes from Eindhoven, The Netherlands, says, "When I got a Bowdoin Plan Scholarship, a family in Wolfeboro, N. H., was found willing to entertain me for the five weeks between my arrival in America and the beginning of the fall semester. As the family was a minister's family, I met a great number of the most interesting people, who belonged to his parish, and got an impression of what life is in a small New England town is like. And, of course, we talked a lot about Europe and America, compared, and on both sides learned a great deal about our respective countries. When I went back to Wolfeboro for the Christmas vacation, I felt almost like going home. It was a tremendous experience."

Andrew Seager, an African Scholarship Program of American Universities (ASPAU) scholar and son of British missionaries in Bechuanaland, says he "was able to spend five very enjoyable weeks with a family in Wellesley, Mass. During that time I was able to see something of Boston and to get to know something about American family life. It was very useful to me, and I am thankful for it."

Onye Kamanu, an ASPAU scholar from Nigeria, spent his Homestay near Danvers, Mass. His "foster-mother" and "foster-sister" brought him to Brunswick on the day before the latter left home herself for Mount Holyoke. "Coming from a country with a markedly different culture," he says, "I was naturally uneasy about the prospect of staying with a strange family in a foreign land. But my first day with my host family dispelled every shadow of doubt or uncertainty. Every member of my family and even their neighbors were most solicitous for my comfort and happiness. I really tasted American warmth and friendship. I got on so well with the family that they always invite me back to spend my holidays. My relationship with this family is a great asset to me. Every time I think of home, I think of this family and feel a familial warmth and intimacy. The Nichols family provides me with these. In short, I now have a home away from home."
Alumni Clubs

AROOSTOOK

On Monday, October 29, the Aroostook Bowdoin Club held its annual fall dinner and ladies' night at the Northland Hotel in Houlton. Alumni and guests gathered for a six o'clock social hour and dinner at seven.

Executive Secretary and Mrs. Wolcott A. Hokanson, Jr. '50 were the guests of honor.

Mr. Hokanson discussed Bowdoin's development program and answered questions.

BOSTON

The Bowdoin Club of Boston has had another full year with varied programs. The luncheon meetings held at 12:30 p.m. on the second Tuesday of each month at the Union Oyster House, 41 Union Street, continue to draw well.

Neil T. Mahoney, Director of the Minor League System for the Boston Red Sox and formerly Coach of Baseball and Basketball at the College, was the speaker on January 8. Leonard A. The program, headlined by the Meddiebempsters, also included selections by octets from Amherst, Harvard, Trinity, Mt. Holyoke, Pine Manor, and Wellesley. The arrangements were made by Robert R. Forsberg '58.

First Vice President John B. Morrell '52 was program chairman and Tuansean Dean E. Riluff '57 handled reservations for the annual meeting and ladies' night on Saturday, March 23, at the Harvard Club, with President Coles as guest of honor and principal speaker.

On Thursday evening, May 16, at 8:30, the Club will sponsor its annual "Bowdoin Night at the Pops" at Symphony Hall. The Bowdoin Glee Club will again be the star attraction.

The Boston Club continues its vigorous prospective students program under the chairmanship of Richard A. Wiley '49. Second Vice President, Alumni desiring further information or wishing to help with this project in 1963-64 are invited to contact Dick at Bingham, Dana, and Gould, 1 Federal Street, Boston 10.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

On Saturday, October 13, alumni and guests gathered at the Mayfair Manor in Syracuse for the annual fall meeting, which included a social hour and dinner.

On Friday evening, May 10, the Central New York Club will hold its spring dinner meeting. The guest speaker will be Assistant Director of Admissions Walter H. Moulton '58. Alumni desiring further information should write Secretary Thomas R. Chapman '50, 7570 Park Street, Palatka, New York.

CHICAGO

Club President Jim Dolan '43 reports, "A pre-Christmas dinner meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Chicago was held at the Chicago Yacht Club on Tuesday evening, December 18. Over forty alumni, wives, and guests came to hear the effervescent Professor Herbert R. Brown report on the state of the College, the senior Center Program, and his biography of the late President Kenneth Sills '01."

Club Secretary Harold Fish '25 writes, "Alumni, wives, and guests — including sub-freshmen and their fathers — sipped and munched the delights of the Yacht Club's cuisine prior to listening to Herbie deliver seemingly of the enclave remarks which had all the 'unity, coherence, and emphasis' of a carefully organized theme. He spoke of Bowdoin's possessing the intimacy of the family college and of its having a basically conservative approach to modern educational trends. He also emphasized the lengthy tenure of its succession of presidents and the importance of fraternities to the life of the College."

"Many of us of the 20's and 30's were stirred by Herbie's reminiscences of 'Casey' and other faculty figures, most of whom are now retired. His account of plans for the senior Center and of the part it is to play in Bowdoin's future should dispel any apprehension that such a program would greatly alter the Bowdoin Image held by many older alumni."

President Dolan paid tribute to retiring President Stan Sargent '35, who received a round of applause for his work during the preceding year.

"The audience was particularly impressed by the movies Nels showed including color shots of the campus and black and white views of various athletic events. Since most of them were hockey coaches and hockey players, they were especially interested in shots of the hockey games.

"Of the seventeen boys at the meeting, five are seniors who have applied to Bowdoin for admission next fall. The rest are juniors who have expressed an interest in the College."

BOWDOIN'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO LITERATURE DO FAR MORE THAN RUN THE gamut from Hawthorne to Longfellow. The College Librarian is made constantly aware of other Bowdoin influences on American literature, by a query concerning the works of the Reverend William Ellery Leonard, faculty member and Overseer in the early years of the College; by the gift of portions of his manuscript of Tragedy in Dedham by Francis Russell '33; by the promise of manuscripts of Vance Bourjaily '44; by questions concerning the Abbott collection; and in many other ways.

Nor do contacts with Bowdoin's literary past and present stop when one leaves Brunswick. On permanent display in New York City's Century Club is a presentation copy of one of Longfellow's books. And the entrance to the Guilder Club is flanked by portraits of Hawthorne and Longfellow. These two do continue to dominate our literary history. A new, definitive edition of Hawthorne's work is being published at the Ohio State University Press, and an important late winter biography is Newton Arvin's Longfellow: His Life and Work.

It was a touch of Bowdoin and Brunswick to the Librarian to see in Paris at Christmas time whole ranges of paperback editions of Hawthorne and Longfellow, in French, in a book-jobber's shop there. And it was in Paris that he picked up a Copy of The Brumblie Bush by Charles Merendahl '41 for plane reading — this one in English, however, and in a British paperback edition.

It was also in Paris that President Coles found last summer a charming Brunswick souvenir, a 1947 edition (abridged for juvenile readers) of Uncle Tom's Cabin. This quaint volume is apparently a reprint of a 1926 edition (the illustrations are dated 1928) and is even less like Harriet Beecher Stowe's original than French is like English. La Case de l'Oncle Tom by "Madame Beecher Stowe" is a far cry from Brunswick but still, to a Bowdoin man in Paris, a whiff of Federal Street.

Mrs. Stove was not, of course, a Bowdoin alumna, but her book belongs, certainly, within the College's literary tradition. Yet the College Library still does not own a complete set of the first issue of Maine's most famous book. Early this year, however, John C. Pickett '22 gave us a copy of the first British edition. This edition was published by John Cassell with illustrations by George Cruikshank, and this copy is elaborately bound in tooled leather.

A copy of an American edition of the first-edition year (1852) was given to the Library late last year by Reference Librarian Kenneth E. Carpenter '38. This copy is strong testimony to the popularity of Uncle Tom's Cabin. Priced at "37½ cents," it is described on its cover as "an edition for the million!" and proudly carries this note on its title page: "163,000 - 326,000 volumes." But who has copies of the Welsh edition advertised in London in 1852 as "in preparation," or the German edition put out in the same year by the book's Boston publisher? Unfortunately, not Bowdoin.

BOWDOIN BROWSING CAN TAKE STRANGE TURNS. What chance directed me to pick up a copy of William Ellery Leonard's The Locomotive God (1927), the autobiography of the strange Wisconsin professor-poet whom I remembered from college days as the author of Two Lives? What further chance opened the book to Leonard's passages about the Reverend Thomas T. Stone of the Class of 1820, who attended the centennial convocation of 1894 as the oldest living graduate of the College?

Of the Reverend Mr. Stone Leonard wrote as follows:

"He had been the village pastor a generation before, during the Civil War, after he had been dismissed, as an Abolitionist, from the Unitarian pulpit of witch-hanging Salem. He had come into this world three years before Emerson, and graduated from Bowdoin College a year before Hawthorne and Longfellow had matriculated. At ninety-three and four he was certainly one of the most extraordinary creations of spirit and flesh in the human race began. Old Age has never been more awesome, more beautiful. A quiet little man, but unbent with ruddy cheeks, and narrowed eyes still bright and cheery . . . , with a thin wrinkled head and long gray-tresses tousled over his shoulders. Scholar, Saint, Prophet, Dr. Thomas Treadwell Stone was the last of the Transcendentalists . . . . You will find, if you know what I know, Dr. Stone in Emerson's Essays, in Hawthorne's Stories, in Whittier's Poems, in all the presences and poems of the Great New England Period. And I would like to think that my friends will find something of him in my own books."

Leonard wrote of his conversations with Stone about Washington, Shelley, Byron, about his walks with Emerson, talks with Whitman, a visit with Thoreau, "a two hours' ride in closed carriage with the shy and cloaked Hawthorne where there was no talk at all."

He continued this section of his own story by telling the final chapter of Mr. Stone's story:

"A year before our coming to Bolton [where Leonard had known Stone], he had made his last voyage out into the contemporary earth. It was to Bowdoin's commencement as the oldest alumnus, as the sole survivor of the class of 1820. . . . As he told me about it, I thought that Longfellow's 'Moriturus Salutans' somehow lost something of its venerable pathos and dignity. When back home during my freshman year in college I shouted to him as best I could something of my vita nova, for he wanted to know all about it. Then one day he said to my father, 'I feel as if some one were taking the light away from me.' . . . He lay in bed only three days. He wanted to see me. . . . He had a solemn message for me. . . . Clear-headed, clear-spoken, resolute, majestic, but debuded by a cruel echo in his brain. People, he thought, were defaming him, for the first time in ninety-four years mankind was questioning his integrity. He would not, he could not, bring himself to the truth. But when I arrived, Ellery, go to Bowdoin, go to President Hyde — I am leaving Bowdoin my Library — go and tell him it is all a lie, a lie, a lie. Tell him that, for all these seventy-four years, I have never done or said anything to shame my alma mater."

And Leonard commented:

"I tell Bowdoin, I tell all the colleges and universities of the land. Has Bowdoin such loyal lovers to-day?"

A Commencement Message to All Alumni and Their Ladies from The Society of Bowdoin Women

"How many things by season, seasoned are To their right praise and true perfection."
— Merchant of Venice

The Season of The Society of Bowdoin Women is the Commencement Season. The Society’s “right praise and true perfection” is its dedication, season after season, to its original mission of helping the College provide a warm welcome and a happy time for women attending the Commencement festivities.

This year, as always, the Society cordially invites every lady planning to go to Commencement to share its fellowship and its program of activities, planned to fill pleasantly for the families the times when the men may be occupied with their own affairs. All day Friday and on Saturday morning the Society will “be at home” to visitors at its Headquarters in Gibson Hall of Music. Here hostesses will be on hand to greet them, to give information, and to be of service in any way possible. Attractive and centrally located, Gibson Hall is becoming an increasingly popular gathering place in which the women like to relax, meet old friends, and make new ones, while they wait for their men.

On both Friday and Saturday, the Society will sponsor luncheons for all visiting women. These are served while the Alumni are having their own special luncheons. The exact prices for these cannot be fixed until arrangements have been made with the caterers. The Friday luncheon will be preceded by the Annual Meeting at ten o’clock in Gibson Hall. This is the only activity exclusively reserved for members of the Society. At the Saturday Luncheon mothers and wives of the graduating seniors are to be entertained by the Society as honored guests. We try to make both the luncheons and the Annual Meeting pleasant occasions for getting acquainted with Bowdoin and with one another.

Many of you are already familiar with the origins and aims of The Society of Bowdoin Women. Those of you who are not may be interested to know that it was founded some forty years ago by a few remarkable “Bowdoin Women” who sensed a need for an organization in which all Bowdoin-interested women could join forces in friendly service to the College. Although hospitality is still our main concern, we have developed other fields of service, as the Society has grown and prospered. With our dues and some donations we are able to make gifts from time to time which we feel have added graciousness to the life of the College. In alternate years we sponsor a college lecture by an outstanding woman, and to further this project we recently created the Edith Lansing Koon Sills Lecture Fund honoring Mrs. Kenneth C. M. Sills, whose name was synonymous with Bowdoin hospitality during her more than thirty years as wife of Bowdoin’s eighth President. Financially our major contribution to Bowdoin is represented by The Society of Bowdoin Women Foundation, established in 1924 as an endowment fund in the hands of the College. Its income is used for general college purposes.

All of these endeavors require workers and money. We always welcome both. Our sources of revenue are dues and donations. Membership in the Society is open to all interested women, be they grandmothers, sisters, wives, or friends of Bowdoin men or simply friends of Bowdoin. Annual dues are one dollar. Our Treasurer is Mrs. Barrett C. Nichols, Falmouth Foreside, Maine. It would be wonderful if we could achieve our ambition of an enrolled member in the family of every Bowdoin alumnus.

To this end we are grateful to the Alumni for this opportunity to tell our story, and we hope that the alumni readers will call it to the attention of the ladies in their families. Please tell them that — with or without their membership dollars — they will be warmly welcomed at our Headquarters in Gibson Hall and at our Friday and Saturday luncheons in the Gymnasium. Tickets for the luncheons may be purchased by mid-May from our Treasurer or on the campus at Commencement.

With all good wishes to all of you for the best Commencement ever.

Cordially,
Helen A. Bartlett

Bowdoin’s Wing Professor Of Mathematics

This June Edward S. Hammond will retire as Wing Professor of Mathematics after serving as a member of the Faculty since 1921. Completion of 42 years of service places him in a tie for second place in longevity in the Department of Mathematics. First place is held by William Smyth of the Class of 1822, who taught Greek from 1823 until 1825 and mathematics from 1825 to 1868—a total of 45 years on the Faculty. William A. (Buck) Moody of the Class of 1882, who taught colorfully from 1884 until 1926, shares second place with Professor Hammond.

On Thursday night, May 2, the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick paid tribute to Ed Hammond at a dinner meeting held at the Moulton Union. More than 100 people were present, including Mrs. Hammond; Mr. and Mrs. David R. Hirth ’36, son-in-law and daughter of the Hammonds; Walter Hollmann, another son-in-law; and two Bowdoin grandsons, David H. Hirth '64 and Samuel E. Hirth '66.

It was a rare pleasure to sit in the audience and watch Ed Hammond’s smile grow wide and his obvious delight increase proportionately as he listened to the three speakers—Professor Cecil T. Holmes, a colleague in the Department of Mathematics since 1925, who spoke from that vantage point; Assistant to the President Philip S. Wilder ’23, who reminisced concerning his years of association with Professor Hammond as a fellow administrator in Massachusetts Hall; and Professor Herbert R. Brown, who provided an affectionately glowing appreciation of the guest of honor in the perspective of Bowdoin history. Mr. Wilder joined the faculty in 1927 and Professor Brown in 1925, so more than a century and a half of Bowdoin service was represented at the head table.

The citation on the plaque which the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick presented to Professor Hammond reads as follows (minus the additional thrill which Herbert Brown, who read it, could give even to a reading of a telephone directory): “To you, Edward S. Hammond, we, the members of the Bowdoin Club of Brunswick, pay tribute tonight—for your forty-two years of devoted service to the College. As a thorough and competent teacher at Bowdoin since 1921, as Bowdoin’s first Director of Admissions from 1935 to 1948, as a wise and thoughtful fraternity adviser for many years, and as Chairman of the Department of Mathematics from 1926 until 1961, you have always given freely of yourself, without reservation as to time, energy, and talents.

‘Speaking at Chapel in December of 1942, Dean Paul Nixon said, ‘Generous emotions and generous enthusiasms are a very necessary and important part of the human beings most of us most like and admire. Many of us are wary of the man who seems to be too utterly dispassionate, too coldly analytical, too calculating and cautious, too completely beyond the reach of anything but his reasoning faculties.

‘The thousands of contacts which you have had with Bowdoin men, with faculty colleagues, and with other friends of Bowdoin have been remarkable because of your good humor, your ability to place yourself in someone else’s position, and the humaneness of your concern. You personify Paul Nixon’s generous emotions and generous enthusiasms.

‘In paying tribute to you tonight, we are grateful for the privilege of having known you as a teacher and as a friend. But, most of all, we are grateful to you for doing justly, loving kindness, and walking humbly.’”

Athletics For All At Bowdoin
by Malcolm E. Morrell '24, Director of Athletics

For many years Bowdoin has been committed to an "athletics for all" policy. For a number of reasons this ideal has not been reached, and perhaps it has not been very closely approached. The Athletic Department and the Governing Boards' Committee on Physical Education have long recognized the need for additional indoor athletic facilities, which are essential in carrying out an improved program for all of the undergraduates.

Physical education is organized as a regular department of the College. The members of the Department are also members of the faculty, and its program is controlled by the College. It is an integrated program of physical education activities, intramural sports, and intercollegiate athletic contests under the supervision of the same staff members. The department budget is a part of the total college budget. Appropriations for athletic purposes are made by the Governing Boards, and receipts from all sources are paid over to the Business Office as a part of the total income of the College.

An "athletics for all" program is one that does the following things: 1) offers intercollegiate competition on the team basis and the individual basis in a wide range of different sports; 2) offers much the same thing on an intramural basis, using some of the same sports as well as some that are different; 3) includes, for those who cannot be reached in either of the above parts, a required system of classes of instruction and play. The requirement is usually for sophomores and freshmen. Free recreational play is encouraged for those who have passed the requirements as well as for others.

Bowdoin competes in sixteen intercollegiate sports, and there are freshman teams in each. This means that there are thirty-two teams competing with other colleges and schools.

Each season, as the varsity and freshman teams are practicing and playing, there is intramural sport competition on the interfraternity basis and classes are being conducted in physical education. The activity in these classes takes the form, to a large extent, of games in various sports. A very large part of this total program of intercollegiate, intramural, and class activity has to be conducted in the afternoon and evening because there can be no conflict with an undergraduate's academic class work.

Bowdoin's outdoor athletic facilities are outstanding. In fact, any college could be very proud of Pickard Field and of Whittier Field. In the State of Maine, however, the indoor facilities have to be used at least one-half of the college year. The Curtis Swimming Pool, the Hyde Athletic Building or Cage, and the Arena are used practically all day every day. They serve, in each case, a somewhat specialized form of activity. The Cage and Pool have no lockers, and the Arena has a very limited number. The gymnasium has to be the center of a good indoor program, and the Sargent Gymnasium has been totally inadequate for many years. It was a fine building fifty years ago, and it served its purpose well for a long time. But the College has grown, and the concept of a college physical education program has changed.

In this type of college, new gymnasiums come along no more often than every fifty or sixty years, so undergraduates often become impatient with what seems to them to be a lack of planning and even a lack of interest. The answer is, of course, that first things have to come first in colleges such as Bowdoin.

At the present time there are not enough student lockers to take care of undergraduate needs, even if every locker were to serve two men at a time. There are no visiting team rooms, no proper special exercise rooms, and only one gymnasium floor, with 600 seats for spectators on outdoor-type portable bleachers. This has been a poor situation. It is bad for both the undergraduates and the faculty, and it has made for poor public relations with the alumni and friends of the College. A study made in 1960 of sixteen colleges in Bowdoin's class indicated that seven of the sixteen have three gymnasium floors and six others have two.

Now the College will build a new gymnasium and do some renovating of the old one. Present plans call for construction to begin early in 1964 and for the buildings to be ready for use in the fall of 1965. Many long-standing needs will be satisfied with the new facilities, which will include these among other things:

1. 500 new student lockers
2. Four visiting team rooms with showers and so forth
3. Four special exercise rooms—one equipped for weight lifting, one for wrestling, and two for body building classes and other special groups
4. A new gymnasium floor, with seats for at least 1,500 spectators
5. Ten squash courts—nine singles and one doubles
6. An enlarged and well-equipped training room
7. An enlarged equipment stockroom
8. A combination conference, projection, and trophy room
9. Two dressing rooms for officials, with lockers and showers
10. Coaches' offices
11. Adequate janitors' room and a storage room

Full use will be made of all new units on an organized basis. At various times the squash courts, for example, will be available for the following types of activity:

1. Free recreational play
2. Physical education classes
3. Interfraternity competition
4. Varsity and freshman teams

The present gymnasium floor will be marked out for volleyball, badminton, and tennis as well as for basketball. It will be used for physical education classes, interfraternity competitions, and free play.

College academic programs will surely be intensified and made more demanding. There is more information available in all fields of study. The increased cost of education means more requests for money for colleges. These requests can be justified only by more demands on students. Undergraduates seem to have less interest in extracurricular activities these days. It seems wise, however, to do all possible to develop and intensify the values of sports for all students in integrated programs that are devised to develop interests and skills for physical activity in play that may be used for years to come.

It is expected that intercollegiate competition on a limited basis can begin in squash, wrestling, and weight lifting during the college year of 1965-66 and that they can be developed into full-fledged sports the following year. Instruction and coaching will be provided in each of these activities.

The new building will be erected on the north side of the Sargent Gymnasium and will be connected to it. It will be set further back from the campus road, and its main entrance will face the south side of Cleveland Hall.

Some of the principals at the groundbreaking: from left to right, Brunswick Town Manager John Bibber; Maxwell Sawyer, Chairman of the Brunswick Board of Selectmen; President Coles; Widgery Thomas ’22, Chairman of the Governing Boards’ Senior Center Building Committee; the Reverend William Davis of the First Parish Church; and Professor Athern P. Daggett ’25.

Following the half-hour groundbreaking program, many of those present attended a coffee hour in the Moulton Union, where a model, sketches, and pictures of the Senior Center were on display. These members of the freshman and sophomore classes have a particular interest in the progress of the new program, since they will be living in the Senior Center.

Jack Magee, Director of Track and Field Athletics, Emeritus, turned one of the first shovelfuls of earth on April 10 at the Senior Center groundbreaking between College Street and South Street.

The Senior Seminar And The Senior Center

by Professor Athern P. Daggett '25

A dominant feature of Bowdoin's plans for the next decade is the Senior Center. On April 10 ground was broken, and the morning the construction crews were already at work. The Center is no longer merely a plan or a proposal. It is on the way to becoming a reality. The contractors confidently promise the completion of the buildings by August of 1964.

Everyone will follow with great interest the construction of the buildings as they gradually take shape in the next fifteen months. Our architect, Hugh Stubbins, has given a skillful, resourceful, and interesting answer to the problems set him. However, we must all remember that the Senior Center is more than just new living accommodations for the senior class. What will go on in the buildings is more significant than the buildings themselves.

The whole project is Bowdoin's answer as to how best to use the opportunity presented by the planned expansion of the College from the present stated enrollment of 775 to the new 925. This increase has been anticipated for some time. In the past Bowdoin grew gradually without making plans directly related to expansion and without anticipating the impact of that growth on the pattern of the life of the College. Now for more than a decade the enrollment has been held relatively constant. Meanwhile the College has been carefully examining itself to find how it could best use the anticipated increase when it came. As that examination continued, there developed gradually the idea that a change in the senior year held the greatest promise. What kind of a program can best help realize that promise?

As it has been developed, the program for the Senior Center is threefold. The facilities of the Center will make possible the development of an informal program outside the limits of the curriculum. There will be increased opportunities for informal contact with members of the faculty, visiting lecturers, college preachers, returning alumni, and visitors from graduate schools and corporations. Many guests of the College will be given accommodations in the Center and will eat in the Center diningroom. They will be easily and informally available.

The heart of the final two years of the curriculum is the major program. The Faculty proposes to keep it that way and to make it more effective by encouraging increased independent study. At present the honors candidate writes a thesis or develops a laboratory project. The privilege of undertaking such work will be extended to non-honors students who have the aptitude and interest required. The departments will be encouraged to develop other forms of independent work suitable to their disciplines. It is anticipated that the Senior Center will make possible a continuing development and enhancement of the major programs of the various departments.

The most notable innovation in the program, however, is a series of senior seminars. We believe that in a liberal arts college there should be breadth in the senior year as well as in the freshman and sophomore years. Almost two-thirds of the students will be going on to graduate school, and to the unremitting pressure for specialization which that entails. This is their last opportunity to take a broad look at a field outside their special interest and to do it with the assistance of expert direction and with the resources of the College—with its libraries and laboratories—at their disposal. Not only should the Senior look outside his chosen field, but also in taking that look he should make full use of the training and perspective that, after three years, are his. The seminars are designed to enable him to do that. A Senior will be required to take one seminar outside his major field each semester. At least one of the two seminars should be outside the division in which the Senior is majoring. They will place emphasis upon exploration in depth of a topic that is judged to have appeal for non-specialists. Whenever possible, the topics will cut across departmental and even divisional lines.

The seminars will break away from the course pattern which most of our instruction necessarily follows. Because they will be planned for twelve weeks, they will end well before the beginning of the semester examination period. They themselves will not have final examinations in the usual sense. Their work will fall in three periods. In the initial period the instructor will prepare the students for the work that they will be undertaking. He may do this through his own exposition, through discussion, through assigned reading. He will prepare a syllabus which will serve as a guide for the members of the group. Finally he will assist each student in selecting a special topic within the field of the seminar for his own investigation.

The middle period of the seminar will be given over to independent work. Each student will devote himself to the exploration of the topic which he has selected. The seminar will not meet as a group. The instructor will be available for consultation. How much consultation takes place will depend on several factors—the instructor, the student, and the nature of the problem. Some instructors will no doubt make themselves more available than others, some students will seek help more often than others, and different types of problems will present different kinds of difficulties.

The final period will be devoted to the reports given by each member of the seminar on his topic. Instructors who may wish may conclude the seminar with individual oral examinations.

We recognize that the administration of the program will present real problems. Too many students may want to elect one seminar, too few another. Some faculty members may readily volunteer to take part in the program; others may need to be persuaded. Some areas may be over-represented; others may be neglected. The Director of the Senior Center and a committee working under his chairmanship will work out these and other difficulties. Each spring they will supervise the preparation of a prospectus, which will list the seminars to be offered the following year and which will describe them in some detail. The descriptions will be full enough to enable the student to evaluate his own qualifications for a given seminar. In case of doubt he can consult the instructor.

If the seminars are to operate satisfactorily, they cannot be too large. Fifteen has seemed to be a workable size. It would be difficult to staff the number of seminars which a smaller size would require. A larger size would probably be unwieldy. When the program is inaugurated in the fall of 1964, the senior class will probably number about 185. Thus a total of twelve seminars each semester might be sufficient initially. When the class reaches its planned size of 225, the program will require at least sixteen seminars each semester, although some might be given twice each year.

The committee developing the plan for the senior seminars asked interested faculty members to submit outlines for possible topics.

One proposal, in the field of the humanities, is on "Existentialism: Secular and Religious." Its purpose would be to explore the concept of existentialism, its moods and varieties. In the introductory period the period would present to the group certain representative existentialists and their characteristic themes. Meanwhile the group would read one or two introductions to the subject, and these would be the basis for round-table discussions. The opportunities for independent work leading to reports would include such topics as "Existentialism vis-a-vis Communist and Democratic Ideologies," "Nietzsche and Kierkegard: a Comparison and Contrast," and "Is Thomism a Form of Existentialism?"

A second proposal, this time in the natural sciences, is on "Radiochemistry." The only background needed would be a year of a laboratory science, which all Seniors would have had in meeting their distribution requirements. In the introductory period there would be an intensive study of some of the scientific propositions needed to understand the phenomenon of radioactivity. These would be developed through outside reading assignments in the descriptive, mathematical, and experimental aspects of radiochemistry. Topics for reports would include "Spatial and Temporal Distribution of Fallout" and "Medical Diagnosis and Treatment with Radiochemicals."

The final example, in the field of the social studies, is on "Social Darwinism." This seminar would explore the impact of Darwinian evolutionary theory upon social thought in the period from 1859 to the present. The initial period would start with an examination of Darwin's contribution to biology, followed by a consideration of the impact of evolutionary theory upon social thought. In that connection some attention would be given to Herbert Spencer and William Graham Sumner and to such popularizers as T. H. Huxley and Asa Gray. The individual reports would consider the impact of Social Darwinism in such fields as politics, religion, ethics, education, and literature. After the reports were presented to the group, there would be a series of summary meetings which would include a discussion of the way in which people have, rightly or wrongly, seen a relationship between science and ideas about society.

On The Campus

On Tuesday night, April 16, Bowdoin and the University of Maine announced that they have agreed to end their football rivalry, one of the oldest in the country, after the 1964 season. In President Coles' words, the action was taken "after a full assessment of our competitive situation relative to that of the University of Maine in football and what it might be in the foreseeable future. This was indicated to be our only just course, in fairness to Bowdoin's undergraduates. The football competition between Bowdoin and Maine has always been intense, but the contests have always been well played and the relations between the two squads very friendly."

Director of Athletics Mal Morrell '24 said that Bowdoin has been "very proud of all of our athletic relations with the University of Maine, and we hope that we may continue to compete in other sports. Much of the time Maine's teams have been considerably stronger than Bowdoin's, but always the competition has been on a friendly basis."

The Polar Bears will play a practice game against Worcester Polytechnic Institute next fall and will start a formal series with W. P. I. in 1964, when the schedule will include eight games instead of the usual seven.

In 1965 Worcester will replace Tufts as Bowdoin's opening game. There is some possibility that we will play Tufts at the end of the season, starting in 1965. However, several factors are involved, and there will be no decision on this matter until late next fall.

In answer to questions, Mr. Morrell said that Bowdoin hopes to continue indefinitely its traditional football competition with Amherst, Wesleyan, Williams, Colby, Bates, and Maine. The 1964 schedule will be the same except that the Worcester game, on September 19, will be an official contest instead of a practice game.

Pontormo Painting

The Art Museum's painting "The Transformation of Daphne," long thought to be the work of Andrea del Sarto, a Florentine artist of the early 16th century, has now been firmly attributed to Jacopo Pontormo, one of the most important masters of that century. John Shearman, a British art historian, made the new identification.

The Pontormo work is one of the 12 paintings which the Samuel H. Kress Foundation gave to the College in 1961. It is one of only five Pontormo paintings in this country. One of the five is in a private collection, and the other four are in as many museums.

Pontormo made the painting to decorate a float for a carnival which the Medici family put on in 1513 to help overcome the lack of enthusiasm of the Florentines over the return of the Medici to power the year before.

New Faculty Members

Lawrence Parkus, a 1958 graduate of Johns Hopkins who did graduate work in political science at the University of Oslo in Norway under a Fulbright award in 1958-59, has joined the Bowdoin faculty as Instructor in Government, succeeding Professor David B. Walker, who has been granted a leave of absence to accept a position in Washington, D. C.

Mr. Parkus is completing the requirements for his Ph.D. from Cornell, where he was a military graduate student and teaching assistant since 1959. The title of his doctoral thesis is "Franklin D. Roosevelt's Apointments to the Lower Federal Courts, 1933-45."

C. Douglas McGee, a member of the faculty at Vassar College since 1954, will join the Bowdoin faculty in the fall as Associate Professor of Philosophy. He is a graduate of Northwestern, where he also received an M.A. degree, and earned his Ph.D. from Harvard. A World War II Army veteran, he is the author of numerous articles and papers. His book An Essay in Moral Philosophy is being prepared for publication.

Robert A. Walkling, a Research Fellow at Harvard, will become Assistant Professor of Physics at Bowdoin in September. He will teach courses in theoretical mechanics and quantum mechanics and assist in the first-year physics course. His main field of interest in research is acoustics, particularly in the electro, architectural, and musical areas. He received his bachelor's degree from Swarthmore and his M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard.

Donald G. Adam, a graduate of Harvard, will become Instructor in English in the fall. He is completing the spring semester at the University of Rochester, where he is a candidate for his Ph.D. degree. His main fields of interest are Restoration and 18th century literature and the English and American novel.

J. Clarence Davies, III will become Instructor in Government and Director of the Bureau for Research in Municipal Government. Now completing requirements for his Ph.D. at Columbia University, he was graduated from Dartmouth in 1959. The title of his doctoral thesis is "Interest Group Reactions to Urban Renewal in New York City." He has done research on zoning for the New York City Planning Commission and was editor of a study of tax exemption for housing projects sponsored by the American Council to Improve Our Neighborhoods.

Gerald F. Downey, a graduate of Northeastern University, will become Instructor in Economics. He is a teaching fellow at Boston College, where he is completing requirements for his Ph.D. At Northeastern he was a three-year letterman in track, a member of the cross country team, and a sports writer for the student newspaper.

James P. Granger is already serving as Controller in the Business Office, a new position. Previously employed as a senior accountant with Baker and Adam in Portland, he is a summa cum laude graduate of Boston University. He served in the Army in 1947-48 and in the Marine Corps from 1952 to 1954.

John L. Howland '57 will become Assistant Professor of Biology in September. Since 1961 he has been a post-doctoral fellow at the University of Amsterdam in the Netherlands. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Bowdoin, with high honors in biology, he received his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1961. His main field of interest is the chemistry of biological oxidations, in which he is currently doing research with the support of the National Institutes of Health.

Daniel Levine, a member of the faculty at Earlham College in Indiana since 1960, will become Assistant Professor of History in the fall. A graduate of Antioch College, he received his master's and doctor's degrees from Northwestern University. In 1954-55 he studied at Edinburgh University in Scotland, and in 1956-57 he was a Woodrow Wilson Fellow. His main field of interest is American intellectual history during the period from 1865 to 1939, and at the present time he is working on a study of Jane Addams and American social thought.

Wesley H. Long will become Assistant Professor of Economics in September. He is a candidate for the Ph.D. degree at the University of Michigan, from which he also received his bachelor's and master's degrees. The subject of his doctoral thesis is "An Investigation into the Determinants of Demand for Interurban Air Travel in the United States." His research interests are in econometrics, macro-economic theory, and monetary theory.

On June 1 Arthur Monke will join the staff of the Library as Assistant Librarian. A graduate of Gustavus Adolphus College and the Columbia University School of Library Service, he has since 1958 been Reference Librarian at Colgate University. During World War II he served in the Artillery.

In other changes at the Library, Miss Marjorie Frost is now Junior Cataloguer and Stevens W. Hilyard '62 is Assistant to the Librarian.

James D. Redwine, Jr., an instructor at the University of Cincinnati for the past two years, will become Assistant Professor of English in September. He is a graduate of Duke University, received his M.A. with high honors from Columbia, and is a candidate for the Ph.D. at Princeton. His specialty is the literature of the English Renaissance.

Ed Hammond to Retire

Wing Professor of Mathematics Edward S. Hammond will retire in June after teaching at Bowdoin for 42 years. He plans to "travel and do some relaxing" and then resume work on mathematical studies.

President Coles said of Professor Hammond, "Foremost and most important, he will be remembered for his outstanding teaching and his leadership in keeping instruction in mathematics abreast of the newest developments. Of almost equal significance was his work as the first Director of Admissions in establishing that office almost thirty years ago."

Professor Dan Christie '37, a former student and for many years now a faculty colleague of Professor Hammond, recalls, "As a student I think I was most impressed by Dr. Hammond's mellow good humor in class and his extreme competence as a teacher. I can still recall the way he would walk to the blackboard and confidently plunge into the most complex mathematical calculations with an easy skill that had great influence on the class. With his complete mastery of his material, and the deep intellectual insight he brought to bear on it, he had a manner of looking at problems from the students' point of view. He even went out of his way to help them get books at a saving, no small item to many undergraduates."

Professor Hammond joined the Bowdoin faculty in 1921, became an assistant professor in 1922, was promoted to the rank of full professor in 1925, and was named Wing Professor in 1929. He was Chairman of the Mathematics Department from 1926 to 1961 and during World War II was Academic Director for the Army and Air Force training programs at the College. In addition to his teaching duties, he was Director of Admissions from 1935 to 1948. Among the courses he has taught have been analytic geometry, calculus, differential equations, advanced analytic geometry, modern synthetic geometry, and non-Euclidean geometry.

Professor Hammond graduated from Yale in 1913 and received his M.A. there in 1915. Five years later, after teaching at the West Haven (Conn.) High School, he received his Ph.D. from Princeton. The subject of his thesis was "Periodic Conjugate Nets of Curves."

A Trustee of North Yarmouth Academy since 1937, Professor Hammond was for many years a Director of Portland Junior College. He is married to the former Ruth E. Mackrill of West Haven, Conn., a well known landscape artist. They have three daughters, Mrs. David R. Hirth, Mrs. Walter P. Hollmann, and Mrs. John E. MacAdam. Two grandsons, David H. Hirth '64 and Samuel E. Hirth '66, are studying at Bowdoin.

Faculty Matters

Assistant Professor of Biology Charles E. Huntington has received a Guggenheim Fellowship to support his work in preparing for publication the results of eight years of research on the Leach's Petrel. He will be on leave of absence next year and will conduct his work mainly at the Edward Grey Institute of Field Ornithology at Oxford University in England. While there he will also visit ornithological field stations and islands which are nesting places of sea birds.

Professor Huntington plans to try to correlate the data he has collected on such factors as breeding success, nest location, and times of breeding with the survival rate of the petrels. Most of his research was done at Bowdoin's Scientific Station on Kent Island (off Grand Manan in the Bay of Fundy), of which he is Director, and on islands off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

Leach's Petrels are small, extremely shy birds that spend most of their lives far out at sea and that nest in underground burrows on islands in northern waters. They leave their burrows only at night and return while it is still dark, presumably as a protective measure.

Two members of the faculty have been appointed to positions with the National Science Foundation in Washington, D. C., for the 1963-64 academic year. Professor Reinhard L. Korgen of the Mathematics Department will become Associate Program Director in the Undergraduate Science Education Program of the Special Projects in Science Education Section. Professor Myron A. Jeppesen will be Associate Program Director of the Graduate Program of the Fellowship Section.

Assistant Professor of Biology Robert J. Toft will leave Bowdoin in June to become Assistant Physiologist at the Argonne National Laboratory. He will work in a group project doing basic research on the effects of radiation on dogs. One of the aims of the project will be to work out a relationship between internal and external radiation effects, to be applied to studies on the protection of humans from radiation harm. He will also continue the research which he has been carrying on at Bowdoin, on the effects of parathyroid hormones on bone structure. He has been a member of the faculty since 1960.

Assistant Professor of Speech Charles R. Perrie, Jr., also a member of the faculty since 1960, will join the faculty of Kent State University in Ohio in September. He will teach graduate courses in speech communications at Kent’s School of Speech.

Financial Aid at Bowdoin

Director of Student Aid Philip S. Wilder ’23 reports that 318 of Bowdoin’s 800 students received outright scholarship grants totaling more than $300,000 this year. In addition, better than $100,000 has been made available to students this year in the form of loans.

About half of the money distributed as grants comes from income on endowment, according to Mr. Wilder. There are more than 170 such funds, with a book value in excess of $2,250,000.

Other scholarship aid money comes from gifts made to or through the College on a year-to-year basis. The donors include various organizations, foundations, industrial firms, and the Bowdoin Fathers’ Association. The Bowdoin Alumni Fund supports freshman grants for about 30 men, provides tuition and fees for the 12 Bowdoin Plan foreign students, and also makes possible additional funds for the general program.

The cost of the scholarship program beyond these sources must be paid from the general funds of the College, income from unrestricted endowment, student fees, and unrestricted gifts.

6,000 Evergreen Seedlings

More than 6,000 evergreen seedlings have been planted among the historic Bowdoin pines to insure their preservation. The seedling operation in the grove of about 37 acres is part of a three-phase forestry program. Begun 15 years ago, it includes (1) clearing of brush, deadfalls, and reseeding; (2) removal of doomed and dead trees and the opening of areas for the new growth; (3) fertilizing seedling areas and thinning out crowded new growth.

Under the supervision of College Forester Carleton C. Young, the Grounds and Buildings Department is carrying out the second phase of this program. Of the thousands of trees in the grove less than 60 will have to be removed. The new growth is coming along fine, according to John F. Brush, Superintendent of Grounds and Buildings.

Musical Matters

On April 24 Alpha Delta Phi took first place in the annual Interfraternity Sing for the second year in a row. Second place went to Alpha Rho Upsilon, which also received the Improvement Cup. Zeta Psi was third, followed by Psi Upsilon, Beta Theta Pi, and Delta Sigma. A somewhat reluctant Chi Psi group, which had tied for sixth place in the preliminaries, was not given a rating in the finals.

The first public performance of “Jazz Symphony,” composed by Robert J. Snyder ’63 of Waban, Mass., took place on May 2 in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall. Written as an honors project, the work, according to its composer, is “basically in the progressive jazz idiom” and is one of the “relatively few jazz symphonies ever written.” It consists of three movements and was performed by a 15-piece student orchestra, with the composer at the piano.

On April 15 Professor Frederic Tillerson H’46 and cellist Yves Chardon presented a chamber music concert in the Pickard Theater.

“Bowdoin Night at the Pops,” a traditional highlight of the spring season, was held in Symphony Hall in Boston on the evening of May 16, when Professor Robert Beckwith’s Glee Club and the Meddiebempsters appeared with Arthur Fiedler’s Boston Pops Orchestra. The first such “Bowdoin Night” took place in 1947.

Undergraduate Distinctions

Bruce Frost ’63 of Brunswick, perhaps the best weightman in Bowdoin’s track history, will go to the Arctic this summer to participate in a survey to be conducted by the National Defense Research Board of Canada. The Royal Canadian Air Force will fly him to Ellesmere Island, about 600 miles from the North Pole. He will do research on plankton in the waters of Tanquary Fjord, which was named by one of the members of Rear Admiral Donald B. MacMillan’s 1914 expedition to the Arctic.

Frost holds the Bowdoin and Maine Intercollegiate shot put record and the Bowdoin indoor record in the discus and is also an outstanding hammer thrower. Next September he will enter Scripps Institute at the University of California to do graduate work in the field of marine biology.

Charles Na Li ’63, a Bowdoin Plan student from Hong Kong, has received a Danforth Graduate Fellowship, providing an annual stipend of $1,500, plus tuition and fees, for up to four years of graduate study. He plans to teach mathematics at the college level. Li is one of 101 seniors in the United States to receive a Danforth award. He and his family fled Communist China in 1950 and took refuge in Hong Kong, where his father teaches at New Asia College.

Jonathan A. Botelho ’63 of Fairhaven, Mass., has received a Woodrow Wilson
National Fellowship for graduate study in romance languages at Johns Hopkins University. He entered Bowdoin in the fall of 1959 as a National Merit Scholar.

Morehouse Exchange

Nine Bowdoin students spent their spring vacation at Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., and three weeks later six Morehouse students were at Bowdoin for a week in an exchange designed to encourage interracial understanding.

David L. Bayer '64 of Merrick, L. I., N. Y., and Philip H. Hansen, Ill '64 of Bridgton, who initiated the exchange, received the Roosevelt Cup at Bowdoin on April 12, when the six Negroes from Morehouse were on the campus. In making the award, Dean Nathaniel Kendrick said, "In our current national and international life, no problem can be more important and require more vision, humanity, courage, and intelligence than the friendly and constructive efforts to further the progress and achieve the eventual attainment of the integration of our people."

"The visit of our friends from Morehouse reminds us of a cause close to the heart of President Roosevelt and basic to the principle of American democracy—equal rights and respect for all our fellow citizens. Bowdoin has always considered itself deeply committed to that cause, and many Bowdoin men have testified to this in words and action."

Richard K. Barksdale '37 is Chairman of the Morehouse Department of English, and Benjamin E. Mays, a graduate of Bates, is its President.

Scholastic Awards

The Independents led the way scholastically during the first semester with an average of 3.000, although the Student Council Cup, awarded to the fraternity with the highest academic standing, went to Phi Delta Psi, which had an average of 2.516. It was followed by Alpha Rho Upsilon, Sigma Nu, Theta Delta Chi, Beta Theta Pi, Delta Sigma, Chi Psi, Alpha Delta Phi, Kappa Sigma, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Zeta Psi, and Psi Upsilon. The all-college average was 2.268, and the all-fraternity average was 2.246.

Sigma Nu won the Pesciman Cup with a freshman average of 2.477, followed by Alpha Rho Upsilon, Delta Sigma, Phi Delta Psi, the Independents, Beta Theta Pi, Kappa Sigma, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Chi Psi, Theta Delta Chi, Alpha Delta Phi, Zeta Psi, and Psi Upsilon. The all-fraternity and all-college averages were identical at 2.132.

South Portland High School won the Abraxas Award, given to the school whose representatives (a minimum of three men) maintain the highest academic standing during the first semester. Belmont (Mass.) High School was second, Springfield (Mass.) Classical High School third, and Hebron Academy fourth.

Spring Sports

An undefeated record by the track team and an impressive victory by the sailing team in the New England Intercollegiate Regatta were two of the highlights at the two-thirds mark in Bowdoin's spring sports season.

Coach Frank Sabateanski's track squad won out over Amherst and Vermont in dual meets and went on to defeat M.I.T. and New Hampshire and then Brandeis and Colby in triangular meets.

Bowdoin's sailors registered the first victory by a New England college in four years as they won the Jan T. Friis Trophy in a 13-college field on the Charles River in Boston. Bowdoin was also the last New England institution to win this event, in 1959.

Coach Nels Corey's lacrosse squad started its season with a victory over Villanova, then lost to Delaware, Adelphi, Stevens Tech, C. W. Post, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Wesleyan. But the club snapped out of its losing streak to defeat Nichols, M.I.T., and New England College.

The baseball team lost to Fairleigh Dickinson, Villanova, and Baltimore. Coach Danny MacFadden's squad then defeated Baltimore, lost to Upsala twice and to Amherst once, defeated Williams, Tufts, and Suffolk, and lost to Brandeis, Bares, Maine, and Colby.

Coach Ray Bicknell's tennis squad lost to M.I.T., Amherst, and Tufts, split two matches with Bates, and defeated Colby and Maine.
Coach Ed Coombs' golf squad lost to Tufts, defeated Lowell Tech, lost twice to Bates and once to Colby, defeated Trinity, and lost to Wesleyan, Williams, and Maine.

A complete report on the spring sports season will be carried in the July issue of the ALUMNUS.

Spaulding-Potter Challenge

The Trustees of the Spaulding-Potter Charitable Trusts of Concord, N. H., have approved a grant of $15,000 to Bowdoin, provided that $15,000 in unrestricted money is contributed to the College by Bowdoin alumni living in New Hampshire. The $50,000 would be used to establish an endowed scholarship fund to assist New Hampshire boys who are attending Bowdoin.

In essence, this means that for every dollar contributed to the Capital Campaign by New Hampshire alumni, Bowdoin will receive another dollar, up to a limit of $15,000. The $15,000 which alumni contribute must be unrestricted so that the College may add it to the Spaulding-Potter grant, and gifts which New Hampshire alumni make to the Alumni Fund will not count for matching purposes.

A scholarship fund of $30,000 will produce each year approximately $1,200 of income—a significant proportion of the tuition charge.

Gifts

Edward H. Tevriz '26 of New York City has given the College two silver salvers and a silver bread basket, all bearing the Bowdoin family coat of arms. Descendants of the Honorable James Bowdoin, Colonial Governor of Massachusetts, for whom the College is named, originally owned the silver. One of the salvers was made in about 1830 by William Ladd, the other salver by William Forbes, also in about 1830, and the bread basket by Ball, Black, and Company in about 1850. Mr. Tevriz, who is President of the New York Bowdoin Club this year, is Manager of the Railroad Department of the investment banking firm of Glore, Forgan, and Company in New York.

The Perkin-Elmer Corporation of Norwalk, Conn., has given Bowdoin an ultraviolet spectrometer for the Chemistry Department. It will be useful for the analysis of various chemical compounds and also as an aid in the measurement of absorption, transmission, and reflectance of visible light by organic and inorganic substances. The device automatically records the light absorption spectrum of a sample in the ultraviolet and visible light ranges, using a fused silica prism as the light dispersing element.

The Texas Utilities Company of Dallas, Texas, has made a gift of $1,000 in memory of the late John W. Frost '04. At the suggestion of Mrs. Frost and her three Bowdoin sons, the gift will be used to purchase an acquisition for the Museum of Art. Mr. Frost was a member of the Board of Directors of Texas Utilities for many years. He served on the Governing Boards' Committee on Art Interests at Bowdoin.

The International Nickel Company has made an unrestricted grant of $4,000 to the College as part of its program of aid to higher education. The money is being applied toward the equipment needs of the Physics Department. Inco made a similar grant a year ago.

Bowdoin Merit Scholars

These awards, which Bowdoin itself supports, were established last November as part of the program of the National Merit Scholarship Corporation. They supplement other prematriculation scholarships at Bowdoin.

In addition to these eight Bowdoin Merit Scholars, four other members of the Class of 1967 have won National Merit Scholarships, awarded by the NMSC itself. They are Thomas Allen of Portland, Robert Saunders of Wells, Peter Smullen of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., and Frank Tonge of Onset, Mass.

George Mackenzie is the son of George H. Mackenzie '41, and Thomas Allen is the son of Charles Allen '34.

Some 16,000 high schools participate in the NMSC program. Of the several hundred thousand students who take the qualifying test, about 1,000 with the highest scores are awarded scholarships each year.

Masque and Gown

On May 15 and 18 the Masque and Gown presented as its Ivy Houseparty play Rastaman by Fay and Michael Kanin. Acting Director of Dramatics Daniel Calder '60 served as both designer and director for the productions.

These two pictures show members of Bowdoin's 1937-38 state championship hockey team as they looked that year and as they look now. In the front row in the top picture, from left to right, are Nels Corey '39, Dan Hanley '39, the late Fred Jealous '39, Leon Beck '38, Ingie Arnold '39, and Oak Melendy '39. In the back row are Manager Ned Vergason '39, Dave Doughty '40, Bunny Bass '40, Bill Allen '39, Jack Tucker '40, and Coach Linn Wells.

The Alumni Council
Midwinter Meeting - Career Conference - Senior Dinner

The Alumni Council held its regular Midwinter Meeting at the College from Thursday, February 28, through Saturday, March 2. More than two-thirds of the Executive Committee and the Representative Members from Alumni Clubs, as well as many of their wives, attended the sessions.

On Thursday afternoon and evening the Nominating and Alumni-Undergraduate Liaison Committees held meetings. The former sifted dozens of suggestions and ultimately chose the candidates for Alumni Nominee for Overseer and for Member at Large of the Council to appear on the 1963 Alumni Ballot. It also chose the nominee for appointment by President Coles to a five-year term as Director of the Alumni Fund. The Liaison Committee met eight typical undergraduates in a two-hour session that included extended discussion of fraternities, the Senior Center Program, and other topics of mutual interest.

Following breakfast on Friday, Council Members gathered at the Alumni House, where the seven other standing committees and the four special committees held meetings throughout the morning. Coffee was served, fires were burning in the fireplaces, and there was opportunity for Council Members and their guests to visit between committee meetings. From 11 until noon, Mrs. Coles held an informal coffee hour for the Council wives at 85 Federal Street.

Dr. Ralph T. Ogden '21, Council President, presided at the luncheon at the Union, and Professor Herbert R. Brown extended greetings on behalf of the College. Members of the Council then moved to the Alumni Council Room at the Alumni House, where they held their afternoon business meeting. This featured reports from all thirteen committees, a progress report by Fund Chairman Willard B. Arnold, III '51, and a brief report by Alumni Secretary Peter C. Barnard '50. The Council voted to establish a new Alumni Award for Faculty and Staff, to be presented each year at Alumni Day to some member of the Bowdoin Faculty or Staff in recognition of his devotion to the College, its students, and its alumni.

Council Members and wives attended a late-afternoon reception at the Alumni House and then went to their respective fraternity houses, where they were dinner guests. Later that evening they attended the exciting Bowdoin-Colby hockey game, which the Polar Bears lost by a score of 6 to 2.

On Saturday morning the Council reconvened for an interesting two-part program. Council Treasurer Glenn R. McIntire '25 was moderator for a series of reports, entitled "Some Interesting Bowdoin Sidelights," which included questions from the Council and answers from the "experts." The panel was comprised of Miss Helen B. Johnson, the Registrar; Dr. Daniel F. Hanley '39, the College Physician; Professor Samuel E. Kamerling, Coordinator of Summer Programs; Joseph D. Kamin, Director of News Services; and Professor James A. Storer, Director of the Center for Economic Research. The second part of the program featured an informal report by President Coles, who also answered questions.

Dr. Ogden presided at luncheon, and the group then moved to the Arena for the Alumni-Varsity hockey game, the final event of the sessions.

On Monday, March 4, the Alumni Council and its Placement Committee sponsored another Campus Career Conference, which was open to the undergraduates of all four classes.

Conference participants gathered at the Alumni House for registration and coffee between nine and ten o'clock in the morning. Robert N. Bass '40, Chairman of the Placement Committee, was the Chapel speaker. He described briefly the purposes of the Conference, stressing the broad, educational, informative goals that his Committee had in mind.

At 10:30 moderators and panelists gathered at Smith Auditorium for a briefing, and then each panel group completed plans for its afternoon session. The entire alumni group reconvened in the main lounge of the Moulton Union for luncheon. Dr. Ralph T. Ogden '21, President of the Alumni Council, presided and introduced President Coles, who welcomed the alumni participants and thanked them for taking part in the Conference.

At 1:30 undergraduates joined panelists and moderators for the opening general session in Smith Auditorium. Richard C. Johnstone '44, the principal speaker, outlined some important considerations for undergraduates to keep in mind as they attend interviews, prepare personal profiles, and handle correspondence and the other mechanics of job applications. Mr. Bass and Samuel A. Ladd, Jr. '29, Director of the Placement Bureau, also spoke briefly.

At two, three, and four o'clock there were three separate series of four panels each, covering twelve different occupations or professions. The panel topics and the alumni who took part (moderators listed first) were as follows:

From 4 o'clock to 5:30 undergraduates had an opportunity to meet panelists and moderators at an informal coffee hour.

At 6 o'clock the Alumni Council held its Tenth Annual Senior Dinner. Approximately two hundred seniors and Career Conference participants crowded into the main lounge at the Union for a delicious steak dinner. Dr. Ogden presided, President Coles spoke on behalf of the College, and Charles J. Micolleau, Secretary of the Class of 1965, spoke as the representative of the seniors.

The guest of honor and principal speaker was the Honorable Paul H. Douglas '13, United States Senator from Illinois. He invited two of his former Bowdoin teachers to join him at the head table: Professors Emeriti Warren B. Cattlin and Orren C. Hornell.

Subsequently many of the same alumni and seniors — plus other guests — attended Senator Douglas' public lecture on the Common Market.

The Honorable Paul H. Douglas '13, United States Senator from Illinois, delivered an informal talk on March 4 at the Senior Dinner and immediately thereafter a formal public lecture on the Common Market.

Richard Johnstone '44 was the principal speaker at the opening general session of the March 4 Campus Career Conference.

On Saturday morning, March 2, the Council gathered in its meeting room at the Alumni House to hear from a panel of experts. (See text on page 10.)
Books With A Bowdoin Flavor

For those unfamiliar with the unpredictable habits of bird-watchers and for those possessed of preconceived notions about ornithologists as a breed descended from eccentric forebears who, in the tradition of the late George Apley, subscribe to a moderate form of physical fitness, consisting of a brisk stroll in the Boston Garden, Penguin Summer will come as a surprise. On the other hand, those who know the species ornithologos in general or are familiar with Mrs. Pettingill and her ornithologist husband through lectures, publications, or contributions to Walt Disney Productions will not be amazed at all. Neither group will be disappointed, although each may feel a twinge of regret over what is omitted.

The title itself exerts a beckoning power on both types of reader and succeeds admirably to entice the professional and the amateur into a realm seemingly unattainable but suddenly accessible. In addition, Harvey Satenstein’s design and Clarkson Potter’s execution of the format make the volume a real pleasure to handle while intimately sharing the experiences of the author. “An Adventure with the Birds of the Falkland Islands” is almost an apt sub-title but not quite, because, to this reviewer at least, the charm of the book lies even more closely associated with the environment and the people that make the Pettingills’ summer come to life than with the birds and other fauna.

One is from the outset roused to the truth of the Falklands, their remoteness, the challenge of the rugged climate, the now infuriated virginity of nature in close approximation to civilization — an outpost and the sternest kind of paradise. The stiff correctness of the British Governor of this small Crown Colony (a man whom Mrs. Pettingill so nearly openly resents), side by side with the magnificent generosity of a solid, tiny community, provides an object lesson of an existence which nowadays is in danger of disappearance from all parts of this earth. It is refreshing to read about such humanity whether or not the author intended this interpretation.

Then, of course, there are the birds and, in particular, the penguins. Their ceaseless oddity of appearance, their behavior, and their life cycles are all recapitulated, both in print and in photographs, to delight the reader. And always present are the compelling power of a bleak natural element, the frequent squalls of rain and snow, the test of physical endurance characteristic of an area so consistently chilly. The two hair-raising experiences on Kidney Island at either end of the account of the Pettingills’ story serve as constant reminders of the vast difference between such birding and a stroll in Central Park.

By contrast, sandwiched between these two sojourns is the delightful account of a month on New Island, westernmost of the Falklands — a marked contrast to the eastern capital of Port Stanley, where half of the Falklands’ five thousand inhabitants attempt to preserve the atmosphere of the outside world. On New Island with the Davises the Pettingills shared in a paradise of sorts, living with a family whose livelihood is sheep and whose standards are high but not taken for granted, and participating in the smallest of communities, one which at the same time was the warmest. Even the sun cooperates. Radio and plane are the only real links to Port Stanley, and here Mrs. Pettingill’s husband was able to work with greater latitude and less pressure from time and nature. The penguins and people alike breathe greater vitality, and one can appreciate Mrs. Pettingill’s regarding these as the most rewarding and exhilarating weeks of her life.

Scientists will miss in these pages any attempt to organize the ornithological material beyond the list appended to the final chapter, but it would be unfair to confuse Mrs. Pettingill’s aim with that of her husband. It is, after all, her narrative, and I think its fascination and success lie in the celebrated dictum nos poetae est non omnia dicere.

NATHAN DANE, II ’37

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, Uncle Tom’s Cabin or Life Among the Lowly, edited by KENNETH S. LYNCH: Harvard University Press, 1962; pp. xxix and 460; $5.00.

Professor Wilmot Brookings Mitchell of blessed memory often delighted his Bowdoin classes in American literature by reading a lecture entitled “Bromwich-Born Books.” The local offspring proved to be a variegated lot, ranging from Nathaniel Hawthorne’s Fanshawe to Robert Tristram Coffin’s Lost Paradise, but the most famous baby of them all was Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin.

Since Professor Mitchell enlarged using an anecdotal device known as the concept of “detective teaching,” he sometimes asked those familiar with Uncle Tom’s Cabin to raise their hands. And when hands shot up all over the room, he began a mischievous cross-examination. “How many bloodhounds pursued Eliza as she crossed the ice with her baby?” the sly professor asked. The response was usually unanimous, enthusiastic, and confident: “scores of ferocious bloodhounds,” “packs of ugly dogs.” The professor then baited his hook again, “Was Simon Legree a Southerner?” he asked innocently, “Yes, from the deep South.” scorned the unsuspecting class, eager to fatten its batting average.

By this time the teacher had received enough misinformation to enable him to point his moral, “No bloodhounds,” he said, “occur in the novel; they appeared for the first time in a vulgar melodrama issued in 1879. As for Simon Legree,” he added, “that brutal plantation owner was a Yankee, born and bred deep in New England.” The surprised members of the class were then admonished to read the book for themselves. And they were warned to prepare for a startling experience, for Mrs. Stowe’s story is not only an explosive novel; it is also a brilliantly executed one, fully deserving the acclaim of such unlikely critics as Lord Palmerton, Charles Dickens, George Eliot, and even the fastidious Henry James.

Twentieth-century readers no longer need confuse the novel with the legend or with the grotesquely embroidered stage versions in which Uncle Tom “doubled” as an archangel in ebony and the end-man of a Negro minstrel show. By all odds the most perceptive, edited present-day edition is that based upon the text of J. P. Jewett’s first American edition of 1852 and recently issued in a distinguished format in the John Harvard Library Series by the Harvard University Press.

In his illuminating introduction Professor Kenneth Lynch correctly identifies Uncle Tom’s Cabin as a product of the sentimental tradition, “the greatest tear-jerker of them all.” But he wisely notes that “it is a tear-jerker with a difference,” because Mrs.
Stowe—unlike the domestic sentimentalists of the Feminine Fifties—was not an escapist. She refused to feed the national complacency by shrouding the monstrous actualities of slavery in the flattering mists of sentimental optimism. Nor could she share Hawthorne's comfortable opinion that slavery would "vanish like a dream" only if it were unmasked by someone who had the nerve to glorify plantation life and authors who evaded its harsh realities only confirmed her conviction that the sentimental mind "might not be unaptly represented by a bale of cotton—downy, soft, benevolently fuzzy, and confused."

Yet, in spite of her own reservations, Stowe adroitly exploited the serviceable sentimental formula used in other lachrymose classics of the time, The Lamplighter and The Wide, Wide World. Uncle Tom's Cabin has its full share of Dickensian deathbeds and tearful tableaux. Little Nell and Little Eva belong to the same evangelistic cult of the S Flythy Child. Uncle Tom is too often forced to preach. Mrs. Stowe's own pet homilies, and minor characters are frequently conscripted to bear on moral crusades. Little Eva's temperance lectures even cure St. Clare's fondness for mint juleps. Yet bathos, purple melodrama, and turgid simplicity do not explain why the novel has so long outlasted the evils of the pecuniary institution which it condemned and helped to destroy. Abraham Lincoln was less than half-jocular when he greeted Mrs. Stowe as the little woman who started the big War.

Although the author suffered at times from a Messianic complex which led her to say that the book had been written by God, a fresh appraisal of the work will reveal a carefully contrived plan to indicate that the North as well as the South must bear responsibility for slavery. As Edmund Wilson remarked in Patriotic Gore, "The farther one reads in Uncle Tom, the more one becomes aware that a critical mind is at work, which has the complex situation in a very firm grip and which, no matter how vehement the characters become, is controlling and tempering the revelations."

To come to the book today, when reports from Little Rock and "Ole Miss" bear witness to the persistent struggle for greater equality, is to discover how Mrs. Stowe subordinated fantasy to uncompromising realism. She demolished the southern ideal of a benign patriarchy by assailing it at its most vulnerable point—the cruel instability of Negro family life. She boldly attacked the problems of incest and miscegenation; she foresaw the demands for freedom in Africa; she realized that the battle against slavery could not be won with emancipation; she spoke eloquently for repressed humanity in all lands and all ages.

The present edition was made possible by a trust fund established at Harvard to make available the great documents and books which have shaped the American imagination. Uncle Tom's Cabin is such a book. No other American novel of the nineteenth century made so wide an appeal to the common conscience and humanity of readers everywhere. Long after the tense moral excitement which produced it has died, the book still retains, in its high moments of profound and authentic passion, the power to stir the hearts of men.

HERBERT BROWN

Professor Shipman's An Inquiry into the High Cost of Electricity in New England is perhaps the most thoroughgoing study of the question yet to be published. It analyzes in depth a subject which has long bedeviled operations, investors, legislators, and regulatory agencies, not to mention consumers of electricity.

The inquiry is divided into three major sections:

1. Are electric rates higher than in most other parts of the United States? They are!
2. What are the elements which have resulted in these rates?
3. What can and should be done to reduce the handicaps on consumers in New England?

1. While regional comparisons are always subject to qualifications, there is little doubt that electric rates in the three generally accepted classes—residential, commercial, and industrial—are substantially higher than in most other parts of the country. As a corollary, the consumption per user is somewhat lower than the average.

2. The elements of cost which have led to higher rates are analyzed right down to the last flyspeck so that no factor can escape.

The outstanding item, as would be expected, is coal. New England, with no coal, oil, or natural gas, pays a high price for its fuel. While the territory is blessed with great resources of water power, the blessing is by no means unmixed.

(a) With early development of industry, many of the best New England power sites were developed by mills and factories long before the age of electricity,

(b) The water power sources left available for electric companies were generally far from consumption centers, necessitating long and expensive transmission lines.

(c) Probably most troublesome is the fact that our rivers refuse to flow at a uniform rate and require thermal plants to supply demand in times of drought. Recently the practice has been even further complicated by the necessity for the steam plants to carry the base loads while the hydro turbines supply peak requirements. It is still true that the cheapest way to store electricity is to let water pile up behind a dam to be released on the moment as required. In any case we have, in effect, two sets of power plants, each with its capital and operating costs, to supply one set of power.

Other elements in power costs, each contributing its bit to the total, include the historical background of small local companies with high costs of both production and administration; long distances and low population densities in northern New England; and high local taxes, especially in Massachusetts.

3. Professor Shipman's chief recommendation for diminishing the rate differential is for the development of very large regional power plants and transmission systems with the resulting economies. This would involve either a consolidation of several of the smaller companies or a cooperative arrangement such as the one recently used in the Yankee Atomic Energy Project, or both. Other ideas, such as more intensive sales effort to expand electric usage, are also advanced by the author.

This book will meet criticism; indeed it already has become to some extent controversial. This is to be expected and can be healthy. The subject needs to be discussed in full light.

For example, the limit on importation of heavy fuel oil imposed by the Federal Government places a burden not only on the industries of New England but also on every user of electricity in our area. Your reviewer, who in 1963 completes his fiftieth year close to the electrical industry as employee, investment analyst, integrator, regulator, and personal investor, found this book most stimulating. He hopes that many others will have the necessary patience to follow the analysis and will benefit by the study.

SUMMER T. PIKE '13

This voluminous and learned volume by my old teacher and valued friend is the fruit of nearly four decades of scholarly study and contemplation. Warren Catlin has always been a mellow and unhurried worker, and this book on the history of economic thought, like his previous work on the labor problem, has all the virtues of these qualities. His scholarly knowledge of economic writers of all nations, both well known and obscure, is striking. I cannot think of any other American since Seligman (except possibly Viner) who knows the literature of economics as well. There is certainly no one more tolerant of divergent schools of thought or more tolerant in allowing each to present its case and be heard on equal terms with its competitors.

Professor Catlin's compendium of the various schools of economic thought reminds one indeed of Gide and Kist's Histoire des Doctrines Economiques which serves as the historical guidebook to the students of any day, and I predict a great field of usefulness for it.

Instead of immediately plunging into a historical and analytical analysis of production, value, prices, distribution, the business cycle, and so on, the author devotes approximately a third of his book to an Olympian survey of the changing economic, historical, ethical, religious, and scientific backgrounds which helped to determine the content and form of the various schools of economic thought. This should broaden the perspective of every student of the teaching of every student. Although the author does not choose to go as deeply into the so-called law of the diminishing increment as the mathematical economists would advocate, as applied both to production and to utility, his discussion shows he is fully aware of the significance and consequences which flow from this tendency. For out of the diminishing increments of the factors of production of labor and capital can be derived the basic theories of wages and interest, and similarly from diminishing marginal utility comes the theory of price. Then a general theory of equilibrium. He derived for the factors as a whole and for the pricing of commodities and services. Professor Catlin’s book should probably be supplemented by studying at first hand such writers as Ricardo, Jevons, Marshall, Clark, Pigou, Wicksell, and Keynes. But as the serious student mines these classics, he should be grateful to have this learned and humane guide at his elbow.

Professor Catlin has crowned his extraordinarily useful lifetime of teaching at Bowdoin by this eminently scholarly work. It reflects great credit upon him and upon Bowdoin, and it gives great pleasure to those of us who were his students and who have always been his friends.

Wilbert Snow — Maine Poet

Wilbert Snow of the Class of 1907, magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa, is featured on a long-playing 33 1/3 record entitled Wilbert Snow's Favorite Poems, recorded by "Bert and I" and distributed by Records, Inc., in Woburn, Mass., the record is available at $3.98 plus 30 cents for postage and handling.

Bill Snow is the author of several books of poetry, concerned with life on the Maine coast. He is a former Lieutenant Governor of the State of Connecticut, and he taught English for some 30 years at Wesleyan University. During his varied career he has also been a reindeer agent in Alaska, a John Hay Whitney Visiting Professor at Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., and a lecturer on American life and culture for the United States Department of State in Europe, Asia, and the Near East.

On the record Mr. Snow reads his own poetry, inserting at appropriate spots commentary on life in general and poetry in particular. He begins with his favorite definition of poetry, written by Shakespeare: “As imagination bodies forth the forms of things unknown, the poet’s pen turns them to shape and gives to airy nothing a local habitation and a name.” For Mr. Snow the key word in this definition is “local.” As long as poetry “keeps contact with the soil,” he says, “it is apt to be genuine. When it loses contact with the soil, when it refuses to be indigenous, it is too apt to be spurious.”

There is nothing “spurious” about either Bill Snow or his poetry. The subject matter of the 15 poems which Mr. Snow has selected on the record includes the village idiot, the village fool, and the village atheist, a shipwreck, a fox hunt, comments on feminism by a Mono-hagan Island sage, life’s outwitting death, a wife’s vigil during a “line gale,” and the coaxing along of a spring. One of my favorite Snow poems is “Taking Away the Banking,” in which the poet tells how his father tried to coax spring along by taking the spruce bough banking away from the house in March rather than waiting until April or May. In the midst of the task he was still willing to endure the neighbor’s comments of “We told you so” for the sake of the lift in spirits which removing the boughs gave him and his family.

Another of my favorites is “Vigil,” which tells of the time when Mr. Snow’s father and brother were caught in an “equinoctial gale” at noon one day while they were fishing for haddock. He himself and his mother waited for them for hours on the wharf. When his mother finally saw them safe, she collapsed on the wharf. They carried her tenderly home and fell asleep, while she may have awaked all night, “shuddering with the sea.”

In the poem “Wake Music” Mr. Snow refers to an “underrow” within himself that responds only to the ocean and not to fresh water. There is within me an “underrow” which uproots me in Bill Snow’s voice reading his poems of Maine, of the fundamental emotions of human beings, of life itself, of the human race, the members of which are divided into “cordwood”—those who are “matter of fact”—and “driftwood”— those who are “matter of fancy.” Of course, as he says, those are cordwood sometimes think of themselves as being driftwood, and those who are driftwood sometimes think of themselves as being cordwood!

Alumni Clubs

BOSTON

The Bowdoin Club of Boston held its annual spring dinner dance and ladies' night on Saturday, March 23, at the Harvard Club in Boston. President and Mrs. Coles were special guests, and the President was the principal speaker.

Nearly 100 alumni, wives, and guests gathered for a 6:30 social hour, followed by dinner. President John Lawrence '37 presided and introduced those at the head table: President Coles; the Reverend Joseph MacDonald '15, Overseer of the College; Club Secretary Robert Delaney '55; and Richard Wylie '49, Second Vice President.

Dr. MacDonald said grace. Val Ringer '22 conducted a drawing for a Bowdoin Chair and a Bowdoin Mirror. Mr. Lawrence introduced other special guests from the College seated in the audience: Alumni Secretary Peter Barnard '50, Executive Secretary Wolcott Hokanson, Jr. '50, and Development Officer Warren Ring. He also spoke of the Club's new building and varied programs, including the monthly luncheon meetings, the prospective students committee, and the special project of placing undergraduates in good summer jobs in the Boston area. He paid special tribute to Mr. Wiley for his work as Chairman of the Prospective Students Committee.

Mr. Laflin '57 reported on the special Hawthorne-Longfellow Award, as well as the Double Quartet Concert sponsored in February. He mentioned the "Pops" concert in Symphony Hall on May 16 and noted that the Club continues to support the Dean's Discretionary Fund.

Les Laflin '37 reported for the Nominating Committee, and a single ballot was cast, unanimously electing the following to office for 1963-64, with terms beginning on July 1: President, John Morrell '32; First Vice President, Richard Wylie '49; Second Vice President, Robert Forsberg '53; Secretary, Robert Delaney '55; Treasurer, Ralston '51; Council Member, John Lawrence '37. The following were elected Directors: (3 years) Richard Johnstone '44, Gaynor Rutherford '56, and Edward Hunt '22; (2 years) Dean Cushin '45, Paul Reve '55, and Val Ringer '52; and (1 year) Douglas Steenberg '56, Charles Hartsorn '41, and David Hurley '56.

President Coles began his remarks by answering three questions which had just been handed to him on slips of paper and then described in detail the new program of special Senior Seminars being developed as a vital part of the Senior Center Program. As an expression of the Club's appreciation, Mr. Lawrence presented to him a specially framed large map of the old Massachusetts Bay Colony, which included all of the places where the President has pursued his professional career — Middlebury, Woods Hole, Provence, and Brunswick.

Mr. Lawrence reported that Council Member and Past President Jack Gazlay '34 had suffered a stroke in early March while attending a conference at the College. "We are deeply indebted to Jack," he said. "He has been an ardent worker for the College and was responsible for rejuvenating this Club several years ago."

(This action is happy to report that Mr. Gazlay is now out of the hospital and at home and that his condition is improving.)

In a surprise maneuver, Mr. Wylie stepped to the microphone and thanked Mr. Lawrence for his good work as Club President, and presented a Bowdoin Chair to him on behalf of the Club.

Although the incoming President, Mr. Morrell, was absent on business abroad, his best wishes were conveyed to the Club. The formal program was concluded, to be followed by dancing to the music of the Mel-Tones. Club members and guests were particularly delighted by an intermission appearance of the New England Aires, a leading barbershop quartet, after which dancing continued until midnight.

BRUNSWICK

More than 100 alumni, faculty, and friends gathered on Thursday evening, May 2, for the annual spring meeting and ladies' night. The guest of honor was Professor Edward S. Hammond, who retires in June after forty-two years at Bowdoin as a teacher and administrative officer.

The evening began with a social hour at the Alumni House. Alumni and guests then moved to the Moulton Union for dinner, after which Dr. Robert Stuart '41, President of the Club, conducted a brief business meeting. Treasurer Eugene Fortin '37 reported the Club solvent, and Alumni Council Members Emerson Zeitler '30 outlined some recent activities of the Council.

Paul Niven '16 reported for the Nominating Committee in the absence of Chairman Richard Morrell '30, and the Club elected the following officers for 1963-64, for terms beginning on July 1: President, Robert Stuart '41; First Vice President, George Erswell, Jr. '47; Secretary-Treasurer, Eugene Fortin '37; and Council Member, Emerson Zeitler '30. Elect ed Directors for two-year terms were Bruce White '22, Campbell Niven '52, and Leonard Mulligan '54.

In addition to Professor Hammond and Dr. Stuart, those at the head table were Mrs. Hammond, Mrs. Stuart, Philip Wilder '23, Professor Herbert Brown, and Professor Cecil Holmes. Also present were one of the Hammonds' three daughters and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. David Hirth '34, and their Bowdoin sons, David Hirth '64 and Samuel Hirth '66. The "distance trophy" (a box of special new Bowdoin paper cups) was awarded to another Hammond son-in-law, Walter Holliman, formerly a member of the Bowdoin Sociology Department and now a resident of California.

The three principal speakers paid warm and graceful tribute to Dr. Hammond on the eve of his retirement: Professor Holmes as a colleague in the Mathematics Department, Mr. Wilder as a former fellow administrative officer, and Professor Brown as a long-time friend and associate.

The program reached its climax when Dr. Stuart presented a framed, printed citation to the guest of honor, who responded warmly to the tributes, which obviously had moved him. (The citation appears as part of the editorial on page 1 of this issue.)

All agreed that it had been a memorable evening, but one that only partially repaid a man whose devotion, scholarship, and effective work in the classroom and the office have contributed so much to Bowdoin and almost half a century.

BOWDOIN TEACHERS

The annual meeting of the Bowdoin Teachers' Club was held at the College on Saturday, April 27. More than 700 alumni educators in the Northeast, as well as some non-alumni faculty members and interested undergraduates, were invited to attend, and between 70 and 80 of them participated in the program.

Alumni Secretary Peter Barnard '50 presided at Chapel and introduced the speaker, Dr. John Pappanikou '32, Director of Para-medical Services and Acting Assistant Superintendent of Pineland Hospital and Training Center, an authority on mental retardation and gifted children. He spoke of various special areas of education and associated problems, which undergraduates ought to keep in mind as they prepare for citizenship and fuller responsibilities in the years to come.

The following evening meeting was held in Smith Auditorium, Professor Paul Hazelton '42 presided and introduced the two speakers, Professor Arthur Daggett '25, Chairman of the Faculty Committee on the Senior Center, and Professor William Whiteside, Director of the Senior Center. The former outlined the background and original concepts for the new educational venture, and the latter spoke of the new program for the senior year at Bowdoin and told how the physical facilities are designed to accommodate it. An extended period of questions and answers followed.

Director of Admissions Hubert Shaw '36 presided at luncheon in the Moulton Union, and Dean Nathaniel Kendrick expressed greetings on behalf of the College.

In the afternoon some educators visited faculty friends, others attended athletic events, and many returned to Smith Auditorium where Mr. Shaw and Assistant Director of Admissions Walter Moulton '58 reported on admissions and financial aid at Bowdoin. The interest was sustained, with a number of questions and answers.

Alumni educators in Maine are invited to plan for the fall meeting in Lewiston, to be held in conjunction with the annual state teachers' convention. The group will gather for dinner at Steckin's Restaurant on Thursday evening, October 3.

Those planning for 1964 should mark their calendars for the last Saturday in April—April 24 —when the Bowdoin Teachers' Club will again meet on campus.

The question and answer period which followed continued until 11:15 p.m.

BOWDOIN ALUMNUS
Alumni Club Manual

The Alumni Office has recently published a thirty-one page mimeographed first edition of Bowdoin Alumni Clubs: A Manual for Alumni Club Officers. Copies have been distributed to all of the members of the Alumni Council and to about 150 other alumni who are officers and directors of the forty-one Bowdoin Clubs. Copies have also been given to various administrative officers of the College.

The manual describes some purposes for an alumni club and the possible organization of such a club. It outlines a variety of alumni club programs, discusses contacts with the College, finances, and publicity, and suggests ways to plan a successful meeting.

The manual includes seven appendices, examples of notices and announcements, news releases, a typical year's program, a constitution and by-laws, and a letter of welcome for new members. There is also a list of officers of the College, as well as a checklist for planning a meeting.

There are also two extra copies of this manual. Any interested alumni may secure one by writing directly to the Alumni Secretary, Getchell House, Brunswick.

News of the Ford Foundation grant of $2,500,000, following hard upon a third straight record-breaking Alumni Fund and the Commencement announcement that the Capital Campaign has passed the $5,500,000 mark, has certainly focused attention upon Bowdoin’s financial resources. They are a very important aspect of the College, as is its physical environment.

But the most important elements of Bowdoin College, as of any other institution of higher learning, continue to be the students, the faculty, and the alumni—the end product of the educational process. If Bowdoin continues to have good teachers and good students, it will continue to turn out good alumni—the sort of men who, in their own way and in their own community, will follow the path which President Joseph McKeen charted for them in his inaugural address on the sandy plains of Brunswick on September 2, 1802: “It ought always to be remembered that literary institutions are founded and endowed for the common good, and not for the private advantage of those who resort to them. It is not that they may be able to pass through life in an easy and reputable manner, but that their mental powers may be cultivated and improved for the benefit of society.”

Alumni have read about the Ford grant in the special edition of the Orient which they received a few days ago. One of the most important statements in that issue is found in President Coles’ assessment of the grant as being “of tremendous significance, since it results from an independent, objective appraisal of the College, based upon knowledge and intimate details of our programs, plans, and opportunities. Bowdoin is proud of the expression of confidence which this maximum grant and its maximum matching requirement represent.”

The President went on to say that the $2,500,000 grant is a challenge to “all Bowdoin men who have a concern for the excellence of the College. Their interest and support are essential to assure that Bowdoin will continue to be among the leaders in liberal arts education.”

Time and again Bowdoin men have risen to challenges—challenges posed in World War I, in the 1920’s by the General Education Board, in the 1930’s by the Depression, in the early 1940’s by World War II and its many problems, in the latter part of that decade by the Sesquicentennial Program, and in more recent years by the rapid advances in new knowledge and the resulting development of techniques of imparting that knowledge.

Speaking at the Seniors’ Last Chapel service on May 23, President Coles stated that “in the long course of events, we know that change takes place constantly. If it doesn’t, we stagnate. Without continuing regeneration, living things will die. The Bowdoin you know today is far different from the Bowdoin of fifty years ago, or even of ten years ago. The Bowdoin you know today will never again exist exactly as you have known it.

“But the principles of Bowdoin College, its philosophy and its integrity, which are your hallmarks as Bowdoin men, will remain unchanging as time itself.”

Bowdoin’s best days are clearly the days that lie ahead, for the College is continuing to grow in strength and in stature. Bowdoin men will meet the challenges of both the Capital Campaign and the Ford Foundation grant head on, with final success assured.

The 158th Commencement

The passing of the halfway mark in the Capital Campaign, the setting of a new Alumni Fund dollar record, the awarding of an honorary degree away from the campus, talks by Senator Paul Douglas ‘15 and NBC Tokyo correspondent John Rich ’39 — these were some of the highlights of Bowdoin’s 158th Commencement program, held in near-perfect weather June 13, 14, and 15.

Statistics and Senior Honors

One hundred and eighty-eight bachelor of arts degrees, six master of arts degrees earned in course, and eight honorary degrees were awarded at the Commencement exercises in the First Parish Church on Saturday. Fifty-seven of the new graduates in the Class of 1963 come from Maine, 49 from Massachusetts, 19 from New York, 14 from Connecticut, 14 from New Jersey, 32 from ten other states, and three from foreign countries — one each from Egypt, Germany, and Hong Kong.

Six of the seniors received their degrees magna cum laude and 16 more cum laude. The magna men were Jonathan Bozelho of Fairhaven, Mass., Samuel Cushman of Worthington, Ohio, Karl Galinsky of Mainz, Germany, Timothy Hayes of Cranford, N. J., John Russel of Brunswick, and Aurele Violette of Augusta. Cushman, Hayes, Russel, and Violette all received straight “A’s” during the spring semester. All six men are members of Phi Beta Kappa, as are Charles Li, Frank Nicolai, and Lawrence Lifson of the Class of 1963.

Forty-two graduates received recognition for outstanding work in their major subject, with four earning Highest Honors, 11 High Honors, and 27 Honors.

Hodding Carter to Receive Bowdoin Prize

President Coles announced at the Commencement Dinner that the College’s most distinctive honor, the Bowdoin Prize, will go to Hodding Carter ’27, Pulitzer Prize-winning Editor and Publisher of the Greenville (Miss.) Delta Democrat-Times. At a special convocation in October he will become the seventh alumnus to receive the prize since its establishment in 1933. It is awarded once every five years to the alumnus or faculty member judged to have made “the most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor.” The President of Harvard University, the President of Yale University, and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine are the selection committee.

Mr. Carter has earned praise and respect as one of the ablest newspapermen in the South and as an eloquent spokesman for the use of reason in seeking solutions to the race problems in his region.

Previous Bowdoin Prize recipients were Dr. Fred Albee ’99, Harvey Gibson ’02, Paul Douglas ’13, Kenneth Sills ’01, Donald MacMillan ’98, and Harold Burton ’09.

$5,523,000 in Capital Campaign

At Commencement time a year ago, when the Capital Campaign was announced, Campaign Chairman Charles Cary ’10 told alumni that gifts or intentions of $1,739,500 had already been made toward the goal of $10,000,000. By Commencement this year he was able to report that this figure had grown to $5,523,000, with more than $3,000,000 of that amount in cash. Some 110 areas have been organized, and about 1,200 alumni will be working on the Campaign before the end of this year.

Alumni Fund at $220,000

Bill Arnold ’51 of Waterville, serving his second year as Chairman of the Alumni Fund, reported that the 1962-63 Fund had set a Commencement record of $220,276, nearly $7,000 ahead of the previous record, set just a year ago. This new record takes on greater significance in view of the first-year success of the Capital Campaign. More than 48% of the alumni had contributed to the Alumni Fund by June 15, and the final figure was expected to be near 54%.

1938’s Record 25th Gift

Dean Paul Nixon Memorial Fund

1923 Class President Geoffrey Mason announced the establishment by 1923 of the Dean Paul Nixon Memorial Fund with an initial gift of $2,976. Details of how the Fund is to be developed and to be used have not yet been determined, but further announcements will appear in the ALUMNUS.

1913’s 50th Anniversary Gift

Class Agent Eugene McNeally, completing his 24th year in that position, announced that, in observance of the 50th anniversary of their graduation, members of the Class of 1913 had given or signified intention of giving to the College through the Alumni Fund and the Capital Campaign a total of $235,792.06.

Of this amount $32,722.68 had been set aside as the Class of 1913 50th Reunion Fund. Members of the Class voted to ask the College to add this sum to the $64,072.38 already in the Class of 1913 Fund which they established at their 25th Reunion in June of 1938. The total of the two Class of 1913 Funds, now combined into one Fund, amounts to $96,795.06, the income from which is available for unrestricted purposes each year.

Paul Douglas and John Rich

Commencement guests had the privilege of listening to two outstanding addresses on Friday. Speaking at the ROTC commissioning exercises for 38 seniors in the morning, Illinois Senator Paul Douglas '13 criticized British historian Arnold Toynbee, who, he said, stated recently that "existence is more important than freedom." If this "better red than dead" slogan were followed, Dr. Douglas said, "the United States would be expected to back down in every confrontation between ourselves and the communist bloc, lest by resisting we would cause the Communists to use force."

John Rich '39, Chief of the NBC News Bureau for the Far East in Tokyo, spoke at the Smith Auditorium in the afternoon. He pointed out that, since his class graduated in 1939, the United States has come of age. "We have taken on responsibilities, and as long as we survive as a free nation, we can never lay down these responsibilities."

"For many in the world," he said, "we are the hope of something better. We have got to be better. . . . People now insist on dignity, freedom, and equal rights, whether they are Asians, South Americans, or our own American Negroes—and they are going to fight until they get them. . . . People treasure the dignity to be treated as equals. We in America have a highly developed social conscience. That is where we are ahead of most other nations. I hope we don't lose it."

Elections

The Board of Overseers elected three new members on Friday. They are Dr. Ralph Ogden '21 of West Hartford, Conn., eminent radiologist and retiring President of the Alumni Council; George Cutter '27 of Birmingham, Mich., Director of the Comptroller's Staff at the Fisher Body Division of General Motors Corporation; and Jotham Pierce '39 of Portland, a partner in the pretty solidly Bowdoin law firm of Pierce, Atwood, Scribner, Allen, and McKusick.

The Society of Bowdoin Women re-elected Mrs. Boyd Bartlett '17 of Castine its President for 1963-64 and also re-elected Mrs. Webster Browne '25 of Brunswick Vice President, Mrs. Philip Wilder '23 of Brunswick Vice President, Mrs. Samuel Ladd '29 of Brunswick Secretary, Mrs. William Clifford of Cape Elizabeth is the new Treasurer, Mrs. William Ireland '49 of Portland is Assistant Treasurer, Mrs. Merton Henry '50 of Portland and Mrs. Burton Whitman '35 of Brunswick will serve as Luncheon Chairmen, and Mrs. Ashmead White H'60 of Bangor and Lubec will be Chairman of the Nominating Committee. Mrs. James S. Coles is Honorary President of the Society.

Lewis Vafiades '42 of Hampden has been appointed to a five-year term as a Director of the Alumni Fund. The four new Members at Large of the Alumni Council are Bradford Briggs '43 of New Canaan, Conn., Robert Porter '34 of Chat- ham, N. J., Dr. John Reed '37 of Wethersfield, Conn., and William Thalheimer '27 of Wilmington, Del.

Arthur Orne '30 of Wilmington, Del., is the new President of the Alumni Council, Dr. John Cartland '39 of West Hartford, Conn., its new Vice President, Alumni Secretary Peter Barnard '50 its Secretary, and Assistant Treasurer Glenn McIntire '25 its Treasurer.

John Pickard Receives Alumni Service Award

John Pickard '22 received the Alumni Service Award in recognition of his "continued loyalty and devotion to the College." The citation which accompanied the Award said, in part, "... Overseer of the College from 1952 until 1961 and Trustee since that time; Trustee of Hebron Academy and Member of the Corporation of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution; retired executive of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company; quietly generous member of a generous Bowdoin family; thoughtful of others and thought well of by others."

Faculty Promotions

Nine members of the Faculty have been promoted. Richard Chitrurn '41 became Professor of Mathematics, Elroy La- Casse '44 Associate Professor of Physics, George Barche Associate Professor of History and Government, and Gordon Hiebert Associate Professor of Chemistry.

Promoted to the rank of Assistant Professor were James Hodge in German, Kwantha Yin in Government, Jonathan Lubin in Mathematics, Daniel Sterling in Mathematics, and Thomas Cornell in Art.

Ed Hammond Honored

Professor Edward Hammond, who retired at the end of June after teaching at Bowdoin since 1921, continued to receive recognition and plaudits. On Tuesday, June 11, he and Mrs. Hammond were guests of honor at a faculty tea in the Moulton Union. On Friday he was made an honorary member of the Alumni Association, in which exclusive company he joined President Coles, Herbert Brown, and Dean Kendrick. At their Commencement meetings the Governing Boards elected him Wing Professor of Mathematics, Emeritus.

Professor Hammond was also honored through the establishment by many of his former students of the Hammond Mathematics Prize. Under its terms a prize book will be given each year to a senior who is completing with distinction a major in mathematics. The first award, a copy of Introduction to Differentiable Manifolds by Louis Auslander and Robert E. MacKenzie, went to Robert Plummer '63 of Rockland.

The Hammond Prize was initiated by Douglas Crabtree '60, who is working for his Ph.D. at the University of North Carolina. It is open to gifts from any of Professor Hammond’s friends or former students, and contributions may be channeled through the Alumni Fund if the donor so desires. Any balance of the income from the Fund may be used to purchase books for the Department of Mathematics.

Twice in 169 Years

Following the Commencement Dinner President Coles, President of the Board of Overseers Sumner Pike '13, and Overseer Frank Evans '10 traveled to Lyndonwood in Rockport, the summer home of Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Zimbalist, to present to her the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters which had been awarded to her that morning in the Church. The only other occasion in the history of the College when such an event took place was in 1824, when the Marquis de Lafayette, also unable to attend the Commencement exercises in Brunswick, received his doctor of laws degree in Portland.

Prizes and Distinctions

In a resolution passed at its annual meeting on Friday morning the Alumni Council paid tribute to Jack Gazlay '34 of Hingham, Mass., for "his effective work with subseniors, his inspiring leadership as President of the Bowdoin Club of Boston, and his enthusiastic participation in the affairs of the Alumni Council." While working for Bowdoin as a participant in the Campus Career Conference on March 4 Jack fell ill, but he has made good progress toward recovery and was present at the Council meeting.

Senator Douglas presented the Haldane Cup to Gary Yamashita of Seattle, Wash., whose family had driven across the country to see him receive his degree. He is President of the Class of 1963 and served as Battalion Commander of the ROTC unit.

Two seniors, Tony Antolini of New York City and Bob Snyder of Waban, Mass., shared the first award of the Sue Winchell Burnett Prize for having made the most significant contribution to music while at the College.

Charlie Li of Hong Kong won the Goodwin Commencement Prize for his talk "Why the Arts?" rewarding his mother, who had traveled from Hong Kong to Brunswick to attend Commencement.

Antolini won a second prize, the Colonel William Henry Owen Premium, as a senior "recognized by his fellows as a humble, earnest, and active Christian," and Wayne Adams of Kennebunkport received the Lucien Howe Prize as "that member of the Senior Class who, during his college course, by example and influence has shown the highest qualities of conduct and character."

Positions of Honor

Dr. Wilfred Small '43 of Worcester, Mass., served as Commencement Marshal, Rodman Snelling '53 of Birmingham, Mich., as Alumni Marshal, Professor Burton Taylor as Faculty Marshal, Professor Nathan Dane '37 as Assistant Faculty Marshal, and Frank Nicolai '63 as Senior Marshal.

Maine Superior Court Justice James Archibald '34 of Houlton spoke for the State of Maine at the Dinner, representing Governor John H. Reed, and Roswell Gilpatric spoke for the honorary degree recipients.

Distribution of Majors

An analysis of the major fields of study of the 188 members of the graduating class shows that the departments with the most majors were History with 32, Economics and Government with 25 each, and Psychology with 18. Other department figures were as follows: Art 2, Biology 13, Chemistry 8, Classics 3, English 16, French 5, German 4, Latin 4, Mathematics 13, Music 2, Philosophy 3, Physics 6, and Sociology 9.

The Hallmarks of Bowdoin Men

Speaking at the Seniors’ Last Chapel service on May 23, President Coles stated that "in the long course of events, we know that change takes place constantly. If it doesn’t, we stagnate. Without continuous regeneration, living things will die. The Bowdoin you know today is far different from the Bowdoin of 50 years ago, or even of 10 years ago. The Bowdoin you know today will never again exist exactly as you have known it.

"But the principles of Bowdoin College, its philosophy and its integrity, which are your hallmarks as Bowdoin men, will remain unchanging as time itself."

Bowdoin’s best days are clearly the days that lie ahead.

Three of Bowdoin’s four Alumni Secretaries were assembled for this picture at the 1938 Reception. They are Peter C. Barnard '30, the present incumbent; Seward J. Marsh '12, who attained emeritus status four years ago; and Philip S. Wilder '29, now Assistant to the President and Director of Student Aid. Austin H. MacCormick ’15, Bowdoin’s first Alumni Secretary, was not present for the picture.
Isaac Adams and the Incandescent Lamp

by Charles D. Wrege

Nearly 100 years ago, in 1865, a Boston physician turned electro-chemist and inventor constructed and experimented with an electric incandescent lamp similar to the one invented by Thomas A. Edison, about 14 years before Edison produced his version and the electrical system which made it commercially useful.

The unsung forebear of today's electric light bulb was Dr. Isaac Adams, Jr., who was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1858.

Between 1844 and 1879, when Edison achieved success, numerous inventors were attempting to create incandescent lamps. Among them, and practically unknown in the beginning, was Dr. Adams.

A native of Boston, he prepared for Bowdoin at the Chauncey Hall School and after college went to Harvard Medical School, where he received his medical degree in 1862. He continued his studies in Paris at the Ecole de Medicine, but his main interests were in chemistry, physics, and electricity. The seeds of these interests had been planted at Harvard, where Dr. Adams attended the lectures of Professor Josiah P. Cooke.

In Paris Adams studied under Ladislas Gaiffe, a famous electrician, and became an expert glass blower specializing in the construction and exhaustion of Geissler tubes, i.e., sealed tubes of glass containing highly rarefied gases, used to show the effect of high tension current on gases.

Returning to Boston in 1864, Adams began medical practice at 763 Federal Street there, but at the same time he operated a chemistry laboratory in his brother's machine shop at City Point, South Boston. Here, from 1865 to 1868, he engaged simultaneously in developing new methods of nickel-plating and in constructing Geissler tubes.

Dr. Adams, no doubt familiar with the use of Geissler tubes for medical purposes (to illuminate various orifices of the human body), knew of the brilliant amount of light which could be produced in the coiled section of a Geissler tube (due to the resistance of the gases in the tube to the passage of the electric current). Although Edison was to demonstrate fourteen years later that high-resistance incandescent lamps were the only practical lamps, Adams, in 1865, worked to develop low-resistance incandescent lamps.

Two important restrictions in 1865 made Adams choose this type of lamp: (1) Geissler tubes ceased to emit light if the resistance of the gas was very high, because the electricity could not pass through such gases, and (2) dynamos capable of producing the electric current needed for high-resistance lamps did not exist in 1865 and Adams had to rely upon those producing current suitable for low-resistance lamps.

Believing that a "slip of carbon... enclosed in a highly exhausted Geissler tube... would remain stable for a long time when brought to a high state of incandescence by the electric current," Adams attempted to construct a lamp utilizing the features of the Geissler tube. Several different types of lamps were made by him during the period 1865-69, the majority employing horizontal carbons, but one having an upright carbon was also produced in 1869. The latter, employing an extremely thin strip of carbon, was similar to those produced by Edison in 1879.

While experimenting with his lamp, Dr. Adams also continued his work in nickel-plating, and his various inventions in this field were used to form, in June, 1869, the United Nickel Company of New York. Prolonged litigation over his nickel-plating patents, lasting from 1869 to 1884, absorbed all his time and energy, and Adams was forced to discontinue his experiments in electric lighting.

Adams' decision to stop his incandescent lamp experiments was due not only to the court battles over his other patents but was also influenced by the fact that although it "was a practical and reliably durable lamp...on account of the cost of producing the current by any means then in use...there would be no commercial demand for such a lamp."

A prolific inventor, Dr. Adams also worked on improving the breech-loading rifle, the vulcanizing of rubber to iron and automobiles, and, with his knowledge of glass, pioneered in making glass bricks which he placed in the cellar walls of his home at Annisquam, Mass., to admit light.

Although Adams stopped active work on his lamps in 1869, he did attempt one experiment in 1873. In that year the nickel-plating shop of Smith, Phiney & Smith (a licensee of the United Nickel Company) at 133-135 West 25th Street, New York City, installed a Winkler dynamo. Adams tested a revised version of his upright carbon lamp on this machine.

In 1885 the Edison Electric Light Company initiated a series of legal suits against rival electric lamp manufacturers. who were making lamps similar to those patented by Edison. The main suit was that of the "Filament Patent" (covering the thin, high-resistance filament of the Edison lamp), with subsidiary ones concerned with the methods of constructing glass globes for the lamps.

One of the subsidiary suits was launched in 1889 against the Perkins Lamp Company of Hartford, Conn. Perkins Lamp secured the legal advice of Leonard E. Curtis, counsel for the United States Electric Lighting Company, the company engaged in the Filament Patent suit. Curtis suggested that they seek the expert advice of a Geissler tube manufacturer to see if the Perkins Lamp construction did, or did not, violate the Edison methods. The expert suggested was Dr. Adams.

Mr. Edward D. Robbins, representing Perkins Lamp, interviewed Dr. Adams in his home, and while discussing Geissler tubes, Adams mentioned he had made incandescent lamps in 1865. When word of this reached Curtis, he sped to Amnissquam to obtain the full story. Dr. Adams' account so convinced Curtis that the Adams incandescent lamps had anticipated those of Edison that he initiated action for a half in the current legal proceedings over the Filament Patent and the taking of Adams' testimony.

Curtis' legal action began on October 10, 1890, and the great furor and excitement it caused in the offices of the lawyers for the Edison Electric Light Company can be traced in the letters to Edison preserved in the Thomas A. Edison archives at the Edison Historic Site, West Orange, New Jersey.

The testimony of Dr. Adams, given on October 16, 1890, revealed him as a man of unimpeachable honesty. He made no exaggerated claims for his lamp, and he spoke of his lamp experiments merely as one of the many problems he had attempted to solve in his lifetime. His interest was in using Geissler tube construction to make an incandescent lamp:

"I was not proposing to get up a system of lighting, not at all. I was simply making a lamp, what I considered the best form of lamp, and the best material to use and the best shape to put it in."

There can be little doubt that these honest, modest, and unassuming replies to the questions of the Edison Company are the basic reasons why Dr. Adams' work in incandescent lamps has been neglected in previous histories of incandescent electric lamps.

In 1891, when the Filament Patent suit was drawing to a close, the Edison Company lawyers pleaded with the Court to consider the incandescent lamps of Dr. Adams "an absolutely abandoned experiment." They pointed out that since Adams did not take out a patent and did not publish any description of the lamp he must have considered his work a failure.

These statements were finally accepted by the Court, and as a result the work of Dr. Adams, until this very day, has remained a mystery. However, for his attempt to seal into glass platinum wires large enough to carry current to a strip of carbon and thus adapt the Geissler tube to the principles of low-resistance lamps, he certainly deserves a place in history.

Spring Sports

The spring sports season at Bowdoin had its ups and downs. In regular-season competition victories were registered in 26 contests, against 35 losses. The track and tennis teams were the only squads to record winning seasons.

The track team, under the direction of Frank Sabasteanski '41, defeated Amherst, Vermont, M.I.T., and New Hampshire, and Brandeis and Colby, to become the first undefeated track squad since Jack Magee retired. Bowdoin was second in the State Meet, won by Maine with 73 3/4 points. The State Meet was postponed for the first time in its 74-year history when six inches of snow fell in Waterville on May 11. The following Saturday the team placed second out of eleven in the Easterns, equivalent to the New England small college championship. M.I.T. won with 64 points, 12 ahead of Bowdoin. In the New England Meet the Polar Bears placed 7th, scoring 12 points.

Bruce Frost '63 was by far the outstanding performer on a team which featured strength in the weight events. Frost was undefeated in the shot, discus, and hammer events until the New Englands, where he placed second in the shot and hammer. At the IC4A meet Frost threw the hammer 187 7/8", a toss which placed him third among all hammer throwers in the country. He received the Alan Hillman Memorial Trophy as the outstanding performer in the State Meet and the Leslie A. Claff Trophy as the outstanding Bowdoin track performer.

Two college records were bettered and another one tied during the season. Frost extended his record in the shot put to 52 7/4". Co-Captain Steve Ross '63 added a yard to the hop, skip, and jump record the first time the event was held in varsity competition in 70 years, reaching 43 3/4". Ted Slowik '65 tied the 440 record of 49.6 seconds in the State Meet. Dave McDowell '64 placed second in the broad jump in the New Englands, leaping 25' for the fourth meet in a row. Co-Captain Frank Ronan '63 was a consistent scorer in the pole vault. Frost led the team in points scored, with 99 in six meets. Ross and McDowell followed with 58 1/2 and 32 1/2, respectively.

The tennis team, under Coach Ray Bicknell, tied Bates for first place in the Maine Intercolligate league, with a record of 5 and 1. Overall the team beat Colby and Maine twice each, split two matches with Bates, and lost to M.I.T., Amherst, and Tufts. Steve Hecht '65 had the best individual record, winning eight matches against one loss. Norman Tom '64 had a 5-3 record, while Captain Sam Ladd '63 and Art McDonald '64 had 5-4 seasons. The doubles combination in Ladd and Hecht was the most successful. Bowdoin finished out of the money in the Maine Intercolligate individual championships but behind the playing of Hecht and McDonald placed fifth out of sixteen in the New England championships.

The sailing team had an average season with one big exception. That came when the Polar Bears won the Friis Trophy at Tufts in a thirteen-team field. Bowdoin became the first New England college to win the Friis Trophy since 1959, when another Polar Bear team won. Dave Mechem '64 skippered Charles Withrell '65 to a victory in Division "B," and Charles Emerson '63 directed Al Willett '65 to a fourth place in Division "A." Bowdoin scored 231 points to runner-up Webb Institute's 213.

The baseball team won five games and lost thirteen, defeating Williams, Tufts, and Suffolk, splitting with Maine and Baltimore, and losing to Upsala, Bates and Colby twice each and also to Fairleigh-Dickinson, Villanova, Amherst, Brandeis, and Northeastern. The sweetest win was in the last game of the season, when Bowdoin edged Maine 8 to 6 to deprive the Black Bears of a share of the State Series crown. Bates and Colby shared the title.

Bowdoin just didn't score enough to offset the runs it gave up. Fifty Bowdoin runs were 40 less than the opponents tallied. Dave Fitts '64 was the leading batter for Coach Dan MacFadyen. He compiled a .297 average in 64 times at bat. Tim Zilinsky '65 was next with a .286 average. Fitts had 19 base hits, Captain Pat Finn '63 had 17, and catcher Fred Harlow '64 had 16. Fitts led the team in runs batted in with nine and also in strikeouts with 22. Harlow and Dick Black '64 had 7 RBIs each. Finn and Black each scored nine runs. Harry Silverman ’64 collected 10 bases on balls.

Art Poor ’64, a converted infielder, had the most successful pitching record, 2-0, in 22 innings of pitching. His earned run average was 2.04. Frank Nicolai ’63 at 2-5 and Roger Tuveson ’64 at 1-5 were the workhorses for the team. Nicolai’s ERA was 2.29, and he struck out 35 batters. Both Nicolai and Tuveson had 10 unearned runs scored against them. At the conclusion of the season Fitts and Zilinsky were named to the All-Maine team in the outfield. Finn received honorable mention.

The golf team had a record of three wins and nine losses. Coached by Ed Coombs ’42, the squad defeated Lowell Tech and Trinity, split with Colby, and lost to Bates and Maine twice and to Tufts, Wesleyan, Williams, and New Hampshire. Grant Klopman ’64 had the best individual 18-hole score, shooting a 75 against Bates. Captain Bob Osterhout ’64 had the best individual record, 9-6, followed by Phil McDowell ’65, 8-7, Klopman 5-4-2, and Dave Treadwell ’64, 7-7. The best performance was at the New England championships, in which Bowdoin tied for sixth among 31 colleges.

The lacrosse team, coached by Nels Corey ’39, compiled a record of five wins against eight losses. The stickmen defeated Villanova, Nichols, M.I.T., New England College, and W.F.I., and lost to Delaware, Adelphi, Stevens Tech, C. W. Post, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Wesleyan, and Tufts. The team won four of its last five games, indicating that experience is all that is needed. The spring vacation trip was made possible through the fund-raising efforts of team members.

Tom Oliver ’64 led the team in goals scored with 22 and in total points with 29. Don Handal ’64 led in assists with 16 and totaled 27 points. Co-Captain Jack Snyder ’63 had 14 points, and Vic Papa-cosma ’64 had 13. Co-Captain Steve Crabtree ’63 played an outstanding game at his defensive position.

Next year’s spring sports captains are as follows: baseball, Dave Fitts; golf, Bob Osterhout and Grant Klopman; lacrosse, Tom Oliver and Don Handal; tennis, Art McDonald; track, Dave McDowell.

Senior Center Going Up

One of the biggest continuous concrete pouring operations ever undertaken in Maine attracted many spectators on May 25, when the footing for the residential tower of the Senior Center was installed.

Some 1,100 cubic yards of controlled, ready-mixed concrete weighing about 2,200 tons was supplied by the G. A. Peterson Co. of Brunswick and Auburn under a sub-contract from the George A. Fuller Company, builders of the Center.

The concrete forms a solid four-foot slab, on which the structure is being erected. It was poured, in a continuous 14-hour project, into a 16-foot excavation on an area about 90 feet by 90 feet. The concrete was spread on top of a so-called cement “mud pad,” which had been constructed on the site between College and South Streets after the ground-breaking exercises were held on April 10.

About 100 tons of reinforcing steel are in the slab. Some of the steel reinforcing bars are 1½ inches in diameter—compared to the 7/8 to 1 1/8 inch diameter of bars usually used in building projects. Shortly after the slab was poured, workmen started building the shear columns and foundations for the six-story tower, one of three buildings in the complex which will house Bowdoin’s unique program of integrated study and living for members of the senior class.

Concrete pouring for the first and second floors was expected to take about a month, with the remaining floors to be poured at the rate of one a week.

In line with the experiment outlined in the January ALUMNUS, his main fields of interest are algebra, algebraic geometry, and the Non-Commutative Ring Theory.

Reginald L. Hannaford will serve as Instructor in English. A graduate of Harvard, with a master of education degree from the Harvard Graduate School of Education, he is working on an edition of David Hartley’s Observations on Man, a study of Coleridge and Hartley, the first part of which he has completed at Oxford University in England, where he has been studying since 1961.

Maurice I. Levin, a 1953 graduate of Boston University, with a master of arts degree from Harvard in 1961, will be Instructor in Russian. Since 1961 he had taught at M.I.T. From 1953 to 1956 he was a translator for the Army Security Agency.

Richard B. Lyman, Jr. ’57 will return to Bowdoin in September as Instructor in History. A Columbia graduate, with Highest Honors in History, he was awarded Bowdoin’s Charles Carroll Everett Scholarship for graduate work at Harvard, where he is completing requirements for his Ph.D. He is particularly interested in English medieval history.

Noel S. Nussbaum will be Instructor in Biology next year. He is a graduate of Brooklyn College, with graduate work at Williams and Yale, where he was a National Institutes of Health Fellow during 1962-63. His research projects include pituitary-thyroid relationships in reptiles and calcification in regenerating fish scales.

Summer Institutes

Ninety secondary school teachers are studying at Bowdoin this summer, 54 of them in mathematics and 36 in marine biology.

The Mathematics Institute, given at the College for the fifth successive year, is under the direction of Professor Richard L. Crittum '41. The members of its faculty are Professors Crittum, Cecil T. Holmes, and Robert M. Thrall of the University of Michigan.

The Marine Biology Institute, directed by Professor Alton H. Gustafson, has as other faculty members Professor James M. Moulton of Bowdoin, Professor William B. Nutting of the University of Massachusetts, Dr. John D. Davis '52 of Smith College, Teaching Fellow Harold R. Bacon of Bowdoin, and Claude B. Bonang '52, biology teacher at Brunswick High School.

Faculty Matters

Colonel Edward A. Ryan, Professor of Military Science at Bowdoin since 1959, has been reassigned to the headquarters staff at Fort Monroe, Va., as of July 15. In May he was honored at a dinner at which he received a Bowdoin Chair from the graduating ROTC cadets and the shoulder patch which Assistant to the President Philip S. Wilder '23 wore when he was on active duty at Fort Monroe.

Colonel Ryan, who has made many friends in Brunswick, plans to maintain his residence here. A graduate of the University of Rhode Island, he entered the Army in 1941 and served in Germany and France during World War II. He holds five Battle Stars for campaigns in Europe and also the Bronze Star.

Professor Paul V. Hazelton '42, Chairman of the Department of Education, will spend the academic year 1963-64 in England studying the relationships between politics and education in Great Britain. He will spend much of his time in London, studying documents and talking with officials at the Ministry of Education and at the headquarters of the national political parties.

An article which Professor Hazelton wrote on this subject appeared in a June issue of The Saturday Review.

The 1963 edition of the Bagle was dedicated to Professor Samuel E. Kamlering, although the dedication itself referred to him as "Kamlering!"

"As the medical adviser of undergraduates at Bowdoin," the yearbook said, Professor Kamlering has demonstrated that a difficult job can bring out the best in a man. His patience with and interest in people, and, above all, his sense of humor have been very much appreciated by many undergraduates in their trying preparation for medical school. He is never too busy to see a student, never too benign to indulge in constructive criticism, never too critical to deviate accomplishing. And he is, above all, easy to talk to."

Professor "Kamlering" has been at Bowdoin since 1934. In recognition of the fact that he entered the College at the same time members of the Class of 1938 did, he made a contribution in May to the Class of 1938 25th Reunion Fund.

Grass Replaces Building

The 2½-story building located at the corner of Maine and Clevelander Streets, owned by the College since 1957, was suddenly not there any more one morning, having been demolished on May 27. Occupied by many different businesses since it was built before the Civil War, it was for many years the location of Dan Risen's second-hand furniture store, which had students as its chief customers. Fire Chief and Police Chief Billy Edwards continued the store for some 10 years after 1928, and just before World War II Mrs. Gertrude Hunt moved her bakery to the building. Later Chester Clayton operated both a coffee shop and a bakery there.

On May 23 the College received the original tapes of two hour-long programs featuring music at Bowdoin. The programs were broadcast over a three-station New England FM radio network last March. This picture shows Horace Sowles '42, proprietor of Morong Bros. in Portland; John Thornton, announcer and narrator for the programs; Professor Frederic Tilton '46; and John McGovern '48, Manager of Radio Station WMTW-FM. The sponsors of the programs, the Volkswagen dealers of New England, presented the tapes to the College.
ing some painting, although it was midwinter. He bought three quarts of oil and five pounds of red ochre on one occasion and eight and one-half gallons of paint a few days later.

"Prof. Robinson" bought a bushel of potatoes for 80 cents and a broom for 32 cents. Probably this was Professor Franklin C. Robinson '73, who taught chemistry and other sciences at Bowdoin from 1874 to 1910. He was the father of Clement F. Robinson '03 of Brunswick. One of the regular customers was J. Fred Will, who operated a dry goods store on Maine Street, which was continued at Brehat's until a few years ago.

The varied nature of Smith's business is shown by three successive purchases:

Robert Penneil bought a half-cord of hard wood for $2.50 and a half-cord of spruce and pine for $1.63; Alice Linscott bought 30 pounds of pork at six cents a pound; William Muir bought plastering materials—a half-cask of lime and three pounds of hair—for 65 cents.

Library Recataloguing

The Library has begun planning for the recataloging and reclassifying of its book collections, a project which Librarian Richard Harwell expects to get under way this summer and to continue for five years. The lengthy job, approved by the Governing Boards at their February meeting, is the result of a recommendation made in 1962 by Dr. Maurice F. Tauber of the Columbia University School of Library Service.

Along with the recataloguing, there will be a change in the classification of books from the present Dewey Decimal system to the method used by the Library of Congress.

Starting salaries for members of the Class of 1963 will probably average between $5,400 and $5,700 a year, with a low of $4,900 and a high of $7,000. These figures are approximately 3% above 1962 levels.

In his annual report to President Coles, Placement Bureau Director Samuel A. Ladd, Jr. '29 stated that the upward trend of salaries was evident mainly in the fields of electronics, data processing, and accounting, with insurance and banking following closely.

A growing development, Mr. Ladd said, is the acceptance by employers of the facts of military service, which most graduates face. "Most employers go out of their way to assure the boys that their places will be held for them if they are called into service."

In the current year representatives of 111 business firms and graduate schools visited the campus to interview candidates. The Placement Bureau arranged a total of 1,320 interviews between these visitors and members of the senior class. Visits were made by representatives of four major accounting firms, ten banks, five petroleum companies, four pulp and paper firms, twenty-four insurance companies, eighteen manufacturing firms, two publishing companies, four pharmaceutical houses, eight government agencies, three chemical firms, eight merchandising companies, four utility firms, five public school systems, and twelve graduate schools.

Fathers' Association Grants

Richard L. Winslow '63 of Caribou and Philip D. Walls '64 of South Weymouth, Mass., are studying this summer under research scholarships provided by the Bowdoin Fathers' Association. Winslow, who graduated on June 15, is doing research on the campus under the direction of Professor Dana W. Mayo of the Chemistry Department. His project involves the isolation and molecular structure determination of active nitrogen compounds found in certain alpine plants.

Walls is continuing his research on the population dynamics and developmental metabolism of Leach's Petrels, small and extremely shy sea birds, at the Bowdoin Scientific Station on Kent Island in the Bay of Fundy. He is also working on a project in fish anatomy as a participant in the National Science Foundation's Undergraduate Science Education program.

New Sound System in Pickard

A high fidelity sound system has been installed in the Pickard Theater in Memorial Hall, making its flexible facilities even more useful. The system consists of two stereophonic channels with two professional-type tape recorders and a "patch panel," which affords complete flexibility of sound "input and output," and the interconnection of any and all units in any combination desired.

OLD BUGLES

The Alumni Office is interested in having back issues of the Bugle which alumni may wish to dispose of. Copies of the Bugle are now kept at the Alumni House, for the use of visiting alumni and guests. The set is complete for the issues from 1900 through 1962, except for these editions:

1935 1957 1958 1959

The Alumni Secretary will appreciate having these or other issues which alumni may wish to donate. They may be sent to him at the Alumni Office, Getchell House, Bowdoin College.

There are 14 speaker locations on stage and in the audience area, together with nine microphone outlets. The "mike" setups provide for recording from the stage, and, in the case of lectures, questions from the audience as well.

The system also includes a professional standard record player with both monaural and stereophonic playback arms. It can be used as a public address unit and at the same time can record the words of the speaker. Its recording quality is of a standard that permits the tapes to be broadcast on commercial radio.

Football Preview

Football Coach Nels Corey '39 is guardedly optimistic about the chances of his 1963 squad's improving upon last year's one win, six loss record. He bases this year's brighter outlook on seven returning starters among thirteen lettermen, plus about twenty members of a good freshman squad.

The lettermen are led by Captain Frank Drigotas '64, who was selected to the Maine team at end last fall, when the leading pass receiver, led the Polar Bears in scoring, and did most of the punting.

Besides Drigotas, lettermen Steve Ingram '65 and Eaton Tarbell '64 return at end. Ingram was also a key figure on Bowdoin's Maine championship basketball team. Tarbell missed last fall's games because of a broken wrist, but he was outstanding as a sophomore. Jim MacAllen, a fine pass receiver on the freshman team, and teammate Tim Love, a defensive specialist, will provide added depth at end.

The line will also be strong at center. Senior Jim Haddock will be back to claim his starting position but will have to fight off the challenge of sophomores Dan Ralston and Ed Schmidt.

Major problems are at guard and tackle. Junior Steve Krisko was a regular guard last season, but he is the only veteran. Nels Corey has hopes that Tim Zilsinsky '65, who played some in the backfield last year, can make a successful conversion. Senior reserve Dave Andrew is the only lettermen back at tackle. Sophomores will have to fill the gaps.

The coaches hope to build the offense around All-Maine quarterback Bob Harrington '65. As a sophomore Harrington led the team in passing and was a fine runner as well.

Senior Dick Bail saw action at the signal calling slot to win a letter last year, and Ralph Johnson showed some good passing on the 1962 freshman squad.

Senior Bob Hooke returns at halfback. He was the leading rusher on the squad last fall. Paul Soule, a high school All-American, is an outstanding candidate among the sophomores.

At the wingback position, two players return who alternated in starting
Of a punter and kicker. Hopefully, one of the sophomores will prove able to kick off, score PAT's, and punt the ball consistently well.

On paper it appears that Bowdoin will have a squad of about thirty-five.

A glance toward the 1963 opponents indicates that Tufts might not be so strong, but Wesleyan will be much stronger. Amherst and Williams will be about the same as last fall. Colby should be improved. Bates, as always, is anyone’s guess. Maine should be as strong as ever. Overall, the quality of the opposition appears to be as high as it was last fall.

There must be a good many Bowdoin alumni who remember with some vividness first exploring English history with William E. Lunt’s History of England as text in Professor Van Cleeve’s course. They may also recall having been told that Professor Lunt of Haverford, the author, was a Bowdoin alumnus and Professor Van Cleeve’s predecessor as Thomas Brackett Reed Professor of History in 1911–12, after which he was at Cornell for five years and then at Haverford for nearly forty more. Anyone delving further into his life and work would soon have learned that he was one of America’s outstanding scholars in the field of English Constitutional History, a fact Bowdoin recognized when, at his 25th reunion in 1929, it granted him an honorary L.H.D. degree.

For many decades Professor Lunt devoted special attention to a study of the financial relations of the Papacy and England, based on exhaustive research of both English and Vatican sources. This proved a particularly fruitful area of concentration, for it illustrated at once the growing authority of the English crown and its organs of government, the expanding economic development of England, and, from a Latin-European point of view, the complex political and financial problems of the Papacy in a Europe of growing national consciousness and financial maturity.

In 1959 the Medieval Academy of America issued its first publication in a projected series to be entitled Studies in Anglo-Papal Relations During the Middle Ages.” This was the first of two volumes of Professor Lunt’s massive study on the “Financial Relations of the Papacy with England.” This first volume covered the study up to 1527. Recently, in 1962, the Academy has published, posthumously, the remaining volume covering the period from 1527 to 1554.

When Professor Lunt died in November of 1956, the manuscript for this second volume was ready to be submitted to the publisher, lacking only a bibliography and an index, which, in the first volume, were themselves imposing in thoroughness and extent. The editors who undertook the task of seeing the manuscript through the press felt that to put off publication for lack of such a bibliography and index would delay the work endlessly and to little advantage. The thorough bibliography of the first volume and the copious footnotes of the second were both enough to be easily useful to the specialist most likely seeking such information, and the clear chapter organization and chronological treatment of subjects within each chapter should permit anyone anxious to trace a particular matter to find it without difficulty.

The publication of this scholarly work was made possible for the Medieval Academy by substantial aid from friends and former students of Professor Lunt at Haverford. Much of the labor of preparing it for the press and the exacting task of proof-reading was done by a fellow Bowdoin alumnus, Dr. Van Courtlandt Elliott ’29, Associate Professor of the Academy and Classics Master at the Roxbury Latin School, West Roxbury, Mass.

In writing the review of such a specialized work for the alumni audience of the Alumnus, it is not necessary to emulate the reviews which will appear in the historical journals here and abroad. The reader who has ventured this far in the article will obviously have some interest in history and an appreciation of the stimulation it provides the mind. If he should pick up this book, he would find it very certainly encouraging the appreciation, even if he were to read but a page here and a paragraph there as his interests might dictate.

The very dates of the title should recall to him some vital factors in the history of England and the Papacy, 1327 to 1534. For England they suggest the Hundred Years’ War and the Wars of the Roses, the partial recovery of the Welsh Marches and the accession of the Tudors to the throne. The final date, 1554, marked Henry VIII’s Act of Supremacy and the break with Rome. For the Papacy this same period suggests the years of the Babylonian Captivity of the Church, the subsequent Great Schism and the rise of the Conciliar Movement, the age of the worldly renaissance popes, and, finally, the beginning of the Protestant Reformation. These two centuries, in other words, are packed with significant events, which color much of the relationship between England and the Papacy and deter-

A perusal of the material dealt with in the fourteen chapters will give some idea of the complexity of tax methods used at the time and of the materials and problems dealt with in this massive work. It illustrates the many sources the Papacy sought to use to fund sufficient revenue for its wide-ranging activities. The first chapter deals with “Peter’s Pence,” a household “poll tax” dating back to the times of the Anglo-Saxon kings. At that time it had been a gift; by the 14th century it had come to be regarded as a tribute, marking in some degree English dependence on Rome. Hence there was a gradually growing opposition to its payment. The sums paid locally or by dioceses were set by custom, and not by calculation of population or wealth, and varied little as time progressed, and Parliament resisted any changes and even, in the second half of the 14th century, opposed paying anything at all.

Another form of income, dealt with in the second chapter, was that of fees paid in return for exemptions granted certain ecclesiastics or ecclesiastical institutions from the jurisdiction of some particular ecclesiastical authority. With this had come to be associated the tribute promised by King John after he was forced to submit to Pope Innocent III in the quarrel over control of Church appointments. By 1257 payment of this tribute had fallen into abeyance, and Pope John was to have it renewed. But England was becoming too independent-minded to accede, and Parliament found a legal way out by deciding that King John had made the original promise of tribute without consent of his barons.

The other twelve chapters deal, largely in pairs, with other forms of special taxes: “tenth,” levied on ecclesiastical income or sought as subsidies from the clergy for special purposes, such as crusades; service fees exacted in return for acknowledgment of the election or succession of an archbishop, bishop, or abbot to his office; “annates,” a tax levied on the first year’s income of a new incumbent of a benefice; fees or gifts brought in by the laity. In the third chapter, providing an interesting detail that the Pope who seems to stand out as most vigorous in his efforts at financial reform was John xxii (1316–34), predecessor in name to the late pontiff.

The book concludes with four appendices, statistical tables of receipts of Peter’s Pence, of the amounts levied or promised in the form of fees on election to benefices, and an estimate on what the yield of this tax was in the period covered and what further payments were made which found their way to Rome to the Papal treasury.

A format of this historical work Professor Lunt’s book is addressed to a restricted audience, where, judging by the praise showered on the first volume, it will be warmly welcomed. The measure of its true value is not, of course, determined by this restriction, and it does bring great credit to the men and institutions which helped to prepare the author for his scholarship. The College will continue to be fulfilling one of its primary tasks while it prepares men of this caliber for the world.

It is a striking fact that two of the most successful college textbooks of English history, published in this country in the past generation are the products of a full or partial Bowdoin authorship. When this reviewer enrolled in History 78 twenty-five years ago, under Professors Van Cleve and Kendrick, our text was History of England by the late William E. Lunt ‘04, then at the height of his powers, a brilliant teacher at Haverford and a leading authority on the medieval history of England. At that time (1925) the first edition of Hall and Albin had just appeared. It quickly established itself as a popular and successful book, the present version of which, under review here, is the fourth edition.

As is the case with most historical surveys of this kind, the book is a major undertaking and the narrative is brought up to date. In this instance the events of British and Commonwealth history are covered through the spring of 1961. But the authors have not been content merely to add a chapter or two at the end of an otherwise unchanged book. They have included rather extensive revision throughout. For example, recent research in late medieval social and economic history is reflected in sections of Chapter 8, and the work of Namier and others in eighteenth-century politics has led the authors to incorporate some of these revisionist views into the text with pages given over to George III’s reign. There is a new chapter on literary currents or “Literary Crosscurrents,” as it is called from 1800 to 1916, and one has also been added on the recent history of the Commonwealth. Finally, the format of the present book is workman-like. The text has been reset in double columns, there are new maps, and more than 150 illustrations add to the pleasure as well as to the usefulness of this volume.

There will necessarily be differences of opinion as to the selection and emphasis in a textbook, and the present authors as broad a survey of history as this one does. Thus the international relations of the period leading up to World War I are covered in a satisfactory way in a chapter that is devoted entirely to that subject, but the origins of the war of 1939-45 are less adequately presented, being mixed into a chapter that also attempts to cover imperial and domestic history for the two decades 1919-1939. Again, while there has been a laudable attempt to introduce the results of new interpretations based on recent scholarship, this has not been entirely successful. The problems involved in reaching conclusions about the limits of Parliament are formidable, and the writer of a general survey is treading dangerous ground when he enters that swampy region. Here the authors do not wholly escape treacherous quicksands. Although they caution that one should not “attribute too much significance to the book,” it is the reviewer’s experience that this is precisely what the average undergraduate using this book will do. He will not notice the word of caution, but he will recall a subheading “The Model Parliament of 1295.” And in his mind there will be fixed, I fear, forever (or at least until the next hour test), the apparently final judgment: “the year 1295 is commonly taken as the standard date for the beginning of Parliament.” (p. 105)

Like the preceding editions, this volume, as its title indicates, is more than a history of England and the Empire and the Commonwealth are treated rather more fully than is the case in many textbooks of British history. And it should come as no surprise that maritime history receives full and effective treatment in a volume of which Professor Albin is a co-author. Indeed, it is a valuable and intricate task that the writing throughout is generally of a high order, the narrative enlivened at many points by sharp or humorous quotations or commentary, and apt anecdote.

A History of England and the Empire-Commonwealth is an informative and entertaining text of the traditional kind, and it seems sure of continued successes. To quote the opening words of the first edition, its authors have sought “A clear and fresh interpretation of an old and honored theme.” That aim has largely been fulfilled in this most recent version of the book.

It all started when my daughter gave me for Christmas a copy of Harm’s Way by James Bassett. I picked it up casually after dinner one night to glance at the first page. At eleven my wife announced that it was bed-time. At three o’clock in the morning, she demanded to know whether I intended to sit up all night with that darned book. At noon the next day I finished it. It’s that kind of book.

At the start of the book there is a biography of the author, and I was both surprised and delighted to find that James Bassett is a Bowdoin graduate. He was a public relations officer on Admiral Halsey’s staff during World War II and is a captain in the Naval Reserve. He is now employed by a large publishing company which supplies many of the King’s English comes from a good Bowdoin grounding, a wealth of Navy background material to draw on, and the daily grind of newspaper reporting. Having thoroughly enjoyed the book, I awaited impatiently for a review or at least a mention of it in the Alumni. I finally wrote the Editor, Bob Cross ’45, and asked him if Brunswick knew about the book. He replied that the College had just received a copy from the publisher and that he had taken it home himself with the same result that I had — he sat up all night reading it.

And now Professor Leith suggests that possibly I might write an informal review of the book. So how do you write a Book Review?

The title Harm’s Way comes from a letter that John Paul Jones wrote to the Continental Congress in which he said, “I wish to have no connection with any ship that does not sail fast, for I intend to go in harm’s way.”

The story starts at Pearl Harbor and carries through the Naval War in the Pacific. The author obviously has first-hand knowledge of his subject and uses it skillfully. His individual characters are authentic and “believable.” I swear that I have met most of them myself at one time or another.

It is the story of Rockwell Torrey, a man from Maine, Annapolis-educated and a career Naval officer of perhaps the best type: devoted to the service of his ship, and to that war that must be won, that government hardware in his custody is to be “expended” to accomplish that purpose, not just “administered.” Wars seem to have a pattern. They start out with the McClellans, but when the chips are down, the Grants and the Shermans do the writing of the story.

When Pearl Harbor was attacked, Admiral Torrey was fortunate in getting his way-backed old cruiser out of the holocaust. Although his ship was not battle-ready or battle-equipped, he chased the Japanese until they ran out of fuel and lost the story to a torpedo from a submarine. At this early stage of the War the powers-that-be were not conditioned to this “hell for leather” type of operation, and a Court of Inquiry left a smirch on his record that removed him from active command and buried him in stall work for a year or two. He ate his heart out while less competent men were put ahead of him. Finally a wise old fleet Admiral gave him a ship and turned him loose.

You’ll have to read the book to find out what happened. Shades of Joshua Chamberlain and Georgie Patton! He certainly sailed his “Harm’s Way.” You are going to like this book.

And my swan song as a book reviewer is, “Don’t gripe or they’ll put you on the house committee!”

Describing fallacies is like describing the ways of falling off a bicycle—there is simply no question of exhausting the possibilities. Nor does a good job consist in struggling toward that impossible goal. It is a matter of balance, rather, of focusing attention clearly on those relatively few ways of getting into trouble that constitute an actual threat; and this is precisely the service that Fallacy: The Counterfeit of Argument performs. The fifty-one varieties of faulty reasoning which W. Ward Fearsand and William B. Holther examine...

Many of these fallacies are also described in other books, of course. (Thirteen of them were described by Aristotle.) However, the number of fallacies considered and the thoroughness with which they are treated here are unique among books not intended for the specialist in logic. Another feature that distinguishes this book from the run of the mill is the authors' use of readily intelligible labels for all of the fallacies discussed. A common practice is to keep lists as many of the traditional designations as possible (frequently Latin), even though they may in no way help the modern reader to identify and understand the mistakes in question. There is also an attempt on the authors' part to effect a general classification of fallacies which, whatever may be its shortcomings, is novel and well thought out.

It is not entirely clear to me for whom this book is intended. The brief description of the book which appears on its cover seems to be addressed to a general audience; however, the nearly forty pages of exercises included strongly suggest student use. In fact, the book could well serve either purpose. It is lively enough for any reader of non-fiction to enjoy. At the same time, in conjunction with a book of readings in logic and/or one of the brief introductory texts (both readily available in paperback editions now), it could provide a most attractive introduction to logic and scientific method.

Alumni Clubs

ALBANY
On Tuesday, May 7, the Bowdoin Club of Albany met at Jack's Oyster House for a social hour and dinner. The special guest from the College was Walter Moulton '58, Assistant Director of Admissions.

Convener John Manning '33 reports, "The following alumni were present: Shandy '05, Hopkins '27, Colton '31, Manning '33, McNiven '31, Spooner '51, and Born '57. Some wives were there, too. We gave Walter Moulton a good workout with many questions on academic policy, admissions, and so forth."

ANDROSCOGGIN
Approximately fifty-five alumni, wives, and other guests attended a ladies' night meeting at Steckino's Restaurant in Lewiston on Wednesday, May 22. The group gathered for a 6:30 social hour and dinner at 7:30. John Wheaton '58, completing his term as Secretary-Treasurer, presided. A brief business session included the election of officers for the coming year: President, John Wheaton '58; Vice President, Frederick Hall '59; and Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member, Donald Roux '55. The Club also elected three Directors: Peter Clifford '55, Martin Roop '58, and Harold Skelton '55. Mr. Wheaton expressed the Club's appreciation to retiring President James Longley '48 and paid special tribute to the late Tom White '10, who for years was a loyal member and regularly attended the meetings.

The new officers are considering several projects for the coming year, including a Bowdoin Ladies' Bridge group and an "Androscoggin Man of the Month."

Professor Herbert Brown, the principal speaker, began his remarks with a tribute to John MacMorran '46, who is resigning after a successful period as Headmaster of the Leavitt Institute to return to classroom teaching. He then proceeded to his main subject, an informal, wide-ranging report on the College and the effect of the fallacies. Each alumnus tends to think of Bowdoin as it was in his particular day, Professor Brown said, but the College is now in a state of dramatic change. The change is generally heartening but is not without touches of pathos for the days and things gone by.

In his remarks Professor Brown told of retired faculty members, many of whom remain in Brunswick, of the creative atmosphere generated through faculty research, and of student attitudes regarding Chapel and the Senior Center. A college that doesn't change is dead, he said.

He spoke of fraternities, still strong at Bowdoin, and of the plans for the new Library. Admissions and premetallurgical scholarships, some new outstanding faculty appointments, and the problems of finding, securing, and holding good faculty members were more subjects he covered. His listeners kept him until almost eleven o'clock, answering their questions.

BUFFALO
Professor Lawrence Hall '36 was the guest speaker at the spring meeting on Tuesday evening, May 14. The following alumni and wives gathered for a social hour and dinner at the Saturna Club; the Henry Sherrells '52, Arthur Showalter '48, the David Deans '52, the George Jacksons '54, Mrs. Archibald Dean '18, the Homer Fays '49, George Craighead '55, and Convener George Phillips '54.

"The Bowdoin Club of Buffalo had a very enjoyable evening," reports the Convener, "talking to Professor Hall and renewing Bowdoin friendships. Unlike several times in the past, when Buffalo welcomed representatives from the College in blinding blizzards, this time we had warm spring weather. Everyone enjoyed meeting Professor Hall and having the opportunity to ask him questions on various aspects of the College. No business as such was transacted at the meeting."

CHICAGO

Secretary Harold Fish '25 reports on the Club's two spring meetings: "Coach Nels Corey '30 on March 8 and Professor Larry Hall's enjoyment given the Bowdoin Club of Chicago a fitting climax to a successful year.

"The dozen or so alumni who watched the beautifully contrived sports film which Nels presented launched into a lively discussion following his running commentary, which included predictions of changes in Bowdoin's future football schedule.

"The half dozen wives who accompanied their husbands to the May meeting were privileged to hear Larry Hall give a hearty account of some of his adventures on the Mississippi River and elsewhere, to their evident delight. They were especially interested in his literary comments.

"Both meetings were amply supported by the Chicago Yacht Club's excellent roast beef dinner and smorgasbord. A brief business session preceded the final meeting, at which the following officers were elected for 1963-64: President, Bob McAvoy '56; Vice President, Dick Means '41; Secretary, Harold Fish '25; Council Member, Ray Olson '30; and Alternate Council Member, Stan Sargent '55."

The next regular meeting is set for Thursday, September 12, when alumni will gather at the Chicago Yacht Club for a 5:30 social hour and a 6:30 dinner. Tony Antonini '63 will be the guest speaker.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

On Friday, May 10, the Bowdoin Club of Central New York held its seventh annual spring dinner and ladies' night at the Hotel Syracuse Country House near Exit 36 on the New York State Turnpike. The guest speaker was Walter Moulton '58, Assistant Director of Admissions.

Secretary Tom Chapman '50 reports that the meeting was very successful, with ten guests and the following fifteen alumni present: Fogg '43, Moulton '58, Chapman '50, Benjamin '32, Dawson '64, Sturtevant '41, Cooke '43, Townsend '52, Walker '41, Cloutier '56, Hildreth '48, Head '50, Devlin '48, Beal '42, and Chapman '77.

Tom writes, "New officers were elected for 1963-64: President, Arthur Chapman '17; Vice President, Thomas Cloutier '56; and Secretary-Treasurer and Council Member, Thomas Chapman '50.

"Walt Moulton gave an excellent informal description of the present College in general and admissions in particular. This was followed by an interesting and probing question and answer period."

The Central New York Club's annual picnic will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Newell Townsend '34, 35 Wellington Road, DeWitt, on Saturday, August 17. For further information alumni may contact Tom Chapman at 5730 Park Street, Pulaski.

CLEVELAND

Professor Lawrence Hall '36 was the guest speaker at a Mid-Day Club luncheon on Wednesday, May 15. Cal Vanderbeek '49, the Cleveland Club Secretary, writes, "Larry spoke informally on the Senior Center and its benefits to the educational program at Bowdoin. This was followed by a question period. The meeting was attended by eight alumni and Mr. Chilton Thomson, President of the Cleveland Chapter of the English Speaking Union, which Larry addressed that same evening."

On Tuesday evening, September 3, the Bowdoin Club of Cleveland will hold a meeting, with Tony Antonini '63 as the special guest. Plans are also under way for the traditional Christmas-week luncheon to entertain local subfreshmen who are interested in Bowdoin.

To summarize the recent activities of the Cleveland Club and to outline plans for the future, Secretary Vanderbeek sent a club newsletter on May 29 to all of his constituents.

CONNECTICUT

President and Mrs. Coles were the guests of honor at the Connecticut Bowdoin Club's spring dinner and ladies' night on May 21. Secretary Har Standish '51 reports, "We had a good meeting, with 96 alumni, wives, guests, parents, and subfreshmen present at the Grantmore Restaurant in Newington for the social hour and dinner. The campus model was very much the center of attraction."

"Chib President Holy Lowell '35 presided at a brief business meeting, which included the election of officers for 1963-64: President, Ralph Keinath '26; Vice President, Robert Brownell '49; Secretary-Treasurer, Welles Standish '51; and Council Member, Charles Scoville '32. Dr. Jack Reed '37, who is completing his term as our Council Member, gave one of his usual good reports."

"The principal speaker was President Coles, who spoke of the steps forward that the College has made in the past ten years: increased endowment and scholarship funds, Gibson Hall, Coleman Hall, the Arena, Pickard Theater, and the addition to the Infantsarium. The College, he reported, must meet the overall $30,000,000 goal set for the next ten years if it is to maintain its present standards."

The President also mentioned that probably a record number of classes had been cut the previous day by students interested in watching the 220 truckloads of transit-mixed concrete poured for the mammoth four-foot-thick foundation for the Senior Center tower.

"Our monthly luncheons continue, with Coach Charlie Britt the special guest on June 6 and Les Korper '63 on July 11. The group meets at the Shoreham Motor Hotel on Asylum Avenue in downtown Hartford. The meetings start at 12:15 p.m. and are adjourned by 1:30 p.m. Bob Spencer '60 is the Luncheon Chairman."

Connecticut alumni are reminded of the post-game cocktail hour and buffet supper at the Williams Inn in Williamstown, Massachusetts, on Saturday, October 19. The sponsoring Bowdoin Club of New York welcomes all alumni, families, and friends to this occasion.

KENNEBEC

On Wednesday, May 8, thirty-two alumni and guests gathered at the Pioneer House in Augusta for a dinner meeting. Guests from the College were Professor William Whiteside, Director of the Senior Center, and Alumni Secretary Pete Barnard '50.

President Ray Swift '48 presided at a brief business session. Treasurer Tom McComber '50 reported the Club solvent, with a balance of $16,000 in the treasury. Sevall Webster '10 reported for the Nominating Committee, and the following were elected unanimously as officers for 1963-64: President, Philip Bird '51; Vice President, Thomas McComber '50; Secretary-Treasurer, Roger Welch '52; and Council Member, Raymond Swift.
LONG ISLAND

The Bowdoin Club of Long Island, which was officially recognized by the Alumni Council on March 1, held its first regular dinner meeting on Thursday, May 16. Local alumni gathered at the Sea Breeze Restaurant in Freeport, Long Island, for a social hour and dinner. The guests were introduced by Professor Herbert Brown, the principal speaker, and Walter Moulton '58, Assistant Director of Admissions. John Papacosma '58 was Dinner Chairman.

Secretary Bill Barney '43 writes, "Herbie Brown was at his best, and we kept him and Walt Moulton busy talking until almost midnight. We had 28 at the dinner, including two guests. Most of them were from the middle of the island, although two came from Brooklyn and one from Riverhead at the eastern end of the island.

"Our meeting was strictly informal. President Jack Craig's remarks being limited to an expression of the group's feelings about future meetings and to his introduction of Herbie. There is a possibility that we may have a picnic this summer. The feeling is that we should have perhaps three or four meetings this year."

"Herbie gave us an excellent start. I am quite certain that we can increase attendance and interest considerably. Walt Moulton's remarks raised many questions, and it is obvious that the group is interested in assisting in local admissions work."

PENOBSCOT

Club Secretary Lewis Vafiades '42 has sent in the following report: "The annual spring meeting of the Penobscot Bowdoin Club was held at the Tarrantine Club in Bangor on Friday, May 10. A ladies' night, the meeting began with a social hour at six, followed by dinner at seven. Present were 61 alumni, wives, and other guests.

"President Malcolm Morrell, Jr. '49 presided and welcomed the Bowdoin Ladies, particularly Mrs. Herbert Brown, wife of the principal speaker. Professor Brown, as always, captivated his audience with a vivid and comprehensive talk on the "State of the College." He made us aware that Bowdoin is still Bowdoin, and yet Bowdoin grows and adapts to a changing world. He included the following in his remarks: the human side of Bowdoin; the faculty, still considered and discusses specific boys and academic difficulties; the College, which still has a marked impact on its undergraduates; and the fact that Bowdoin, even as it moves toward an enrollment of 925 students, remains small."

"Professor Brown reported that retiring faculty members in Brunswick and remain a part of the College. The tendency of faculty members in many institutions is away from feeling that teaching is a privilege, but this is not so at Bowdoin. Bowdoin's faculty salaries are not huge, but they are competitive. The competition for better students is keen, and the Admissions Office will soon have an additional man. The College is more cosmopolitan and more productive. The students generally write worse and worse because they read less and less, but this is not true of the better students. Bowdoin men are not men of sandals and beards, unlike Cornell students, but they are prepared with advance standing, and there is more independent work. The Senior Center Program will further this."

"Professor Brown stated that the student body is less docile and more critical. He spoke of the strengthening of Bowdoin's mathematical and science departments and of the Arena and the stimulation that skiing activities provide for the College and the town."

"He also outlined some of the needs of the Library. He spoke with confidence of the Capital Campaign. Most of all, Bowdoin is still a place where there are good students who learn, good teachers who teach, and good books to read. There remains a partnership spirit between the College and the town."

At the informal business meeting which followed, President Morrell, the Secretary-Treasurer, and Council Member Malcolm Stevenson '50 all gave reports. The latter spoke about Bowdoin fraternities, activities planned for the coming summer at the Oakes Center in Bar Harbor, and the plans to end the Bowdoin-Navy football rivalry with a final game in 1964.

The following are the new officers for 1963-64: President, John Conti '52; Vice President, Dr. William Manter '36; Secretary-Treasurer, Lewis Vafiades '42; and Alumni Council Member, Malcolm Stevenson '50.

RHODE ISLAND

Professor and Mrs. Herbert Brown were the guests of the Rhode Island Bowdoin Club at a ladies' night dinner meeting on Friday, April 26, at the Rhode Island Country Club in West Barrington. Some came early to play golf and tennis, and the remainder arrived for cocktails at six and dinner at seven.

"We had a most satisfactory meeting," Secretary George M. Manter '23, reports, "with a total attendance of forty-one, including eighteen wives and the parents of two students."

"After a brief business session, we turned to the principal event of the evening, a broad report on the College by Professor Brown, which was met with enthusiasm by the Senior Center and the Capital Campaign. It was done as only Herbie can do it and was mightily enjoyed by all. The meeting didn't break up until after eleven o'clock."

Throughout the winter and spring, the Club has held informal luncheons on the first Wednesday of each month at the Turk's Head Building in Providence. Alumni desiring further information on the 12:30 p.m. gatherings should contact the Secretary at 214 Dalton Street, Rumford.

SAN FRANCISCO

Secretary Fletch Means '57 submits this report: "The Bowdoin Club of San Francisco held a meeting at the Olympic Club on Wednesday evening, April 24. President Coles, the featured speaker, aroused great interest by highlighting the important educational benefits to be derived from the Senior Center Program."

"Club President Bruce Alden '49 presided, and Capital Campaign Area Chairman John Mullane '50 also spoke. We were pleased to have Enoch Jordan '67 of San Mateo as BOWDOIN ALUMNUS a guest. He will enter Bowdoin in the fall as the recipient of a George Knox Scholarship.

"In addition to wives and other guests, the following alumni were present: Alden '49, F. Allen '51, Berkley '56, Blake '51, P. Brown '41, Campbell '52, Carmon '52, Chevalier '50, Fearon '36, Fry '46, Gilson '54, Ham '51, Harkness '26, Hooke '43, Hvoskinsky '51, Johnson '60, Kesch '59, Means '57, Mullan '50, Muller '41, Norton '38, Parnic '61, Podvoll '57, Sands '41, Todd '58, Webler '54, Wilson '50, and Wood '55.

"Being far away from Bowdoin, we all welcomed this opportunity to gain a broader insight into the present state of the College, and we left for home much the wiser and the happier for the evening."

SPRINGFIELD

On Thursday, May 16, Coach Ray Bicknell was the guest speaker at the spring ladies' night. The group met at the Oakes Steak and Rib House in Springfield for a social hour and dinner.

Reporting on the meeting, Club Secretary Ed Sample '49 writes, "A pleasant time was had by all. Thirty-three alumni and guests were present, including S. Brown '27, Charles '48, Doherty '19, Doherty '56, Dwight '54, Fleischner '39, Gass '58, Giordanetti '51, Hall '60, Hawkins '58, L. Hyde '38, Miller '58, Robbins '48, Sample '49, Swett '28, Sawyer '51, Thwing '40, Wolfe '53, and Wragg '53.

"Enthusiasm was still running high following the splendid March 23 concert that Bob Beckwith and the boys put on. We had about 350 present, and fine comments came both from Bowdoin men and from others.

"Ray Bicknell gave a good talk, emphasizing the athletic program and especially the problems concerning Bowdoin. Following his remarks, there was considerable discussion of the end of the Bowdoin-Maine football rivalry in 1964.

"The following officers were elected for 1963-64: President, Corlby Wolfe '53; Vice President, Sample '49; Secretary, Paul Doherty '56; Treasurer, Charlie Bergeron '53; and Hospitality Committee Chairman, Shop Fein '49. Larry Dwight '54 is our new Council Member, and we also elected six Directors: Larry, Bing Miller '38, Jack Percive '59, Bill Charles '48, Sid Brown '27, and Bob Fleischner '39.

The Club will hold a dinner meeting on Thursday, November 7, when Professor Dodge Fernald, Chairman of the Psychology Department, will be the guest speaker.

TOKYO

Although there is no such organization as a Tokyo Bowdoin Club, alumni will be interested in a meeting held in that city on April 23. John Rich '39, Chief of NBC News in the Far East, reports, "Ryonozuke Toyokawa '21 had suggested that we try to get the boys living around Tokyo together. On the 22nd Jim Waite '42 flew in on a Pan American jet. After some fast phone calls we rounded up seven alumni for a get-together at my house. Present were Ryu Toyokawa '21, Bill Broe '39, John Rich '39, Jim Waite '42, Wilhelm Haas '53, Shogo Moriyama '51, and Taneshiro Yamamoto '62."

We all went to a nearby restaurant to eat Japanese "Tempura" and then returned to my house to drink coffee and brandy and spin tales of Bowdoin.

"It took Jim Waite's sudden arrival in town to get us all together, but now that we have started, we hope to have more such reunions from time to time. There are five or six other Bowdoin men in Tokyo who couldn't make it on such short notice but who promised to be there next time."

VERMONT

In the absence of Convener Bob Peakes '36, who was away on business, Hody White '58, a fourth-year medical student at the University of Vermont, made the arrangements and acted as program chairman for the spring dinner meeting and ladies' night of the Bowdoin Club of Vermont on Monday, May 6. Alumni and wives gathered at the Hotel Vermont in Burlington for a social hour at 6:00 and dinner at 7:15.

The guest speaker was Walter Moulton '58, Assistant Director of Admissions, who talked informally about Bowdoin admissions and Bowdoin's plans for the future, including the Senior Center. There was a discussion period, and Mr. Moulton answered a number of questions.

Present at the meeting were Loriing and Marilyn Hart '46, Sumner and Julia McIntire '35, James and Janet Stackpole '50, Tony Belmont '60, Jim Halleck '59, John and Phyllis Collins '57, Malcolm Daggett '29, Oliver Brown '53, Charles and Annillad Crain '46, Robert and Elizabeth Laffin '38, Houghton, and Mary White '58, Walter Moulton '58, and Thomas Chadwick, Field Director for the Capital Campaign.

THOMAS STONE BURR '91

Dr. Thomas S. Burr died on June 1, 1963, in Kalamazoo, Mich. Born on March 14, 1876, in Bangor, he prepared for college at the local high school. Following his graduation from Bowdoin he was for two years Principal of Patten Academy and for one year Principal of Old Town High School before entering the University of Michigan Medical School, from which he received his M.D. degree in 1898. For the next six years he practiced in Ann Arbor, Mich., and then for two years in South Bend, Ind. Because of illness he returned to Maine for a rest and “some hunting and fishing.” In 1906 he accepted an opportunity to go to Newfoundland as resident physician for a remote copper mining company. During the next seven years, in various medical positions, he saw most of Newfoundland and met many interesting people, including Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell H’29, whom he came to know very well.

In 1913 Dr. Burr returned to the United States. He practiced for 11 years in Lisbon Falls and, after the death of his wife in the influenza epidemic of 1918, became Health Officer in Rumford, where he remained until 1945. Since that time he has lived with his daughter in Holyoke, Mass. “Here, among the hills along the lovely Connecticut valley,” he once wrote, “is a very fair substitute for Maine, though I can never admit its equality.”

Surviving are a son, Thomas S. Burr of Hingham, Mass.; two daughters, Mrs. Curtis S. Fisher of Holyoke, Mass., and Mrs. Robert A. Dodge of Kalamazoo, Mich.; and eight grandchildren. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Dr. Burr was a fine amateur poet, in addition to his other accomplishments, and writing verse helped both to keep him youthful in outlook and to keep his friends marveling at his rare spirit. Some alumni may remember the two sonnets which he wrote in memory of Robert Coffin ’15, which were published in the February, 1957, issue of the Alumni. That same winter he wrote a poem entitled “Symbol of Easter,” which is reproduced here as a final tribute to him.

Behold a calla lily spring
From out a dead and sapless thing;
Behold its petal white unfold,
Satin soft as an angel’s wing.
Shaping a chamber fit to hold
Its yellow ingot of bright gold;
Loveliness worthy to adorn
The House of God, on Easter morn.

You who a miracle must see
That faith, within you, shall abide,
Behold the awakening of spring,
The flowering of the country-side;
Hark to the mating robins sing,
Or see a stately lily grow
From out a dead and sapless thing.

The words that follow were spoken on July 2 by Librarian Richard Harwell as the College paid tribute to General Joshua L. Chamberlain of the Class of 1852. An account of the exercises that day appears on page 12 of this issue.

There are those who deplore the Civil War Centennial, those who would like to forget our past. Far more than the war itself was inevitable, the Civil War Centennial was inevitable — in fact, inexorable. Certainly the Civil War is a focal point in our history. To oversimplify, it changed the United States from a republic to a democracy; it made possible the growth of our country as we know it. It is also a vital point in our history, and those who do not wish to commemorate it are only hiding, hiding from facing up to its vitality and reality. Only when we have solved the problems the war left unsolved, only when we have made our country fully a democracy, only when we have achieved the aims that were our war aims can the war be forgotten.

In a speech to a group of Civil War enthusiasts visiting Richmond, Douglas Southall Freeman spoke, only a few weeks before his death, of the importance of continued study of the war. He emphasized character as the mark of the men who were the heroes of the war.

"There, gentlemen," he said, "is where we get the great reward of our study of this period. We are dealing four times in five, aye, nine times in ten with men of character, and the great delight we have is that we can keep the company of truthful gentlemen. No honor that ever comes to a man in life is greater than the honor that may be yours by learning thoroughly the life of one of the great men of that era."

To illustrate the honor of that era, this morning honor General Joshua Chamberlain, . . . It is impossible for one to judge the great days of another's life. There are days of private greatness the historian never knows, but surely that day at Little Round Top was a great day in the life of Joshua Lawrence Chamberlain. It made possible other great days in his future: the dreary April day at Appomattox in 1865 when he received General John B. Gordon's formal surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, not with primitive solemnity but with the gallantry of a salute to the vanquished, the later day when he was elected Governor of Maine, and the still later day when his selection as President of Bowdoin College was announced to the cheers of a Commencement throng.

Alumni Fund Earns Distinction

Bowdoin's Alumni Fund won an Honorable Mention in the 1963 Alumni Giving Incentive Award Competition for "distinguished achievement in the development of alumni support."

A $125 prize and a certificate were presented to Robert M. Cross '45, Secretary of the Alumni Fund, at a special luncheon on July 8 during the American Alumni Council's Golden Jubilee Conference in Atlantic City, N. J.

The award was for "sustained performance" among private men's colleges. This was the fourth consecutive year in which Bowdoin has won a prize in the annual competition, inaugurated by a grant from the United States Steel Foundation and administered by the American Alumni Council.

This year's award was based on the 1961-62 Alumni Fund's record-breaking total of $231,552. A total of 4,782 contributions were received during that year, including gifts from 4,554 alumni or 54.3 per cent of the total number of alumni.

The Chairman of the 1961-62 Alumni Fund was Willard B. Arnold, III, '51 of Waterville.

Bowdoin also received Honorable Mention in 1960, Honorable Mention in sustained performance in 1961, and a $1,000 first prize in sustained performance in 1962. Major emphasis in the judging is placed on the number of dollars raised through the annual fund and all other alumni channels. Also evaluated are the number of contributors, the level of giving, the purposes for which the funds are raised, and evidence of a deliberate effort to sustain all types of alumni giving at a high level.

From far-off places where distance may be measured by time or kilometres, not miles, come 12 young men with a passion to know America. Their destination: Bowdoin College, under the Bowdoin Plan.

Thirty-six countries, East and West, have sent their students, 153 in all since 1947. They are the sons of farmers, soldiers, college professors, doctors, fishermen. They have lived on remote islands north of the Arctic Circle, in sophisticated South American cities, in West African villages, and on European farms.

They want to enter the foreign diplomatic service, or be scientists, teachers, engineers, archaeologists, or lawyers. They bring to Bowdoin their tradition of high scholarship and an intense desire to learn more about the United States.

Each of the 12 fraternity houses contributes room and board for one Bowdoin Plan student a year, and the College, through the gifts of alumni to the Alumni Fund, pays his tuition and fees. Financially, therefore, the Bowdoin Plan student needs to provide only for his travel and personal expenses.

Praised as a notable contribution to international understanding and copied at other colleges and universities throughout the country, the Bowdoin Plan was originated by Joseph C. Wheeler '48, who is now Deputy Chief of the Peace Corps' Division of Near East South Asia Programs.

Most of the young men, ranging in age from 17 to 28, have come to Bowdoin for a year, but some have remained for longer periods and a few for the full four years. Many have been accepted as degree candidates, and some have graduated with honors. Some have been able to continue into graduate school holding scholarships administered by Bowdoin.

Bowdoin Plan scholars have distinguished themselves as valuable additions to the life and fellowship of the College, and many have been offered, and have accepted, membership in their sponsoring fraternity. The fraternity members share their holiday and vacation hospitality with their Bowdoin Plan student in residence, and strong bonds of friendship have grown among the boys.

Fathers of Bowdoin Plan students become honorary members of the Bowdoin Fathers' Association, assured that their sons' welfare and development are the concern of the fathers of all Bowdoin students, and the young men themselves receive special Foreign Student Certificates bearing Bowdoin's gold seal and ribbons, recognizing them as Alumni.

As one recent Bowdoin Plan scholar described it, "The foreign guest is convinced of an act of good will which has no other end than to promote mutual understanding. . . . This is something we need so badly in a world in which every one of us realizes that we must come together. . . ."

During the summer Bowdoin Plan students for 1963-64 began to arrive in the United States. Some of the 12 made arrangements through the Experiment in International Living to spend at least a month in the home of an American family before the opening of college. One had to remain at home through the summer to help his parents on their farm, and one had to complete his service in the Free Chinese Army. One had already served in the South Korean Army and another with Norway's contingent of UNEF (United Nations Emergency Forces) in Gaza.

Two had been in this country before and visited their friends here before coming to Bowdoin. One took an extensive bus tour through the United States, from the West Coast to the East, and another visited relatives in Pennsylvania.

All are looking ahead to their year at Bowdoin with the excited anticipation expressed by one - "The more I have learned, the more I have wanted to know!"

Erik Johan Asplund of Sweden, sponsored by Sigma Nu Fraternity, is an economics major. He has traveled widely in Europe and the Near East and attended an American boarding school in India for two years.

Hans Johan Edvard Hede, sponsored by Psi Upsilon and also from Sweden, hopes to be a civil engineer. Currently a student of mathematics, he was selected as the best athlete in his school.

Carlos Manuel Ramos, from Costa Rica, spent some time in a Palo Alto, Calif., high school. Sponsored by Zeta Psi, he hopes to teach social science on the university level.

Carlos F. Somaini, sponsored by Delta Kappa Epsilon, is from Argentina. A keen sportsman and hunter, he is studying mathematics and plans to be an engineer.

Friogeir Bjornsson, sponsored by Kappa Sigma, is the first Bowdoin Plan student from Iceland. He hopes to teach English or study law upon his return to his native country.

Sang Il Tong, born in Korea of Korean parents, is now a resident of Japan. He has always attended American schools and has studied at St. Joseph's College of the Catholic University of America. He is being sponsored by Theta Delta Chi.

Kuo-chu Hua of Free China is being sponsored by Delta Sigma. He is a graduate of the English Department, Junior College, of Taiwan Normal University and recently completed his military obligation in reserve officer's duty.

Ji Hong Chang is being sponsored by Beta Theta Pi. A Korean, he was a pre-medical student for two years at Seoul National University and has worked for three years as a journalist on the English language Korean Republic newspaper.

Pietro Beneventano del Bosco, from Italy, is being sponsored by Alpha Delta Phi. He has studied political science at the University of Florence and is an expert deep-sea diver and amateur archaeologist.
Mehmet Kemal Cakman of Turkey is being sponsored by Chi Psi. A graduate of Ankara College, he is concerned by the economic status of his country and is attending Bowdoin to study the American economic system intensively.

Arnfinn Meyer Sorensen, from Norway, is being sponsored by Phi Delta Psi. A political science major at the University of Oslo, he spent his senior year in an Oregon high school and later served with the UNEF in Gaza. He hopes to enter the Norwegian foreign service.

Hiroshi Ohishi of Japan is being sponsored by Alpha Rho Upsilon. A graduate of Japan University, he plans a diplomatic career. He is a student of Japanese writing, flower arranging, and the tea ceremony. On the athletic side he specializes in track and judo.

“I Believe We Can Win . . . .”
by United States Senator Paul H. Douglas ’13

Printed here is the text of the address which Senator Douglas delivered at the commissioning exercises for members of the graduating class during Commencement Weekend last June.

I wish to congratulate you who are about to become officers in the Armed Services and to wish you well as you enter upon an essential and honorable profession. The nation wants you to be skilled and devoted defenders of its security and freedom.

But it may be appropriate if we think for a few minutes on the larger functions which you are to perform and the role of force in the service of a free and democratic people.

The English historian Arnold Toynbee has recently declared that existence is more important than freedom. This is, of course, merely the intellectual equivalent of the slogan which has been given such wide currency in his country, “Better red than dead.” If this doctrine were followed, the practical consequence would be that in every conflict of interest between ourselves and the communist world bloc, the United States and the free world would be expected to back down, lest by resisting we would cause the communists to use force, which would result in great loss of life both here and abroad. If we were to adopt such a policy, it would be certain that in a relatively short time we would indeed all be red. We would have purchased our physical existence at the expense of freedom.

For make no mistake about it, the Communists, whether of the Russian or the Chinese school, are out to control the world and to impose their type of police state upon all of the peoples whom they take over. We sometimes do not realize what this means any more than we realize what would happen to us if all the oxygen were to be extracted from the air we breathe.

It would mean a controlled press, radio, and television, controlled religion, and shackled schools and colleges. Politically it would mean one-party government, with this one party in turn controlled by an inner group. It would mean that artists, writers, and musicians would be put in spiritual uniform. Perhaps most serious of all, it would mean the midnight knock on the door, the journey without fair trial to the concentration camp, and all of the brutalities which naked power wreaks on those who differ.

Mr. Toynbee and his followers should indeed consider whether mere physical existence is worth such a price and whether these freedoms and others like them, the precious precipitates of man’s prolonged experiment in living, should be surrendered without resistance. The sturdy good sense of tens of millions of people has always refused to make such a surrender, and in this they are at once more manly and more idealistic than the learned historian and his followers.

There are, however, many noble souls who urge not so much physical non-resistance as spiritual super-resistance, which by practicing love and good will to one’s enemies seeks to melt the hearts of the oppressors and overcome evil with good. Let no one sneer at these good people, for they are cultivating the spirit of love espoused by all the great religions of the world, except possibly by Mohammedanism, and most nobly exemplified by Jesus. Such a practice has a great deal of infectious power in the relationships between individuals and in the relationships between democratic states where conscience can speak to conscience across national lines.

It may at times even be expedient in the relationship of weak nations and peoples to strong states and races, as the success of Ghandi’s methods in helping win independence for India is eloquent witness. But if applied by the people of the free world to the police states of either fascism or communism, it would be fatal. In the first place, the philosophy of spiritual resistance commands support in proportion to the distance of the danger and diminishes in strength as the danger draws closer.

For let oppression come closer and closer, and the mass of believers will decide to resist after all, like the gladiator in Androcles and the Lion. But since their resistance will be belated, it will be ineffective. This was true even in the days when wars were fought with spears and bows and arrows. It is demonstrably true today, when even heavy artillery is as a popgun compared with the mighty nuclear forces which man has unleashed.

A few saints would indeed try to resist evil with good. But, by definition, their numbers would be extremely limited, and if their example spread, they would be quietly put away in work camps with no word allowed of their example or ideas.

There would descend upon the world an ice age of tyranny which might last for centuries and possibly millennia. It is because this prospect is so abhorrent to the people of this country and of the free world that we have created our Armed Services in which you will serve.

Your job is to help defend this country and the cause of freedom. We do not want to conquer anyone. We are not an aggressive power. We want no war. We are not out to make this an American century. We do want to be free ourselves, and we know that freedom is indivisible and that if we allow country after country to fall unwillingly under the communist yoke, we are weakened by that much. No nation, indeed, is an island unto itself.

We use our force, therefore, as a deterrent in the hope that by our power we may deter the forces of oppression from attacking or confine their assaults to peripheral irritations. The stronger and the more efficient is our deterrent, the less is the danger of attack. This in itself is a main reason why you should seek to acquire skill and competence in your profession.

But make no mistake about it — the ultimate test will be whether or not we are ready to risk physical existence if freedom is seriously threatened. Last October our Government and our people showed themselves ready to do so, and it was this determination which caused Khrushchev to back down and to remove his long-range missiles and bombers from Cuba. New crises will arise, but if we remain firm yet non-provocative, I believe we can win and be neither red nor dead. It is our duty, therefore, to have steadier nerves and a deeper sense of values than those of Mr. Toynbee and his followers.

The One-Hundred-Dollar Understanding

by Librarian Richard Harwell

Twenty-five years ago I was writing a book page called "Fresh Books" for what was, somewhat euphemistically, known as a college literary magazine. In its winter 1938 issue I began: "I'm all in a dither this month about cheap fiction. I don't mean Edgar Rice Burroughs, Kathleen Norris, and their schools, but the kind you can buy cheap. This latest venture of the book-trade into competition with the movies bids fair to bring more lasting results than any previous ones. I am referring, of course, to the new Triangle Books and the not-quite-so-new Modern Age editions."

Neither Triangle Books nor Modern Age editions made the lasting impact that I then hoped for, but they were the immediate precursors of the various lines of paperback books which wrought what is still being referred to as the "paperback revolution." The revolution is over. Paperback books are here to stay. They are a boon to reading — easily available and cheap. They have often been regarded as a bane to libraries — difficult to buy efficiently, difficult to bind, not made to withstand the wear and tear of repeated use. But the way to lick 'em was to join 'em. Faculties have made wide use of them for inexpensive collateral reading. Publishers have constantly increased the quality of titles published in paper bindings. Many are now printed on high quality paper and with good formats that permit local binding. Unfortunately the price of the better paperbacks has risen along with their quality, but more expensive paperbacks are useful to libraries in supplying needed titles often available in no other way. The cheaper ones can be useful in providing recreational reading at less cost than is required for one circulation of a hard-bound book that has been purchased, processed, and cataloged for permanent addition to the library's collection.

I am still excited about paperbacks. They are still the freshest books around — in use if not in content.

Last year the Bowdoin College Library instituted a special collection of paperback books for the recreational reading of students. The books are shelved in the Alumni Reading Room in the Library and are available for reading without the formalities of circulation records. The original stock of books totaled something over 350 volumes. Each volume in the collection was marked as library property and carried a label on its back cover reading:

BOOKS ARE FOR READING

This book is part of a collection provided in the Bowdoin College Library for the recreational reading of Bowdoin students and other members of the College.

Books may be borrowed from this collection without any formal records. Please return books borrowed to the circulation desk of the Library when you have completed your use of them. There is no date due on these books, but please return them so that they may be read by others.

If you have paperback books appropriate for addition to this collection, the gift of them will be appreciated. Such volumes should be given to the Librarian of the College or to the Circulation Librarian.

The collection has suffered the expected attrition, and losses from it have not been as fully compensated for by gifts as was hoped; but losses have been considerably fewer than in comparable collections at other libraries, and continuance of the paperback collection on the same basis seems fully warranted. Early in the fall the collection will be restocked by the addition of about 350 new volumes.

Librarians are sincerely concerned about reading, not just about reading as part of the learning process in college but also about reading as a lifelong way to knowledge. Paperbacks are an inviting vehicle by which lifetime reading habits can be encouraged. With this function of librarians in mind Stevens Hilyard '62, Assistant to the Librarian, and I last winter put together a list of paperback books currently in print which might serve as a representative library for a Bowdoin College student, a working personal library which can be purchased at list price for a total of less than $100. The list was called "The One-Hundred-Dollar Understanding" and appeared in the Bowdoin College Library Bulletin for February. It was reprinted in the spring in the Library Journal. Since the Bowdoin College Library Bulletin does not go to all alumni of the College and since very few alumni are likely to see the Library Journal, we reprint the list here.

We quote from the introduction as it appeared in the Bowdoin College Library Bulletin:

"The purpose of this compilation is the demonstration that a diversified library of worthwhile books can be assembled for a sum that a student should be able to invest in books during his years at college. It would be presumptuous to assume that any particular student should go out and buy as a lot the titles included in "The One-Hundred-Dollar Understanding." Any student who finds the list of interest should certainly enjoy the privilege of making his own substitutions and adjustments within the list.

"A few ground rules were established before the list was put together. (Nearly all of them were broken, but only as a good case could be made for exceptions.) The primary criterion was that each of the books should be readable and interesting for its own sake. The concept of a list of great books, landmark books, or seminal books was not ignored, but it was largely rejected as a major consideration. Next, we were determined that the books should, as fully as possible, be leading reading; that is, that each title should be an example of a type of book, or of an author, that a reader might wish to investigate further. Anthologies were to be avoided, but at least two crept in. Abridgements were not to be allowed, but one is included. Wide subject coverage was obviously desirable, but specialists were not consulted for the books in subject areas, this is a generalist list. Undoubtedly it has its own imbalances, inadequacies, and misjudgments; but there are a consistency in the selections and an interaction among the titles that could be achieved only in the compilation of the list as a unit.

"In order to make the amount of money presumed go as far as possible, the most inexpensive edition of a title was chosen unless the presence of an especially valuable introduction made a higher priced edition particularly desirable. The quality in the printing of paperback books varies widely. Some readers might want to by-pass some of the editions here listed for better produced issues of the same title.

"Most important among factors controlling selections for the list was whether or not the book is presently in print in a paperback edition. All of the books listed are recorded as in print in the winter 1962-63 issue of Paper Bound Books in Print. They are here listed with the following information:
author, title, distributing publisher, publisher's number or other series designation, and price." (The price of some books has increased since last winter; the total cost of the list would now be slightly more than $100 instead of $99.80 as was then the case.)

The introductory note in the Library Journal added:
"A century and more ago it was customary for poets who had submitted poems for possible use at the opening of a theater or some similar occasion, and had failed of the prize, to publish their 'Rejected Addresses.' These rejected pieces were sometimes more meritorious than the prize-winning address used for the occasion. In the compilation of this list a selection of rejected titles was accumulated that might appeal to many as a more attractive total. With this in mind, each reader of 'The One-Hundred-Dollar Understanding' is invited to reject this list and compile his own — but by the same rules, if you please."

Here is the list:

Gifts made recently to the Capital Campaign have established the Frederick W. and Elizabeth M. Willey Scholarship Fund, the Claff Scholarship Fund, and the Walter Averill Powers, 1906, Scholarship Fund and also provided the main lobby and exhibit area of the new library building.

The Willey Scholarship Fund, amounting to some $5,000, was established by Mr. and Mrs. Willey to provide scholarship aid for undergraduates, with preference to men born in the state of Maine. A cum laude graduate of the College in 1917, Mr. Willey is Vice President and Resident Manager of the investment banking firm of Stroud and Company in Pittsburgh, Pa. He was Chairman of the 1960-61 Alumni Fund, has served as a member of the Alumni Council for many years, and is Chairman of the Pittsburgh area for the Capital Campaign. The Willeys' two sons, Frederick W. Willey, Jr., '47 and David C. Willey '51, are also Bowdoin men.

Under the terms of the Claff Scholarship Fund, established with an initial gift of $5,000 from the Claff Charitable Foundation, preference will go to students from the South Shore area of Massachusetts.

The four trustees of the Foundation are Dr. C. Lloyd Claff '18, Chester E. Claff '21, Leslie A. Claff '26, and Warren L. Claff. Lloyd Claff received an honorary doctor of science degree from Bowdoin in 1958 and is a business-inventor-scientist. He and Dr. Armand A. Crescenzi, a New York thoracic surgeon, recently invented a device called "A Pulsatile Extracorporeal Membrane System" for oxygenation of blood outside the human body, taking the place of the lungs and heart during open heart surgery and cancer chemotherapy. He has also invented an explosion-proof heart defibrillator (a device to restore normal cardiac action for a patient whose heart has stopped beating), and the Claff Autotherm, an insulated sleeve for treating ailments of the arms, legs, or back with heat.

The Claff brothers are associated in the management of M. B. Claff and Sons, Inc., a shoe carret manufacturing firm in Randolph, Mass. Lloyd is President of the Company, Chester is Executive Vice President, and Leslie is Treasurer. They are also officers of the Image Transfer Company and Norfolk Industries, Inc., with Lloyd as President of both firms, Chester Vice President, and Leslie Treasurer. Chester, a former Governor of Rotary District 795, originated the "Million Dollar Meal" plan to benefit the Rotary Foundation's program of granting fellowships to graduate students for study abroad. Leslie, a track star in his undergraduate days, established the Leslie A. Claff '26 Track Trophy at Bowdoin in 1961. He is President of the Class of 1926 and is also its Reunion Chairman and Alumni Fund Class Agent.

Ralph A. Powers '13 of New London, Conn., who is President of the Robertsoin Paper Box Company in Montville, Conn., established the Powers Scholarship Fund of $10,000 in honor of his brother, Walter A. Powers '06 of York Harbor. Preference goes to undergraduates from Maine. Walter Powers entered Bowdoin at the age of 14 and graduated summa cum laude when he was 18. Ralph Powers was not only a member of Bowdoin's Class of 1913 but also a member of Harvard's Class of 1914. Both Walter and Ralph are the sons of Llewellyn Powers, who was Governor of Maine from 1897 to 1901 and also served in the United States House of Representatives.

Mrs. Stuart F. Brown of Linwood, Mass., has given the College $30,000 to be used for the main lobby and exhibit area of the new library building, in memory of her husband, a member of the Class of 1910, who died in October of 1962. He was Treasurer and a Director of the Whitinsville Spinning Ring Company, of which Mrs. Brown is a Director and their son, G. Trowbridge Brown '45, is Manager. He was also President of the Whitinsville Savings Bank.

Football and Soccer

By the time this issue of the Alumnus reaches alumni, the football season will be well along, and it may be just about State Series time. For that reason there will be no predictions made. However, the season started on a high note on Saturday, September 28, at Medford, Mass., where Coach Nels Corey's squad defeated Tufts 28 to 6.

The win was Bowdoin’s first over Tufts since 1953, when the final score was 32 to 6, and it is the first time we have defeated a Tufts team coached by Harry Arlanson.

Harry Shulman’s account of the game in the Portland Sunday Telegram said, in part, "Bowdoin scored in each period, chalkling up a 14-0 lead before the Jumbos could launch a sustained march. With Bob Harrington providing a constant threat on the option, and Paul Soule smashing off the flanks for good yardage, the Polar Bears moved the ball well. Fullback Bill Farley was effective on short line bursts, and Al Ryan proved particularly able as a pass grabber in addition to turning in a standout defensive job from his corner-backer spot.”

Soule, a sophomore and the son of Bill Soule ’36, scored three touchdowns, two of them on running plays and the third on a pass from Harrington. Sophomore end Jim MacAllen scored the other touchdown on a Harrington pass.

Tufts fumbled five times, and Bowdoin recovered all five loose balls. Sophomore tackle Bill Minnis got two of them, senior center Jim Haddock two more, and senior end Frank Drigonas one.

Game statistics were as follows:

Coach Charlie Bur’s varsity soccer team also got off to a fine start, defeating Lowell Tech 3 to 1 on September 28. Bowdoin Plan student Hans Hede of Sweden, Gerry Giesler ’63, and Charlie Allen ’66 scored the goals, Rick Copeland ’63 had two assists, and Bill Horton ’64 and Steve Weiss ’64 were standouts on defense. After Lowell scored in the opening minutes, it had only one other shot at the Bears’ goal.

The soccer team plays Bates, Colby, and Maine twice each and also has single games with Wesleyan and Springfield.

Swimming Meet October 25

Some of Bowdoin’s outstanding swimmers of the past will return to the Curtis Pool on Friday, October 25, for the annual Alumni-Freshman vs. Varsity meet at 8:00 p.m. Swimming Coach Charlie Burr and his predecessor, Bob Miller, will conduct the meet.

Varsity swimmers who will compete include Captain Pete Seaver ’64, who holds the New England records in the 500 and 1,650 yard freestyle events; Tim Robinson ’65, New England 100 yard champion and the first Bowdoin swimmer ever to go that distance in less than 50 seconds; and the Polar Bears’ New England championship medley relay team.

We advise alumni to beware of a man calling himself Robert Morrison who visited at least one Bowdoin man recently to ask for a loan of money. The victim's words perhaps tell the story best.

“Recently, while I was out of town, a stranger called at my office and asked specifically for me but would not leave his name. The day of my return he again called and introduced himself to me as Robert Morrison. He said that he was sent to me by my classmate — in Brooklyn, N. Y. Spare of build and about age 60, he was dressed in clean clothes, though unpressed. He was clean shaven, clear eyed, and talked an excellent story. I questioned him at some length, and his answers did not lead me to suspect that he might be a phony."

“Excusing myself for a few minutes, I called — on the telephone, only to find that he was vacationing in Maine. My intent, of course, was to check on my caller. Since I had failed, I offered to take the man to lunch, for he had not yet divulged to me the object of his call, although I had spent some three-quarters of an hour with him, as I felt it was the least I could do for a veteran who claimed to have been in the last war in the Merchant Marine. On that account, he said, he was now headed for the hospital in Rutland, Mass., where he was to undergo a special bit of surgery to remove a rib and then to recover over an eight-month period with the help of special therapy which was available there but not in a New York hospital.”

The alumnus gave "Mr. Morrison" $5.00 to carry him over until he was admitted to the hospital in Rutland. A week later he checked with his classmate, who had never heard of "Mr. Morrison." He then checked with the Veterans Administration hospital and the state hospital in Rutland, Mass., with negative results in both cases. His conclusion is this — "It appears that this man is a phony. I relate this story for what it is worth. I do wish that I had been smart enough to claim poverty and had sent my $5.00 to the Alumni Fund rather than down the drain. Others may feel the same way.”

Dining in the Pines

During the summer Moulton Union Manager Don Lancaster ’27 set up an outdoor dining facility for faculty and staff members, alumni, and guests. The colorful beach umbrellas and the tables placed on the lawn near the Arena proved a popular lunching spot. When the weather didn’t cooperate, Don had part of the Arena curtained off and gaily decorated for indoor dining.

The snack bar in the Arena was used for food preparation, and light à la carte luncheons were served from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. The facility was established on a trial basis to take the place of the Union dining room, which was reserved for the use of participants in the Mathematics and Marine Biology Institutes.

Planning and decoration of the Arena dining section and the outdoor area were done by Don with the assistance of Mrs. E. Boyd Livesay, Brunswick interior decorator, who also helped in the decoration of the Alumni House.

Orman E. Hines, Manager of the Food Service at the Union, directed the summer luncheon service and planned its menus. Assisting at the snack bar counter were Mrs. Myrtle Simmons and Mrs. Dora Evrard, both of Brunswick.

Harry Shulman Honored

Hundreds of Bowdoin alumni are friends of Harry Shulman, who for many years has been a district correspondent in the Brunswick area for the Gannett newspapers in Portland. All of them will be happy to know of the tribute which Harry received on June 11 at the graduation exercises at Brunswick High School, when school officials presented him a citation reading, in part, as follows:

"Although you are a master of words, it is difficult for us to muster enough of them to describe the many services which you have so generously given to your and our community.

"A veteran and competent newspaperman you are indeed. The life of a journalist involves long and late hours in his profession; yet you have been unsparring of your off-duty hours when you felt that your talents could be of help to your community.

"Your contributions over a period of 31 years have been many, varied, and valuable. You have held—and still hold—responsible offices in town government and in service organizations. . . . "But it is your love of young persons and your keen interest in their activities through the years which have endeared you to young and old alike. You were one of the founders of the Brunswick Area Student Aid Fund, which, growing in amount every year, has helped scores of worthy graduates of Brunswick High School to gain college educations. For your foresight in this fund alone, many now-adult men and women will be forever in your debt.

"It is high time that your kindly spirit, translated into helpful acts for the youngsters of the community, be publicly recognized."

Tuition Increase

Effective in September of 1964, the tuition fee at Bowdoin will be increased from the present figure of $1,500 to $1,750. In a letter to parents and students who will be affected by the increase, President Coles wrote, "In the face of rising costs in all areas, there appears no alternative by which the increased cost of operating the College can be met.
"In general, the annual tuition fee at Bowdoin has approximated only one-half the total cost of instruction provided each student. The great generosity of Bowdoin Alumni and other benefactors is providing significant new endowments, and a continuing development program will enable the College to continue its support of a sizable portion of total operating costs from income other than student fees.

"There are a number of students whose families may not be able to pay the full charges made by the College and other related expenses. To assist these students, the program of financial aid, including scholarship grants and loans, will be expanded as may be necessary. Any student who is a member of the College will be enabled to complete his studies regardless of financial need, so long as he is making normal progress toward graduation."

Senior Center Program

One of the most exacting jobs in the construction of the Senior Center, the setting and pouring of the concrete shear column buttresses, was completed early in August.

The splayed, or curved, buttresses extend from the footing of the 16-story tower to about the third floor and are faired into the shear columns which will reach to the roof of the structure when finished. The shear columns, tapering as they rise upward, will act as "wall" elements to stiffen the tower against the pressure of high winds.

The curve of the buttresses and the taper of the columns were developed to serve as design factors and to soften the lines of the building. Construction of the forms for the buttresses and the portion of the shear columns to the second story of the tower had to be precise and according to plan in order to carry out the design and stress loads.

Progress on the tower construction is generally on schedule, and by the middle of August footings for the other two buildings in the Senior Center complex had been poured and forms for the walls of the structures were virtually completed.

A huge radial crane was assembled on the second floor of the tower and was soon in operation carrying cement from the mixing trucks to the forms for the upper stories of the structure.

Called a "climbing crane," since it can be moved bodily upward as the work progresses, the crane has a horizontal "jib," or boom, that is 100 feet long and can be swung in a 360-degree circle. The bucket, which travels the length of the boom to any unloading position desired, has a capacity of a cubic yard of cement.

The crane, which has a working height of three stories, is lifted by hydraulic jacks to succeeding positions as the tower rises. With its tremendous reach it is able to carry cement to virtually every section of the three buildings of the Senior Center.
A New Award

Alumni Day falls on Saturday, October 26, the day of the Bowdoin-Colby football game. In some respects it will be like other Alumni Days, but in some ways it will be different.

The usual Alumni Day Luncheon in the Sargent Gymnasium will be served to alumni, families, and friends who have purchased tickets in advance. (A form for ordering luncheon tickets was included in the football application folder, mailed to all alumni in August.)

The Luncheon will begin at 11:30, and there will be a special menu for small children. The brief program will feature the presentation of the first Alumni Award for Faculty and Staff.

At its 1963 Midwinter Meeting the Alumni Council voted to establish such an award, to honor some member of the Faculty or Staff for special devotion and service to the College, including both students and alumni. At its annual meeting in June the Council selected the first recipient. On October 26 he will be the guest of honor at the Alumni Day Luncheon and at the Reception to be held at the Alumni House immediately after the game.

The first Award honors a devoted teacher who has been a member of the Faculty for more than 30 years. It honors an alumnus who has given willingly and without stint of his time, talents, and energies for the College—as a member of the Class of 1925, as the conscientious chairman of important faculty committees on the Self Study, on Secondary Schools and Admissions, and on the Senior Center Program, as a speaker at alumni gatherings, as a counselor to pre-law students, as a fraternity adviser, and most of all as an intelligent, inspiring, and forceful teacher—Athen P. Daggett.

Woodbury Award

The Textile Veterans Association of New York has established the Roliston G. Woodbury Award at the College. Based on the qualities of scholarship, leadership, and extracurricular activities, the Award will be made for the first time next June.

Mr. Woodbury, who is President of the Class of 1922, has been a member of the Board of Overseers since 1955. He is Vice Chairman of the Board of the Textile Banking Company of New York City, has served as President of the New York Credit and Financial Management Association and the Textile Salesmen's Association, and has been a trustee of the New York Institute of Credit.

He has served Bowdoin as a member of the Alumni Council, as an Alumni Fund Director and Class Agent, and as President of the Bowdoin Club of New York. He is the third member of a four-generation Bowdoin family, which also includes his grandfather, Roliston Woodbury of the Class of 1864; his father, Ernest R. Woodbury of the Class of 1895; and his son, James G. Woodbury of the Class of 1949.

Scholarship Cups

Phi Delta Psi and Sigma Nu retained the Student Council Cup and the Peucinian Cup, respectively, during the spring semester, although the Independents (with 32 men) finished the year with an average of 2.732 to Phi Delta Psi’s 2.571. The Independents are not eligible to receive the Student Council Cup, which is awarded each semester to the fraternity with the highest academic standing.

Finishing behind Phi Delta Psi were Sigma Nu, Theta Delta Chi, Beta Theta Pi, and Alpha Delta Phi. The all-fraternity average was 2.510, and the all-college average was 2.328.

In the Peucinian Cup competition, for freshman delegations, Sigma Nu had an average of 2.700, followed by Alpha Rho Upsilon, Delta Sigma, Beta Theta Pi, Phi Delta Psi, and Theta Delta Chi. The all-fraternity freshman average was 2.186, and the all-college freshman average was 2.184.

Dean’s List

One hundred and sixty-two students are on the Dean’s List for the fall semester. The list includes 69 seniors, 41 juniors, 49 sophomores, and 3 Bowdoin Plan students.

Fifty-three of the men come from Massachusetts, 27 from Maine, 23 from New York, and 10 each from New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Summer Commencement

Twelve secondary school mathematics teachers received master of arts degrees at a Commencement ceremony held in the Chapel on Sunday, August 11. Nine of the twelve had completed four summers of honors-grade study at Bowdoin in the Mathematics Institute program which the National Science Foundation and the College sponsor jointly, and the other three participated in the Academic Year Institute, another NSF-supported program at the College, as well as in one summer institute. Two of the recipients are women.
Little Round Top Observeance

On Tuesday, July 2, in the quiet of the Pine Grove Cemetery, just off the campus, Bowdoin paid homage to General Joshua L. Chamberlain of the Class of 1852, who, 100 years earlier, had led a Union brigade to a hard-won victory at Little Round Top in the Battle of Gettysburg. The commemorative exercises were held at the graveside of General Chamberlain, the sixth President of the College. They included the presentation to the Library of the original letter recommending his promotion for his heroic action at Little Round Top. The gift of Richard C. Hathaway, a member of the History Department for three years, who is now at Harvard, the letter, signed by Brigadier General James C. Rice, Commander of the 1st Division, 1st Corps, under whom Chamberlain then served, and endorsed by Major General Oliver O. Howard of the Class of 1850 and Commander of the 11th Corps, says, in part, "Not a battle has been fought in which the 20th Maine under his command has not added luster to our arms, and a brighter page to our history. At the battle of Gettysburg he held the extreme left of our entire line of battle; and for the brilliant success of the conflict upon the second day of the struggle, History will give credit to the bravery and unflinching fortitude of the 20th Maine Volunteers, more than to any other equal body of men upon the field."

Among the speakers at the exercises were President Coles; State Senator Samuel W. Philbrick '50 of Bangor, who represented Governor John H. Reed; and Librarian Richard Harwell, Assistant to the President Philip S. Wilder '23 presided, and Sheldon Christian '37 delivered the invocation.

Messages were sent by Governor Reed; Civil War historian Bruce Catton; John J. Pullen H'58, author of The Twentieth Maine; James I. Robertson, Jr., Executive Director of the U. S. Civil War Centennial Commission; Maurice J. Warner, Chairman of the Maine Civil War Centennial Commission, and historian Allan Nevins.

Mr. Catton's message said, in part, "Joshua Chamberlain became one of the most remarkable soldiers in the Union Army. An unmitigated man in his background, he became an exceptional teacher on the battlefront. Some twenty-four engagements, half a dozen wounds, heroism of a most desperate nature at the Round Tops all taught Chamberlain much. He apparently knew what any good teacher knows — that to teach one must learn. Education can be found in many places, outside the classroom as well as in, and Chamberlain spent his lifetime learning."

New Overseer Emeritus

Roscoe H. Hupper '07, a member of the Board of Overseers since 1938, resigned in June and was elected an Overseer Emeritus. Now retired, he was for many years a leading admiralty lawyer and counsel in maritime and transportation affairs and was associated with the New York City firm of Burlington, Hupper, and Kennedy. He has been generous to the College, making gifts of valuable letters written by Henry Wads- worth Longfellow of the Class of 1825 and a rare four-volume set of the elephant folio of Audubon's The Birds of America. When Bowdoin conferred upon him an honorary doctor of laws degree in 1945, the citation described him as "widely read, of many interests, carrying into the legal profession the influence of a truly liberal education."
Faculty Matters

Two more members of the faculty now occupy endowed academic chairs. They are Professor Cecil T. Holmes, Chairman of the Mathematics Department, who is Wing Professor of Mathematics; and Professor Nathan Dane, II '37, Chairman of the Department of Classics, who is Winkley Professor of the Latin Language and Literature.

The Wing Professorship, held previously only by Edward S. Hammond, who retired in June after 42 years of teaching at the College, and William A. Moody '82, who also taught Bowdoin students for 42 years, was established in 1906 through the gift of Colonel Isaac H. Wing of the Class of 1856.

Professor Dane is the seventh man to hold the Winkley Professorship, which was established in 1880 by Henry Winkley of Philadelphia. His predecessors were John H. Wheeler (1881-82), Ernest M. Pease (1887-91), William C. Lawton (1891-92), William A. Houghton (1892-1907), Kenneth C. M. Sills '01 (1907-46), and Paul Nixon (1946-52).

Professor Holmes joined the faculty in 1925 and Professor Dane in 1946.

Professors James A. Rorer and William B. Whiteside are the new Chairmen of the Economics and History Departments, respectively.

A member of the faculty since 1948, Professor Rorer is Director of the College's Center for Economic Research, Executive Director of the Northeastern Research Foundation, a member of the Research Advisory Committee of the New England Council, and Chairman of the Planning Board in Topsham.

Professor Whiteside, the Director of the Senior Center, joined the faculty in 1953. He was a member of the American Studies Association committee which surveyed American civilization programs in New England colleges and universities in 1955. In 1961 he taught in a Peace Corps training program at Rutgers University.

Professor Ernst C. Helmeich, who had been Chairman of the History Department, is on sabbatical leave for the coming year. He will spend much of his time in Germany doing research for a proposed book on the relations of church and state in that country since 1870, with emphasis on the Nazi period. He and Mrs. Helmeich traveled to Germany late in the summer by way of the Far East. They also plan to visit Russia and some of the other countries in eastern Europe.

Professor Philip M. Brown, formerly Chairman of the Economics Department, is also on sabbatical leave this year. He expects to remain in Brunswick until late in the fall, reorganizing his courses of instruction, and then travel through the South to the West Coast. He plans

Dr. Carl M. Robinson, who for more than twenty-three years served as a member of the Board of Overseers of the College, died on August 25, 1963, at his home in Falmouth Foreside. Elected an Overseer in 1938, he was for many years a member of the Infirmary Committee and the Art Interests Committee of the Governing Boards and was also at one time or another a member of the Centralized Dining Service Committee, the Infirmary Alterations Committee, the Committee on Honorary Degrees, and the Committee on the Celebration of the Sesquicentennial. He was elected an Overseer Emeritus in February of 1962.

As an undergraduate Dr. Robinson was an instructor in hygiene and physical training, played in the college orchestra and band, was manager of the varsity football team in 1907, was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in his junior year, and won the Goodwin Commencement Prize. He received his degree summa cum laude.

Despite the demands of a very busy surgical practice, during the course of which he helped hundreds of Bowdoin families through his skill, Dr. Robinson maintained a lifelong interest in the College. In addition to his years of service as an Overseer, he was 1908's Class Agent in the Alumni Fund from 1954 through its 50th Reunion in 1958. From 1913 until 1920 he was a member of the faculty of the Maine Medical School at Bowdoin, and during part of this time he was also Superintendent of the Edward Mason Dispensary.

The citation that the late President Kenneth Sills '01 read on June 15, 1940, when Dr. Robinson received an honorary Doctor of Science degree, described him in these words: "... one of the leading surgeons of New England, whose skill has won the admiration and gratitude of hundreds of patients and whose professional advice has been freely available to colleagues in city, town, and village; representative today of the truth asserted by Plato that 'the true physician is also a ruler having the human body as a subject and is not a mere money maker; rightly honored by his Alma Mater, which has sent into his great profession many of her able and devoted sons, of whom few are his peers and none his superiors.'" (See pages 35-36.) to renew friendships with faculty members of Stanford University, where he began his college teaching career.

Samuel E. Allen, Jr. joined the faculty this fall as Instructor in History and is teaching courses in the history of Russia and Central Eastern Europe. A graduate of Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., he is completing requirements for his Ph.D at Clark University, where he received his master’s degree in 1959. He has taught at the Baruch School of the City College of New York and at the Evening College at Clark.

Four people have joined the staff of the Library. They are Miss Lillian P. Cooper, Director of the Recataloguing Project; Miss Joyce A. Tracy, Junior Cataloguer with that project; Robert B. Stone, Staff Cataloguer; and Richard E. Kirkwood, Documents Librarian.

A graduate of the University of Colorado and the University of Denver School of Librarianship, Miss Cooper had been head of the Catalogue Department at the University of Colorado Library since 1948.

During the past year Miss Tracy had been Assistant Reference Librarian in the Education and Psychology Department of the Sacramento State College Library in California. She is a graduate of the University of Maine and received a master’s degree from the University of Washington’s School of Librarianship.

Mr. Stone came to Bowdoin from the staff of the Schenectady, N. Y., Public Library. He is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music and has a master’s degree from the New York State College of Education.

Mr. Kirkwood will receive his master’s degree this fall from the School of Library Service at Columbia University. He is a graduate of Dartmouth and has been associated with American Airlines and the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

Five new Fellows in Foreign Languages are conducting aural-oral classes this year in their native tongues. They are Winfried Fahl of Wiesbaden-Biebrich, Germany; Daniel Nerad of Rudesheim, Germany; Jean-Pierre Jars of Marseilles, France; Bernard Rothet of Barac (Gironde), France; and Gladstone McCarthy, Jr., a Cuban refugee, who left that country three years ago.

A reading of Mr. Spingarn’s poems has its high pleasures, but they are not of an especling kind. Icy Puritan in his itemizing of an emptily hysterical culture, he is not a cheery poet. The twenty-eight poems in Letters from Exile and Other Poems (a misleading title since its first part refers to no one poem, but obviously to all of them as they collectively affirm the poet’s spiritual disengagement and alienation from what lies before his mental eye) fashion for us in stiff-lipped, scrotum-tightened posture an imaginary anti-garden in which all the real roads shilly repel. Or to shift from metaphor to analogy, we may perhaps conjure up Jonathan Edwards terrorizing the Connecticut Valley by wedding to his lurid portrayal of sinners in the hands of an angry God a calmly inflexible enunciation and an immobile face mesmerized by the bell-rope at the back of his church. Of course, Mr. Spingarn is not theological; in his poetic world sin becomes cultural grotesquerie or abnormality and God is abysmally absent, but an ardent moral fervor betrays itself by the very frigidity of poised detachment which covers it.

In general, the poems coldly shay away from the overtly personal response and prefer to fix an image, not distant from the manner of Eliot and Auden, of a debased, if not dehumanized, civilization, “Celebrity,” “Coast Route; California,” “Dossier,” “The Excursion: Reno, Nevada,” “The Journey of Bert Harte,” “The Oasis (Pal Spring, California),” “Pacific Reached”; all of these poems recreate (without much humor, however) the perverted, urbanized, and Far West landscape of Huxley’s After Many a Summer Dies the Swan and Waugh’s The Loved One as well as echo their sardonically bitter conclusions. Lust, not love, depravity, spiritual decay and death, not to mention the negation and rejection of the “natural,” stigmatize the super-highway culture that obsesses the poet’s imagination. Like Robinson Jeffers, man here and now disgusts him, but he has not fled for reassurance to a nature which gratifyingly annihilates man. There is no salvation at Carmel; when most effective, Mr. Spingarn is hypnotized by the hellish horrors he etches.

There are, of course, tentative, but poetically well-realized, exits from the horror and boredom. In the last poem of the volume, “The Thunder of the Buffalo,” an appeal is made to the memory of a more authentically classical Western:

On Upper Platte in fall of seventy-eight,
And nickels cannot buy it back.

But he well knows that only “Bleached bones remain, and thunder,” a thunder, one suspects, that will not bring life-giving rain. The flight to antiquity seems more unambiguously possible, in “Museum Piece,” “A riddle statue with her nose knocked out,” “The profile classic and the marble pure” becomes an earnest of some reassuring value to the poet, who compares himself here to “the Jason of a latter year/Piling the golden fleeces at her feet.” Ambiguously once more in “Nel Mezzo del Cammin” the latter-day quester for regeneration sees in the middle of the road only an “amber haze/Aquivver.” The pilgrimage ceases before it begins. As a least (?) resort, there is Epicurean self-sufficiency.

My search
Where the heart is well-nourished
And the eyes are not voyeurs, . . .

Let each probe his own heart
For peace, for the cool spring of reason,
For that perfect climate that never leaves him.

But “The Climate Within” (from which the preceding lines are taken), nicely giving away a nagging concern of the poet, also indicates through its banal quality of mind and verbal colorlessness that, as a poet, Mr. Spingarn is most energetically exercised imaginatively and verbally when he is lacerated. The poems which seek out a personal affirmation remain pretty unconvincing: the allegedly impersonal indictments shift the visionary and verbal power into high gear. In “The Oasis” there is little pussy-footing around as the lines inexorably and steadily take inventory.

Here queens of beauty who consort with lust join scribbling in fabled bonnets. Mark what tricks
On fur-lined avenues nymphs wield tender picks.
Crack night to splinters and reduce to dust
Each rival statue or notorious bust.

Matter-of-factly, the Necrophiles: Department of English tarnishes the lure of California’s academic Gold Coast.

We called two owlish spinsters in black gowns,
Three eunuchaites with sarcastic voices
And five assistant drones to advancement
But selection, alas, was pigeonholed.
For none could unearth the darkest sonnet
Or purchase the tactless second-best bed
Go show the club foot never existed.

Hollywood’s dream is dispelled in “Celebrity.”

Bleached, plucked, and flaccid, heavily inured,
You burn upon the filament of light.
The palm-lined canyon where your heart is mured
Echos your kinship to hermaphrodite.

Evangelists, discerning in your face
Their tickling fever, pause to call you whore.

But you, the Messalina of the arts,
Sitting alone with milk and sleeping pills,
Retch in the bowl when death and morning start.
To close your eyes upon the eunuch hills.

Here, it strikes me, the poetry moves.
Uncommitted, unengaged, refusing the seductions of compassion or genuine irony to exercise the specter that looms before him, the speaker’s pitch is authentically convincing. The vision is limited, perhaps even derivative; the atmosphere remains claustrophobic; the direction towards a dead

This small, attractive paperback is a guidebook "for the undergraduate English major and the beginning graduate student." English, like other disciplines, has many "specialties" and "fields." College students, in a modern world, are now flooded with well-meaning textbooks on grammar, style, types of literature, "how-to-do-it" handbooks, and anthologies. Every college instructor feels himself an authority on these subjects and heads toward a publisher with the instinct of a thirsty animal seeking out a water hole. Such textbooks die young, and deservedly so.

Pity the poor student who is confronted with the conflicting claims of such specialists. When you are lost in the woods, it's not a bad idea to climb a tree to see where you are. The reader of this book, lost and confused by the bewildering multiplicity of English, in effect does climb a tree with Professor Sears.

The book divides Literary Scholarship into three parts: Background, Range, Practice. The first of these is pleasantly written in the friendly, informal style of the author's first textbook, Fielding F. Sears, Visions: A Modern English Survey (pp. vii-xii). It is concerned with the field of English, with an emphasis given to the "feasibility of the undertaking." Sears supplies useful information on reference sources and connections, and it is a good introduction to bibliography. Its eleven pages of text and six pages of Suggested Reading explain how and why English has become a separate discipline within the past seventy-five years. The treatment of the subject is sketchy, but it is refreshing to find a college professor answering basic questions about the whole field, instead of pursuing his own narrow interests.

Parts Two and Three deal with subjects supposedly "covered" in monthly English major meetings, or on comprehensiveness and "exclusive" influences. Sears, in the routine introduction to bibliography supplied in the "pro-seminar" of the first year of graduate study, Such "presentations" topics fail for two reasons: (1) they are superficial and disintegrated; (2) they are so pedantic and so dull that they frighten the student away from the discipline he is supposed interested in. The Sears book avoids most of these difficulties. It discusses such problems as descriptive bibliography, the editing of texts, establishing sources and analogues, literary biography, schools of criticism, and the major literary genres. Detailed illustrations, drawn from contemporary problems in scholarship, show the practical application of such methods. The undergraduate finds his way around with a minimum of effort and a maximum of genuine enthusiasm for the subject matter. The late Professor Stanley Chase '05 used the phrase "enthusiasm" to describe the enthusiasm occasionally displayed in the undergraduate term paper. This phrase applies to Professor Sears' enthusiasm for his subject.

The most exciting part of the book, however, does not deal with English at all but rather with some recent revolutionary changes taking place in libraries and research centers (pp. 101-104). Among these are the re-production of whole books (zephyrophraphy), the eventual nationwide linkage of libraries by means of a teletype system enabling a scholar to secure information in a matter of minutes, and the use of computers to search for books and articles and to prepare bibliographies. "Ask the machine for the total number of known articles on a given topic and it will search them out of its memory drums and answer you with the total list."

The weaknesses of the book are inherent in its attempt to be readable without becoming bogged down in excessive detail. At times, in his effort to be helpful, Professor Sears is downright condescending. For example, "There is considerable difference of critical opinion as to what actually constitutes a literary genre (pronounced john-ry)" (p. 68). This is a bit hard to take! One would hope that any first semester freshman could be trusted to look up the pronunciation of words in his own dictionary. Also, there is a regrettable sketchiness in the first two sections of the book. In Part I the listing of distinguished scholars becomes little more than "name-dropping." In Chapter 4, four "main headings" are covered in a total of eight brief paragraphs (pp. 41-47).

The last part of the book supplies useful information on library and reference resources, finding and proving a thesis, bibliography, and documentation. There is also a 10-page glossary of terms commonly used in the field of English.

The Discipline of English serves a most useful purpose. If similar "guides" are to be published in other disciplines, it will be possible for the undergraduate, early in his career, to view his prospective major field with a greater understanding of its present status, and a sense of the direction in which it is heading.

In examining the life and times of William Lloyd Garrison, Mr. Thomas has achieved notable results. On the one hand, he has provided a searching examination of Garrison the man, from his boyhood under the tutelage of a mother "engaged in religion" to the fervent, idealistic man whose ideals of Christian love and absolute justice were to prick and prod the collective conscience of America. On the other hand, he has vividly depicted the forces of the ante-bellum period, assessing the interrelationship of these forces in an analysis which is meaningful in our modern life.

The study of Garrison's life is basically the study of the ethos of American culture and of the many facets which make up that ethos. Some social scientists would point out that the movements which culminated in the Civil War were fulfilled even without Garrison or any other individual. However, it was around particular men that the various contending factions converged, and in the lives of these particular men we see the forces moving the culture and its people toward a manifest end.

Garrison, as the author makes clear, is one of these men. In his battle cries, "I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice" and "On this subject I do not wish to think or speak or write with moderation—I will be heard, one can find the essence of the man. Reared by a righteous mother amid poverty and hardship, Garrison found in his beliefs what other men found in religion like Christianity, contempt for the "party of Jefferson," and a dislike for national government and politics. From this conservative tradition Garrison went forth to do battle with those whom he dared (and he dared most) and with those elements of life which he saw as violations of Christianity and nationalism (and he saw many.) Throughout his career Garrison was harshly uncompromising, vindictive, vitriolic, and, above all, close-minded and single-minded. It is perhaps through these latter characteristics that he achieved his greatest victories as well as his greatest defeat. Although Mr. Thomas does not describe Garrison in these phrases, his life often resembled that of a zealot, or even a fanatic, whose myopia assumed colossal proportions of length and ever-increasing narrowness.

Garrison repeatedly struck at the vulnerable underside of the American society in order to reduce the distance of the classic dichotomy between Christian ethics and secular practice. To achieve this end, he demanded the immediate enfranchisement of the slaves, rejecting throughout his lifetime those who deviated from this path, even those abolitionists who disagreed with him. Such dedication to his cause, in addition to his communicative ability, were the assets which made him eventually effective and the radical movement of which he was a prominent member successful.

Yet this was the extent of Garrison's usefulness for his time and for the cause of emancipation. His was not the concern for the results of immediate emancipation; his was the concern for a moral and not a political issue. Here lay his great weakness and, in a very real sense, the negation of his achievements. Bound by his very dedication, he parted with the means which were needed to make actual the moral victory he thought he had been won.

Mr. Thomas points out that in the years since Garrison's death the legend of his life, which Garrison deliberately constructed, has come under repeated questioning, tending to place him in a less prominent position during the period of American abolitionism. But his age, which began by depicting him as "My Lloyd Garrulous," who "when talking of himself displays the pert loquacity of a blue jay," finally recognized him as "the builder and master of an abolitionist crusade." Indeed, in his life he reflected his times perhaps as well as any other man, and "both in his great achievement and in his tragic failure, he spoke for his age."

However, this analysis of Garrison not only speaks for an age past but also speaks to an age present and perhaps future. Our country may not be a time of manifest civil war, or a time when another Garrison may appear, or a time in which the concern for moral questions may be as great as that for practical politics. But ours is a generation which, with all other generations since the Civil War, will be and must be held accountable for racial democracy. While the dramatic personae and the props may change, the currents of movement across the stage remain astonishingly similar to the forces at work during Garrison's time. The extremism of factions and the ever-repeated movements to shunt aside the harsh realities of making democracy more than words are reflected in the attempt to send Negroes back to Africa and to settle thousands of freed slaves in Haiti. We can observe continued manifestations of this kind in the movement of Marcus Garvey during the 1920's, in the work of the militant Black Muslims of our day, and in the reasoning and so-called "solution" still characteristic of many American whites. Further similarities are to be noted in the appeal to natural law or Biblical scriptures with which both shareholders and abolitionists bolstered their cases. Man's selective interpretation persists. In broader terms, this study of Garrison's life reminds us that the strength of radical movements and their ultimate weaknesses are as true today as they were yesterday; and it reminds us that (to be pointedly one-sided) liberal feminism for the sake of feminism is as potent as other points of view without the ability of responsible foresight with which to weave the results into the total fabric of a way of life.

While there are many other lessons to be gleaned from this analysis of Garrison and his work, the most important is the movement of the Negro in modern society repeats the cry, heard as never before since the days of the abolitionist—"I will not compromise on justice, and I will be heard."

This is the cry throughout the land; this is the cry that Mr. Thomas and his analysis may help us to understand better.

EUGENE C. ROYSTER

Former Faculty

A handbook of corresponding usage, and sometimes of the lack of corresponding usage, between French and English, Regards sur le français actuel demonstrates the author's penetration of both languages and of their cultures, a penetration that few men can promise, who are mastered by them both.

The book, moreover, reinforces Professor Darbelnet's position as one of the leading authorities—if not as the leading authority—in the field of French-English comparative linguistics.

Nor is it any wonder, for Professor Darbelnet has been equipped by experience, training, and experience to accomplish the task he has undertaken. An agrégé de l'Université de France, he has spent most of his adult life in English-speaking countries and indeed devoted seventeen years of his life to Bowdoin. This combination of factors has been at least partially responsible for enabling him to attain to such a measure of bi-lingualism. In addition, however, Professor Darbelnet is an exceedingly knowledgeable structural linguist and an uncommonly alert observer of language.

Aside from his truly virtuoso performances in solving ticklish English-French translation problems, Professor Darbelnet's exposition is a model of what modern French prose should be. He utilizes the subtlest resources of the language without stiffness or affectation; yet his sentences sparkle with an up-to-date freshness that never lapses into questionable taste. His own style is, in short, exemplary.

As Professor Darbelnet states in an introduction, Regards sur le français does not claim to present a total view of current French. It comprises rather a collection of little newspaper pieces published in Notre Temps (Montréal) over a period of three years under the rubric Le Langage et la vie: Language and Life." His strategy is to take an example of contemporary written French contaminated by English as it may occur in a literary work, in a newspaper or a magazine, in a public statement, or even on a street sign. The example, though intelligible and common enough to elude scrutiny, invaluable leaves the reader vaguely dissatisfied. Then Professor Darbelnet proceeds to his analysis, in each case unerringly discovering the underlying English construction and, ultimately, providing an impeccable translation.

Professor Darbelnet's interest range more widely than this, however. Above and beyond his preoccupation with the infiltration of English into French through newspapers and official pronouncements, he also considers at the theoretical level such diverse phenomena as prefixes and suffixes, verbs derived from nouns, euphemisms, technical, and military terminology, word order, tenses and moods, vowels and consonants, grammatical subtleties, and many other problems.

Professor Darbelnet, although manifestly at the peak of his creative and critical powers, is no longer a young man chronologically (he actually mentions the use of the German word Korsprinz, spelled with a small K, which he says he heard around him in 1914). The generation he belongs to, his long residence outside of France, and the extensive erudition he displays makes of him an exceptional or, at least, a highly unusual French critic. His critics have perhaps not tended to bring him into contact with those numberless masses of young, relatively ignorant, and utterly careless French speakers.

It is, however, perhaps unfortunate that the masses, with their faddishness and momentum, are not exposed by merciless selection or taste and quickly mirrored in journalism and then in popular literature, are responsible for forming much of the new language. Professor Darbelnet, just as the man who signs himself Aristide in Le Figaro littéraire and writes the column Usage et coutume, much as the daily fights the line against too rapid encroachment and helps to preserve the precious values of an older culture.

It also comes as a surprise that not one example of English penetration of French was drawn from the Canard Enchaîné. The Canard, a satirical Parisian weekly, prints some of the slancietest, most colorful, corrupt, and incorrect French, as well as some of the most elegant literary French, to be found in France today. It thus constitutes a repository of shifting tendencies and recent fashions, and Professor Darbelnet has been equipped by experience, training, and experience to accomplish the task he has undertaken. An agrégé de l'Université de France, he has spent most of his adult life in English-speaking countries and indeed devoted seventeen years of his life to Bowdoin. This combination of factors has been at least partially responsible for enabling him to attain to such a measure of bi-lingualism. In addition, however, Professor Darbelnet is an exceedingly knowledgeable structural linguist and an uncommonly alert observer of language.

Aside from his truly virtuoso performances in solving ticklish English-French translation problems, Professor Darbelnet's exposition is a model of what modern French prose should be. He utilizes the subtlest resources

In conclusion, Regards sur le français is an extremely workmanlike book, conceived with lucidity and forcefully executed. It is informative, amusing, and well-written, taking an honorable place beside other manuals devoted to bridging the gap between English and French. Any translator, journalist, or modern writer would regard it with profit and pleasure, and it would not be amiss to say that it should be made required reading for all members of the interpreting teams at the UN.
