Four Seasons in Maine

Lois Dodd’s

Small Plein-Air Paintings
This is the sixth exhibition in the Bowdoin College Museum of Art’s annual summer series bringing attention to unconventional responses to the Maine landscape. Susan Hartnett’s bold gestural drawings of roadside grasses; Emily Nelligan’s moody charcoals of the edges of Cranberry Island; John Walker’s masterful, sludgy oils of a tidal pool; Thomas Joshua Cooper’s dark and haunting photographs of the rocky headlands; and Joseph Haroutunian’s colorful, quirky abstract vistas have collectively testified to the inexhaustible richness and beauty of this State. Lois Dodd’s remarkably plain-spoken and poetic paintings make a large contribution to this series that belies their small size.

We are very grateful to Philippe Alexandre and the staff of the Alexandre Gallery in New York who provided exemplary assistance with every detail of the exhibition. We thank Marie and Kenneth Evans, Maisie Houghton, Ellie McGrath, Mr. and Mrs. Alan L. Stuart, and Melvyn B. Zerman who selflessly shared their paintings. The Association of Bowdoin Friends generously provided support for this publication, smartly edited by Lucie Teegarden, and sensitively designed by Jean Wilcox.

Most of all, we acknowledge our gratitude to Lois Dodd for her good-humored, helpful participation in all stages of this project and for the gift of her astute eye and deft hand in making freshly marvelous the familiar.

Katy Kline  Director
Four Seasons in Maine
Lois Dodd’s
Small Plein-Air Paintings

“Art is a harmony parallel to nature.” — Paul Cézanne
Lois Dodd’s small plein-air paintings read like the diary entries of an accomplished writer. Dodd’s paintings are quick, expertly executed studies of the everyday that, in this particular exhibition, focus on Maine’s outdoors. Paintings of dappled mid-summer light and the shadows created by an apple tree, the symphony of color in a neighbor’s garden at a particular moment on a particular day, of rock formations at a nearby quarry, and of the physicality of one particular flower blossom are, in part, formal exercises in the depiction of qualities of light, color, line, and form. But these are not purely analytical investigations of composition. Her visually nuanced descriptions of the Maine outdoors instead simplify the elements of nature in an effort to translate the reality of the everyday into something akin to poetry. Dodd’s “poetry” is not flowery and effusive, but rather honed and plain-spoken. Furthermore, she does not identify herself with things of nature in order to extract expressive symbols from them; instead, she identifies with the composition of the painting itself. As a result her paintings display an idiosyncratic and personal approach to nature, an approach that is as measured and observant as it is spontaneous.

Dodd regularly portrays late spring and summer garden scenes in her paintings of Maine. Dodd’s depictions of gardens show her affection for flowers but she does not treat them preciously. Indeed, she chooses to paint as subjects plants that are not particularly showy, such as the Crambe, a type of broccoli. It appears that Dodd was sitting low to the ground when she painted Under the Crambe. Here the color of the strong stalk of the plant blends in with the greens that describe the density of the background gardens, grasses, and trees so that all aspects of the composition are declared on the surface of the picture plane. The stalk is ornamented by the small, wispy, light, and lacy flower petals that appear to explode in the daylight sky like a Fourth of July firework. Arbor and White Plants is a bright painting suggesting a mid-summer garden, with a broad band of white paint that implies a truss of white flowers in full bloom, their form indicated by whitish-green vertical brush strokes as well as some horizontal dashes. Though Dodd furnishes absolutely no details to suggest what kind of plants they are, her dabs somehow make them convincing. An arbor is the armature for full leafy vines with unruly tendrils that expressively writhe in the air. The skeletal structure of the arbor can be seen in some places through the dense foliage but, at the top, the same lines of the arbor intersect with the disorderly vines to create an intricate but sturdy web. In the distance, through the arched arbor, an inviting, sloping field is apparent, while the artist’s house and studio are rendered on the right. The straight lines and angles of the house create the most solid form in the painting and, in fact, seem to hold the whole composition in place. Nestled into the almost wild landscape, her secure home offers order and reprieve.

While the paintings of the gardens seek to describe the overall atmosphere of a particular day, there are other paintings in which she carefully examines a specific subject. Black Iris, 2nd Bud is one such work. Dodd captures an iris's sensual, even carnal, form supported by its thick, pulpy stem. The base of the flower juts out to the side at an awkward angle—because it is the second bud—before the bud compensated for this angle, straightened, and bloomed. It is also clear that the iris in this painting is equal in importance to the space it creates in relation to its flat background. In Black Hollyhock, another painting where Dodd focuses on one blossom, the composition is structured almost like a cubist painting. The positive and negative spaces of this painting are delineated only by different shades of green, which fill the spaces between the lines of the hollyhock stems and combine with the large blocky leaves of the plants to create a flat pattern. One open, round, purplish-black flower catches a bit of direct light, differentiating itself in color and shape from the otherwise unified pattern.
Because Dodd is in Maine from the beginning of June until the end of October, paintings from the spring and summer dominate this exhibition. However, there are a number of paintings from occasional autumn and winter visits, too. The vantage points from which Dodd paints the landscapes in the fall and winter are generally a bit more removed from the subjects than those of the summer and spring. Her interest in September Afternoon, October Barn & Trees Afternoon, and Dusk. Winter seems to be how the combination of color and form can express the time of day, its unique light, and even the temperature. In October Barn & Trees Afternoon the blinding afternoon glare of early fall has been replaced by a distilled light that suggests that the gray winter sky will soon be settling in. The barn, in shadow, is a deep, vivid blue. A grove of trees is depicted as if their tops share a head of green leaves. Puffy clouds adorn the top of the canvas like a whipped cream topping. Orange-tan colored brush strokes invade the spaces in between, suggesting bushes and trees that have already changed color. The brush strokes that make up the field look as if long browned grass has been pushed back, repeatedly blown in one direction by strong winds. In the foreground is a cluster of milkweed whose pods have opened, displaying the white silk of their seeds before they take to the air. The details of the painting culminate in the palpable impression that it is a day crisp enough to demand a heavy sweater.

Dodd cites a number of artists as influencing her work, including the twentieth-century American modernists Marsden Hartley, Edward Hopper, Charles Burchfield, and Arthur Dove. But Dodd often appears to be in a kind of conversation in her work with the enormously influential late-nineteenth-century French painter Paul Cézanne. Clive Bell predicted his impact as early as 1914 when he wrote: “Cézanne discovered methods and forms which have revealed a vista of possibilities to the end of which no man can see; on the instrument that he invented thousands of artists yet unborn may play their own tunes.”¹ Dodd, who has worked through the last half of the twentieth century, contributes her own distinct symphonies in paint to this particular history.

In this exhibition, Dodd’s series of paintings of an old stone quarry particularly exemplify her exchange with Cézanne. Here, she strives to create a balance between the abstract patterns of pure form and the natural scenery as it appears to us optically in Quarry, Green Water. She does not endeavor to create illusionistic space but instead to develop a visual coherence within one space, out of the colors of direct summer sunlight on the solid mass of the quarry’s rocks and the reflective surface of its water. To achieve this, Dodd employs a number of Cézanne’s strategies. She begins by creating a strong horizontal line across the center of the canvas where the rocks and water meet, which gives the scene breadth. A cracked boulder on the water’s edge allows Dodd to paint a short but strong vertical black void representing the boulder's hollow, the reflection of which continues on the water. This vertical space is echoed in the outlines of the rocks that tumble down to the water’s edge. Dodd's use of horizontal and vertical lines and gestures together achieves the sensation of depth; simultaneously, the reflection of the rocks mirrored impressionistically on the water’s surface (where Dodd sparingly employs the colors red and yellow to create a vibrating light) emphasizes and focuses our eyes on the surface of the painting. The intersection between the tumbling rocks themselves, in which she preserves the integrated surface of the rocks' patterns without clarifying their exact spatial location, also gives a nod to Cézanne. Clement Greenberg observes that Cézanne “was one of the first to worry consciously about how to pass from the contours of an object to what lay behind or next to it without violating either the integrity of the picture surface as a flat continuum or the represented three dimensionality of the object itself. . . .”²

Quarry, Green Water is one in a series of paintings that we might understand in just this context, to be paying tribute to Cézanne.
Whereas in Quarry, Green Water Dodd, using paint, explicitly describes Cézanne’s theories, Burnt-Out House, Finntown Road is a wonderful example of Dodd’s ability to riff on these same ideas. The horizontal lines of the remaining clapboard house here are depicted in the right corner of the painting and anchor the composition. A black rectangle at the bottom left corner of the composition moors the base of a dramatic black diagonal that guides our eyes from the bottom left corner of the painting to the upper right. In contrast to the orderly horizontal lines of the clapboard, the black rubble juts out in lines every which way. The empty upper left corner of the painting is a solid, white void with tremendous presence, as if it, instead of the destructive fire, caused the house to collapse. Here the occupied space is no longer clearly differentiated from the unoccupied space, hence the hierarchy between what is absent and what is present is abolished.

Nineteenth-century American and European landscape painting often expressed a utopian longing for the reconciliation of nature and humankind that manifested itself in many different styles and theories of painting. Cézanne longed for the same reconciliation, which he expressed through a subtle balance of tonality, color, volume, and mass. Implicit in his paintings was a critical response to a world he saw as fractured, broken, and scarred by modernization, detachment, and by his era’s reliance on reason alone. Bridging the emotional and intellectual, the sensual and the cognitive, Cézanne’s works, art historian Linda Nochlin explains, “... exist in silent opposition to a degraded political sphere.”

One might glean in Dodd’s painting a sympathy for Cézanne’s longings to appease what he saw as the breach between nature and his contemporary society. However, Dodd, in a seasoned twentieth-century manner, approaches the question in a way that is less romantic and angst-ridden than Cézanne’s, as is evident in her choice to depict modest scenes and subject matters: she eschews grand vistas such as moody oceans, majestic mountains, and mysterious forests. Dodd proves that even these small, carefully constructed, quiet poetic paintings depicting scenes of gardens, fields, trees, quarries, country roads, and the occasional parking lot have potential to comment obliquely but implicitly on our contemporary culture. Her sophisticated spontaneity and an extraordinarily refined understanding of the elements of composition invite us to enter Dodd’s paintings with ease. Once there, we discover the complexity of a composition that holds our interest and, in turn, invites us to slow down as Dodd has, to observe, absorb, and contemplate the moment in our surroundings. Her paintings calmly ask what would happen to our world if all of us every day did just that.

Alison Ferris  Curator

Notes
Lois Dodd

Born Montclair, New Jersey, 1927
Education Cooper Union, New York City, 1945-48

Selected One-Person Exhibitions
2004 Four Seasons in Maine: Lois Dodd’s Small Plein-Air Paintings, Bowdoin College Museum of Art, Brunswick, ME
Lois Dodd: Small Paintings, Alexandre Gallery, New York, NY

2003 Windows and Doorways: Three Decades of Painting, Alexandre Gallery, New York, NY

2003 Nudes in the Landscape, New York Studio School, New York, NY, traveling to Banana Factory, Bethlehem, PA; Jaffe-Friede and Strauss Galleries, Dartmouth College, Hanover, NH; Daura Gallery, Dillard Fine Arts Center, Lynchburg College, Lynchburg, VA

2003 Selected Small Paintings, Caldbeck Gallery, Rockland, ME

2002 Lois Dodd and Elizabeth O’Reilly, List Gallery, Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, PA

2001 Lois Dodd: Paintings, Kingsborough Art Gallery, Kingsborough Community College, Brooklyn, NY

1999-2001 Caldbeck Gallery, Rockland, ME

1997-2001 Fischbach Gallery, New York, NY

1996 Lois Dodd: Twenty-Five Years of Painting, Montclair Art Museum, Montclair, NJ; traveling to Farnsworth Art Museum, Rockland, ME; Trenton City Museum, Trenton, NJ

1993 Roundtop Center for the Arts, Damariscotta, ME

1992 National Academy of Design—Henry Ward Ranger Purchase Award

1991 American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters—Hassam, Speicher, Betts and Synnors Purchase Prize

1990 National Academy of Design—Leonilda S. Gervasi Award

1987 American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters Award

Selected Catalogues

2001 Lois Dodd: Women at Work, Recent Paintings, Caldbeck Gallery, Rockland, ME

1996 Lois Dodd: 25 Years of Painting, The Farnsworth Art Museum, Rockland, ME

1992 Lois Dodd Paintings, Views of Windows and Doors, Rider University Art Gallery, Lawrenceville, NJ

1990 Lois Dodd, Jaffe-Friede and Strauss Galleries, Dartmouth College, Hanover, NH

1979 Lois Dodd 1969—1979, Cape Split Place, Addison, ME

1977 Tenth Street Days, Soho Co-op Galleries, New York, NY

1976 Paintings by Lois Dodd-Joseph Fiore, Artists for Environment Foundation, Walpack Center, NJ

1975 Dodd, Grovel, Gelber, Green Mountain, Gallery, New York, NY

Selected Articles and Reviews

Selected Public Collections
Bowdoin College Museum of Art, Brunswick, ME
Brooklyn College, Brooklyn, NY
Bryn Mawr College Collection, Bryn Mawr, PA
Colby College Museum of Art, Waterville, ME
Cooper-Hewitt National Design Museum, New York, NY
Farnsworth Art Museum, Rockland, ME
Hood Museum of Art, Dartmouth College, Hanover, NH
Kalamazoo Institute of Arts, Kalamazoo, MI
Museo dell’Arte, Udine, Italy
National Academy of Design, New York, NY
The Ogunquit Museum of American Art, Ogunquit, ME
Springfield Art Museum, Springfield, MO
Wadsworth Atheneum, Hartford, CT
Whitney Museum of American Art, New York, NY
Works in the Exhibition

Dimensions are indicated as height by width. Starred works are illustrated.

Moon and Tree Silhouette, 1975
oil on masonite
16 x 14 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Dusk, Winter, 1982
oil on masonite
10 x 13 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Apple Tree in Snow, 1983
oil on masonite
17 x 16 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Black Hollyhock, 1989
oil on masonite
19 1/2 x 12 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Full Moon, 1990
oil on masonite
10 x 15 1/4 inches
Courtesy of Melvyn B. Zerman

June Road, 1991
oil on masonite
14 x 13 7/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Corner of House, 1992
oil on masonite
12 1/8 x 11 7/8 inches
Courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Alan L. Stuart

Long Cove Quarry, 1993
oil on masonite
20 x 20 1/4 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Apple Tree, 1994
oil on masonite
11 x 15 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Arbor and White Plants, 1994
oil on masonite
15 x 18 1/4 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

September Afternoon, 1994
oil on masonite
13 x 16 inches
Courtesy of Marie and Kenneth Evans

Under the Crambe, 1994
oil on masonite
15 x 10 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Pemaquid, August 10, 1995
oil on masonite
6 7/8 x 15 7/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Pemaquid, August 10, 1995
oil on masonite
10 1/8 x 13 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Quarry, Green Water, 1995
oil on masonite
11 x 15 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Still Life at Quarry, 1995
oil on panel
8 1/8 x 11 7/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Burnt-Out House, 1996
oil on masonite
11 1/8 x 15 1/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Burnt-Out House, Finntown Road, 1996
oil on masonite
13 3/4 x 15 inches
Private Collection

Globe Thistle, 1996
oil on masonite
16 x 17 inches
Courtesy of Ellie McGrath

Rock Study, 1996
oil on masonite
16 x 12 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Cosmos on Grey Day, 1997
oil on masonite
13 x 15 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Hackmatack from Leslie's Garden, 1997
oil on panel
9 x 11 inches
Private Collection

October Barn & Trees Afternoon, 1997
oil on masonite
13 x 17 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Hackmatack and Barn, 1998
oil on panel
9 x 10 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Black Iris, 2nd Bud, 1999
oil on masonite
10 x 10 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Rockland View #3, 1999
oil on plywood
10 7/8 x 10 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

House at Orr's Island, Sept. 11, 2001, 2001
oil on masonite
18 x 20 inches
Courtesy of Maisie Houghton

Dappled Light, Apple Tree, 2002
oil on panel
15 x 18 1/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Prock's, Rockland, 2002
oil on masonite
16 x 14 7/8 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

Trucks and Puddles, 2002
oil on plywood
12 3/8 x 16 inches
Private Collection

Trucks and Puddles 2, 2002
oil on masonite
16 x 20 inches
Courtesy Alexandre Gallery, New York

This brochure accompanies an exhibition of the same name at the Bowdoin College Museum of Art, Brunswick, Maine, from June 22 through September 5, 2004.

Design by Wilcox Design
Cambridge, Massachusetts

Photography by Michael Korol

Printing by Meridian Printing
East Greenwich, RI

Four Seasons in Maine: Lois Dodd's Small Plein-Air Paintings is supported by the Elizabeth B. G. Hamlin Fund and the Association of Bowdoin Friends.

Copyright © 2004 Bowdoin College

Cover: Quarry, Green Water, 1995
Back cover: Black Iris, 2nd Bud, 1999
Page 1: October Barn & Trees Afternoon, 1997